Page 2, line 3, after "1930", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "while Colonel Noble was on duty as post quartermaster at Fort Jay and constructing quartermaster at Fort Jay and New York City: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the further calling of bills on the Private Calendar today.

The motion was agreed to.

DERBY OIL CO.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 599, the bill H. R. 459, for the relief of the Derby Oil Co.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Derby Oil Co., Wichita, Kans., the sum of $582.47. Such sum represents the amount due for furnishing gasoline to the quartermaster, Fort Riley, Kans., under item 123 (a), contract TPS 9477, dated December 10, 1935, during the period January 1 to March 31, 1936, and covers the loss of $582.47 sustained by the Derby Oil Co., Wichita, Kans., through clerical error in calculating the freight rate on gasoline shipped from the Derby Oil Co.'s bulk plant at Wichita, Kans., to destination.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "of", strike out "$582.47. Such sum represents the amount due" and insert "$445.20, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States."

Page 1, line 11, after the figure "1936", strike out the balance of the line and all of line 1 on page 2, and the words "Kansas, through" in line 2 and insert "covering the loss sustained through its."

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH NOEL ROBERTS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 531, the bill (H. R. 2345) for the relief of Joseph Noel Roberts, and I hope there will be no objection to this bill, because it is a case of unusual merit and will give the difference in retired pay and compensation to a totally blind veteran.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar No. 531, the bill H. R. 2345. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. HANCOCK of New York objected.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GREEN and Mr. MAAS asked and were given permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Accounts be given permission to sit tomorrow during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THOMAS W. SEAY

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 1044) for the relief of Thomas W. Seay, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a bill that was on the Private Calendar and objected to today?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The bill has passed the Senate, but has not been put on the Private Calendar. It has been reported favorably by the House committee. The condition of this man is such that he is expected to die almost any time and he has a wife and three children.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to find out something about the bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. This man was an enforcement officer and was shot while capturing three counterfeiters who were sent to the penitentiary for a period of 15 years each. The picture I have here shows the injuries he sustained.

Mr. FORD of California. What kind of an enforcement officer was this man?

Mr. DEMPSEY. A deputy sheriff enforcing a Federal statute and three men who were counterfeiters were captured and sent to the penitentiary for a period of 15 years. He received this permanent injury and can only live a short time. He has a wife and large family.

The bill has all ready passed the Senate and is now on the Speaker's desk.

Mr. FORD of California. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas W. Seay, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., the sum of $10,000 in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government on account of personal injuries sustained by him as a result of gunshot wounds received while in the performance of his duty as a deputy sheriff attempting to arrest a counterfeiter, said injuries having resulted in his permanent total disability: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WATERTON OIL, LAND & POWER CO.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 583, S. 190, to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Waterton Oil, Land & Power Co., of Butte, Mont., against the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to return to S. 190. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would withdraw his objection to this bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, when the bill was called on the Private Calendar, I objected to it. I do not see why I should withdraw my objection at this time. I object to returning.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CHARLES CARROLL OF CARROLLTON BICENTENARY COMMISSION

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of the Consent Calendar yesterday, Senate Joint Resolution 171, relating to the employment of personnel and expenditures made by the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission, was considered and passed by the House with an amendment offered by myself striking out lines 5 and 6 on page 2. Inadvertently I did not include in that amendment the words immediately preceding in lines 3 and 4, "and be it further." I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings whereby Senate Joint Resolution 171 was read a third time and passed, and consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings whereby Senate Joint Resolution 171 was considered and passed yesterday and that the same be considered now. The Clerk will report the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk reported the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 2, line 3, after the word "funds", strike out the semicolon and the remainder of the line and all of line 4 and insert a period.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL REVENUE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland calls up the conference report upon the District tax bill, H. R. 7472, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 12, 29, 30, 31, and 32 .

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 33, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Title II—Taxes on insurance companies

"SECTION 1. On and after the 1st day of September 1937, every domestic, foreign, or alien company organized as a stock, mutual, reciprocal, Lloyd's, fraternal, or any other type of insurance company or association, before issuing contracts of insurance against loss of life or health, or by fire, marine, accident, casualty, fidelity and surety, title guaranty, or other hazard not contrary to public policy, shall obtain from the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia an annual license or certificate of authority, upon payment of a fee of $25 to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia. All licenses for insurance companies who may apply for permission to do business in the District of Columbia shall date from the first of the month in which application is made, and expire on the 30th day of April following, and payment shall be made in proportion.

"SEC. 2. Any such company issuing contracts of insurance in the District of Columbia, without first having obtained license or certificate of authority from the superintendent of insurance so to do, shall upon conviction be subject to a fine of $100 per day for each day it shall engage in business without such license or certificate of authority.

"SEC. 3. All prosecutions for violations of this title shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants.

"SEC. 4. Each of such companies shall file an annual statement, in the form prescribed by the superintendent of insurance, before March 1 of each year, of its operations for the year ending December 31 immediately preceding. Such statement shall be verified by the oath of the president and secretary or in their absence by two other principal officers. The fee for filing said statement shall be $20 and payment therefor shall be made to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 5. If any such company shall fail to file the annual statement herein required, the superintendent of insurance may thereupon revoke its license or certificate of authority to transact business in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 6. All such companies shall also pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia a sum of money as taxes equal to 2 per centum of its policy and membership fees and net premium receipts on all insurance contracts on risks in the District of Columbia, said taxes to be paid before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of income for the year ending December 31 next preceding. Such tax shall be in lieu of all other taxes except (1) taxes upon real estate, and (2) fees and charges provided for by the insurance laws of the District including amendments made to such laws by this title.

" 'Net premium receipts' means gross premiums received less the sum of the following:

"1. Premiums returned on policies canceled or not taken;

"2. Premiums paid for reinsurance where the same are paid to companies duly licensed to do business in the District; and

"3. Dividends paid in cash or used by policyholders in payment of renewal premiums.

"Nothing contained in this section or in sections 1 or 7 of this title shall apply with respect to marine insurance written within the said District and reported, taxed, and licensed under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', approved March 4, 1922, as amended.

"SEC. 7. If any such company shall fail to pay the tax herein required, it shall be liable to the District of Columbia for the amount thereof, and in addition thereof a penalty of 8 per centum per month thereafter until paid.

"SEC. 8. Nothing contained in this title shall apply to any relief association, not conducted for profit, composed solely of officers and enlisted men of the United States Army or Navy, or solely of employees of any other branch of the United States Government service or solely of employees of the District of Columbia government, or solely of employees of any individual, company, firm, or corporation or to any fraternal organization which issues contracts of insurance exclusively to its own members.

"SEC. 9. Any act or part of any act insofar as it is inconsistent with the provisions of this title is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment, and in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, on page 11 of the House bill, line 16, after "fuel" insert "to be used by him or"; and on page 12 of the House bill, line 19, after "fuel" insert "to be used by him or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Title VI—Tax on privilege of doing business

"SECTION 1. Where used in this title—

"(a) The term 'person' includes any individual, firm, copartnership, joint adventure, association, corporation (domestic or foreign), trust, estate, receiver, or any other group or combination acting as a unit, but shall not include railroad or railroad express companies which report to and are subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887, as amended.

"(b) The term 'taxpayer' means any person liable for any tax hereunder.

"(c) The term 'Commissioners' means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or their duly authorized representative or representatives.

"(d) The term 'business' shall include the carrying on or exercising for gain or economic benefit, either direct or indirect, any trade, business, profession, vocation, or commercial activity in or on privately owned property and in or on property owned by the United States Government in the District of Columbia, not including, however, labor or services rendered by any individual as an employee for wages, salary, or commission.

"(e) The term 'gross receipts' means the gross receipts received from any business in the District of Columbia, including cash, credits, and property of any kind or nature, without any deduction therefrom on account of the cost of the property sold, the cost of materials, labor, or services or other costs, interest, or discount paid, or any other expenses whatsoever: Provided, That the term 'gross receipts' when used in connection with or in respect of financial transactions involving the sale of notes, stocks, bonds, and other securities, or the loan, collection, or advance of money, or the discounting of notes, bills, or other evidences of debt, shall be deemed to mean the gross interest, discount, commission, or other gross income earned by means of or resulting from said financial transactions: Provided further, That in connection with commission merchants, attorneys or other agents, the term 'gross receipts' shall be deemed to mean the gross amount of such commissions or gross fees received by them, and, as to stock and bond brokers, the term 'gross receipts' shall be deemed to mean gross amount of commissions or gross fees received, the gross trading profit on securities bought and sold, and the gross interest income on marginal accounts from business done or arising in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That with respect to contractors the term 'gross receipts' shall mean their total receipts less money paid by them to sub-contractors for work and labor performed and material furnished by such sub-contractors in connection with such work and labor.

"(f) The term 'fiscal year' means a year beginning on the 1st day of July and ending on the 30th day of the June following.

"SEC. 2. No person shall engage in or carry on any business in the District of Columbia after sixty days from the approval of this Act and until July 1, 1938, without first having obtained a license so to do from the Commissioners, except that no license shall be required of any person selling newspapers, magazines, or periodicals, whose sales are not made from a fixed location and which sales do not exceed the annual sum of $2,000. All licenses issued under this title shall expire on June 30, 1938, and no license may be transferred to any other person.

"All licenses granted under this title must be conspicuously posted on the premises of the licensee and said license shall be accessible at all times for inspection by the police or other officers duly authorized to make such inspection. Licensees having no located place of business shall exhibit their licenses when requested to do so by any of the officers above named.

"Licenses shall be good only for the location designated thereon, except in the case of licenses issued hereunder for businesses which in their nature are carried on at large and not at a fixed place of business, and no license shall be issued for more than one place of business without a payment of a separate fee for each.

"The Commissioners may, after hearing, revoke any license issued hereunder for failure of the licensee to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title or to pay any installment of tax when due.

"SEC. 3. Each application for license shall be accompanied by a filing fee of $10: Provided, however, That no license fee shall be required of any person if he shall certify under oath that his gross receipts during the year immediately preceding his application, if he was engaged in business during all of such period of time, or his gross receipts as computed in the manner provided in section 5 of this title, if he was engaged in business for less than one year immediately preceding his application, was not more than $2,000. Such application shall be upon a form prescribed and furnished by the Commissioners.

"SEC. 4. Every person subject to the tax hereunder shall, within thirty days after the approval of this Act, furnish to the assessor, on a form prescribed by the Commissioners, a statement under oath showing the gross receipts of the taxpayer during the preceding calendar year, which said return shall contain such other information as the Commissioners may deem necessary for the proper administration of this title.

"The Commissioners, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return filed hereunder, or for the purpose of making a return where none has been made, are authorized to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return and may summon any person to appear and produce books, records, papers, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting the same, and the Commissioners shall have power to administer oaths to such person or persons. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then, and in that event, the Commissioners may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to such summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

"The Commissioners are authorized and empowered to extend for cause shown the time for filing a return for a period not exceeding thirty days.

"SEC. 5. For the privilege of engaging in business in the District of Columbia, each person so engaged shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1937–1938 a tax equal to two-fifths of 1 per centum of the gross receipts in excess of $2,000 derived from such business for the calendar year 1936: Provided, however, That the tax imposed by this section shall be payable only upon the gross commissions of any person engaged in the business of a broker or agent, and shall not be payable upon the funds of his principal, of which he is a mere conduit.

"If a taxpayer was not engaged in business during the whole of the calendar year 1936 he shall pay the tax imposed by this title measured by his gross receipts during the period of one year from the date when he became so engaged; and if such taxpayer shall not have been so engaged for an entire year prior to the approval of this Act, then the tax imposed shall be measured by his gross receipts for the period during which he was so engaged, multiplied by a fraction, the numerator of which shall be 365 and the denominator of which shall be the number of days during which he was so engaged.

"If a person liable for the tax during any year or portion of a year for which the tax is computed acquires the assets or franchises of or merges or consolidates his business with the business of any other person or persons, such person liable for the tax shall report, as his gross receipts by which the tax is to be measured, the gross receipts for such year of such other person or persons together with his own gross receipts during such year.

"SEC. 6. National banks and all other incorporated banks and trust companies, street railroad, gas, electric lighting and telephone companies, companies incorporated or otherwise, who guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, companies who furnish abstracts of titles, savings banks, and building and loan associations which pay taxes under existing laws of the District of Columbia upon gross receipts or gross earnings, and insurance companies which pay a tax upon premiums shall be exempt from the provisions of this title. Any tax levied by the District of Columbia upon tangible personal property (other than motor vehicles) for the fiscal year 1937–1938 and paid by such taxpayer shall be credited upon the tax due under this title.

"SEC. 7. The taxes imposed hereby shall be due thirty days after the approval of this Act and may be paid without penalty to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in equal semiannual installments in the months of September and March following. If either of said installments shall not be paid within the month when the same is due, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent and there shall be added and collected to said tax a penalty of 1 per centum per month upon the amount thereof for the period of such delinquency, and said installment with the penalties thereon shall constitute a delinquent tax.

"SEC. 8. If a return required by this title is not filed, or if a return when filed is incorrect or insufficient and the maker fails to file a corrected or sufficient return within twenty days after the same is required by notice from the assessor, the assessor shall determine the amount of tax due from such information as he may be able to obtain, and, if necessary, may estimate the tax on the basis of external indices such as number of employees of the person concerned, rentals paid by him, stock on hand, and other factors. The assessor shall give notice of such determination to the person liable for the tax. Such determination shall finally and irrevocably fix the tax unless the person against whom it is assessed shall within fifteen days after the giving of notice of such determination apply to the Board of Equalization and Review of the District for hearing and review, and the burden of proving the incorrectness of the assessor's determination shall be upon the taxpayer. After such hearing said Board shall give notice of its decision to the person liable for the tax. The decision of said Board may be reviewed by application to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, if the said application be filed within twenty days after said notice: Provided, however, That the amount of any tax sought to be reviewed shall, with interest and penalties thereon, if any, be first deposited with the clerk of said court.

"SEC. 9. Any person failing to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title shall be subject to a penalty of 10 per centum of the tax due plus 5 per centum of such tax for each month of delay or fraction thereof.

"SEC. 10. Any notice authorized or required under the provisions of this title may be given by mailing the same to the person for whom it is intended by registered mail addressed to such person at the address given in the return filed by him pursuant to the provisions of this title, or if no return has been filed then to his last-known address. The mailing of such notice shall be presumptive evidence of the receipt of the same by the person to whom addressed. Any period of time which must be determined under the provisions of this title by the giving of notice shall commence to run from the date of mailing such notice.

"SEC. 11. The taxes levied hereunder and penalties may be collected by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in the manner provided by law for the collection of taxes due the District of Columbia on personal property in force at the time of such collection.

"SEC. 12. Any person engaging in or carrying on business without first having obtained a license so to do, or failing or refusing to file a sworn report as required herein, or to comply with any rule or regulation of the Commissioners for the administration and enforcement of the provisions of this title shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 for each and every failure, refusal, or violation, and each and every day that such failure, refusal, or violation continues shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. All prosecutions under this title shall be brought in the police court of the District of Columbia on information by the corporation counsel or his assistant in the name of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 13. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title.

"SEC. 14. Except in accordance with proper judicial order or as otherwise provided by law, it shall be unlawful for the Commissioners or any person having an administrative duty under this title to divulge or make known in any manner the receipts or any other information relating to the business of a taxpayer contained in any return required under this title. The persons charged with the custody of such returns shall not be required to produce any of them or evidence of anything contained in them in any action or proceeding in any court, except on behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia, or on behalf of any party to any action or proceeding under the provisions of this title, when the returns or facts shown thereby are directly involved in such action or proceeding, in either of which events the court may require the production of, and may admit in evidence, so much of such returns or of the facts shown thereby, as are pertinent to the action or proceeding and no more. Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the delivery to a taxpayer, or his duly authorized representative, of a certified copy of any return filed in connection with his tax, nor to prohibit the publication of statistics so classified as to prevent the identification of particular returns and the items thereof, or the inspection by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, or any of his assistants, of the return of any taxpayer who shall bring action to set aside or review the tax based thereon, or against whom an action or proceeding has been instituted for the collection of a tax or penalty. Returns shall be preserved for three years and thereafter until the Commissioners order them to be destroyed. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be subject to the punishment provided by section 12 of this title.

"SEC. 15. This title shall not be deemed to repeal or in any way affect any existing act or regulation under which taxes are now levied."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Title VII—Rate of taxation on tangible property and miscellaneous provisions

"SECTION 1. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the rate of taxation imposed for the District of Columbia on real and tangible personal property shall not be less than 1.75 per centum on the assessed value of such property.

"(b) The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to extend for not to exceed sixty days the time for payment of any installment of taxes on real property, tangible and intangible personal property, and other taxes, payable in September 1937.

"Authorization for advance of funds

"SEC. 2. Until and including June 30, 1938, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 29, 1922, is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary, from time to time, during said fiscal year to meet the general expenses of said District, as authorized by Congress, and such amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed by the said Commissioners to the Treasury out of the taxes and revenue collected for the support of the government of the said District of Columbia.

"Survey of tax structure of the District

"SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia the sum of $5,000, for the employment of clerical services in connection with a survey and study of the entire tax structure of the District of Columbia to be made under the direction of the Commissioners of said District. Such sum shall be available for expenditure for personal services without regard to the civil service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. A report of such survey, with recommendations, shall be made by the Commissioners to Congress not later than January 15, 1938.

"Regulations

"SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"Separability of provisions

"SEC. 5. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26: These amendments make clerical changes and certain clarifying and perfecting amendments to the text of titles I, III, and IV of the House bill with a view to simplifying the administration and collection of the taxes to which those titles relate, namely, personal-property taxes, gasoline taxes, and motor-vehicle weight taxes. None of the amendments was controversial. The Senate recedes on amendments numbered 11 and 12; the House recedes with an amendment on amendment numbered 10; and the House recedes on the balance of the amendments above enumerated.

On amendment no. 9: This amendment eliminates title II of the House bill relating to taxes on insurance companies. The conference action restores the provisions of the House bill, makes certain clarifying changes, and adds a provision exempting marine insurance written within the District and taxed under the provisions of the act of March 4, 1922.

On amendments nos. 16, 17, and 18: These amendments restore the rates of taxation in title V, article I, of the House bill (relating to inheritance taxes) which were in the bill as reported to the House on June 11, 1937. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 27: This amendment eliminates title VI of the House bill relating to tax on privilege of doing business. There was no corresponding provision in the bill as it passed the Senate. The conference action restores such tax but limits its operation to one year, increases the exemption from $1,000 to $2,000, and reduces the rate of tax from three-fifths of 1 percent of the gross receipts in excess of $2,000 to two-fifths of 1 percent of such gross receipts. In addition, it eliminates the progressive license fee upon chain stores. It also provides that any tax levied upon tangible personal property (other than motor vehicles) for the fiscal year 1937–38 shall be credited upon such tax. Provision is also made, in the case of contractors, restricting the application of the tax to their gross receipts less money paid by them to subcontractors for work and labor performed and material furnished by such subcontractors. Certain clarifying amendments are also made in the text of the House bill.

On amendments nos. 28, 29, and 31: Amendment no. 28 eliminates title VII of the House bill fixing the rates on real and tangible personal property for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, at 1.7 percent of the assessed value of such property. Amendment no. 29 imposes an additional tax on land for such fiscal year of 1 percent upon the assessed value of the land exclusive of improvements. It is also provided in this amendment for an extension for not to exceed 90 days of the time for payment of installments on real-estate taxes payable in September 1937. Amendment no. 31 authorizes an advance of funds by the Secretary of the Treasury to the District until June 30, 1938, to meet the general expenses of the District and to be reimbursed by the Commissioners out of taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government of the District. It also contains a provision authorizing an appropriation of $20,000 for a survey of the tax structure of the District with a report to be made by the Commissioners to Congress not later than January 15, 1938. This amendment also provides that the Commissioners may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act, and contains a general separability clause.

The conference action on these amendments fixes the rate of taxation on real and tangible personal property for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, at 1.75 percent of the assessed value of the property, eliminates the additional tax on land provided for by amendment no. 29, and authorizes the Commissioners of the District to extend for not to exceed 60 days the time for payment of any installment on taxes payable in September 1937. There are also included the miscellaneous provisions which were contained in amendment no. 31 with a change in the provision relating to the survey of the tax structure of the District authorizing an appropriation of $5,000 instead of $20,000, and limiting the use of that amount to the employment of clerical services in connection with such survey.

On amendment no. 30: This amendment includes a new title providing for an income tax for the District and is identical with the provision reported by the House committee on June 11, 1937. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 32: This amendment authorizes the Commissioners of the District, in their discretion, to secure and install, at no expense to the District, mechanical parking meters or devices. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 33: This amendment provides for an amendment to the antitrust laws under which contracts and agreements stipulating minimum resale prices of certain commodities, and which are similar to contracts and agreements which are lawful as applied to intrastate commerce, are not to be regarded as being illegal under the antitrust laws. The House recedes.

VINCENT L. PALMISANO,
AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
JACK NICHOLS,
EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, DEWEY SHORT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the members of the House are familiar with the report, and unless someone wants to ask some questions or wants some time, I shall move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman inform the House what was done with the amendment of the Senate providing for an income tax for the District of Columbia?

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, the Senate receded on the income-tax provision. While personally I, together with a number of the members of the committee, felt that the income tax ought to be provided, yet in view of the action of the House on two occasions on that particular question, we had to insist that the Senate recede from its amendment in that respect.

Mr. MAPES. I am sorry that the House conferees took that attitude. I believe the action of the House was taken at a time when the House did not clearly understand what the amendment provided.

Mr. PALMISANO. I agree with the gentleman. I might say that the provision which is substituted for the income tax is for only 1 year, and it may be that next year a better income-tax provision may be worked out, to which the Members of the House will agree.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have never at any time relinquished my position in favor of an income tax until it was impossible to secure the amendment. I thoroughly agree that we have to have an income tax in the District of Columbia, and since this is a 1-year tax bill, I am hoping that as we reconsider the whole tax structure next year, we will come along with an income tax which will be acceptable to the House and the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report represents the best judgment of the conferees of House and Senate on the very knotty problem of District of Columbia revenues under the handicap of a time limit. I for one do not pretend that it is all that a revenue measure should be. But for the most part, it will only remain in effect for 1 year and it is hoped that a resurvey of this matter will produce a bill next year that will do justice to the District of Columbia and be predicated upon sound and accepted principles of taxation.

As the bill left the House, it contained a title to tighten up the collection of personal property taxes. That provision was retained by the Senate and by the conference committee. The title which the House approved to raise the tax on insurance premiums from 1½ percent to 2 percent was stricken by the Senate and restored in conference. This 2-percent rate places the District in line with more than 20 State jurisdictions which also impose a 2-percent rate. The House also approved an increase in the motor-fuel tax from 1 cent to 2 cents together with an earmarking of the funds for general highway and improvement purposes. This title was not disturbed by the Senate or the conferees. Seemingly the House and Senate were also in agreement on that title which increases the vehicle tax. That tax is but $1 per vehicle. Under the pending bill, they will be increased from $5 to $12 on pleasure cars and from $15 to $150 on trucks. The next title, dealing with inheritance and estate taxes, was reported to the House by the subcommittee with a schedule of rates that the committee deemed equitable. These were recast as the result of an amendment on the floor of the House but the Senate restored the rates originally approved by the House subcommittee and these were restored in conference. As the bill left the House, it contained a title imposing a business-privilege tax of three-fifths of 1 percent with an exemption of $1,000 and with special rates for chain stores. This whole title was stricken by the Senate but restored by the conferees with a rate of two-fifths of 1 percent, an exemption of $2,000 and the chain-store tax deleted. The House also approved a rate of $1.70 on real estate in the District of Columbia but this was stricken by the Senate. The Senate supplemented the existing rate by writing into the bill a modified form of the single tax, placing an extra rate of $1 per hundred of value on land. This would have resulted in a tax rate of $1.50 on improvements and $2.50 on land values. In conference, the land tax was stricken and the general real-estate rate set at $1.75.

The Senate District Committee adopted a kind of sales tax which was styled luxury sales tax. On the Senate floor this title was stricken and the income tax substituted. This was of real interest to me after two ineffectual attempts to secure House approval of the income tax. In conference the income tax was again stricken.

Sooner or later the Congress will have to adopt an income tax for the District of Columbia. Two-thirds of the States now have such a tax, and every year they are increasing in number. Moreover, States are gradually expanding their income-tax rates to meet their needs. It is a sound tax, based upon ability to pay, and has the virtue of being a direct tax which will make the public tax conscious. In proportion as it does, so it will develop a keener and more attentive interest in the generic problem of government expenditure and government taxation. The District of Columbia is growing every year, and as it grows it requires more and more revenue. Unless the Congress wishes to impose an unbearable burden upon property and continue to resort to indirect and hidden taxes, it must enact an income tax that is all inclusive and will make everybody bear a fair share of the burden in return for the benefits which they enjoy. The average citizen who has sufficient income pays a Federal tax and also a State income tax in those States which now have income-tax laws. It is altogether indefensible that State employees should escape a Federal income tax or that Federal employees should escape a local income tax. Yet such are the exemptions that now inure to some three and one-half million Federal, State, and local employees in this country through a court decision which prevents the States from taxing Federal instrumentalities and which prevents the Federal Government from taxing State instrumentalities. There was a bit of attenuated reasoning in that decision of 1870 on this matter. The theory was advanced that through the taxing power the States could cripple or destroy the Federal Government and, conversely, the Federal Government could destroy, hamstring, and cripple the State governments. The theory is logical enough, but it is of a gossamer texture that nobody would seriously regard as a practical matter. I venture the prophecy that the time is not far distant when the District of Columbia will have an income-tax law.

In the bill as reported by the House subcommittee was a provision authorizing an advance of funds from the Treasury to the District to tide it over the rough spots when it began to appear that the District might be without sufficient revenues. The House deleted that provision but it was restored by Senate action and retained by the conferees.

Finally, the Senate added a new title which contained the substance of the Miller-Tydings bill. There was considerable outspoken talk about the procedure whereby a wholly ungermane rider is attached to a House bill and some insistence that the House conferees stand adamant in demanding its removal from the bill. Conferees can, of course, be adamant, but it must not be forgotten that the technique of the conference committee is to give and take, to compromise and harmonize in order to effect a bill in agreeable form. The difficulty lies not in the derelictions of conferees but in the rule which permits the attaching of ungermane items to House bills in the form of riders. This practice has prevailed for a long time and probably will prevail for a much longer time unless there be an alteration of the rules which make such legislative technique possible.

I do not condone this practice, but I might say that I did favor and do favor the enactment of the Miller-Tydings bill. It resulted from an Illinois case that went to the Supreme Court. The Illinois Legislature had enacted a law prior to 1936 making it possible for the manufacturer of merchandise to set the price at which it must be resold. In other words, it empowered the manufacturer to tell the retailer what he must get as a retail price and if he refused to do so, the manufacturer could refuse to sell him further and also had an action at law. It so happened that the Seagram's Distillers Corporation, located in Indiana, sold some of its products to the Old Dearborn Distributing Co. in Chicago. Evidently, the distiller indicated the price at which the liquors must be sold and when the distributer refused to abide by such a price, there was a violation and court action. Thus the case found its way to the Supreme Court on a question of constitutionality of the statute. The Court ruled that this was a matter of policy for the States to determine, and thereby upheld the Fair Trade Act of Illinois.

A question then arose as to whether or not the maintenance of such resale prices under a State fair trade act might not be in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of 1890 insofar as these transactions sprang from a contract in interstate commerce. This question was presented to the House Judiciary Committee and there determined by the reporting of the Miller bill. It was essentially nothing more than an enabling act which placed the stamp of approval upon price maintenance transactions under State acts, notwithstanding the Sherman Act of 1890. The bill was reported to the House and was ready for action but for some unknown reason it was withdrawn and began to gather dust. Then came the District revenue bill and this Tydings-Miller bill was attached as a rider. It was slightly modified from its original text by a proviso which I am informed was acceptable to the Attorney General and acceptable to the authors. I, for one, trust that it will be approved by the Senate and by the President because it will be of immense importance to the retailers, the wholesalers, and the manufacturers of the country.

Thus, while the conferees were perfecting a revenue measure for the Nation's capital, they were also, by a quirk in the rules, enacting one of the most important pieces of general legislation that has come before this session of Congress. Such are the vagaries of human and legislative destiny.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further on another matter?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I notice there is a provision adopted in the Senate authorizing the appropriation of $20,000 for a study and survey of the entire tax structure of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, that was cut to $5,000 and it just permits them to have a couple of extra clerks in order to get this new tax bill in shape. It is really for extra work to cost $5,000.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, the gentleman knows there have been a great many surveys and studies made of the tax situation in the District.

Mr. PALMISANO. This is not to be a survey.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman think anything will be accomplished by this appropriation?

Mr. PALMISANO. We cut down the $20,000. There was an appropriation for $20,000, and we reduced it to $5,000 for extra clerk hire.

Mr. MAPES. I commend the gentleman for saving at least $15,000 of the $20,000.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. I wish to say to the gentleman from Michigan that we cut that proposal from $20,000 to $5,000, and it is our belief that already there have been too many surveys made in the District of Columbia. With this additional personnel I believe they can compile all the data that are necessary. I do not believe it will cost as much as $5,000.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask the question further—I notice the Senate amendment contained a provision which seems to have crept into so much legislation in the last few years, as follows:

> Such sums shall be available for expenditure for personal services without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Was that provision retained in the conference report?

Mr. PALMISANO. I think it was.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will yield, that was changed. They are amenable to civil service.

Mr. MAPES. They are?

Mr. PALMISANO. I am informed that was changed.

Mr. MAPES. I congratulate the gentleman on that accomplishment.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I am interested in amendment no. 33, which has to do with the Miller-Tydings bill. Can the gentleman tell me whether that amendment, in its general scope, contains the provisions of the Miller-Tydings bill?

Mr. PALMISANO. I understand so.

Mr. CULKIN. The action of the conferees is satisfactory to the gentleman from Arkansas, the author of the bill in the House?

Mr. PALMISANO. I understand it is.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. I think the bill is sound legislation and should be on the books.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation carries into effect one of the principles of the Kelly-Capper Act. It does it through the medium of fair-trade acts passed by the State legislatures. It is perhaps sounder in principle than the Kelly-Capper Act, in that it applies the basic principle of that legislation through the medium of home rule. Having supported the Kelly-Capper Act and urged its passage, I am even more vigorously for this measure. I wish to congratulate the learned proponent of the bill, our distinguished colleague from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], upon bringing this bill to the floor.

This bill will aid the independent merchant, the efficient independent retailer, and protect them from predatory price cutting by chain outfits. But the independent must not be lulled into the belief that legislative enactment alone will save him, for his case depends even more largely upon his own initiative, industry, and energy. His present precarious situation is due to the tremendous economic waste in distribution. This is aggravated to a more serious extent by his failure to so organize his group that he is able to participate in mass buying and mass distribution the way the chain organizations do. Former President Hoover is quoted as saying that no less than $8,000,000,000 is lost annually through inefficient marketing. A large portion of this loss is due to the present procedure in retail business circles. In my judgment, the time is now ripe for the independent retailer and wholesaler to mass their buying powers through cooperative procedure and successfully meet the chain store by bringing about reduced prices.

It is stated that about 4,000,000 men are engaged in the retailing business in America and that 3,000,000 of these are independents. The force of numbers and buying power is therefore still in the hands of the independents, and they can hold the fort by the application of mass buying and mass distribution. Such procedure would eliminate the tremendous waste that now handicaps the local retailer and would put him economically on all fours with the chain. The independent retailer, furnishing as he does a delivery and credit system which appeals to many groups, provided he sets up in addition the machinery of cooperative buying, has nothing to fear.

THE AMERICAN RETAILER

Here in America the retail merchant was a potent influence in the political field during the Revolutionary period. The first retailers were the traders who pioneered the woods before the settlements came. In the development of America, past and present, the independent retailer has had a tremendous social and political part. In community life everywhere they are the backbone of church and other local organizations. The retail merchant largely supports the local hospitals, the fraternal organizations, service and social clubs, and all other charitable activities. The solicitor for such various and worth-while activities as the Boy Scouts, Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association, and the other activities that stand for community betterment makes the store of the retail merchant his first port of call. Incidentally, a worthy cause is never rejected by the community-minded retailer. But let the selfsame solicitor visit the chain store. Its managing clerk tells him that he has no authority in the premises and he will have to communicate with the headquarters of the chain 1,000 or 2,000 miles away. The local merchant educates his children in the professions, arts, and sciences, and from this blood we recruit much of our leadership today. He is an outstanding influence not only for civic but for political betterment. He is invariably a useful and constructive citizen. He is frequently called into the public service and acts on the school board or in other municipal activities without pay.

Nor is this the only service of the merchant to community life. There are also certain of the humanities in the picture. Take the case of John Smith, who is taken ill. He has a wife and five small children depending on him for support. The family income stops and he desires credit from the retailer pending his return to health and employment. Based on his record of honesty and payment the merchant extends the credit and John Smith is tided over his adverse days. Financial help is frequently extended by the local retailer to his customers who are in temporary monetary distress. Chain stores are impersonal and no such accommodation is possible there. In many other ways does the local retailer, in direct and indirect matters, serve the community. The local retailer is perhaps a director in the local bank or building association and gives freely of his time in the upbuilding of the community. His profits are invested locally or on deposit in the local bank.

CHAINS WILL DESTROY COMMUNITY LIFE

On the other hand, the receipts of the chain store remains in the town overnight and then are sent on to some distant city. This procedure is draining the communities dry by the withdrawal of profits from circulation. This is one of the most pernicious results of the outside chain. In a recent article on Efforts of Chain Operations on Community Welfare, Lt. Gov. Henry A. Huber, of the State of Wisconsin, states:

> Community life is being robbed of its profits and its industries. Chain stores, chain oil stations, chain drug stores, chain insurance companies, and mail-order houses are taking the profits of the storekeeper and the farmer and the businessman of Wisconsin and distributing outside of the State.
> Blind, indeed, is he who cannot decipher these fundamental economic facts. A mere reading of them should convince any person that it is time Wisconsin awoke and protected its own people, its own industries, its own businessmen, and its own profits. It is time that the links of the chain shackle were broken.

EFFECTS ON LABOR

The chain store is equally disastrous in its effect on industrial wages. The chain-store buyer goes to the manufacturer of a standard article and makes him a proposition to take a large portion of his output at a low figure. This is the basis upon which the chain store works; namely, to purchase in mass and distribute in mass. He drives a hard bargain with the manufacturer, and the manufacturer like all mortals thinks of himself first and passes on the decrease in the price to his workmen. This is not a psychological proposition, but an actual fact. As I have heretofore stated, copyrighted and standardized articles which the chain or department stores frequently use as bait, mirror in their low prices a reduced wage to the industrial worker. As the buying power of the chains increases they will more and more vigorously dictate prices to the manufacturer. Failing this, they will build a plant alongside of him and engage in manufacturing the particular articles themselves. In either case it will result in a reduced wage to the industrial group and a consequent reduction in comforts and clothes and food and education for his children. Of what avail will the nominal saving which the industrial worker now makes in the chain stores be to him under such circumstances?

This measure complements existing State law and will make legal what was condemned by the Supreme Court in 1910 in the case of Dr. Miles Medicine Co. v. Parks & Sons Co. (220 U. S. Rep. 373). The report of the proponent of the bill, Mr. MILLER, calls attention to the opinion of Judge Sutherland, upholding the constitutionality of the Illinois Price Fixing Act. The House will be interested to know that such price-fixing acts supplemented by this legislation will write into law the minority opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes, filed in the Miles case. Mr. Justice Holmes' language in this dissenting opinion was vigorous and incisive, and the principle laid down in his dissenting opinion is the genesis of this pending measure. Mr. Justice Holmes stated:

I cannot believe that in the long run the public will profit by this Court permitting knaves to cut reasonable prices for some ulterior purpose of their own and thus to impair, if not to destroy, the production and sale of articles which it is assumed to be desirable that the public should be able to get.

We lately hear a good deal about the minority opinion becoming the majority opinion of the Court. This has been the history of our jurisprudence in matters involving social progress and broader definitions of human rights. It has been especially true of the remarkable forensic foresight which has characterized the notable dissents of the late Justice Holmes. In the pending measure is an evidence that these historic dissents amount almost to prophecy of what is certain to finally become the law. In saying this I voice no disrespect or criticism of the majority of the Court but desire to emphasize the psychic ability of this extraordinary man, now passed away, to peer into the future and forecast the social and economic needs of the Nation. At the time the Kelly-Capper bill was pending in 1930, I had the temerity to write to Judge Holmes and send him a copy of my speech. You can imagine my delight when, a few days later, I received an autographic letter from him, which I ask permission to read to the House:

BEVERLY FARMS, MASS.,
June 17, 1930.

HON. FRANCIS D. CULKIN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Please accept my thanks for your kind letter and very interesting speech. Of course I am gratified by the generous expressions concerning myself. I do not feel competent to express an opinion upon what if any legislation is desirable, although I see no reason to change that expressed in the Dr. Miles Medicine Co. case.

Very truly yours,

O. W. HOLMES.

My opinion in 1930 was that the principle of this legislation was sound and meritorious. My opinion was that the legislation was in the interest of the manufacturer and laborer working in industry. My opinion was that this legislation would be an aid to the efficient independent retailer who was playing an important part in community life in America. I stated then that this legislation in nowise would foster monopoly. I have not changed my mind on any of these conclusions. I am vigorously for this legislation and trust the House and Senate will write it into law.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMISANO. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Is there any provision to prohibit picketing in the District of Columbia in this bill?

Mr. PALMISANO. No.

MILLER-TYDINGS FAIR TRADE ACT

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The adoption of the conference report now before the House will result in the enactment of the Miller-Tydings bill. That bill, H. R. 1611, has been acted on favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary and by the Rules Committee.

In these remarks I shall refer to the Miller-Tydings amendment, which is included in the conference report, as H. R. 1611.

House bill 1611 is known as the Fair Trade Enabling Act because it is an act which enables fair-trade legislation passed by individual State legislatures to become effective and to be fully operative within the respective States. It is not legislation which puts into effect a new national policy originating in Congress. Rather it is legislation which helps the States to put into effect a policy originating within the States themselves. It constitutes a method through which States are enabled to enforce their laws through the cooperation of the Federal Government. It lends to the States the assistance of national legislation making effective fair-trade practice acts passed in the State legislatures.

Lengthy and exhaustive hearings on this proposed law were conducted before subcommittee no. III of the Committee on the Judiciary, of which subcommittee, Mr. MILLER, the introducer of the bill is chairman and upon which subcommittee I have the honor to serve. Many witnesses for and against the bill were heard. Briefs and printed statements in support of the bill and in opposition to it were filed and made a part of the printed record of the hearings. Oral arguments were made upon the bill pro and con. The subcommittee considered the testimony. After long study and discussion I was commissioned to report the bill favorably to the full Committee on the Judiciary, and it was so reported. The full committee held executive sessions on the bill and the Chairman and General Counsel of the Federal Trade Commission accepted the committee's invitation to attend one of these meetings and to discuss the bill with the committee. Finally the Judiciary Committee voted unanimously to report the bill to the House with approval. Objections to parts of the bill were made by one member of the committee. These objections will be answered later in these remarks. A hearing was had on the bill before the Rules Committee and the committee passed a resolution for a rule. The bill has passed through the conventional course of procedure and the standing committee who have thoroughly considered it recommend to the House that it be enacted into law, in order that the fair-trade practice acts passed by so many of the States of the Union may become vital laws, fully operative and capable of performing the great service which they are designed to perform.

The State laws cannot function completely and satisfactorily without the enactment by Congress of a fair-trade enabling act.

Forty-two States of the Union have enacted fair-trade legislation. These States are California, Arizona, Wyoming, Iowa, Louisiana, Illinois, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Mexico, Utah, Idaho, Washington, Montana, South Dakota, Kansas, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, South Carolina, Michigan, Florida, Oklahoma, Ohio, Tennessee, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, North Dakota, Georgia, Colorado, Indiana, Nevada, Nebraska, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire.

The State acts are substantially identical. They were enacted by the individual State legislatures and represent the wishes of the people of the respective States. The wisdom and soundness of the legislation has been passed upon by 42 State legislative bodies. H. R. 1611 will in effect confirm and ratify the judgment of the State legislatures which have passed State fair-trade practice acts.

What is a State fair-trade practice act and what is its purpose? A State fair-trade practice act is a legislative act which provides that contracts for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade-mark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, are valid contracts where the parties thereto agree therein that the buyer will not sell the article below the minimum price stated in the contract. The act applies only to articles or commodities which are in free and open competition with other articles or commodities of the same general class.

In other words, a State fair-trade practice act is an act which allows a seller of a trade-marked or identified commodity and the purchaser of such commodity to agree that the purchaser of that commodity shall not sell the commodity at less than the price agreed upon between the buyer and the seller where the commodity is one which is in open competition with commodities of similar character. The State fair-trade practice acts in the respective States practically uniformly provide that any retailer selling a trade-marked commodity which comes within the provisions of the act, knowing that the owner of the commodity has provided by contract that the article shall not be sold at less than a certain price, is bound by that contract although he may not be a party to it, and is liable for the penalties set up in the act against those who sell the trade-marked article at a price less than the price named as the selling price by the owner. So much for the definition and description of a State fair-trade practice act. Now, as to the purpose and effect.

The purpose of the State fair-trade practice acts is to eliminate an evil which has resulted in untold hardship to the small merchant and the independent merchant seeking to conduct a business in a fair, honorable, and reasonable way. The evil to which I refer is the evil of price cutting and this evil normally manifests itself in the practice known as the loss leader. The loss-leader practice is the practice of the advertising and selling of well-known, reputable, trade-marked articles of merchandise for which a demand has been created, at a price less than the cost price of the article to the retailer. It is obvious that the sale of an article by a merchant at less than its cost to him is an unprofitable sale in itself. It has all the earmarks of the Greek bearing gifts. Its purpose is not to give the customer something for nothing but on the contrary is intended to get something from the customer by creating in the customer's mind the belief that he is getting something for less than its real and actual cost. Wherever the loss-leader practice is made use of the loss on the individual article sold below cost is made up by the increased price of other articles. Thus the customer is lured into the store of the loss-leader retailer by the belief that he will be able to buy goods cheap, only to find that the goods, other than the loss leaders, are purchased at a price sufficiently high to make up for the loss taken by the merchant in the sale of the loss leader. The loss-leader practice is a form of unfair competition which was exposed by witnesses before the committee and which has been condemned by legitimate trade associations as an outstanding evil in the retail merchandising.

The effects of the State acts may be judged by the experience in California, and this experience is being duplicated, so far as can be determined at this time, in the States which have since enacted fair-trade laws except that the full operation of the laws is handicapped by the provisions of the existing Federal statutes which H. R. 1611 is designed to correct.

The experiences under the California and other State fair-trade acts show that the level of prices for the products coming under their provisions has not advanced and the indications are that they will be reduced as floor levels are established. The cost of living has not increased following the enactment of these laws, and, so far, there has been no consumer resistance, as is shown by the fact that the legislatures of about 25 States have adopted the laws since January 1 of this year and after public hearings on the merits of the legislation.

Having examined the State fair-trade practice acts, let us consider the bill before Congress.

What is the fair-trade practice enabling act now pending before us, and how does it operate?

H. R. 1611, known as the Miller-Tydings Fair Trade Practice Enabling Act, is simple in its mechanics. It is a recognition of the sovereign rights of the individual States, respectively, to govern themselves in matters of commerce within their respective State borders. The act merely amends the existing Federal law—the Sherman Act—so as to provide that goods shipped from one State to another may be subject to the fair-trade practice act of the State into which the goods are shipped and that the contracts covering the resale of such goods in accordance with that State law are valid contracts.

H. R. 1611 is in no sense a price-fixing statute. No prices are fixed by the act. It is entirely a permissive act. It merely allows the seller and buyer of trade-marked or identified goods, sold in free open competition with similar goods, to contract for resale of goods according to the State law, if they want to do so. It does not compel the buyer and seller to enter into the contract but only authorizes them to do so if they so desire. It removes the existing barrier which now prevents the free execution of such contracts.

It is to be particularly noted that the act makes valid, as to goods flowing in interstate commerce, only those contracts in which the goods included therein are sold in open competition with other goods of similar character. Thus the act is in no sense a measure which will sanction contracts creating monopolies or combinations in restraint of trade. The provisions of the Sherman Act specifically prohibiting such contracts are not changed by this act but continue to remain in force. The act does not legalize contracts to maintain prices between manufacturers or sellers of different trade-marked articles of the same class or character. It only authorizes or permits contracts between the seller and the buyer, regarding resale price, as to a particular article, and then only provided that article is in free and open competition with articles of a similar character produced or distributed by others, and further provided only that the contract is authorized under the laws of the State in which it is to be carried out. The act, as amended in the Senate, and as now before the House in the conference report, specifically provides that the act shall not make lawful any contract or agreement providing for establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices on any commodity covered by the act, between manufacturers, or between producers, or between wholesalers, or between brokers, or between factors, or between retailers, or between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other. As an example, the act would not allow two manufacturers of similar trade-marked articles, as, for instance, articles of food or drugs or clothing or soap or fountain pens, or any other competing articles of similar kind, to agree between themselves as to the price at which their respective articles shall be sold. The act does not alter the provisions nor the effect of the Sherman Act as to such contracts. In other words, it simply authorizes contracts, permitted by the States, between the seller and buyer of one article—contracts known as vertical contracts. It does not permit contracts between seller and seller of different articles—contracts known as horizontal contracts. The latter contracts, if violative of the Sherman Act now, will still be violative of that act if H. R. 1611 becomes a law.

State fair-trade practice acts have been declared constitutional and valid by a number of the courts of last resort of the States. Notable among these cases is the case of Old Dearborn against Seagram, in the State of Illinois, later upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, to which case I shall presently refer more particularly, and the recent case of Doubleday, Doran Co. against R. H. Macy & Co., in the State of New York—Two hundred and Seventy-third New York Reports, page 167.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Old Dearborn Distributing Co. v. Seagram Distillers Corporation (299 U. S. 178), decided on December 7, 1936, held that the State Fair Trade Practice Act of the State of Illinois was constitutional and valid. The United States Supreme Court, in its decision of that case, made a statement with reference to the wisdom of the State acts which is pertinent to the discussion of this bill in Congress today. The Supreme Court of the United States examined the constitutionality of the State statute and declared that the statute was constitutional. It was argued before the Court that the legislature of the State should not have enacted the law because it was an unwise law. The Supreme Court of the United States in handing down its opinion said:

> There is a great body of fact and opinion tending to show that price cutting by retail dealers is not only injurious to the good-will and business of the producer and distributor of identified goods but injurious to the general public as well. The evidence to that effect is voluminous, but it would serve no useful purpose to review the evidence or to enlarge further upon this subject. True, there is evidence, opinion, and argument to the contrary; but it does not concern us to determine where the weight lies.

We need say no more than that the question may be regarded as fairly open to differences of opinion. The legislation here in question proceeds upon the former and not the latter view; and the legislative determination in that respect, in the circumstances here disclosed, is conclusive so far as this Court is concerned. Where the question of what the facts establish is a fairly debatable one, we accept and carry into effect the opinion of the legislature (Radice v. New York, 264 U. S. 292, 294; Zahn v. Board of Public Works, 274 U. S. 325, 328; and cases cited).

The same situation exists here today. The legislatures of 42 States of this Union have solemnly declared that in the exercise of their wisdom and judgment they desire that certain contracts be made valid within their State borders. We are today discussing a law which, if enacted, will enable those States to carry out the wishes of their respective people as expressed by their legislative acts. The wisdom of the respective State acts has been passed upon by 42 individual legislatures.

The unicameral Legislature of my own State of Nebraska enacted a State fair-trade practice act by an almost unanimous vote. In voting for H. R. 1611 we are voting to permit these States to enforce their own fair-trade laws—to carry out their express desire. If we vote against it, we vote to prevent the State laws from operating effectively. Although 42 States have passed fair-trade acts governing contracts for the sale of trade-marked or identified goods within their respective State borders, these State statutes cannot function fully and freely and satisfactorily unless we pass this act. There exists grave doubt whether goods transported from an outside State into a State having a fair-trade act can be legally made the subject of the type of contract permitted by the State act. The enactment of this bill (H. R. 1611) would so amend the existing Federal law—the Sherman Act—as to allow these goods shipped in interstate commerce legally to become the subject of a State fair-trade contract. The enactment of this bill into law will remove the only existing barrier to the complete functioning of the State fair-trade acts in those States which have passed such acts.

Are we going to deny these States their rights? Surely not. Are we going to say to 42 of our sovereign States which have passed a fair trade practice act—and every one of the 48 States will eventually pass the act—are we going to say to the States, "You want an effective fair-trade act, but we will not let you have it?" That is what we will say in effect if we do not enact this legislation. Rather, shall we say to the States, "A barrier exists which prevents you from receiving the full benefit of your own fair-trade law within your own State borders. It lies in our power to remove that barrier. We will remove it. We recognize your right to govern yourself. We will cooperate with you to that legitimate end." H. R. 1611, which we have under discussion today, would remove that barrier and thus enable the States to have the benefit of the legislation which they have enacted for their own welfare.

In the hearings before the committee and in the debates upon the bill in the committee itself, it was suggested that there are two points which may be considered in the nature of objections to the bill. The committee discussed these points and considered that they did not constitute valid objections. However, in order to present the matter fully to the House, these objections should be referred to. These objections are:

First. That H. R. 1611, if enacted, would impose a penalty upon a seller of merchandise for selling such merchandise below the minimum price agreed upon in a contract to which he is not a party.

Second. Objection is made that no allowance is made in the contract of resale authorized by the respective State laws for difference in cost of doing business between different individual businesses, and that a resale price which might be fair to one concern might not be fair resale price to another concern because of the difference in the overhead or the cost of doing business existing between the two firms.

The objections were overruled by the committee after a consideration of the testimony bearing upon them and after full discussion of the objections.

The first objection, namely, that H. R. 1611, if enacted, will permit resale contracts to be binding upon parties other than the parties to the contract itself, is fully answered by the statement that the respective State laws make provision that the contract shall be binding upon all those who sell the trade-marked article which is the subject of the resale contract whenever the person selling the article below the contract resale price does so willfully and knowingly. This argument is well answered by the controlling opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Old Dearborn against Seagram, supra, upholding the validity and constitutionality of the Illinois State Fair Trade Practice Act, where the Court says:

A challenge is directed against section 2, which provides that willfully and knowingly advertising, offering for sale or selling any commodity at less than the price stipulated in any contract made under section 1, whether the person doing so is or is not a party to the contract, shall constitute unfair competition, giving rise to a right of action in favor of anyone damaged thereby.

It is first to be observed that paragraph 2 reaches not the mere advertising, offering for sale or selling at less than the stipulated price, but the doing of any of these things willfully and knowingly. We are not called upon to determine the case of one who has made his purchase in ignorance of the contractual restriction upon the selling price, but of a purchaser who has had definite information respecting such contractual restriction and who, with such knowledge, nevertheless proceeds willfully to resell in disregard of it.

Appellants here acquired the commodity in question with full knowledge of the then-existing restriction in respect of price which the producer and wholesale dealer had imposed, and, of course, with presumptive if not actual knowledge of the law which authorized the restriction. Appellants were not obliged to buy; and their voluntary acquisition of the property with such knowledge carried with it, upon every principle of fair dealing, assent to the protective restriction, with consequent liability under paragraph 2 of the law by which such acquisition was contained.

Further complete answer to this objection is that the respective States in the exercise of their wisdom and judgment imposed the penalties provided in the respective State acts. The bill before us today, if enacted, merely makes effective the law which has been enacted by the respective State legislatures to govern transactions within their own borders.

The second objection that no allowance has been made for difference in cost of doing business between different firms engaged in sale of trade-marked articles which are subject to price resale contracts, is again answered by the statement that no such allowance is set forth in the State acts and that the bill which we have before us for consideration merely makes effective the State acts and does not attempt to legislate substantively on the subject of resale price maintenance. However, this question was considered so seriously by the committee that members of the Federal Trade Commission were called into the conference by the committee in executive session and after a full discussion and consideration of the question the committee accepted the conclusions expressed by the representative of the Federal Trade Commission. They pointed out that the plan of attempting through the Federal Trade Commission, or through any other body, of fixing a specific resale price for each merchant for each commodity upon which resale contracts have been entered into, would be a task so gigantic and stupendous as to be an utter impossibility. The opponents of this bill urge as their strongest objection the claim that this is a price-fixing bill. This claim is untrue. However, the very ones who oppose this bill as a price-fixing measure bring forth a suggestion that the bill be so amended as to require price fixing of commodities in every case in which a State authorized price resale contract is entered into. The full and complete answer to this, as in the case of the first objection, is that the State acts authorize the price resale contracts in which it is agreed between the manufacturer, the producer, and the seller that the commodity shall be sold at a price agreed upon between the parties to the contract. H. R. 1611 merely makes possible the full and complete operation of these State acts.

In conclusion, I repeat that the purpose of H. R. 1611 is merely to allow the people of the respective States to carry out a public policy which they have determined for themselves. It removes an existing Federal barrier which prevents the operation of State laws within the borders of the States which have enacted these laws. It merely validates contracts operative within the respective States as to goods transported into those States in interstate commerce. The States have enacted their fair-trade practice laws for the benefit of the producer, the distributor, and the consumer, and for the protection and continuance in business of the independent merchant.

The States in which the acts have operated are satisfied with them. The other States which have recently enacted them based their enactment upon the beneficial results shown in the States where they have been in operation. However, State fair-trade practice acts have never had an opportunity to function fully, and they never will operate with complete effectiveness, nor produce the full benefit which they are capable of producing until the removal of the existing Federal barrier by the passage of the Miller-Tydings Fair Trade Practice Act, H. R. 1611. That act is now before us as an amendment to the conference report under consideration.

Forty-two States of the Union today look to the House of Representatives to pass this law which will remove the barrier now standing in the way of the full and complete operation of the respective State fair-trade practice acts.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent in connection with the conference report on the District of Columbia tax bill to extend my own remarks at that point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman make some remarks in the House?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Just briefly; yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein a communication from a prominent constitutent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BLAND for today on account of official business.

BRIDGES ON FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAYS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7373) to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Alabama tell us what committee reported this bill?

Mr. HOBBS. It comes with a unanimous report from the Committee on Roads. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that some days ago I took the matter up with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and gave him a copy of last year's report of the committee containing an approving letter of the Secretary of Agriculture. This bill was passed last year after the favorable and unanimous report of the Roads Committee of the House. The bill passed both branches of Congress last year, but was vetoed by the President because:

> The effect of this bill would be to divert funds appropriated for carrying forward our system of Federal-aid highways through the construction of new roads and new bridges to the payment of one-half of the construction cost of bridges already built.

This objection, quoted from the memorandum of disapproval, has been eliminated. The Department of Agriculture has written an approving letter stating that the Bureau of the Budget had advised that this legislation would not be in conflict with the program of the President. So we are asking of you today simply a reenactment of substantially the same bill that was passed last year.

The pending measure affects no State whatsoever except those which have freed toll bridges at their own expense, without any Federal aid. It could not cut down any allotment of Federal-aid road funds to any other State.

Mr. MAPES. Is the gentleman from Alabama a member of the Committee on Roads?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir; I am not; but the able and honored chairman of that committee filed their report recommending that the bill, as amended, be passed, and he and many of the members of that fine committee are here pulling for the speedy passage of this bill.

Mr. MAPES. Do the member of the Committee on Roads know that this bill is being called up now?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; they reported it unanimously and several of the distinguished members of that great committee are now on the floor of the House.

Mr. MAPES. I think it very poor practice to bring up matters in this way on special calendar days when the Members generally have the right to expect that only calendar business will be transacted.

Mr. HOBBS. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I spoke to the acting minority leader some days ago and gave him a copy of last year's report.

Mr. MAPES. There are 435 Members of the House, and they have the right to feel that special matters will not be called up under unanimous consent on a Private Calendar Day.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman from Michigan, for whose opinion I have the highest regard, is correct as a general proposition. This would not have been done in this instance had it not been for the fact that the same identical bill, to all practical intents and purposes, was passed by both Houses of Congress last year.

Mr. MAPES. I do not think the gentleman himself would favor this practice generally.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICH. What is the purpose of the bill. As I understand, it is a road bill, but will the gentleman state its purpose?

Mr. HOBBS. Under the act of March 3, 1927, Congress authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to allocate to any State a Federal contribution of 50 percent of the cost of any bridge that might be built under its provisions. Very few States took advantage of the provisions of the act of March 3, 1927. Many States did not even know it had been passed. As I understand it, only 11 States have defrayed all of the cost of toll-bridge construction or acquisition and qualified themselves to receive the benefits proposed in this bill.

This bill provides that not one cent shall be made available by the Secretary of Agriculture until his engineers have approved the construction and quality of every bridge claiming money under this authority.

The bill provides that where any State had the right to a Federal contribution of 50 percent of the cost of the bridge, exclusive of all charges in connection with financing, exclusive of all rights-of-way, property damages, and things of that kind—just the actual honest-to-goodness cost of the bridge itself—if of standard quality and approved by the engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads, then, I repeat, where the State could have obtained it, but did not, and now has freed that bridge from toll charges, so that it is open to the public traveling these Federal-aid highways, the same allocation may be made now that could have been made then.

Mr. RICH. There are 14 States interested in this?

Mr. HOBBS. Eleven.

Mr. RICH. Where are they located?

Mr. HOBBS. They are scattered all over the Union. One State is Alabama, which is very vitally interested in this matter. Another State is West Virginia, another Kentucky, and I think the State of Pennsylvania has a bridge or two that may come under it. There are, I believe, 11 States in all, but I am not advised accurately.

Mr. RICH. Is this going to be applicable to any bridge to be built in the future; that is, the highway department will pay 50 percent of the cost of the bridge?

Mr. HOBBS. The bill applies only to those bridges that have been completed since March 3, 1927—the date of the passage of the act to which I referred—and which have been freed or will be made free between now and July 1, 1938.

Mr. RICH. We come in here with a lot of legislation and everything seems to be based on an effort to get money out of the Federal Treasury. If we pass this bill, how many more bridges are going to be constructed and can the gentleman tell me where the Federal Treasury is going to get the money to pay for them?

Mr. HOBBS. I am glad to. There can be very few, if any, constructed under our policy now, because it is diametrically opposed to the thought of the Bureau of Roads and of this Congress to permit the construction of additional toll bridges on Federal-aid highways. The passage of this bill will not take one dime out of the Federal Treasury that has not already been appropriated. It simply makes available, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, money that has already been appropriated for this very purpose.

Mr. RICH. Already where?

Mr. HOBBS. In the Federal Treasury.

Mr. RICH. The Federal Treasury has not any money. It is threadbare now. The bottom is out of the barrel. The bunghole is open and the top is off. The whole thing is wrecked. The gentleman states he is going to get it out of the Federal Treasury, but that is a ridiculous statement. Let me give him a Federal Treasury statement. Let him look at the Federal Treasury statement and show me where they have any money that is in there and not appropriated. If so, I would be willing to go along with all these bills; but you are breaking the Federal Treasury, and it is time to stop.

Mr. HOBBS. I appreciate the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania. I may say to him that if his contention were correct, then no harm can come to the American people by virtue of the passage of this bill, since it would prove fruitless. [Laughter.] We will assume the risk of getting the money, however, and we thank the gentleman in anticipation of his support of this pending bill, since I have relieved him of his anxiety about where the money is coming from. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understand the bill correctly, the act of March 3, 1927, provides that the States may take advantage of that law and get a 50-percent contribution to the cost of a bridge?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; that is right, substantially.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Some 14 States have built bridges. This bill gives them the right now to take advantage of that law, provided the Secretary of Agriculture and the Director of the Bureau of Roads agree to do so?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; that is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. But that comes out of the road funds that have already been allocated to the States through appropriations already made by the Congress?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; out of Federal-aid road funds.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Would the gentleman indicate, if he can, how much money this would involve in the 11 or 14 States affected?

Mr. HOBBS. There again, sir; I can only refer you to the response of the Secretary of Agriculture under date of May 28, 1936, to the letter of the chairman of the committee, in which he states: "There are not many States where this condition exists and there are not a great many such toll bridges, nor would the amount of Federal funds involved be large. No new appropriation would be involved."

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Other States did take advantage of it?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And received the money?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir. The 11 to benefit hereunder are the ones that through poverty, or inadvertence, or for some other reason, did not take advantage of the 1927 act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of any State which, prior to the date of approval of this act, shall have constructed and shall have, or have had in operation any toll bridges on the approved system of Federal-aid highways within such State and which has caused or shall, prior to July 1, 1938, cause, any such toll bridge, or toll bridges, to be made free, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the Federal-aid road funds apportioned to the State not to exceed 50 percent of such amount as may be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as the reasonable construction cost of any such toll bridge: Provided, That no payment of Federal funds shall be made on account of any such bridge which was not constructed in accordance with plans and specifications which would meet the standards required by the Secretary of Agriculture at the time such bridge was constructed, nor on account of any bridge the construction of which was commenced or completed prior to March 3, 1927: And provided further, That no such payment shall be made which will exceed 50 percent of the reasonable cost of the labor and materials which were actually incorporated in the construction of such bridge, excluding all costs of rights-of-way, property damages, and financing costs, and any amount so paid on account of any such bridge shall be used by the highway department of such State for matching unobligated Federal-aid road funds available to the State for expenditure in the improvement of highways on the system of Federal-aid highways.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That in the case of each and every State, or political subdivision or subdivisions thereof, which, prior to the date of approval of this act, shall have constructed or acquired any toll bridges on the approved system of Federal-aid highways, and which has caused or shall, prior to July 1, 1938, cause any such toll bridge, or toll bridges, to be made free, the Secretary of Agriculture shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the Federal-aid road funds apportioned to such State not to exceed 50 percent of such amount as may be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture as the reasonable value or construction cost of any such bridge, whichever shall be least: Provided, That no payment of Federal funds shall be made on account of any such bridge which was not constructed in accordance with plans and specifications which would meet the standards required by the Secretary of Agriculture at the time such bridge was constructed, nor on account of any bridge the construction of which was completed prior to March 3, 1927: And provided further, That no such payment shall be made which will exceed 50 percent of the reasonable value or cost of the labor and materials which were actually incorporated in the construction of such bridge, excluding all costs of rights-of-way, property damages, and financing costs, whichever, value or cost, shall be least, and any amount so paid on account of any such bridge shall be used by the highway department of such State for matching unobligated Federal-aid road funds available to the State, for expenditure in the improvement of highways on the system of Federal-aid highways."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for 15 minutes. Is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] present?

Under a previous special order, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a number of names of people whom I designate as alien agitators, spies, and propagandists in the United States. Most of these people are aliens.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Members of the House will bear with me. As I have stated before, I think we are reaching a serious condition in this country. I have no malice toward any person or individual who is an American and who loves his country and his Constitution. My whole aim in addressing the House today is to call particular attention to some matters which I think the Members of the House and the country ought to know.

A week ago I stated I had the names of an additional hundred men, but that I was not going to mention their names, and I am not going to do so because these people ought to be subpenaed and put under oath. If a subpena is authorized by this House, I think we can once and for all clean up this situation with respect to all the "isms" in the United States and at the same time prepare some laws which will give us a better opportunity to know what we are trying to legislate.

In the present chaotic conditions in the United States we will be charged with trying to curb the rights of free speech, free press, and free assembly, whatever law we may try to pass. It is humanly impossible to present any proper legislation on this subject without having taken the testimony under oath under a proper subpena of certain agitators, most of whom are of foreign origin, who seek to substitute their form of government for the Constitution of the United States. It is impossible to pass the necessary laws when you know millions of dollars are being brought into this country by various groups to spread un-American propaganda. It is impossible to present any such law to the loyal American people, in all honesty and in all fairness, without a thorough study by a committee. As I stated some time ago, I do not care of whom the committee is composed. The Speaker can close his eyes and appoint seven Members at random, and still the documents I shall turn over to the committee will startle the country.

It has been asked on this floor, "Well, why do you not present some laws?" I was happy to see one measure passed yesterday to register with the Department of State all agents who represent foreign governments. This was a bill introduced by my former chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. It is a step in the right direction, and should be followed up with a proper study and investigation by a committee. The public in every section of the country have offered assistance so far as money is concerned if money is necessary to find out what is going on in this country.

Oh, I have had people in this House tell me I have been exaggerating a lot. I hope you have changed your minds since the last statement which was made 2 or 3 months ago.

Let us get down to cases. I speak to you now because I feel that as Americans and as Members of this body you ought to know exactly what is happening in this country. We are just sitting idly by and saying nothing. In the State of New Jersey today is the worst hotbed of Nazis and Fascists that you and I could ever dream of. Yes; I have their names. I know what they are trying to do. I would like to follow up this matter with a subpena, because certain people have certain documents which, if we can have them produced, will show sabotage against the United States of America. I have heard Members of Congress in the last week say, "Well, whom do you have in my district? What are their names?" Mr. Speaker, I have covered at least half of the United States in telling these Members whom they have in their districts, and who the agitators are.

Let me cite a telegram which has just come in, and this is very authentic.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Milwaukee's chapter of Nazi German-American Volksebund to hold a Nazi day in the Washington Bowl at Kensico, Wis., on August 8.

These people are going to open at this place a camp called Camp Hindenburg, and this will be a Nazi camp in the State of Wisconsin, 20 miles north of Milwaukee. Groups from Chicago are coming, as well as groups from South Bend, Ind. The leader has directed all Nazis from South Bend, Milwaukee, and Chicago to make sure that they are at the camp in time and in their uniforms, and that they do the necessary dirty work in swearing allegiance to Hitler.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will yield in just a minute.

When I addressed the House on Monday, July 26, I named a man called William Peterson, alias William Mueller, alias Ernst Imhoff. This man is a member of the Nazi groups. He has cheated the German people in this country out of over $400,000 by going to the German groups in this country and telling them the German Government needs money. In that way in a few years he has fleeced honest-to-goodness American people out of their money for bonds which are not worth the paper they are written on. This man, of Aryan stock, who has been condemning the Catholics, the Jews, and the Masons in speeches he has made all over the country, has robbed the American people of almost $400,000. I have his criminal record and his photograph here and also his print from the police department of the city of New York.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I understand that the type of man to whom the gentleman is now referring is the type of which the leaders in this Nazi movement are composed?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He is one of the leaders in this group.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the gentleman think this type of leader will be able to get very far with any kind of an organization, in view of what the gentleman has said about him?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No, I agree with the gentleman thoroughly. I am simply calling attention to what is going on. They have a racket here. Some of these men have come in here and they participate in the leadership of this German Bund, this alien system of espionage. They are taking advantage of their presence in this country and more or less boycotting American people into buying this worthless paper, and they are getting from these people millions of dollars and fleeing with them. I am not basing this argument on the fact he can get very far in this transaction, but I am calling the attention of the House to what is really happening in this country.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I did not hear the gentleman mention the name of the party who sent him the telegram about this big Nazi camp they are going to have near Milwaukee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman will excuse me, I do not feel like putting that in the RECORD.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I may say to the gentleman that during the course of his argument he has mentioned and insinuated that there are a lot of people around Milwaukee——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, no.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Who are Nazis and are going to have a Nazi camp. I would like to know the name of the man who sent the telegram, because I want to say to the gentleman that I occasionally go back to Milwaukee, in spite of the length of this session, and in the first place, I may say, I have never heard of the place where this camp is supposed to be established, and I have heard nothing about the camp.

I want to say one thing more. In Wisconsin we have managed to have little or no agitation and no marches and no picketing and no espionage and no foreigners, Germans or others, are going to organize our people, and we also do not need any help from New York City in telling us how to keep these fellows out of Wisconsin. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman made a very fine speech and I enjoyed it myself.

Mr. O'MALLEY. And I also want to say to the gentleman that when he reads a telegram like the one he referred to here, he ought to put the name of the party who sent it in the RECORD, because anybody can send a telegram.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am not here for criticism by the gentleman or anybody else.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I am not criticizing the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to be addressed properly, and the gentleman has addressed me and asked me a question.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I ask the gentleman for the name of the party who sent the telegram.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And I have politely told the gentleman that I do not propose at this time to give the name, but I wish to assure the gentleman from Wisconsin that what I have told him is a fact, that a new camp is being baptized on the 8th of August.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What kind of camp?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. A Nazi alien camp, to spread more propaganda against the Government of the United States and its people.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does the gentleman know that from his own information or from that telegram?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have some other files on that question.

Mr. O'MALLEY. A camp of aliens?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; and in conclusion, I shall be pleased to have the gentleman come over to my office and I will give him the name, and I will give him all the information I have.

Mr. O'MALLEY. When the gentleman reads a telegram and purports to tell the House that something is a fact, the gentleman should give the name of the man who sent it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think the gentleman is a little unreasonable when he asks me to disclose the name of the writer among his own people, who is giving me some information.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I see.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not think it is fair.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Then it is all mysterious and cannot be disclosed.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I will say to the gentleman that I think he is doing a splendid service, coming from New York and being in a position to know about these things, when he gives this information to us, and if there are any such men in my State I want to know about it, and I shall be pleased to help the gentleman from New York, and I believe if the gentleman continues the service which he is trying to render, we will be pleased to support him in every possible way.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I want to say that the only way I could find out that this is going on would be to find out the name of the gentleman who sent the telegram, so I could verify it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think this is a job for all of us. This is not a one-man job, and I am not seeking credit for it as a one-man job. I have stated before, and will repeat, that the doors of my office, as well as my files, are open, and I am willing to consult and convince my worst opponent with respect to this resolution or this investigation, and I will give him exhibit no. 1, which I have here, and I defy the gentleman, after looking at these exhibits—look at them now, if you do not mind.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I may say to the gentleman that I do not mind looking at them, and I have looked at them.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You have not seen them at all.

Mr. O'MALLEY. But I would like to verify the fact that this is going on all over the United States, as the gentleman states, because I would like to help him do something about it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman wants to help me, please cooperate, and there is no use of criticizing.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I am not criticizing the gentleman, but I would like to get the source of his information.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will be pleased to help you in every way I can.

Mr. O'MALLEY. All the gentleman has to do to help me is to give me the name of the party who knows about it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I told the gentleman a moment ago that I would be pleased to give it to him in confidence.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Some months ago some people doubted the gentleman's statement about camps being in existence. Everything since that time has confirmed what the gentleman stated.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. I have been listening to many of the speeches made by the distinguished gentleman on this particular subject. In the gentleman's files does he have any evidence of the fact that these people are spreading propaganda against the United States Government?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Why does not the gentleman carry out his duty as a citizen of the United States and turn that evidence over to the State Department or the Department of Justice?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. The answer to that question is very simple. The Department of Justice will not investigate anything unless a law of the Federal Government has been violated, and that is only natural.

Mr. STEFAN. But the gentleman claims that the law has been violated.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no. There can be subversive activity without a violation of a law, and the Department of Justice has no authority to make an investigation unless it is alleged that there has been a violation of a Federal law.

Mr. STEFAN. What are these subversive activities?

Mr. McCORMACK. Take, for instance, communism. They cannot investigate communistic activities, because the only law on the Federal statute books is one respecting conspiracy, where two or more people conspire to do or not to do certain unlawful acts. One has first to establish a conspiracy, and, second, show an overt act. The only law on the statute books is one in respect to conspiracy, and the Department of Justice will not investigate communistic activities in this country, because it is practically impossible to show a conspiracy. This law is for all practical purposes dead.

Mr. STEFAN. Is there any evidence that the gentleman has in his possession which shows that any of these organizations are plotting to overthrow our Government?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is definite evidence that by their actions they are seeking to array one American against another American. They come directly within the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] when he spoke about the new religion that has been created in Germany and which the National Socialist Party is trying to spread in this country. There is evidence also that they are seeking, and more or less demanding, that all Germans in this country join this movement in backing up the German Government for the purpose of carrying out the principles mentioned in the book Mein Kampf, a Hitler publication which has been spread around here by Hitler and his agents, and there is so much evidence that I have not a large enough staff to open the mail for information, and I am behind in opening mail almost 2 weeks—mail from Americans giving me definite information, and I have checked up part of it and find that everything they tell me is true. By their talk and by their action they are bound to create trouble from within; and God forbid, if we should ever be dragged into any war, that we should have to fight enemies from within.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. In this Nazi camp in New Jersey, what is the attitude of the people forming a camp of that kind within one of our own States, and what is their object in doing that, and whom do they salute and hail as their chief?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am really glad that the gentleman asked me that question, and I hope the gentleman will give me more time, for that is the first definite question that I have been asked to answer.

Mr. RICH. I think the gentleman ought to have all the time that he needs.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, in the first place in respect to this Nazi camp the gentleman is talking about, that is 1 of the 21 camps—and there will be 22 this month—about a year ago Hitler and Goering called upon all Germans wherever they are to fill out a war-draft questionnaire, and they were ordered, whether born in this country or not, to report to the labor camp in Germany for 1 year's training. Some people could not get away, and so they concocted the scheme to build camps in this country, to give every man an opportunity who is in sympathy with this madman of Germany to join these camps and do the necessary, which is drilling, goose-stepping, and the like, and sort of putting himself in position where he is ready to go out and shed more blood in this world. Some of these people are citizens of the United States and some of them are aliens. Of course, they are no more citizens of the United States than I am of Turkey, because they claim a dual nationality. These men are brought to this camp and they have to take an oath of allegiance and the oath of allegiance is to the fuehrer, which means the ruler, Fritz Kuhn, who is now in this country—and by the way he was elected for 4 years more, and there is going to be 4 years more of this program of agitation in this country; and then you must pledge allegiance to Hitler. I have definite proof of documentary evidence that says that they are bound to Germany, that their duty is to Germany, and that "we must not forget that we are American citizens at the same time." That is definite. Two weeks ago in that camp there were 15,000 people. You could not get within 5 miles of that camp. The police were helpless, because the Nazi storm troops were handling traffic.

In that parade 2 weeks ago there were almost 1,000 men in uniform, and they joined with the Black Shirts, who are organized in this country. There were 500 Black Shirts, and all the Black Shirts were hailing Mr. Hitler and the Hitlerites were hailing Mussolini, and there was not a thing said about the United States except a few speeches of criticism, when they told us, "Well, the President of the United States, he just comes and goes; but Mr. Hitler, we waited for him for 2,000 years." Yes, we waited for him for 2,000 years to create more trouble, not only amongst our American people, decent German 100-percent Americans, but against all other races of Americans in the United States, by arraying one against the other with the most vicious kind of propaganda.

I wish you gentlemen could come in and see some of that stuff. It would make you sick at the stomach to read it. That is smuggled in—tons and tons of it every day.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman spoke of Fritz Kuhn having stated that he believes in the idea and ideals of national German socialism, which is nazi-ism, and at the same time the ideals of American democracy. How can anybody believe in the ideals of nazi-ism, which is destructive of free speech, freedom of religion, destructive of everything which constitutes personal liberty, and at the same time believe in the ideals for which our country stands?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is the very point I have been trying to bring to the attention of this Congress. This very man, Fritz Kuhn, was decorated about 4 months ago by Mr. Hitler for the good and dirty work he has performed in this country by organizing a group that started with 75 people in 1933, and which today constitutes a strong army of 350,000. How can I get the records without a subpena?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Who furnished these camps with these uniforms? Does the gentleman have any knowledge of that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I need a subpena for that, but I have my suspicions that if I had a subpena—and it does not require much money—I could definitely go to two or three banks and show you that the money came in from the other side and that the camps were bought with foreign money; that this whole movement is financed and well financed by the Minister of Propaganda in Germany, and millions of dollars were spent in this country for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 6 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a week ago Thursday I mentioned a man by the name of Emil Ebner. Ebner is in charge of the youth camp as well as the adult camp in New Jersey. He is also in charge of the children. They have hundreds of little children clicking their heels and pledging allegiance every day. I showed you a picture outside that camp, and if anybody can find an American flag there I will buy you a suit of clothes with a silk hat. I showed you a picture of another camp, documentary evidence, and if you find an American flag there I will buy you anything you want me to buy you. There is not an American flag in any of these camps. The only time they have an American flag is when they go out on a parade, outside their own camp, to protect themselves, so that they can holler "America, I love you."

This man I have exposed was convicted in 1935 of a moral charge. This man was convicted on March 26, 1935—Newark, N. J.—of immorality with a colored woman, whose name I do not care to mention.

This Aryan, an alien, is in charge of little children between the ages 4 and 6, and you are sitting back here saying, "Oh, it can't happen here", and you sit down and do nothing.

I call upon this House. I call upon the American people. I call upon the Speaker of this House and the Rules Committee. They will have to account for it, because if I had time I have a list of more criminals that I could put into the RECORD; men who have been convicted of immorality, and in charge of these camps. Then we have propaganda by these very men attacking the Catholics, attacking my race, attacking the Masons, and every other race in the world, and we are sitting back here saying, "Well, it can't happen here."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. If the gentleman's statements are true, in that criminals of the worst type are in control of these various camps, I again ask the gentleman whether he feels there is very serious danger of a movement of that kind ever having any vital effect upon the people of this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would say yes, when you go back to the final analysis. If we had a subpena, we could show you that millions of dollars are coming in here for that purpose. When we show you that men and women are coming in here under the guise of diplomats, who are nothing but out and out propagandists, with instructions to do certain things which are inimical to our form of government, if we can show you that those kind of people are mixing in with our populace and are preaching something that is not for the best interest of this country, I say they ought to be exposed and we ought to rid this country of them at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Illinois asked a question because he seeks information. I might say to my friend that personally I have no fear of any ultimate success in the overthrow of our Government, but the fact is that these movements should be exposed to the pitiless light of American public opinion. Who, 17 years ago when we first heard about the Ku Klux Klan, did anything but laugh at this vicious movement; and yet, overnight, it came upon the American public as a menace, and it came very near putting a President into the White House. It was only by exposing to the American public the interests and purposes of that movement that we were able to bring about its disintegration and removal as a menace to our domestic welfare.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman has all the facts that he says he has, why does he not write remedial legislation so that we can pass laws that will stop these things?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman has asked a fair question. I am trying to do it, but I find that I have not all the facts. I would like to know how many millions of dollars are being shipped into this country, and who is shipping the money in.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What difference would it make whether he knows there was $10 or $10,000,000 shipped in, if he has the facts upon which to write a bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I know lots of things to my own satisfaction, but I am not going to appeal to my friends and say that I know definitely and positively about it unless I have definite and positive proof, unless I have subpenaed many people and established my case to the satisfaction of every Member of Congress and to the American people.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes, and I shall expect him to yield to me for a question.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is making a very powerful exposition and the Members are interested. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman laid his information before the proper officials of this administration or the Government; and if so, whom?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman was not with me on the last issue, but I am glad he is now interested enough to ask me that question. We have, during the course of time, taken matters up with the Department of Justice; and, as was so ably explained by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Department of Justice has not the power to subpena or compel information from banks unless some Federal law has been violated. The Department of Justice is composed of the finest body of men in the world, capable men, and the director of this Department is a splendid man, who I know is in sympathy with this situation, but the Congress has given him no right to go into all these questions.

Mr. KNUTSON. Did the Department of Justice tell the gentleman that they were powerless to meet the situation the gentleman is exposing?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They did not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has asked a question, and I shall give him a frank answer based on information in my possession. When the Special Committee on Un-American Activities was functioning, of which committee I was chairman, the Department of Justice had no authority even to assign any of their special agents to help us. They cooperate in every way they possibly can, but they are powerless to act unless it is alleged that a Federal law has been violated or there is Federal legislation that will permit them to investigate these activities.

Mr. KNUTSON. It would seem to me a very simple matter to bring in a bill prohibiting subversive measures, policies, or programs from being carried on.

Mr. McCORMACK. We passed a bill yesterday that will go a long way in this direction, and I say this not because I am the author of the bill, but it would require that all foreign political propagandists in this country, or any person who is a citizen of this country employed by any foreign State, political party, or corporation for political propaganda herein to register with the Secretary of State. If this becomes a law, the Department of Justice will then have legislation upon the statute books that will permit an investigation to be made. The greatest influence of all toward breaking up such things is the powerful voice of public opinion. In a democracy public opinion is the source of all power; and in the final analysis it is the greatest power that can be employed to break up subversive activities and movements.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to conclude my statement by saying, in addition to what the gentleman from Massachusetts has stated, that there is a certain oath of allegiance that these men in this country have been taking. If I could definitely establish that is the oath by order of Chancelor Hitler or by order of anybody, if I could have that definitely established, and I have a copy of the oath in the German language and they tell me that is the oath, but I have no proof of it, I could cancel the citizenship of thousands of so-called Americans who are holding a dual nationality.

Mr. KNUTSON. Speaking of oaths, I recall a Member of this House before we got into the World War charging that a certain fraternal organization had an oath that was entirely un-American. It later developed it was without foundation, but he got up before this House and stated he had positive evidence of it. When he was called upon to produce it, he fell flatter than a pancake.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I can give the gentleman the oath in a few minutes. If he will read the RECORD of the 25th he will find the oath there. But I have no definite proof establishing that is the oath that this foreign government compels these Nazis or American National Party members to take. I know they take it. I just put a picture on the bulletin board out there showing 300 men taking that oath, but I cannot prove that is the oath that comes from the German Government. It is an oath of allegiance to the leadership of the German Government regardless of the fact one may be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has been publishing the names of a number of alleged leaders of the alleged Nazi movement in this country. Did the gentleman get those names out of the Brown Net?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. The names I got, I agree with the gentleman, included names in the Brown Network. I have a number of names from the Brown Network which correspond with my files, but I give them the credit for it. The list I put in on Thursday no one has, and the list I am putting in today no one has, because it took us almost a year and a half by voluntary investigation, made by a number of American citizens who have not received one dollar of compensation, to secure this information.

Mr. KNUTSON. The Washington Post of Monday, on page 8, contains this paragraph:

> Representative SAMUEL DICKSTEIN made all the front pages last week by revealing to Congress a list of Nazi spies in America * * * It may be pure coincidence, of course, but DICKSTEIN'S list is almost a copy of the appendix to the Brown Net, published by Knight 4 years ago. That list is contained in pages 300 to 303.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I say in answer to the gentleman's question, and I do not want a misunderstanding, on the 8th of March 1933, Hitler forced himself upon the German people and became Chancelor. I have been watching him every day, because I was in Germany in 1932 and I saw what was going on. I had the names before the Brown Book, the Blue Book, or any other book had them, because we all watched him. We knew what was going on in Germany. In 1932 even they had armies walking through the streets, while there was no Nazi Party and Von Hindenburg was President, but these armies were developing right then within the German Government.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman says he has had this information since 1932, yet he has waited all this time before making it public.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It was made public by the last committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to make an observation that was possibly a bit more pertinent earlier in the discussion than now. There have been many charges made in this country about foreign activities. For instance, there came to our desk 2 or 3 weeks ago a letter, signed by someone from California, purporting to be a copy of a letter addressed to the President, to which no reply had been received. In that letter it was stated that Mr. Lewis, of the C. I. O., had received $750,000 from Moscow. Wanting to get at the facts and not the publicity, I took the matter up immediately by letter with the Department of Justice. That was at least 3 weeks ago. I stated the facts and sent a copy of the letter, and asked the Department if they had any information. I stated I was not giving this to the press but was looking for information, and that I would appreciate the facts. They immediately wrote back that they had no such information as charged in the quotation and that they knew nothing about the matter. So some of these things might possibly be investigated before we give publicity.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I may say to the gentleman, in answer to his question, that I have not brought out one name on this floor nor have I made any statement on this floor on any question dealing with naziism and communism—and you know how much love I have for them—without having the matter checked and rechecked to satisfy myself, as any reasonable man would, that my answer to this whole situation is the correct one.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In part answer to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], with reference to the statement he just made, we all received that printed letter and apparently the statement that the checks were in possession of the Department of Justice was an error of the Associated Press. The checks were supposed to be in possession of the International Association of Machinists and the charge was made by E. H. Dowell, district organizer of the American Federation of Labor. As has been suggested, when charges are made affecting the welfare of our Government and are of such a serious nature as that, why should we not learn whether they are true or false, and I understood that to be the gentleman's object.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I tried to do.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows the authorship of the letter that was sent to Members of Congress threatening them with death if they supported the President's Supreme Court reorganization?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I wish I knew.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman does not suppose that was a Nazi or a Fascist organization, does he?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want the gentleman to draw that conclusion. If I stated what is in your mind, and I know what is in your mind, and I know what you are talking about, and if I answered the question, the gentleman would say that I was trying to build up another case, that I was trying to scare somebody.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I think the organization originated probably a little closer to home than Germany, Italy, or Russia.

Mr. McGROARTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McGROARTY. As I understand the gentleman, he is helpless because he has not the power of subpena. Is that so?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. McGROARTY. Has anything been done in the House to give you or your committee or any committee the power of subpena?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is a resolution now before the Committee on Rules, introduced by our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. The gentleman has rather modified his resolution, after having completely withdrawn it, and has given the matter some study. I can state to the House that I am willing to support the gentleman's resolution, or any other resolution, whether it is from this side or that side.

Mr. McGROARTY. We do not seem to be getting anywhere.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Committee on Rules can settle that question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for an additional seven minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman's time has been extended 2 or 3 times already. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want only 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the gentleman will yield, it is not a question of how much the gentleman wants, but how long we want to hear him. I for one want to hear the gentleman unless there is some other business. Of course, if we have business of more importance, we should proceed to its consideration.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman think he will get any additional information?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I still think I am capable of receiving information, and I think the gentleman is capable of giving it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does the gentleman think the gentleman is capable of giving information?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I certainly do; yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Being a Member of this body, I supposed the certificate of election was some evidence of it, anyway.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is the assumption, anyhow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that what the gentleman would like to do is have the Speaker of the House appoint a select committee for the purpose of making a complete investigation of nazi-ism in this country?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All isms.

Mr. LUCAS. Everything but Americanism?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is the point. That is all I am asking.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman explain to the House just how broad a field that would cover?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I may say the resolution I sponsored, which was laid on the table by the House on the 8th of April—and I am not quarreling with that action at this time—was a little too broad. The resolution now before the House deals with un-American activities.

Mr. LUCAS. The gentleman's trend of thought in all of his speeches I have heard, however, deals chiefly with the Nazis.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. LUCAS. Then I have not heard all of the gentleman's speeches.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then the gentleman should read them, and he will probably get some pretty good information.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall read them and shall probably learn something, because I know the gentleman is very much interested in this question. However, what the gentleman is chiefly attempting to do, as I gather from the speech the gentleman has made today, is to destroy nazi-ism in this country.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All "isms."

Mr. LUCAS. All right; all "isms", including nazi-ism.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the gentleman believe that if there is anything good in nazi-ism—and I, for one, do not believe there is—an investigation, regardless of how broad a field it may cover, will destroy it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is nothing good in foreign uniforms, foreign boots, foreign ideologies, foreign goose-steps, foreign allegiance, foreign speeches, and making martyrs out of foreign dictators who are trying to drag this whole world into a war.

Mr. LUCAS. Our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], states that we ought to turn the pitiless light of publicity upon this particular movement, and he cited the destruction of the Klan as an illustration. My observation upon matters of this kind is that if there is anything worth while in the Ku-Klux Klan or in nazi-ism or in any other "ism", which I deny, such movements will live in this country, regardless of how much publicity is turned upon them. I contend that what the gentleman is doing here is simply furthering the interests of the Nazis by attempting to publicize them throughout the country with this kind of an investigation. They will not get to first base in America, and you can just bet your life on that, regardless of what the gentleman or anybody else may do. I think the gentleman is unduly alarmed.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In just a moment. I want to answer the gentleman from Illinois, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The evidence so far seems to disagree with the gentleman completely. His own State is infested with isms. His own State has camps in it. His own State has alien boots and boots and boots, and goose steps and more goose steps. Nazis are all goosey down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will permit, I may say to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], that special investigating committees have done a great deal of good. The La Follette committee showed what is going on in Harlan County, Ky., and if it did nothing more than that it has rendered a great service to the American people. We had the Townsend investigating committee. Why was that committee created? The gentleman from Illinois was a member of it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is different.

Mr. McCORMACK. The House created that special committee for some purpose. If we follow the reasoning of the gentleman, there was no necessity for the creation of that committee. We should have said, "Let Townsend proceed with his campaign, and not have the committee formed to acquaint the American public with the story of that movement."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not have the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. May I answer the gentleman from Massachusetts by saying that the comparison is not analogous, and furthermore I was not responsible for the investigation of Townsend. I merely performed my duty as a member appointed on the select committee.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SACKS. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that in a democracy the only way to get the people to understand "isms" of any kind is to throw light upon them and give them publicity, and they will fall of their own weight.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is again my duty to call the attention of this House to the seriousness of the situation which is the result of the unchecked and unbridled propagandists and other activities by Nazis in this country.

Within the past two weeks more than 90 German youths, both boys and girls, as well as 18 teachers came to this country, apparently for a vacation. Now, this vacation is spent by having these boys and girls as well as the teachers stay as guests 1 week at a time at the various locals of the German-American Bund, the official Nazi organ in this country, and spending 1 week on a sightseeing tour of the United States. These boys and girls are chosen from the most intelligent groups in Germany, and are given for distribution quantities of propaganda material, with instructions how best to employ it in the best interests of their masters.

One of the purposes of this activity is to inculcate among young German men and women the consciousness of the fact that they are Germans first, and in an emergency should go back to Germany to defend their country with arms, if necessary. They are under the leadership of Dr. Wilhelm, a professor in the political department of the University of Frankfort in Germany. They are also being guided by a Dr. Degener, who is the attorney for the German-American Chamber of Commerce in New York, and who is employed, or under a retainer with the General Dye Stuff Corporation of America, which is a branch of the I. G. Dye Trust in Germany.

The male members of the party are at the present time staying at the Young Men's Christian Association at Sixty-third Street and Central Park West, New York City, while the girls are distributed in private homes in and around the city of New York.

Of the other leaders of the group, Dr. Hans Sass, who was formerly the local leader of the bund in Trenton, but who apparently changes his name to Van Narre, is the educational director of the Young Men's Christian Association, West Side Branch. He is apparently responsible for the young men being placed in that institution, and while they are staying there speeches are being made daily in support of Nazi doctrines and anti-Semitism. The other young men and women, who are now being distributed around and making visits to German camps, have occasion to hear from Edwin Emerson, the American gentleman whom I listed a few days ago as one of the Nazi propagandists in the United States. The printing for this propaganda is done by Grof & Breuninger Press, of Philadelphia, Pa.

I have before me also an appeal for German youths to join the German summer camps asking that applications be sent to Theodore Dinkelacker at 9239 Lamont Avenue, Elmhurst, Long Island.

The proclamation of the so-called youth leaders calls upon young boys and girls to join the camps with this stipulation:

> We accept into our camps boys and girls of German parentage 8 years of age and over. They must oblige themselves, in case they do not happen to be members of the A. V., to become members of that organization before they can join the camp.

A. V. is an abbreviation of America-Deutsche Volksbund, the German abbreviation of the so-called "bund", the Nazi organ in this country.

Information also reached me to the effect that a lively traffic of smuggling aliens is in progress around Hoboken, N. J. It seems that one Gustav Elmer, a laundry salesman of Hoboken, N. J., is conducting such a traffic with the aid and assistance of the so-called Bernstein Line, which took over the Red Star Line, and now sails under the swastika flag. This line is being used to smuggle aliens, in violation of our immigration laws, and of course the smugglers know better than I how they do it and what means they employ to circumvent our immigration laws. I suppose the usual method would be to ship the men as sailors and have them lose themselves when the ship docks in port. The large German liners apparently are easily supervised but the small line is able to escape attention on the part of our immigration officials.

I have before me some correspondence between Franz Schulze, who was formerly an attorney in Chicago and now is an attaché of the German Embassy and a contact man between the Nazi bund and Washington. This man wrote a letter to Fritz Gissibl, whom I have previously mentioned as the leader of the Friends of New Germany, as to how to go about getting incorporation papers for German organizations and how to obtain local charters in the various States of the Union.

Another name which I would like to bring to the attention of the House at this time is Frank Sonnenschein, of 634 South Eleventh Street, Newark, N. J., one of the lieutenants of the Nazi Party in this vicinity and an active organizer for Camp Nordland. I have definite information that this man is in this country illegally, although he is a member of the National Guard of New Jersey and otherwise extremely active in the public life of the State.

Following is a further list of citizens and aliens who are spreading un-American propaganda throughout our country. They are prominent members of the bund in the State of New Jersey.

Mr. Max Koenig, treasurer of the Hudson County local, born in the United States, has not worked for the past 4 years, yet is always able to spend freely, a good speaker, violently anti-Semetic, and an advocate of fascism in the United States, a frequent contributor to a Chicago anti-Semetic weekly (American Gentile).

Martin Spaeth, a W. P. A. foreman, who directs the uniformed group of the bund in Hudson County.

Werner Jueterowsky, voting representative for the local on national matters, former Communistic Party member in Germany, but not a converted Nazi; not a citizen.

Gustav Flach, new leader of the Trenton local, not a citizen, owner of a refreshment stand, is the representative of propaganda films for the State of New Jersey; while his children run the stand, he travels from local to local showing these films, which are furnished by the German consulate.

Waldemar Othmer, director of the Trenton Y. M. C. A., a good lecturer, who has a complete list of alien speakers that come to the United States. He was secretary and treasurer of Trenton local in 1936.

John Fitting, pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Trenton, speaker and lecturer of the bund, who tried to support Hauptmann at the trial. Is the composer of pamphlets for the defense of Hauptmann, violently anti-Semetic; deserted wife and two girls.

Willie Luedtke, D. K. V. director for New York and New Jersey, and also leader of the Passaic County local, a citizen, member of the New Jersey National Guard.

Walter Luedtke, brother of Willie, owner of a shooting range in Passaic, where the uniformed members practice with guard-owned rifles, practice every night. Range at 527 (or 529) Passaic Avenue, Passaic.

Bruno Trix, press agent for the New Jersey district, not a citizen, very intelligent, writer of propaganda material and also a reporter for the West Beobachter in Hanover, Germany.

Kurt Schumacher, American born, Secretary for the Passaic local, a good speaker with connection in the ranks of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Eduard Mathias, treasurer of the Passaic local, a citizen, who gets a monthly allowance by the General Dye Stuff Corporation of America, apparently because of his activities in the Du Pont works, where he is employed.

At this time I wish to present for publication in the RECORD a list of firms dealing in German securities without a permit either from the State or from the Securities Exchange Commission. These firms sell securities mostly to people of German extraction, and I dare say securities of a type which will be frowned upon by the authorities if the truth were known.

Bull & Co., 40 Exchange Place, New York City; F. R. Lushes & Co., 50 Broadway, New York City; Kurt Schurig, 50 Broadway, New York City; Papsdorf, 1432 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Charles Martin, 218 East Eighty-sixth Street, New York City; Herbert Schmidt, 157 West Seventy-second Street, New York City; Schreiber, 60–89 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Joseph Zimmerman, 550 Elizabeth Avenue, Elizabeth, N. J.; John Wimmersperg & Hopfe, 17 Battery Place, New York City.

I have given the situation more or less at random without any effort to be either systematic or exhaustive.

These are days fraught with danger to the country, and we cannot stultify ourselves by closing our eyes to it. Action is needed to eradicate this pernicious weed from our midst.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we would like to know whether there is any business coming before the House today.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I have reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I am not sure that I shall object, but I would like for the gentleman to withhold that while I submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. COLLINS. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of the 20 minutes, the House consider the resolution I introduced this morning looking to the appointment of a committee by the Speaker to investigate the Jefferson Memorial at St. Louis.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may have something to say about that.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this resolution ought to take the regular course and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Kansas submit his statement as a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I make the request and withhold my consent to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair submit the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] for the purpose of the RECORD.

The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi, if made, that the resolution the gentleman offered this morning with reference to an investigation of the Jefferson Memorial at St. Louis be in order. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. For the reason stated, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] to address the House for 20 minutes?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I am reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker. Would it be proper for me to state that I did not get the reasons the floor leader gave for his objection?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] stated "for reasons heretofore stated."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the majority leader what business is coming before the House following the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi if unanimous consent is granted.

Mr. RAYBURN. I know of nothing further coming up today.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am reserving the right to object, and I believe the floor leader attempted to answer me and state why he objected to the consideration of the resolution, but was interrupted.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not want the resolution considered this afternoon.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I thank the gentleman and withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

WASHINGTON AIRPORT

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks at this point concerning the airport here and, on account of its great importance, to include a report made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX], who is on our committee; and I hope no one will object, because it is of considerable importance, and everyone ought to read it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD at this point as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I may say that the minority leader the other day voiced his opposition to such procedure, stating he thought it was not the proper thing to do, and consequently I must object.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withdraw his objection? This matter of an airport for Washington, D. C., is one of the most important things we have before us. This is not a request of a political leader to put a speech in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But it puts the RECORD in a false light. If the gentleman wants to extend his remarks, there is a place to do that.

Mr. MAVERICK. All right. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to put it in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman states this is in reference to an airport here. Washington is "up in the air" and has been for the last 2 or 3 years and I think if someone can give us a little enlightenment on the subject and get Washington out of the air and on good terra firma, it would be a very fine thing to do.

Mr. MAVERICK. If the gentleman reads this tomorrow he will be thoroughly enlightened.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi to address the House for 20 minutes?

There was no objection.

REVISION OF THE COPYRIGHT LAW AND ESTABLISHMENT OF FIVE SUBSIDIARY NATIONAL LIBRARIES

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, so far the Federal Government has interested itself very little in the maintenance of institutions on which depend the enlightenment of the people and the intellectual attainments of the Nation. The library field is practically the sole exception, and it began with the creation of a repository for the needs of the Congress and other Federal governmental agencies. Consequently it was only gradually and as a matter of necessity that from a restricted function the Library of Congress expanded into becoming the repository of the Nation and guardian for posterity of the products of human knowledge in all fields.

There is no denying the fact that if the Library of Congress has grown so well that at present it occupies practically the first place among the libraries of the other great nations insofar as the collections of modern books are concerned, this has been primarily due to the fact that it was created and maintained as a Federal institution. Although the Library of Congress is far from possessing adequately representative collections in all fields, especially as far as early literature is concerned, it still is an achievement of which Congress may justly be proud.

The Library of Congress has also been of great service to the development of the library field in this country. Practically all libraries in this country enjoy the benefits of the Library of Congress printed cards, the Union Catalog, and other bibliographical facilities now made available by that great library institution. However, all those that are in touch with things and the statesmen who have at heart the development of the intellectual facilities of the Nation are keenly aware of the fact that the time has come when the single national library established in the Capital should be expanded into a system of national libraries, calculated to make available the sources of research and bibliographical facilities in a number of centers of our vast country, coordinating its functions with those of the existing libraries in these regions.

The establishment of the five subsidiary national libraries, as proposed by the bill under consideration, will be welcomed by all who appreciate the fact that the future of the Nation depends on the degree of enlightenment and knowledge attained. There is hardly any more constructive way of promoting the common welfare than to provide the foundation of intellectual development. Many a scholar living within the confines of our country, whose occupation, time, and means do not allow him to travel all the way from his home or residence—which may be thousands of miles away—to the National Capital, the location of the Library of Congress, must go without the desired information because it is not at his disposal or not available in the library of the place where he is carrying on his research. To be sure, there is an interlibrary loan service, but it is hardly adequate for the purposes of scholarship. As a rule, the important libraries—including the Library of Congress—do not lend valuable items or collections of source materials because they are expensive to collect and difficult to replace in case of damage or loss. Furthermore, it is one thing for a scholar to work at a small library and another to have at his disposal the bibliographical facilities of a national library which affords up-to-date indications as to the contributions in his field.

The present political instability and social unrest have demonstrated the wisdom of facilitating penetrating studies in the social and economic fields. The contributions of knowledge are our guarantees for the future development of the Nation on the basis of solidarity and for the welfare and prosperity of our people. No matter what the immediate and future expenditures may be, the benefits to be derived from the proposed system of national libraries are well worth it. Furthermore, an amendment of the existing copyright legislation is capable not only of curtailing the expenditures for the acquisition of books but also of insuring the better collection and preservation of the literary output of our own country.

Coordination in the collection of copyright deposits, cataloging, classifying, card-catalog service, and other bibliographical facilities will result in considerable economies as well as a perfection of the work. Every taxpayer knows that nations in the past have spent untold fortunes for the prosecution of warfare and for the production of vast armaments, and that they have done so "without stint or limit." At this very moment our Government is spending hundreds of millions—nay, even billions—for national defense, because it realizes that without proper security the lives of American citizens will be jeopardized. Narrow selfishness, misinformation, and lack of proper education among the peoples of the various nations, of course, have made such expenditures necessary.

At present battleships are being constructed, a single one of which will call for the expenditure of $50,000,000, a unit which may be wiped out in a few minutes by a single well-aimed torpedo or a bomb from the air. The amount of money spent on the construction of a single battleship will provide not only for the erection of the five proposed subsidiary national library buildings but also for the necessary reference books, equipment, and other expenditures incident to receiving, cataloging, and classifying the copyright deposits and other accessions. Not too much emphasis can be put upon the fact that the money thus employed and expended will create permanent values which will be of a constructive character as well as of a highly desirable nature; for that nation is best prepared to survive which is founded upon the rock of knowledge. Money spent for these purposes, outlined above, is an investment which our country surely can no longer afford to neglect.

Addressing recently the District of Columbia Library Association, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt sagely remarked that—

> We know that without libraries, without education, which is based largely on libraries, we cannot have an educated people who will carry on successfully our form of government.

Mrs. Roosevelt's speech was so timely and so appropriate that I shall take the liberty of quoting it at some length. Our philanthropic, beloved First Lady said further:

> I have lived a great deal in the country, in a State which prides itself in spending much money on education, and I am quite sure that some people think there is no lack of education and no lack of library facilities, and sometimes I long to take people and let them see some of the back-country districts that I know in New York State.
> I know one place in the northern part of the State where I camped for a while in the summer, and I went to the school and talked to the teachers. They are using school books which have been passed down from one child to another. They have practically no books outside of the textbooks. The children in the district are so poor and some of them so pathetic that I suppose the struggle to live has been so great you could not think much about what you fed the mind, but I came away feeling that right there, in one of the biggest and richest States in the country, we had a big area that needed books, and needed libraries to help these schools in the education of the children, and, even more, to help the whole community to learn to live through their minds. Now, we are doing a tremendous amount through the home-economics colleges to help people to learn how to live in their homes, to better their standards of material living. We have got to think in exactly the same way about helping them to live mentally and to attain better standards, and we cannot do it only through the children. We can do ground work with the children; we must begin with them; but we have got to do a tremendous amount with the older people.
> I had a letter the other day which was pathetic. It was from a man who said he was 74 years old. He wrote to ask me to see that the adult-education classes in that particular community were not stopped, because it had meant so much to him to learn to read. He did not think that I could understand what it meant never to have been able to understand a word on the printed page. He said, "I am not the only one. My next door neighbor is 81, and he learned to read last winter, and it has just made life over for us." It gave you the feeling that there is a good deal of education that is not being done in this country in spite of all that is done.
> We have come a long way. We have done a great deal, but we still have a lot that can be done to improve our educational system, and we still have a tremendous amount to do with our libraries. We have got to make our libraries the center of a new life in the mind, because people are hungry to use their minds.

Dr. James Ingersoll Wyer, director of the New York State Library, in an address delivered before the New York Library Association in February 1928 pointed out that—> even considered as a means of protection against foreign enemies, books are more effective than battleships, for the real strength of a nation in war as in peace is in the intelligence, inventiveness, and steadfastness of its people, and not in the obsolete weapons which generals and admirals so much stress.

The need of a greater extension of the library service, and the importance of our Government's interest in this service, is recognized and emphasized by librarians and scholars from all parts of the country. Says Elizabeth Robinson, secretary of the State library commission, Jackson, Miss.:

> The need everywhere is for books. The thousands of volumes and countless thousands of magazines that have been made available do not in any way meet the opportunity that has opened (Library Journal, v. 60, p. 98).

Carleton B. Joeckel, professor of library science, University of Michigan, in an article dealing with the Federal Relations to Libraries, expresses his satisfaction with the National Government's awakened interest in libraries and believes that it has assumed "a position of major importance in our plans for the development of library service, throughout the country" (ibid., p. 99). A good library, exclaims Milton J. Ferguson, chief librarian of the Brooklyn Public Library, is "a great power, a master influence" (ibid., v. 61, p. 873). No one doubts the truth of the statements cited above, which were made usually with reference to general readers or students throughout the country. That the needs in respect to material and facilities are infinitely greater in the case of students and professional men who are engaged in serious scientific research work must be patent to anyone who seriously reflects upon this most important matter.

Under the provisions of the present Copyright Act, passed by Congress more than a quarter of a century ago, the deposit of two copies, as is generally known, is required for the registration of all works published in the United States. The Register of Copyrights then turns over these registered copies to the Library of Congress, which selects from among them the copies needed for its own use. For the purposes of registration there seems to be no sufficient reason why two copies should be required by the statute rather than one or three. By the bill under consideration it is proposed that the present copyright law be amended to the effect that 12 copies be deposited with the Register of Copyrights instead of two of any publications, as hitherto required in conformity with section 5, paragraphs (a) and (b) of the said Copyright Act of 1909. It is provided, however—

> That no deposit need be made for the benefit of the said regional national libraries if the number of copies of the published edition of said copyrighted work shall not exceed 300 copies and the published price of each volume exceed $50; that upon the receipt of such copyright deposits by the Register of Copyrights, two copies shall be immediately turned over to each of the librarians of the regional national libraries for the benefit and use of such libraries; and that no action or proceeding shall be maintained for infringement of copyright of any work until the provisions of this act with respect to the deposit of copies and registration of such work shall have been complied with.

Under the proposed law the five regional national libraries are to be established at the great centers of population, easily accessible to the people of the United States; that is, at New York City, Memphis, Tenn., Chicago, Ill., Denver, Colo., and San Francisco, Calif. There may be the need of say two other regional libraries, but certainly these, if five are to be considered, are the places, in my judgment, where they should be located. These sites were selected not only because they may be easily reached, but also because they are located in great centers of population and thus will benefit the greatest number of people. Persons not familiar with the needs of scientific research workers may object that in the cities selected there are located large and splendid libraries. Such objections, however, do not take into account that complete sets of Government documents are rarely available in public or private libraries whose main object in nearly all instances is to entertain and to enlighten rather than to provide facilities for serious legal, economic, and other scientific research work.

With these objectives in mind the new law (sec. 3) is to provide that "In order to insure the better preservation of United States journals and documents, and to increase their availability in the various regions of the country, each of the said regional libraries is hereby constituted a depository of Government publications", and that the Superintendent of Documents shall supply to each of the five regional libraries two copies of such Government publications, similarly as this is being done at the present time in the case of the Library of Congress in the National Capital. It will be noted that this article stresses the need of "better preservation of United States journals and documents." Hostile invasion, civil war, earthquakes, floods, deterioration, theft, fire, and other causes have in the past done irreparable damage to the great libraries of the world. Untold literary treasures vanished with the barbarous burning of the famous Alexandrian libraries, and through the destruction of the Louvain Library. Even our own Congressional Library during the War of 1812 was largely destroyed, but the restored Library of Congress suffered a far greater loss in the Capitol fire of 1851. Many rare books and manuscripts, and many priceless documents have been destroyed and wiped out of existence. If copies of such documents had been deposited in various parts of the world or in different sections of a large country like ours, the chance of their total destruction would, of course, have been greatly minimized. The deposition of Government documents with the regional national libraries is a safeguard against the emergencies indicated above. That it will also preserve books from damage, loss, and destruction in the mails must not be overlooked. It is quite evident that even the books and documents sent through the mails at the present time by the library-exchange service are sometimes scarce and valuable items and that the damage done to them, or their loss, is a matter of vital importance.

It may be of interest to note in this connection that the usefulness of depositing copies of published works not in one, but in several of their libraries has long been recognized in various other countries, and is required by their respective laws. Thus, for instance, the British statutes[1] require that the publishers of any works published in the United Kingdom must deposit within 1 month after publication one copy with the trustees of the British Museum; and they also must deliver, if written demand to that effect is made within a year after publication, one copy each to the five following libraries: The Bodleian Library, Oxford; the University Library, Cambridge; the Library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh; the Library of Trinity College, Dublin; and the National Library of Wales. Similarly, the law in the Irish Free State[2] provides that six copies must be delivered to various libraries, that is, one copy of the book to the trustees of the National Library of Ireland, one copy to the authority having control of the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, three copies to the proper authorities of the National University of Ireland, and one copy to the trustees of the British Museum. Four additional copies are to be delivered, if written demand is made to that effect within a year after publication of the book to various other libraries, that is, one copy to the authorities having control of the following libraries: the Bodleian Library, Oxford; the University Library, Cambridge; the National Library of Scotland; and the National Library of Wales.

The statutes of the Union of South Africa[3] make provision for the delivery of one copy to the trustees of the British Museum and one copy each to the four principal libraries in different sections of the Union of South Africa. In India, section 15 of the Indian Copyright Act, 1914,[4] which is identical with section 15 of the British Copyright Act, 1911, also calls for the delivery of one copy to the trustees of the British Museum, and of one copy each to the libraries at Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh, Dublin, and Wales. In Australia one copy must be deposited with the register and one with the librarian of Parliament. At the same time the Australian Copyright Act provides that—

> Nothing in this act[5] shall be deemed to affect the existing provisions of any act of Parliament of a State which require or relate to the delivery to any specified public and other library of the State of copies of books published in the State or to affect the power of the Parliament of a State to make laws requiring or relating to such delivery.

The New Zealand copyright law[6] prescribes that three copies must be deposited. Of these, one goes to the registrar and two to the librarian of the New Zealand General Assembly Library. Aside from these English-speaking countries there are a number of other countries where a deposit of three or more copies is required. Among them are the following, the number of copies required being given in parenthesis:[7] Albania (3), Argentina (3), Colombia (3), Costa Rica (3), Ecuador (3), Greece (4), Guatemala (4), Haiti (5), Nicaragua (6), Panama (3), Russia, R. S. F. S. R.[8] (45), Siam (3), Spain (3), Turkey (3), and Venezuela (5).

Considering the facts outlined above, that the establishment of the five regional national libraries at the principal centers of population will greatly lessen the necessity of thousands of people making expensive and time-consuming journeys to Washington as they must do now; that their establishment will curtail considerably the number of interlibrary loans of valuable books, and thus serve to save them from wear and tear in transit and avoid the loss of their use while being sent and returned; that their establishment will greatly lessen the loss of valuable copyright deposits and Government documents by fire, theft, hostile invasion, civil war, earthquakes, floods, and other causes, since such calamities are not likely to occur at all the five regional national libraries at the same time; that the danger of the loss of valuable books and documents, also the convenience to their citizens of having suitably located depositories, have long been recognized by the governments of many other countries, and that for this reason laws have been passed by them for the deposit of copyrighted copies in depositories conveniently located in various sections of such countries; that the cost of the establishment of five regional national libraries would be no more than that of one modern battleship; that the value of the proposed book depositories will increase constantly from year to year, while the battleship will be practically obsolete by the time it is put in commission; that the benefit ensuing from the erection of the said regional national libraries will be of incalculable benefit to this entire Nation; and, furthermore, considering that the money expended for the establishment and upkeep of the said proposed libraries will be one of the best investments ever engaged in by the Government of this country, no time should be lost in the realization of this proposal, namely, that the five regional national libraries shall be constructed as soon as possible and maintained at New York, Memphis, Chicago, Denver, and San Francisco, as proposed by the bill (H. R. 3699) under consideration.

LAWS OF GREAT BRITAIN, IRELAND, SOUTH AFRICA, INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND NEW ZEALAND RESPECTING DELIVERY OF COPIES OF COPYRIGHTED WORKS

I. GREAT BRITAIN

Copyright Act, 1911, section 15

SECTION 15. (1) The publisher of every book published in the United Kingdom shall within 1 month after the publication, deliver, at his own expense, a copy of the book to the trustees of the British Museum, who shall give a written receipt for it.

(2) He shall also, if written demand is made before the expiration of 12 months after publication, deliver within 1 month after receipt of that written demand or, if the demand was made before the publication, within 1 month after publication, to some depot in London named in the demand a copy of the book for, or in accordance with the directions of, the authority having the control of each of the following libraries, namely: The Bodleian Library, Oxford; the University Library, Cambridge; the Library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh, and the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, and subject to the provisions of this section the National Library of Wales. In the case of an encyclopedia, newspaper, review, magazine, or work published in a series of numbers or parts, the written demand may include all numbers or parts of the work which may be subsequently published.

(3) The copy delivered to the trustees of the British Museum shall be a copy of the whole work with all maps and illustrations belonging thereto, finished and colored in the same manner as the best copies of the book are published, and shall be bound, sewed, or stitched together, and on the best paper on which the book is printed.

[8] Law of Nov. 20, 1933, concerning the obligatory number of copies to be supplied to the authorities (in conformity with the national law of Sept. 13, 1933) requires that printers must deposit with the "book chamber" 45 copies of all publications exceeding 2 pages, provided that the edition of such publications exceeds 500 copies. If it is less than 500 copies, only 20 copies need to be deposited. The items thus deposited are distributed among the various libraries of the country. See Fogelevich, L., Basic principles and legislation concerning the Russian press, 5 ed., 1935, p. 133 ff.

(4) The copy delivered for the other authorities mentioned in this section shall be in the paper on which the largest number of copies of the book is printed for sale, and shall be in the like condition as the books prepared for sale.

(5) The books of which copies are to be delivered to the National Library of Wales shall not include books of such classes as may be specified in regulations to be made by the Board of Trade.

(6) If a publisher fails to comply with this section, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5 and the value of the book, and the fine shall be paid to the trustees or authority to whom the book ought to have been delivered.

(7) For the purposes of this section, the expression "book" includes every part or division of a book, pamphlet, sheet of letterpress, sheet of music, map, plan, chart, or table separately published, but shall not include any second or subsequent edition of a book unless such edition contains additions or alterations either in the letterpress or in the maps, prints, and other engravings belonging thereto.

II. IRISH FREE STATE

Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, Section 178

SECTION 178. (1) The publisher of every book first published in Saorstat Eireann shall, within 1 month after the publication, deliver, at his own expense, a copy of the book to the trustees of the National Library, of Ireland, a copy of the book to the authority having control of the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, three copies of the book for or in accordance with the directions of the authority having control of the National University of Ireland for the use of the respective libraries of the three constituent colleges of that university, and a copy of the book to the trustees of the British Museum, and such trustees and authority respectively shall give a written receipt for every book so delivered to them:

Provided that the minister may, on the application of the trustees of the National Library of Ireland, or of the authority having control of the library of Trinity College, Dublin, or of any of the respective authorities having control of the three constituent colleges of the National University of Ireland, or of the trustees of the British Museum, make regulations excepting from the provisions of this subsection in regard to the trustees or authority making the application, publications wholly or mainly in the nature of trade advertisements, or such classes of such publications as may be specified in the regulations, and thereupon it shall not be necessary for the publisher of any publication so excepted to deliver the publication to the trustees or the authority or for such trustees or authority to give a receipt therefor, unless as respects any particular publication a written demand for the delivery thereof is made by such trustees or authority.

(2) He shall also, if written demand is made before the expiration of 12 months after publication, deliver within 1 month after receipt of that written demand or if the demand was made before publication, within 1 month after publication, to some address in Dublin named in the demand a copy of the book for, or in accordance with the directions of, the authority having the control of each of the following libraries, namely: the Bodleian Library, Oxford, the University Library, Cambridge, the National Library of Scotland, and the National Library of Wales. In the case of an encyclopedia, newspaper, review, magazine, or work published in a series of numbers or parts, the written demand may include all numbers or parts of the work which may be subsequently published.

(3)–(6) * * * These subsections are identical with subsections (3), (4), (6), and (7) of the British Copyright Act, 1911, section 15, cited above, with the exception of subsection (5) which is omitted in section 178 of the Industrial and Commercial Property (Protection) Act, 1927, of the Irish Free State.

III. UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

Patents, Designs, Trade-Marks, and Copyright Act, 1916, section 150

SECTION 150. (1) The publishers of every book first published in the Union and whether printed therein or not, shall, within 1 month after the day on which such book is first delivered out of the press for issue, deliver free of any charge, bound, sewed, or stitched on the best paper and in the best manner in which such book is issued, one copy to the trustees of the British Museum, and one copy each to the authority having control of each of the following libraries, namely: the South African Public Library, Cape Town; the Library of the Natal Society, Pietermaritaburg; the State Library, Pretoria; and the Bloemfontein Public Library. In the case of an encyclopedia, newspaper, review, magazine, or work published in series of numbers or parts, the delivery prescribed by this section includes all numbers or parts of the work which may be subsequently published.

(2) Any publisher who fails to comply with this section shall be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding £5 and the value of the book, and the fine shall be paid to the trustees or authority to whom the book ought to have been delivered.

(3) For the purpose of this section, a certificate given under the hand of the librarian of a benefiting library that a book has not been received shall be sufficient evidence of the facts stated in the certificate.

(4) For the purposes of this section the expression "book" includes every part or division of a book, pamphlet, sheet of letterpress, sheet of music, map, plan, chart, or table separately published, but shall not include any second or subsequent edition of a book unless such edition contains additions or alterations either in the letterpress or in maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto.

IV. INDIA

Indian Copyright Act, 1914, section 15

This section of the act is identical with section 15 of the British Copyright Act, 1911, cited above.

V. AUSTRALIA

Copyright Act, 1912, sections 38–42

SECTION 38. (1) Every person who makes application for the registration of the copyright in a book shall deliver to the registrar one copy of the whole book with maps and illustrations belonging thereto, finished and colored in the same manner as the best copies of the book are published, and bound, sewed, stitched together, and on the best paper on which the book is printed.

(2) Every person who makes application for the legislation of the copyright in a work of art shall deliver to the registrar one copy of the work of art or a representation of it.

(3) The registrar shall refuse to register the copyright in any book until subsection (1) of this section has been complied with, or the copyright in a work of art until subsection (2) of this section has been complied with.

(4) Each copy of representation relivered to the registrar in pursuance of this section shall be retained at the Copyright Office.

SEC. 39. A person who willfully makes any false statement or representation to deceive the registrar or any officer in the execution of this part of this act, or to procure or to influence the doing or omission of anything in relation to this part of this act, or any matter thereunder, shall be guilty of an indictable offense.

Penalty: Imprisonment for 3 years.

SEC. 40. (1) The publisher of every book which is first published in the Commonwealth after the commencement of this section, and in which copyright subsists under this act, shall within 1 month after the publication deliver, at his own expense, a copy of the book to the librarian of the Parliament, who shall give a written receipt for it.

(2) The copy delivered to the librarian of the Parliament shall be a copy of the whole book, with all maps and illustrations belonging thereto, published, and bound, sewed, or stitched together, and on the best paper on which the book is printed.

(3) If a publisher fails to comply with this section, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5 and the value of the book.

(4) For the purpose of this section the expression "book" includes every part or division of a book, pamphlet, sheet of letterpress, map, plan, chart, or table, but shall not include any second or subsequent edition of a book unless that edition contains additions or alterations either in the letter press or in the maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto or any book published by any state or any authority of a state.

SEC. 41. Nothing in this act shall be deemed to affect the existing provisions of any act of the parliament of a state which require or relate to the delivery to any specified public or other library of the state of copies of books published in the state or to affect the power of the parliament of a state to make laws requiring or relating to such delivery.

SEC. 42. The Governor General may make regulations, not inconsistent with this act, prescribing all matters which by this act are required or permitted to be prescribed or which are necessary or convenient to be prescribed for giving effect to this act or for the conduct of any business relating to the Copyright Office.

VI. NEW ZEALAND

Copyright Act, 1913, sections 50–53

SECTION 50. (1) Every person who makes application for the registration of a copyright in a book shall deliver to the registrar one copy of the whole book with all maps and illustrations belonging thereto, finished and colored in the same manner as the best copies of the book are published and bound, sewed, or stitched together, and on the best paper on which the book is printed.

(2) Every person who makes an application for the registration of the copyright in a work of art shall deliver to the registrar one copy of the work of art or a representation of it.

(3a) The registrar shall refuse to register the copyright in any book until subsection 1 of this section has been complied with, or the copyright in a work of art until subsection 2 of this section has been complied with.

(4) Each copy or representation delivered to the registrar in pursuance of this section shall be retained at the Copyright Office.

SEC. 51. (1) The publisher of every book which is first published in New Zealand after the commencement of this act, and in which copyright subsists under this act, shall within 1 month after the publication deliver, at his own expense, two copies of the book to the librarian of the general assembly library, who shall give a written receipt for them.

(2) The copies delivered to the librarian of the general assembly library shall be copies of the whole book, with all maps and illustrations belonging thereto, finished and colored in the same manner as the best copies of the book are published and bound, sewed, or stitched together and on the best paper on which the book is printed.

(3) If a publisher fails to comply with this section, he shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5 and the value of the copies.

(4) For the purpose of this section the expression "book" includes every part or division of a book, pamphlet, sheet of letterpress, map, plan, chart, or table, but shall not include any second or subsequent edition of a book unless that edition contains additions or alterations either in the letterpress or in the maps, prints, or other engravings belonging thereto.

SEC. 53. The governor in council may make regulations, not inconsistent with this act, prescribing all matters which by this act are required or permitted to be prescribed, or which are necessary or convenient to be prescribed, for giving effect to this act or for the conduct of any business relating to the copyright office.

ENLISTMENT IN FOREIGN SERVICE

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand the current issue of Time magazine, and I direct attention to an article on page 19 of that magazine. With the permission of the House, I shall read excerpts from it. This refers to an American citizen who enlisted to fight in the Spanish war, and here is what the first paragraph of the article says:

Into the Washington embassy of the Spanish Leftists stepped one time United States Army Pilot Harold Dahl. A secretary offered him a contract at $1,500 per week to act as an instructor of Leftists fliers in Spain. The contract provided that Pilot Dahl's wages be paid outside of Spain directly to his bride, Mrs. Edith Rogers Dahl, who used to appear with "Crooner" Rudy Vallee's band. After signing, Pilot Dahl was sent to Mexico, provided there with a passport showing him to be a Spaniard by the name of Hernandez Diaz.

Then the article tells of his going to fight as a flier with the Leftist forces in Spain. I read further, now, giving the language of Mr. Dahl, who is quoted in the article as saying:

I was flying alone in a biplane of Russian make, similar to the Curtiss Hawk pursuit. My parachute landed me in the midst of a company of Moors we had been bombing the daylights out of for 2 or 3 days.

Then it goes on to tell how his life was spared; and further he says, speaking of the Leftist forces:

When I flew with them, which was most of the time, I never knew where I was going or what might happen. I was merely told on short notice when to take off, and then took my place in formation until we landed.

Further on in the article Pilot Dahl is quoted as saying:

I am not a Communist and never was, but I had no job, and I heard I could get plenty of money for flying in Spain.

Mr. Speaker, I now call attention to section 5282 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which reads as follows:

Every person who, within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, enlists or enters himself, or hires or retains another person to enlist or enter himself, or to go beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States with intent to be enlisted or entered in the service of any foreign prince, state, colony, district, or people, as a soldier, or as a marine or seaman, on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque, or privateer, shall be deemed guilty of high misdemeanor, and shall be fined not more than $1,000, and imprisoned not more than 3 years.

If this article in this magazine is correct, then according to the law of the land it is certainly time that the authorities took action against anyone in the Spanish Embassy or anywhere else who is guilty of enlisting anybody to go abroad to fight any war in Spain, because under the provisions of this statute which I have just quoted it is definitely illegal. I intend to make it my purpose and to act to bring this article and this action on the part of those breaking the law to the attention of the prosecuting authorities of the United States Government, to the end that the enlistment of American citizens to fight in foreign wars shall be stopped. I will do this because in my opinion it is not only illegal, but because also in the opinion of a great many people in this country, the more Americans take part in foreign wars the nearer we are to being dragged into a foreign war ourselves.

THE CHINESE SITUATION

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I listened with much interest to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS], who has just spoken; and I think he has touched on a very important matter, not so much as it affects Spain but as it affects the policy of this Nation. I can readily see a situation that may develop in a short time that could involve this country in war, when we are unanimous for peace—not in Spain but in China. I have read in the newspapers the proposal to enlist American airmen by the hundreds to fight in the Chinese air force against the Japanese. If that is permitted, knowing how intensely nationalistic and patriotic the Japanese are and how easy it is to offend and inflame them, we are faced with a serious situation. If hundreds of Americans should enlist and fight in the Chinese air force against the Japanese within the next few months, assuming that the war lasts that long, then we would immediately be in danger of being involved in that war ourselves. "A stitch in time often saves nine." Is it not the duty of the Congress of the United States to see that the law against foreign enlistments is enforced and even to write new laws to prohibit American citizens fighting in the air forces of any foreign nation? We are complacent and quiescent when it comes to the question of a few Americans fighting in the armed forces of some nation which will not involve us in war, whether it is in Spain or Mexico or South America, but when it comes to involving us in war with a powerful nation, then that is an entirely different matter.

I see sitting before me the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]. He has a petition on the desk to discharge the committee on a resolution providing for a constitutional amendment to give the American people the right to declare war in the future or to determine by referendum whether they want to declare war. I also have a petition on the desk to discharge a committee of a resolution which I would like to see passed. That is on a resolution prohibiting the sale of arms, ammunition, and implements of war in time of peace as well as in time of war. Look at the situation in China today. Actually there is a war going on in China without a declaration of war, and we are permitted to send all kinds of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to both sides to kill and maim and destroy property. I think that is against the wishes and intent of the peace-loving American people. No one knows how long the armed conflict will continue in China without a declaration of war, and as long as no declaration is made, we can continue to ship arms and ammunition to kill people with whom we are at peace, for sake of blood money and for sake of war profits.

I have taken these few minutes to make certain observations on the Chinese situation and in regard to the American policy in connection with China. This administration claims it is operating under the "good neighbor" policy, yet we have in China, a nation with whom we are at peace, and one of the oldest nations in the world, an entire American infantry regiment, the Fifteenth United States Infantry Regiment, stationed at Tientsien, 702 men and 40 officers. We have over 1,500 marines stationed in China at Peiping and Shanghai. We have 10 gunboats. For what purpose? I defy any single Member of Congress to point out for what good or needful purpose. Ten American gunboats to patrol Chinese rivers; the rivers of a nation with whom we are at profound peace.

There are only 12,000 Americans in all of China, yet we have 2,500 soldiers and marines stationed there permanently. In addition to that, we have set up a system of courts with extraterritorial rights. We are spending approximately $10,000,000 of American money on our armed forces in China including our naval vessels and yet we only do something like $50,000,000 worth of export trade to China. Is this a "good neighbor" policy? Why should we maintain any extraterritorial rights in China? We secured them away back in 1906 after the Boxer Rebellion, but what good does it do us? What good purpose does it serve? Does it make for friendship with China to intrude and invade our influence on her soil? Certainly not. We have withdrawn our armed forces from Haiti, Nicaragua, and from Cuba. Why do we not withdraw them from China? I would like to know the answer. For years I have been opposed to our maintaining extraterritorial rights in China or in any other nation. Due to the World War Germany lost her extraterritorial rights; so did Austria and Hungary. I spoke to a high representative of the German Embassy today, and he told me that they were better off without them because of developing more friendly relations with China; as they were not intruding upon Chinese rights, on their sovereignty, or upon their integrity as a nation.

So I point out today when the Chinese situation is uppermost in the thoughts of our people that the Congress of the United States ought to consider what our policy should be, whether we should continue to maintain these extraterritorial rights, and for what purpose, or whether we should call back every single soldier, sailor, and marine out of China.

The French also maintain certain armed forces in Tientsin. Just the other day two French soldiers were wounded there. This might have involved them in war with Japan. If a few American soldiers were wounded by Japanese in China, we would be more than apt to be in difficulty overnight with Japan because of the bad blood that unfortunately exists due to certain restrictions in this country on immigration from Japan. This is the time for Congress to consider these issues, and not when it is too late.

I ask the Members on the Democratic side, those who uphold the good-neighbor policy, Why should we maintain an infantry regiment in China; why should we keep 1,500 marines there; why should we have 10 gunboats, at a cost of $1,300,000 annually, on peaceful Chinese rivers? These are some of the questions we are entitled to have answered, situations for which the administration will be responsible if we become involved. Congress, likewise, has its responsibilities.

In addition to that, we have a whole fleet of naval vessels in Chinese waters, a fleet composed of 1 heavy cruiser, 13 destroyers, 1 submarine tender, 1 destroyer tender, 1 submarine rescue vessel, 1 mine sweeper, 1 seaplane tender, 1 oil tanker, and 6 seaplanes. These vessels are all in Chinese waters at the present time, costing the American taxpayers large sums of money.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman knows that there is not anything new about this; it has been going on for 20 years.

Mr. FISH. Yes. I think it has been going on since 1906. It has been going on just about 30 years too long, and for no purpose. Does anybody claim that it does? That is what I want to have answered. I want to know why we have to spend $10,000,000 of American money in China to protect our vested interests and maintain an armed force of 2,500 to protect the interests of 12,000 Americans living in China or engaged in business there.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Without entering into the argument of the gentleman from New York, does the gentleman contend that the removal of these ships would cause our relations with China to be any more friendly than they are at the present time?

Mr. FISH. I should think they would be. Would it not be natural if circumstances were reversed and we had foreign troops on our soil that we would like to have them removed?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Let me ask the question in another way: Is there any unfriendly attitude between China and the United States?

Mr. FISH. No. I would say the relationship between the two countries is very friendly, as the Chinese appreciate that we seek no conquered territories or have any imperialistic aims. However, they naturally resent any foreign troops being stationed in their country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Certainly, no nation likes foreign troops to remain upon her sovereign soil; and why should we keep such a large force of infantry and marines in China when there are only 10,000 or 12,000 American citizens there, and we do only $50,000,000 of export business? We are spending this year approximately $10,000,000 in China out of the Treasury of the United States to keep our armed forces, including naval detachments, there. This seems to me to be a very large sum of money for this purpose and an unnecessary expenditure and not in harmony with the avowed good-neighbor policy of the administration.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if we did not spend that money there that we would not spend it at some other place?

Mr. FISH. We would not spend that much. The entire expenditure is increased by having them there. Take for instance the 10 gunboats, they would not be used anywhere else.

Mr. KELLER. They might be used here, might they not?

Mr. FISH. No; they would not be used here. I think they were built over there for a specific purpose.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. They are the Chinese river gunboats?

Mr. FISH. Yes; they are Chinese river gunboats, and there are from 30 to 35 Americans on each boat. It takes a lot of good American dollars to keep these gunboats on peaceful Chinese rivers.

Mr. KELLER. But other nations are there.

Mr. FISH. I do not know or care about the activities of other nations in foreign lands.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. As I recall, Gen. Smedley D. Butler on numerous occasions has voiced the same sentiments as those uttered by the gentleman from New York. We are keeping the American gunboats on the Yangtze Kiang River to protect American oil interests which have heavy investments along that river.

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman brought that out. I cannot imagine any legitimate reason for these gunboats of ours being on this river in China. Now is the time to find out the facts when American public opinion is aroused and to withdraw our armed forces, gunboats, and to give up voluntarily our extraterritorial rights. If there is a big war over there, we might become involved as a result of maintaining armed forces in a foreign country.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have just one interest in this whole matter, the same as every other Member of the Congress, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, and the same as the gentleman from Connecticut who just spoke—and that is to prevent Americans going over to China and involving us in a war. If the old nations of the world want to arm to the teeth, like Japan, and go to war, it is their war and not our war. The way to keep out of the war is to keep American troops away from the war zone and keep American citizens from fighting in the combat units of any warring nations. That should be self-evident.

We, as Members of the Congress, are the only ones, beside the President, who have the authority to recall our armed forces. These troops may be recalled by an act of Congress. We can prevent our citizens from serving in the armed forces of any nation in time of war by depriving them of citizenship.

I submit the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] should be passed. This resolution gives the people the right to declare war, if they want to, or to refuse to declare war. We should adopt also the resolution which I have offered prohibiting the sale of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to all nations, whether in time of peace or in time of war.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman state the number of the discharge petition he has filed?

Mr. FISH. It is no. 18. The gentleman has on his petition something like 170 signatures. It needs 218 signatures to bring his resolution to amend the Constitution before the House of Representatives for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, why not give the people the right to vote on that proposition? Why not give them the right to declare war or not declare war? Let the American people decide these issues. Why not initiate that kind of a constitutional amendment and let the people decide if they want to have control in the future of the question of peace or war. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the address of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial on the Pure Food and Drugs Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at the point where I spoke earlier this afternoon, and to include therein copy of a resolution which I have today introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MAVERICK. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] should object to that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say the gentleman from Kansas made an address today.

Mr. MAVERICK. Did I not say something?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR THE ESCHEAT TO THE UNITED STATES OF CERTAIN AMOUNTS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, H. R. 7741, to amend the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936, to provide for the escheat to the United States of certain amounts.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not know that I shall object, I would like to know what this bill does.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill amends the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act of 1936, and provides that where a veteran dies without heirs and is entitled to compensation, as the law now stands there seems to be some doubt as to whether the money goes back to the Federal Treasury or to the State. It might perhaps go to the State. This amends the act so that the money goes into the Federal Treasury.

Under the present law when a veteran dies, the administrator of the veteran's affairs certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury and he issues the bonds necessary for payment of the bonus certificate. Under the present law there is some doubt whether that money will go back to the Treasury of the United States or to the State. We think it should go into the Treasury of the United States from whence it came. This bill comes in with a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman says the money should go back into the Treasury. There is no one in the House of Representatives who knows more than does the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that we ought to get some money back into the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936, as amended, is hereby further amended by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence added by the act approved June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1982), and inserting a colon and the following: "Provided, That the amount of any such payment (including any payment heretofore made) which, under the law of the State or country pursuant to which the estate of the deceased veteran would be distributed, would otherwise escheat to such State or country, shall escheat to the United States and shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania, for 1 day, on account of important business.

To Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the Mohawk Valley plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of a letter I wrote to the President on the subject of the New England Flood Control Compact.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 114. An act to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation pumping or other uses, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 81. An act to provide retirement annuities for certain former employees of the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad Co. on the Isthmus of Panama;

S. 607. An act to authorize improvement of navigation facilities on the Columbia River, and for other purposes;

S. 774. An act to incorporate the Marine Corps League;

S. 1115. An act to amend section 22 of the act approved March 4, 1925, entitled "An act providing for sundry matters affecting the naval service, and for other purposes";

S. 1278. An act to authorize exchange of lands at military reservations, and for other purposes;

S. 1281. An act to authorize the sale of surplus War Department real property;

S. 2116. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.;

S. 2147. An act to amend provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937;

S. 2157. An act authorizing credits to disbursing officers for expenses incident to the creation of subsistence homesteads corporations; and

S. 2205. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, August 4, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet Wednesday, August 4, 1937, at 10 a. m., for the purpose of hearings on House Joint Resolution 458, providing for the participation of the United States in the continuing international exposition to be known as Pacific Mercado, to be held in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., commencing in the year 1940, and in the year 1942 commemorating the landing of Cabrillo, and for other reasons.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Special Subcommittee on Naval Affairs appointed by Chairman CARL VINSON will hold open hearings on H. R. 7777, to further amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limit prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 505), as amended by the act of June 25, 1936 (49 Stat. 1926; 34 U. S. C., sec. 496), Thursday, August 5, 1937, at 10:30 a. m.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing in Room 219, House Office Building, Washington, D. C., Tuesday, August 10, 1937, at 10 a. m., on H. R. 8080, a bill "to establish a fund for the insurance of mortgages securing loans for the construction or reconditioning of floating property used for commercial purposes."

Persons desiring to testify are requested to notify the clerk of the committee. Parties who do not intend to testify, but who wish to submit a statement for the record, are requested to file such statement with the clerk of the committee not later than the date of the hearing.

For the information of those persons who intend to testify, it is the desire of the committee that amendments to be proposed during the hearing be submitted in writing to the clerk of the committee prior to the date of the hearing.

It is very important that notice of intention to testify—even though doubtful of fulfillment—be communicated to the clerk of the committee at least 1 day in advance of the hearing. Otherwise unnecessary confusion and delay might arise, resulting in a reduction of the time available for presentation of testimony by witnesses.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

769. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a report showing the special assistants employed under an appropriation entitled "Pay of special assistant attorneys"; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

770. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a bill to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

771. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Department of Agriculture, for dry-land agriculture, amounting to $76,000 (H. Doc. No. 333); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

772. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting recommendation of a proposed bill to confer jurisdiction upon certain United States commissioners to try certain civil suits wherein the United States is plaintiff; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3100. Also, petition of L. F. Barnhardt, Farmers Gin Co., Palmer, Tex., and J. Webb Howell, president and manager of the Bryan Cotton Oil & Fertilizer Co., of Bryan, Tex., opposing the Black-Connery wage and hour bill; to the Committee on Labor.

3101. Also, petition of Hon. Ed B. Hamilton, of Hillsboro, and Henry W. Flagg, president, Texas Wildlife Federation, Galveston, Tex., favoring House bill 7681, to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife-restoration projects; to the Committee on Agriculture.

3102. By Mr. KEOGH: Petition of the Interstate Airways Committee, Washington, D. C., concerning the McCarran-Lea bill for air transport regulation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3103. Also, petition of the Electrolux, Inc., New York City, concerning the Black-Connery wage and hour bill; to the Committee on Labor.

3104. Also, petition of the National Customs Service Association, George L. Connell, president, New York City, urging passage of the McCormack bills (H. R. 3 and 7948); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3105. Also, petition of the Artists Union of New York, concerning the Schwellenbach-Allen resolution; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

3106. By Mr. PFEIFER: Telegram of the Wholesale Clothing Clerks Union, Local 158, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, New York City, urging support of the wages-and-hours bill; to the Committee on Labor.

3107. Also, telegram of 35,000 members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in Greater New York, urging support of the Black-Connery bill; to the Committee on Labor.

3108. Also, telegram of the New York Clothing Cutters Union, Local 4, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America,

New York City, urging support of the wage and hour bill; to the Committee on Labor.

3109. Also, petition of the Artists Union of New York, concerning the Schwellenbach-Allen joint resolution; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

3110. Also, petition of the Electrolux, Inc., New York City, concerning the Black-Connery wage and hour bill; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1937

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 22, 1937)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, August 3, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

Mr. LEWIS. I again announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent from the Senate on official business as members of the committee appointed to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

I further announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] is detained on official business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is absent in connection with his duty as a member of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On July 30, 1937:

S. 2193. An act to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy.

On August 2, 1937:

S. 455. An act for the relief of J. R. Collie and Eleanor Y. Collie;

S. 534. An act granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River; and

S. 2086. An act to authorize the construction of a Federal reclamation project to furnish a water supply for the lands of the Arch Hurley Conservancy District in New Mexico.

On August 3, 1937:

S. 1067. An act for the relief of Asa J. Hunter;

S. 1143. An act for the relief of G. L. Tarlton; and

S. 1144. An act for the relief of the Frazier-Davis Construction Co.

TIFFANY CONSTRUCTION CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation on the claim of the Tiffany Construction Co. against the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by United Lodge, No. 4, of the International Order of Odd Fellows, of Denver, Colo., protesting against the imposition of certain taxes under the social security law upon lodges of the I. O. O. F. and other similar lodges in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish the Federal Reserve System as at present constituted, and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. COPELAND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rochester and Stanley, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the power of the Congress to declare war, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WITHDRAWALS OF LAND IN SOUTHWESTERN ARIZONA

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it has been the practice of the Senate for many years, when the request is made, to read from the desk any resolution agreed to by the legislature of a State and any communication from the Governor of a State. Therefore, following the practice of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary read from the desk a copy of a resolution unanimously agreed to by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, and I also ask that there be read a telegram from the Governor of the State of Arizona. These telegrams relate to a matter of such vital and transcendent importance that I wish here and now to make known to the Senate and the country the harmful results that would flow from a proposal alleged to be contemplated which would, if consummated, inflict a deadly wound on the State of Arizona.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read the telegrams.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., August 3, 1937.

Senator ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: The following memorial was unanimously passed by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, a house memorial protesting against the proposed withdrawal of land in southwest Arizona as game refuge. To the Secretary of the Interior and the Chief of the Bureau of Biological Survey of the United States of America your memorialist respectfully represents: The total area of land within the State of Arizona is 72,838,400 acres. Of this area Indian reservations occupy 19,566,339 acres; national forests, 11,203,438 acres; national parks and monuments, 671,610 acres, military reservations, 72,008 acres. The public domain consists of something less than 13,000,000 acres. Two-thirds of the State's area is controlled by Federal bureaus. Less than one-fourth is subject to taxation. It is understood that the Bureau of Biological Survey has requested the Department of the Interior to have withdrawn from entry two large bodies of land in the southwestern portion of the State, totaling approximately 3,400,000 acres, for the use and propagation of mountain sheep and goats and as game refuges. A large portion of the area which it is proposed to have placed in these two game refuges is grazing land, and being used by local stockmen, while other portions thereof will soon be irrigated by water from the Colorado River under the Gila project. These proposed withdrawals if made will work undue hardships on the users of said lands, especially those persons engaged in the livestock business, which is one of the biggest industries of the State, and will also greatly retard the development of the State and in a large measure prevent these lands from being developed and improved and placed upon the tax rolls. It is overwhelmingly the public sentiment of the people of Arizona that these proposed game refuges be not established. Wherefore, your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona urgently requests that the proposed withdrawal of public lands in southwestern Arizona for the purposes above stated be not made.

VERNON G. DAVIS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, State of Arizona.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., August 3, 1937.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

Following telegram sent to President Roosevelt today: "The Arizona-Colorado River Commission, acting through its chairman, R. C. Stanford, Governor of Arizona, and Donald C. Scott, its secretary, protests against proposed withdrawal of 3,400,000 acres in southwestern Arizona by Department of Interior at request of Bureau of Biological Survey for use and propagation of mountain sheep and goats and as game refuge. As the area proposed to be withdrawn contains highly fertile lands contiguous to and economically irrigable by gravity and pumping from the Colorado River and its tributaries, including Gila project and many other projects, such withdrawal would prevent homestead entry, settlement, and development of these lands which, when irrigated will add vast wealth to Arizona and Nation, and conserve American soil and water resources, agriculture, and food supply.

"Flat areas of such lands are not valuable for grazing, and while upland areas thereof may be so at certain seasons they are more valuable for reclamation by pumping and gravity and development as unit with other irrigable lands below. We object to this proposed withdrawal which would be disastrous to Arizona's present and future growth. Unless these and other Arizona lands are irrigated by diverting Arizona's Colorado River waters thereto above and below Boulder Dam and elsewhere, the waters would be forced to Mexico at the low and wrong end of the river to desolate Arizona and build up an irrigated foreign food supply and military base to compete with our present industry, agriculture and labor, menace national defense and ruin Arizona and proper development of entire Colorado River system, which would be the result of the Colorado River compact which Arizona has rejected for 18 years, and would leave the power in the Colorado River and tributaries and Grand Canyon and side canyons alone to be monopolized by separating irrigation from power. Such withdrawal would in addition interfere with development of several times as much land in Arizona and the Nation in projects of which these lands proposed to be withdrawn are an indispensable part. Your remarkable stand and efforts for conservation of the Nation's land and water resources impel me to urge abandonment of such proposed withdrawal which would be detrimental to Arizona's projects, including Gila project, and to the existence, homes, property values, and prosperity of this State and people, and contrary to proper national river planning which requires development beginning upstream, and subversive of our basic resources, general welfare, and national defense."

ARIZONA COLORADO RIVER COMMISSION,
R. C. STANFORD, Governor of Arizona, Chairman.
DONALD C. SCOTT, Secretary.

A bill (S. 2908) for the relief of James A. Crotty as administrator of the estate of Elbert R. Robinson, deceased; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

A bill (S. 2909) to amend an act of Congress approved June 17, 1870, entitled, "An act to establish a Police Court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2910) relative to the military record of Capt. John W. Eckles, deceased; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPEAL OF SILVER PURCHASE ACT OF 1934

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a joint resolution for reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I also request that the resolution may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194) to repeal the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution to repeal the Silver Purchase Act of 1934

Whereas the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 declares it "to be the policy of the United States that the proportion of silver to gold in the monetary stocks of the United States should be increased, with the ultimate objective of having and maintaining, one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks in silver"; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Treasury purchased between June 30, 1934, and January 31, 1937, an amount of silver of a monetary value of approximately $1,524,000,000, and despite these heavy purchases the purchase of an additional $1,364,000,000 of silver would have been required in 1937, due to the simultaneous huge increase in gold stocks, to carry out the policy declared in the Silver Purchase Act of 1934; and

Whereas the total world production of silver for the calendar year 1934 was only 215,949,585 ounces, or less than one-fifth of the additional supply required in 1937; and

Whereas the total supply of silver required on January 31, 1937 ($3,785,900,000), would have amounted to approximately 66 percent of the total stock of silver in the world's banks and treasuries in 1935 ($5,706,529,000); and

Whereas the only measurable results of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 have assumed the form not of general public benefit (one of its alleged purposes), but of a subsidy to silver producers at the expense of the general public and an unwarranted profit chiefly to Chinese and Japanese smugglers and speculators in silver, to Mexican, Indian, South American, and other foreign producers and hoarders of silver, to holders of shares in producing companies, and to speculators in silver the world over; and

Whereas the silver-purchase program tends to weaken the effectiveness of the concerted drive being made by the administration to counteract inflationary forces resulting from its fiscal policies by increasing the currency supply of the Nation at a time when strenuous efforts are being made by the administration to reduce excess reserves in banks and the dangers of credit inflation based upon the huge accumulation of gold; and

Whereas the silver being accumulated under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 has a present bullion market value far below its cost and in all probability can be disposed of only at a great loss; and

Whereas the present artificial stimulation of silver production which results in taking vast hoards of silver from the ground only to be reburied in the ground will jeopardize the future stability of the silver industry; and

Whereas another alleged purpose of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 is "to do something for China" and increase Chinese purchases of the products of American farms and factories, when in fact it forced China to close all its banks, suspend the silver standard, and suffer a drastic defiaton, thereby crippling its purchasing power: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 is hereby repealed.

WEIGHT OF SILVER DOLLAR AND UNLIMITED COINAGE OF SILVER

Mr. TOWNSEND. I also ask consent to introduce a joint resolution for reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I ask that the resolution may be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 195) terminating the authority of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to fixing the weight of the silver dollar and providing for the unlimited coinage of silver was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution terminating the authority of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to fixing the weight of the silver dollar and providing for the unlimited coinage of silver

Whereas the President has been granted the unprecedented power to change the weight and fineness of silver coins of the United States and to expand the circulation of silver coins, and particularly silver certificates; and

Whereas future expansion of silver coins and silver certificates by the devaluation of silver would counteract the attempts being made by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Secretary of the Treasury to minimize inflationary tendencies; and

Whereas the supply of silver now accumulated in this country has already reached dangerous proportions; and

Whereas the provision on our statute books which permits the President at his discretion to authorize the free coinage of silver at such ratio to gold as he may determine disregards all past experience of the world with the bimetallic currency system: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That all power and authority with respect to fixing the weight of the silver dollar and providing for the unlimited coinage of silver conferred upon the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, or either of them, by any act of Congress enacted subsequent to May 11, 1933, shall cease and terminate on the date of enactment of this joint resolution; and all proclamations, orders, rules, regulations, and other action promulgated, made, issued, or taken by the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, or either of them, subsequent to May 11, 1933, with respect to fixing the weight of the silver dollar and providing for the unlimited coinage of silver shall cease to be effective on and after the date of enactment of this joint resolution.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McADOO submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO SILVER

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 166), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Whereas the great increase in the gold supply of the United States, resulting from devaluation of the standard gold dollar and the influx of gold, has been a most important consideration in the explanation of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has not fulfilled, and has not been able to fulfill, the requirements of section 3 of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, which in effect authorized and directed him to purchase silver at home or abroad at not to exceed $1.29 an ounce "whenever and so long as the proportion of silver in the stocks of gold and silver of the United States is less than one-fourth of the monetary value of such stocks", or one-third of the monetary value of the gold supply; and

Whereas it appears that several factors have arisen, since the passage of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, which justify the question as to whether the reasons originally advanced in defense of the provisions of that act are now applicable; and

Whereas charges have been printed of such seriousness with respect to silver legislation, purchases, and speculation as to warrant an investigation in order to determine the facts, to acquaint the public with them, and to remove any stigma unjustly placed upon persons mentioned in these charges: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators who are members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation (1) of all matters relating to the purchase of silver under the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, (2) of all matters having a bearing upon the use of silver as currency and as bullion in the United States, and (3) of all the measures taken by the Government with respect to silver preceding the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, and particularly the authority of the President to fix, by his proclamation of December 21, 1933, the price of newly mined domestic silver at 64.5 cents an ounce, and the legal value of the opinion of the Attorney General of November 8, 1933, on which such proclamation by the President appears to have been based. The committee so appointed shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

INVESTIGATION PERTAINING TO FLAXSEED—TAXES AND TARIFFS ON FLAXSEED, PERILLA OIL, ETC.

Mr. NYE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 167), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of February 29, 1936, declared it to be the purpose of Congress—

"(A) To reestablish, at as rapid a rate as the Secretary of Agriculture determines to be practicable and in the general public interest, the ratio between the purchasing power of the net income per person on farms and that of the income per person not on farms that prevailed during the 5-year period August 1909 to July 1914, inclusive, as determined from statistics available in the United States Department of Agriculture and the maintenance of such a ratio"; and

Whereas according to the United States Department of Agriculture the price of wheat has been higher than parity price as determined by the Department of Agriculture since July 1936 and in June 1937 the price of wheat at Minneapolis was 11 cents higher than parity; and

Whereas for a period of years the price of flaxseed has generally been just about twice the price of wheat per bushel at Minneapolis; and

Whereas the price of flaxseed at Minneapolis was 26 cents per bushel below parity price, as established by the Department of Agriculture, in January 1936, and has been consistently lower since that time; and that in June 1937 the price of flaxseed in Minneapolis was 41 cents below parity; and

Whereas the Department of Agriculture in its statement "Average Prices Received by Farmers for Farm Products July 15, 1937, With Comparisons", issued July 29, 1937, reveals under the heading "Price Relatives" (p. 13) that using the index figure 100 (based on actual prices received by farmers 1909–14) wheat increased from the index figure of 107 on July 15, 1936, to 128 on July 15, 1937; and during the same period corn increased from 125 to 184; oats from 88 to 107; barley from 91 to 104; rye from 85 to 112; cottonseed from 138 to 157; while flaxseed gained but 1 point, from 109 to 110; and

Whereas the two products of flaxseed are linseed oil and linseed meal, and, according to the United States Department of Labor, the price of linseed oil in January 1936 was 10.1 cents per pound, and in June 1937, 11.1 cents per pound (an increase of 10 percent), and the price of linseed meal in January 1936 was $30 per ton, and $35.63 per ton in June 1937 (an increase of 18.2 percent), while the United States Department of Agriculture gives the Minneapolis price of flaxseed in January 1936 at $1.87 per bushel, and in June 1937, $1.91 per bushel (an increase of 0.02 percent): Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby requested and directed to make a thorough investigation of the influence and factors keeping the price of flaxseed under parity, and to report to the Senate the results thereof.

In particular, but not to the exclusion of other matters, the Secretary of Agriculture is requested and directed to make and report to the Senate the results of an investigation and study of—

(1) The effectiveness of the existing tariff on flaxseed.

(2) The effectiveness of the existing tariff on linseed oil.

(3) The compensatory relationship between the existing tariff on flaxseed and the existing tariff on linseed oil.

(4) The effectiveness of the existing tariffs or excise taxes on perilla oil and other oils entering into competition with linseed oil, as well as the effectiveness of the existing tariffs and excise taxes on oil-bearing seeds entering into competition with flaxseed; and be it further

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is hereby requested and directed to render such assistance and cooperation as the Secretary of Agriculture may request to enable him to make this report to the Senate.

LOSS OF STATE REVENUES BY TAX EXEMPTION OF INDIAN LANDS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 168), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolution authorizing Committee on Indian Affairs, or subcommittee thereof, to hold hearings to determine alleged loss of revenues sustained by certain States due to exemption from taxation of Indian lands, and oil and gas and other minerals from such lands; prescribing the duties of said committee, and authorizing said committee to determine the amount of such loss sustained by such States

Whereas the State of Oklahoma and other States under the terms of the enabling act by which such Territories were admitted to statehood, as interpreted by the courts of last resort, the State of Oklahoma and other States have been deprived of the right to tax Indian lands within such States, and oil and gas and other minerals from such Indian lands (including the oil producers' share as well as the Indians' share) under the supervision and regulation of the Department of the Interior of the United States, resulting in a loss of revenue by such exemption from taxation of the lands and minerals located within the State of Oklahoma and other States; and

Whereas as a result of such immunity extended to the Indians and the lessees of Indian lands the State of Oklahoma and other States have sustained a loss of substantial revenues which was required to be compensated by increased taxes on the remaining property belonging to the taxable citizens of such States for the support and maintenance of the State government; and

Whereas the State of Oklahoma and other States have provided school facilities, police protection, highways, maintained courts of justice, recording offices, and other facilities of government which have been available to the Indians as well as to the other citizens of such States, all at the expense of the taxpayers of the respective States; and

Whereas the Indian is a ward of the United States and is not a ward of the State of Oklahoma or other States, and all of the immunities, privileges, and exemptions which the United States has deemed proper to accord the Indian should be a charge upon and borne by all of the States or the General Government, and not by the property of the taxable citizens of any given State; and

Whereas by depriving the State of Oklahoma and other States of the right to tax such exempted property such States have been deprived of an inalienable sovereign power: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to make an investigation of the relationship between the Federal Government and the governments of the several States and political subdivisions thereof in which there are located Indian reservations or unallotted Indian tribal lands, or any other Indian lands which have not been subject to taxation by such States or political subdivisions, with a view to a fair and equitable reimbursement to said States and/or political subdivisions.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Seventy-fifth and succeeding Congresses until the final report is submitted, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, and to take such testimony as it deems advisable; and at the conclusion of such hearings said committee shall make a report of its findings to the Congress: Provided, however, The cost of presenting evidence and testimony to such committee incident to the establishment of the amount of loss sustained by any State shall be borne by such State without expense to the United States.

RECESS APPOINTMENTS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, on the question of the precedents and proprieties involved in Presidential recess appointments, I ask that an article by Mr. David Lawrence, published in the Washington Star of last evening, may be printed in the RECORD. I particularly wish to call attention to the final paragraph, which describes a pertinent Colorado case in which the Colorado Supreme Court concluded, under like circumstances to those which may confront the Senate, as follows:

It cannot be disputed that it is a Governor's constitutional duty to nominate to the senate when it is in session and upon their consent to appoint to fill every vacant office. It follows that the Governor cannot make an ad-interim appointment in the present case, but must await the session of the senate or call a special session.

I ask that the entire article be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of Aug. 3, 1937]

COURT TANGLE CREATES NEW ISSUE—LAWS HINT JUSTICE SHOULD BE NAMED FOR CONFIRMATION

(By David Lawrence)

President Roosevelt has been advised that he can defeat the will of the United States Senate and appoint a member of the Supreme Court after Congress adjourns for its present session and that the appointment will hold good until the end of the next session, which might be until the summer of 1938.

Thus without allowing the Senate to express its advice and consent, as required by the Constitution, the President is being told a Justice can serve on the Supreme Court for a whole term of the Court, which runs from October to June.

The precise point at issue—when a vacancy must be filled—has never been passed upon by the Supreme Court itself and there are as many good legal grounds for arguing that Attorney General Cummings has rendered the wrong advice as to suggest that his opinion is conclusive.

The Constitution's language is as follows:

"The President shall have power to fill up vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."

HINGES ON WORD "HAPPEN"

The question is, What does the word "happen" really mean? It is insisted by the administration that the word may be construed to mean all vacancies "that may happen to exist during the recess of the Senate."

This interpretation, however, arises from a peculiar set of circumstances in a given case which in reality does not apply at all to the present situation. Back in 1880 a vacancy occurred in the office of United States district attorney, and in those days the circuit judges had power to fill the vacancies. Henry Farrow was the incumbent. When his term expired a circuit judge appointed him to fill the vacancy. Then the President came along with another appointment, namely, John Bigby, and the nomination was sent to the Senate while that body was in session, but failed of action. A dispute arose as to the power of the President to make a recess appointment for Mr. Bigby. Clearly this is different from the circumstances existing today with respect to Justice Van Devanter, who retired from the Supreme Court on June 2, during a session of the Senate, and no nomination has been made by the President.

Yet in the Farrow case, which was decided by Judge Woods for the circuit court, northern district of Georgia, constituting really the highest Federal court ruling available, the opinion of the court, instead of supporting, really rejects the reasoning of those who insist that "happen" means in all cases "happens to exist" during a recess of the Senate.

OPINION CITED

Judge Woods quoted with approval the opinion of William Wirt, Attorney General under President Monroe. Said Mr. Wirt:

"The Constitution does not look to the moment of origin of the vacancy but to the state of things at the point of time at which the President is called upon to act. Is the Senate in session? Then he must make a nomination to that body. Is it in recess? Then the President must fill the vacancy by a temporary commission. This seems to me to be the only construction of the Constitution which is compatible with its spirit, reason, and purpose, while at the same time it offers no violence to its language, and these are, I think, the governing points to which all sound construction looks."

Judge Woods pointed out that this opinion was concurred in by Roger Taney when he was Attorney General under President Jackson, the same man who was later Chief Justice. But Mr. Taney used the idea of "happen to exist" to cover an entirely different set of circumstances than prevail today. He declared that the clause in the Constitution was intended to provide "for those vacancies which might arise from accident and the contingencies to which human affairs must always be liable." Mr. Taney's point was that if by some mischance a nomination was omitted by a President through no deliberate intention, then a vacancy might be said to happen to exist. He added:

"If it falls out that from death, inadvertence, or mistake an office required by the law to be filled is in recess, found to be vacant, then a vacancy has happened during the recess, and the President may fill it."

NEW ISSUE INVOLVED

This reasoning was tied closely to the notion that a nomination sent to the Senate might fail of confirmation and that a recess appointment would then be in order. This power is not questioned now, but the new issue is whether a President, fully cognizant of the existence of a vacancy, refuses to send a nomination to the Senate, makes a recess appointment and then refuses to withdraw the appointment if it is not confirmed by the Senate and keeps his appointee on the Supreme Court throughout a full term of the Court.

Incidentally, Congress itself has by law indicated that it does not approve of persons taking office who are not confirmed when there has been a chance for them to win confirmation. The Revised Statutes of the United States ever since 1869 have provided:

"No money shall be paid from the Treasury as a salary to any person appointed during the recess of the Senate to fill a vacancy in any existing office, if the vacancy existed while the Senate was in session, and was by law required to be filled by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, until such appointee has been confirmed by the Senate."

The most important Court decision of recent years bearing on the point at issue was in Colorado in 1925 when a clause in the State constitution virtually the same as that in the Federal Constitution was construed by the Supreme Court of Colorado to mean that once a vacancy occurs during a session of the upper house of the legislature a nomination must then be made or else a recess appointment is barred. The Colorado Legislature met on January 7, 1925, and sat in continuous session till April 17, 1925. But notwithstanding that a vacancy occurred in the State board of land commissioners on January 13, 1925, the Governor waited until April 16, 1925, the very day the senate was preparing to adjourn, and the nomination was left unacted upon for lack of time. The Supreme Court of Colorado refused to recognize a recess appointment, saying:

"It cannot be disputed that it is the Governor's constitutional duty to nominate to the senate when it is in session and upon their consent to appoint to fill every vacant office. It follows that the Governor cannot make an ad-interim appointment in the present case, but must await the session of the senate or call a special session."

RECREATIONAL FACILITIES AT PIERRE, S. DAK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1047) to authorize the city of Pierre, S. Dak., to construct, equip, maintain, and operate on Farm Island, S. Dak., certain amusement and recreational facilities; to charge for the use thereof; and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 14, to strike out all after "South" down to and including "island", in line 19, and to insert:

Dakota; Provided, That this authorization shall be effective only when the city of Pierre or the State legislature shall enact and maintain regulatory provisions of the kind set out in sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this act, in modification of the conditions contained in the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 888, 897), relating to the purposes for which the said Farm Island may be used; and that until such enactment is certified to the Secretary of the Interior, no part of this act shall be in effect.

SEC. 2. The carriage, sale, or gift on such island of any alcoholic beverages other than beer is hereby prohibited, and such city is further authorized, for the purposes of detecting and preventing the carriage of such beverages, to provide for the reasonable inspection of persons and vehicles on such island.

On page 2, line 20, to strike out "2" and insert "3"; on page 3, line 1, to strike out "3" and insert "4"; and on page 3, line 15, to strike out "4" and insert "5."

Mr. BULOW. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RECREATIONAL FACILITIES AT CHAMBERLAIN, S. DAK.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1266) to authorize the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., to construct, equip, and maintain tourist cabins on American Island, S. Dak., to operate and maintain a tourist camp and certain amusement and recreational facilities on such island, to make charges in connection therewith, and for other purposes, which was, on page 2, line 17, after "island", to insert:

Provided further, That this act shall become effective only after the city of Chamberlain makes regulatory provision to carry out the terms of the act and after such regulations have been certified to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BULOW. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TAXES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KING submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 7472) to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 12, 29, 30, 31, and 32.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 33, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE II—TAXES ON INSURANCE COMPANIES

"SECTION 1. On and after the 1st day of September 1937, every domestic, foreign, or alien company organized as a stock, mutual, reciprocal, Lloyd's, fraternal, or any other type of insurance company or association, before issuing contracts of insurance against loss of life or health, or by fire, marine, accident, casualty, fidelity and surety, title guaranty, or other hazard not contrary to public policy, shall obtain from the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia an annual license or certificate of authority, upon payment of a fee of $25 to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia. All licenses for insurance companies who may apply for permission to do business in the District of Columbia shall date from the first of the month in which application is made, and expire on the 30th day of April following, and payment shall be made in proportion.

"SEC. 2. Any such company issuing contracts of insurance in the District of Columbia, without first having obtained license or certificate of authority from the superintendent of insurance so to do, shall upon conviction be subject to a fine of $100 per day for each day it shall engage in business without such license or certificate of authority.

"SEC. 3. All prosecutions for violations of this title shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia or any of his assistants.

"SEC. 4. Each of such companies shall file an annual statement, in the form prescribed by the superintendent of insurance, before March 1 of each year, of its operations for the year ending December 31 immediately preceding. Such statement shall be verified by the oath of the president and secretary or in their absence by two other principal officers. The fee for filing said statement shall be $20 and payment therefor shall be made to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 5. If any such company shall fail to file the annual statement herein required, the superintendent of insurance may thereupon revoke its license or certificate of authority to transact business in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 6. All such companies shall also pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia a sum of money as taxes equal to 2 per centum of its policy and membership fees and net premium receipts on all insurance contracts on risks in the District of Columbia, said taxes to be paid before the 1st day of March of each year on the amount of income for the year ending December 31 next preceding. Such tax shall be in lieu of all other taxes except (1) taxes upon real estate, and (2) fees and charges provided for by the insurance laws of the District including amendments made to such laws by this title.

" 'Net premium receipts' means gross premiums received less the sum of the following:

"1. Premiums returned on policies canceled or not taken;

"2. Premiums paid for reinsurance where the same are paid to companies duly licensed to do business in the District; and

"3. Dividends paid in cash or used by policyholders in payment of renewal premiums.

"Nothing contained in this section or in sections 1 or 7 of this title shall apply with respect to marine insurance written within the said District and reported, taxed, and licensed under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate marine insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', approved March 4, 1922, as amended.

"SEC. 7. If any such company shall fail to pay the tax herein required, it shall be liable to the District of Columbia for the amount thereof, and in addition thereof a penalty of 8 per centum per month thereafter until paid.

"SEC. 8. Nothing contained in this title shall apply to any relief association, not conducted for profit, composed solely of officers and enlisted men of the United States Army or Navy, or solely of employees of any other branch of the United States Government service or solely of employees of the District of Columbia government, or solely of employees of any individual, company, firm, or corporation or to any fraternal organization which issues contracts of insurance exclusively to its own members.

"SEC. 9. Any act or part of any act insofar as it is inconsistent with the provisions of this title is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment, and in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, on page 11 of the House bill, line 16, after "fuel" insert "to be used by him or"; and on page 12 of the House bill, line 19, after "fuel" insert "to be used by him or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE VI—TAX ON PRIVILEGE OF DOING BUSINESS

"SECTION 1. Where used in this title—

"(a) The term 'person' includes any individual, firm, copartnership, joint adventure, association, corporation (domestic or foreign), trust, estate, receiver, or any other group or combination acting as a unit, but shall not include railroad or railroad express companies which report to and are subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887, as amended.

"(b) The term 'taxpayer' means any person liable for any tax hereunder.

"(c) The term 'Commissioners' means the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or their duly authorized representative or representatives.

"(d) The term 'business' shall include the carrying on or exercising for gain or economic benefit, either direct or indirect, any trade, business, profession, vocation, or commercial activity in or on privately owned property and in or on property owned by the United States Government in the District of Columbia, not including, however, labor or services rendered by any individual as an employee for wages, salary, or commission.

"(e) The term 'gross receipts' means the gross receipts received from any business in the District of Columbia, including cash, credits, and property of any kind or nature, without any deduction therefrom on account of the cost of the property sold, the cost of materials, labor, or services or other costs, interest, or discount paid, or any other expenses whatsoever: Provided, That the term 'gross receipts' when used in connection with or in respect of financial transactions involving the sale of notes, stocks, bonds, and other securities, or the loan, collection, or advance of money, or the discounting of notes, bills, or other evidences of debt, shall be deemed to mean the gross interest, discount, commission, or other gross income earned by means of or resulting from said financial transactions: Provided further, That in connection with commission merchants, attorneys or other agents, the term 'gross receipts' shall be deemed to mean the gross amount of such commissions or gross fees received by them, and, as to stock and bond brokers, the term 'gross receipts' shall be deemed to mean gross amount of commissions or gross fees received, the gross trading profit on securities bought and sold, and the gross interest income on marginal accounts from business done or arising in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That with respect to contractors the term 'gross receipts' shall mean their total receipts less money paid by them to subcontractors for work and labor performed and material furnished by such subcontractors in connection with such work and labor.

"(f) The term 'fiscal year' means a year beginning on the 1st day of July and ending on the 30th day of the June following.

"SEC. 2. No person shall engage in or carry on any business in the District of Columbia after 60 days from the approval of this act and until July 1, 1938, without first having obtained a license so to do from the Commissioners, except that no license shall be required of any person selling newspapers, magazines, or periodicals, whose sales are not made from a fixed location and which sales do not exceed the annual sum of $2,000. All licenses issued under this title shall expire on June 30, 1938, and no license may be transferred to any other person.

"All licenses granted under this title must be conspicuously posted on the premises of the licensee and said license shall be accessible at all times for inspection by the police or other officers duly authorized to make such inspection. Licensees having no located place of business shall exhibit their licenses when requested to do so by any of the officers above named.

"Licenses shall be good only for the location designated thereon, except in the case of licenses issued hereunder for businesses which in their nature are carried on at large and not at a fixed place of business, and no license shall be issued for more than one place of business without a payment of a separate fee for each.

"The Commissioners may, after hearing, revoke any license issued hereunder for failure of the licensee to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title or to pay any installment of the tax when due.

"SEC. 3. Each application for license shall be accompanied by a filing fee of $10: Provided, however, That no license fee shall be required of any person if he shall certify under oath that his gross receipts during the year immediately preceding his application, if he was engaged in business during all of such period of time, or his gross receipts as computed in the manner provided in section 5 of this title, if he was engaged in business for less than 1 year immediately preceding his application, was not more than $2,000. Such application shall be upon a form prescribed and furnished by the Commissioners.

"SEC. 4. Every person subject to the tax hereunder shall, within 30 days after the approval of this act, furnish to the assessor, on a form prescribed by the Commissioners, a statement under oath showing the gross receipts of the taxpayer during the preceding calendar year, which said return shall contain such other information as the Commissioners may deem necessary for the proper administration of this title.

"The Commissioners, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return filed hereunder, or for the purpose of making a return where none has been made, are authorized to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return and may summon any person to appear and produce books, records, papers, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath respecting the same, and the Commissioners shall have power to administer oaths to such person or persons. Such summons may be served by any member of the Metropolitan Police Department. If any person having been personally summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey the summons issued as herein provided, then, and in that event, the Commissioners may report that fact to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or one of the justices thereof, and said court or any justice thereof hereby is empowered to compel obedience to such summons to the same extent as witnesses may be compelled to obey the subpenas of that court.

"The Commissioners are authorized and empowered to extend for cause shown the time for filing a return for a period not exceeding 30 days.

"SEC. 5. For the privilege of engaging in business in the District of Columbia, each person so engaged shall pay to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1937–38 a tax equal to two-fifths of 1 per centum of the gross receipts in excess of $2,000 derived from such business for the calendar year 1936: Provided, however, That the tax imposed by this section shall be payable only upon the gross commissions of any person engaged in the business of a broker or agent, and shall not be payable upon the funds of his principal, of which he is a mere conduit.

"If a taxpayer was not engaged in business during the whole of the calendar year 1936 he shall pay the tax imposed by this title measured by his gross receipts during the period of 1 year from the date when he became so engaged; and if such taxpayer shall not have been so engaged for an entire year prior to the approval of this act, then the tax imposed shall be measured by his gross receipts for the period during which he was so engaged, multiplied by a fraction, the numerator of which shall be 365 and the denominator of which shall be the number of days during which he was so engaged.

"If a person liable for the tax during any year or portion of a year for which the tax is computed acquires the assets or franchises of or merges or consolidates his business with the business of any other person or persons, such person liable for the tax shall report, as his gross receipts by which the tax is to be measured, the gross receipts for such year of such other person or persons together with his own gross receipts during such year.

"SEC. 6. National banks and all other incorporated banks and trust companies, street railroad, gas, electric lighting and telephone companies, companies incorporated or otherwise, who guarantee the fidelity of any individual or individuals, such as bonding companies, companies who furnish abstracts of titles, savings banks, and building and loan associations which pay taxes under existing laws of the District of Columbia upon gross receipts or gross earnings, and insurance companies which pay a tax upon premiums shall be exempt from the provisions of this title. Any tax levied by the District of Columbia upon tangible personal property (other than motor vehicles) for the fiscal year 1937–38 and paid by such taxpayer shall be credited upon the tax due under this title.

"SEC. 7. The taxes imposed hereby shall be due 30 days after the approval of this act and may be paid without penalty to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in equal semiannual installments in the months of September and March following. If either of said installments shall not be paid within the month when the same is due, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent and there shall be added and collected to said tax a penalty of 1 per centum per month upon the amount thereof for the period of such delinquency, and said installment with the penalties thereon shall constitute a delinquent tax.

"SEC. 8. If a return required by this title is not filed, or if a return when filed is incorrect or insufficient and the maker fails to file a corrected or sufficient return within 20 days after the same is required by notice from the assessor, the assessor shall determine the amount of tax due from such information as he may be able to obtain, and, if necessary, may estimate the tax on the basis of external indices such as number of employees of the person concerned, rentals paid by him, stock on hand, and other factors. The assessor shall give notice of such determination to the person liable for the tax. Such determination shall finally and irrevocably fix the tax unless the person against whom it is assessed shall within 15 days after the giving of notice of such determination apply to the Board of Equalization and Review of the District for hearing and review, and the burden of proving the incorrectness of the assessor's determination shall be upon the taxpayer. After such hearing said Board shall give notice of its decision to the person liable for the tax. The decision of said Board may be reviewed by application to the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, if the said application be filed within 20 days after said notice: Provided, however, That the amount of any tax sought to be reviewed shall, with interest and penalties thereon, if any, be first deposited with the clerk of said court.

"SEC. 9. Any person failing to file a return or corrected return within the time required by this title shall be subject to a penalty of 10 per centum of the tax due plus 5 per centum of such tax for each month of delay or fraction thereof.

"SEC. 10. Any notice authorized or required under the provisions of this title may be given by mailing the same to the person for whom it is intended by registered mail addressed to such person at the address given in the return filed by him pursuant to the provisions of this title, or if no return has been filed then to his last-known address. The mailing of such notice shall be presumptive evidence of the receipt of the same by the person to whom addressed. Any period of time which must be determined under the provisions of this title by the giving of notice shall commence to run from the date of mailing such notice.

"SEC. 11. The taxes levied hereunder and penalties may be collected by the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in the manner provided by law for the collection of taxes due the District of Columbia on personal property in force at the time of such collection.

"SEC. 12. Any person engaging in or carrying on business without first having obtained a license so to do, or failing or refusing to file a sworn report as required herein, or to comply with any rule or regulation of the Commissioners for the administration and enforcement of the provisions of this title shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 for each and every failure, refusal, or violation, and each and every day that such failure, refusal, or violation continues shall constitute a separate and distinct offense. All prosecutions under this title shall be brought in the police court of the District of Columbia on information by the corporation counsel or his assistant in the name of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 13. The Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department of the United States is authorized and required to supply such information as may be requested by the Commissioners relative to any person subject to the taxes imposed under this title.

"SEC. 14. Except in accordance with proper judicial order or as otherwise provided by law, it shall be unlawful for the Commissioners or any person having an administrative duty under this title to divulge or make known in any manner the receipts or any other information relating to the business of a taxpayer contained in any return required under this title. The persons charged with the custody of such returns shall not be required to produce any of them or evidence of anything contained in them in any action or proceeding in any court, except on behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia, or on behalf of any party to any action or proceeding under the provisions of this title, when the returns or facts shown thereby are directly involved in such action or proceeding, in either of which events the court may require the production of, and may admit in evidence, so much of such returns or of the facts shown thereby, as are pertinent to the action or proceeding and no more. Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the delivery to a taxpayer, or his duly authorized representative, of a certified copy of any return filed in connection with his tax, nor to prohibit the publication of statistics so classified as to prevent the identification of particular returns and the items thereof, or the inspection by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia, or any of his assistants, of the return of any taxpayer who shall bring action to set aside or review the tax based thereon, or against whom an action or proceeding has been instituted for the collection of a tax or penalty. Returns shall be preserved for 3 years and thereafter until the Commissioners order them to be destroyed. Any violation of the provisions of this section shall be subject to the punishment provided by section 12 of this title.

"SEC. 15. This title shall not be deemed to repeal or in any way affect any existing act or regulation under which taxes are now levied."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"TITLE VII—RATE OF TAXATION ON TANGIBLE PROPERTY AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"SECTION 1. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the rate of taxation imposed for the District of Columbia on real and tangible personal property shall not be less than 1.75 per centum on the assessed value of such property.

"(b) The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to extend for not to exceed 60 days the time for payment of any installment of taxes on real property, tangible and intangible personal property, and other taxes, payable in September 1937.

"AUTHORIZATION FOR ADVANCE OF FUNDS

"SEC. 2. Until and including June 30, 1938, the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the provisions of the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 29, 1922, is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary, from time to time, during said fiscal year to meet the general expenses of said District, as authorized by Congress, and such amounts so advanced shall be reimbursed by the said Commissioners to the Treasury out of the taxes and revenue collected for the support of the government of the said District of Columbia.

"SURVEY OF TAX STRUCTURE OF THE DISTRICT

"SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia the sum of $5,000, for the employment of clerical services in connection with a survey and study of the entire tax structure of the District of Columbia to be made under the direction of the Commissioners of said District. Such sum shall be available for expenditure for personal services without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. A report of such survey, with recommendations, shall be made by the Commissioners to Congress not later than January 15, 1938.

"REGULATIONS

"SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 5. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States housing authority, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to the amendment of the committee in the nature of a substitute, striking out lines 11 to 25, on page 38, and in lieu thereof substituting new matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I believe the amendment of the Senator from New York has reference to a diminution in the membership of the board. If that is the amendment now pending, it is my desire to offer an amendment to it. I ask that the clerk may report the pending amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be reported as offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 38, it is proposed to strike out line 11 through and including line 25, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(b) The powers of the Authority shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the board) composed of an administrator and two directors. The administrator and the two directors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance, but for no other cause. One of the three original members of the board shall serve for a term of 1 year, one for a term of 3 years, and one for a term of 5 years, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 5 years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed.

On page 39, line 17, strike out "three" and insert "two."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, Congress has an almost unbroken record in the enactment of legislation of this character with reference to providing for the appointment of bipartisan commissions. I note from a reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York that the President could select all the appointees from one political party. I remember in a number of instances, while the language of the statute called for a bipartisan commission, that the President seemingly took no notice of that requirement and the desire of Congress as indicated in its enactment of the legislation. Nevertheless, I desire to offer at the proper place in the amendment the language which I take from the Social Security Act, and which I shall read, as follows:

Not more than two members of the board shall be members of the same political party.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the Senator from New York, on page 1, line 3, after the word "directors" and the period, it is proposed to insert "Not more than two members of the board shall be members of the same political party", so as to read:

(b) the powers of the Authority shall be vested in a board of directors (hereinafter referred to as the Board) composed of an Administrator and two directors. Not more than two members of the board shall be members of the same political party. The Administrator and the two directors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office but for no other cause. One of the three original members of the board shall serve for a term of 1 year, one for a term of 3 years, and one for a term of 5 years, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 5 years each, except that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed.

On page 39, line 17, strike out "three" and insert "two."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, that question was raised during the hearings, and I have no fault to find with the suggestion. I have no objection to the modification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York modifies his amendment by incorporating in it the language suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. The question is on the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have on the table an amendment, which I desire to call up at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is not an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. The amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee must be acted upon first.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to know whether the pending amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee is one which would strike out lines 19 to 25, on page 42?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I inquire whether section 12 on page 50 has been deleted from the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the clerk that it has been amended, but has not been stricken out.

Mr. AUSTIN. I now offer the amendment which I have lying on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, beginning with line 11, it is proposed to strike out down to and through line 7, on page 43, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 6. (a) The Authority may make such expenditures for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for instruction, for traveling expenses, and for such other facilities and services as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper administration of this act. The Authority shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations and expenses for any of the foregoing purposes shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and the manner in which accounts shall be audited, and vouchers approved by the administrator for such expenditures of the funds of the Authority shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government. All financial transactions of the Authority with respect to (1) the making of loans, contributions, and grants under this act; (2) the use of money borrowed by the Authority and the sale or exchange by it of securities and obligations; (3) the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property either in connection with low-rent housing and slum-clearance demonstration projects or otherwise; (4) the reimbursement of States and political subdivisions thereof for expenses incurred in the acquisition of property to be conveyed to the Authority; and (5) the payments to States and political subdivisions thereof in lieu of taxes, shall be examined by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe, and all claims and demands by the Authority or against it, and all accounts in which the Authority is concerned, either as debtor or creditor, relating to any such financial transactions, shall be settled and adjusted in the General Accounting Office.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the amendment would change section 6 (a) in respect of all the expenditures under the provisions relating to loans, contributions, grants, agreements to reimburse States, payments in lieu of taxes, and use of proceeds or loans, which are more fully described in the amendment. It would change the section by permitting and, indeed, requiring a preaudit of such expenditures by the Comptroller General or the Accounting Office of the United States.

The bill as presented to us does away with the general statute which requires that kind of settlement of accounts before they may be paid, and carries us into the revolutionary proposal which is contained in the reorganization of government plan, of abolishing a preaudit in the expenditure of public money.

Of course, this is a fundamental question. If the change is going to be made, it ought to be made upon consideration of that sole point, a fundamental point of government. It ought not to be hacked away in little attacks here and there in separate pieces of legislation until gradually we shall have whittled or chopped away entirely the auditing process by means of the special statutes. Such an experiment was made under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Under that law a huge sum of easy money was expended in a spendthrift way without any preauditing. The only provision made in the A. A. A. for any examination at all by the Comptroller General was for a subsequent examination, which amounted to nothing except an opportunity to discover whether the agency of government had unlawfully expended the money. No provision was made as to what should be done in the event there were unlawful expenditures; no preventive or remedial measure was provided in the A. A. A. precedent. It is largely because of that precedent and the huge waste of money and careless psychology which has grown up under it that I offer the amendment in order to block and stop similar things being done under this bill, which also involves large sums of money.

We can never hope to recover the position of a thrifty and strong and economically sound government if we continue the practice of allowing agencies to spend public money without any check, any preaudit, and with only the kind of an audit mentioned in this bill. Let me read it.

On page 43, at line 3, we find these very significant words:

Such examination shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the Congress and to the Authority of expenditures in violation of law, together with such recommendations thereon as the Comptroller General deems advisable.

With the horse stolen, what is the use of shutting the barn door? With these huge sums of money, assume—to make it ridiculous—that every dollar is spent in violation of law and is a diversion from the real use to which the Congress appropriates the money, what can Congress do about it? Congress will be dealing with an instrumentality of government. Can it make itself pay back to itself money that it itself has diverted? This is not a case where any remedy whatever could arise out of a recommendation by the Comptroller General to the Congress that, inasmuch as every dollar of the money had been wasted or diverted, the Congress ought to pass legislation to seek a recovery from the United States of such wasteful and extravagant diversions or expenditures.

In this amendment I have not undertaken to require a preaudit of the expenses of administration of the authority; and it will be found on examination that all that part of section 6 (a) between lines 11 and 24 is unchanged, save for the words which specifically show that the kind of vouchers referred to there relate solely to administration expense. That is—

Vouchers approved by the administrator for expenditures of the funds of the Authority shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government—

Only as to the expenditures above mentioned, and they are the administrative expenditures. As to all the huge sums of money which are to be expended by the authority, nothing more is required in the amendment than what has been the law in the United States for a long time. This law was the basis of the creation of an accounting agency which was expected to be free from the influence of any department of government, with a man appointed at the head of it with a long term of office who could not be removed save by the Congress of the United States. Listen to this:

All claims and demands whatever by the Government of the United States or against it, and all accounts whatever in which the Government of the United States is concerned, either as debtor or creditor, shall be settled and adjusted in the General Accounting Office.

That has been the law since June 10, 1921. What justification was there when we changed that method of accounting? It was claimed, and with some justification, that an emergency existed, one of those things called a crisis which would not brook delay. Those who took that position could not wait long enough to have the contracts examined in advance to see whether the use to which the money was to be applied was lawful or unlawful. They could not wait for a preaudit at all. Because of the great emergency and the great crisis, they must remove from the jurisdiction of the Comptroller General any preaudit or control over the expenditure of the people's money.

Now we are reaping what we then sowed. Mr. President, you will soon see a Senator rise on this floor and hear him refer to the acts in which we made this exception as precedents for our doing the same thing now, and doing even worse than we did then, for there is no occasion at all for speeding up the expenditure of this money. There is no emergency at all existing today, in spite of the fact that we have heard it said that there is. Everyone knows that we are moving forward; that we are making progress toward recovery. It may be made slowly, but we are not in a decline. We are not in a depression. Today we do not need to reform and reorganize the Government because of any emergency. We can spend the people's money plenty fast enough under the law as it was adopted in 1921, and there will be a day of reckoning if we continue the emergency method.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Even though the emergency plea were still urged at this moment—and I agree that it would be specious—even if it were, let us remember that this bill runs for 60 years; and, my God, we are not going to have 60 years of emergency, are we?

Mr. AUSTIN. I feel as badly about it as does the Senator from Michigan. If this bill could be terminated at some time, if there could be a peg stuck down where the trial and error that will grow out of its approval could be corrected. I should not feel so badly about it; but the duration of this bill represents an enormous burden upon the taxpayers of the country. I say that when we are handling other people's money—and that is what we are doing—we ought to see to it that our acts are accounted for to the people by a method which will, if possible, protect them from harm. I admit that so long as human beings possess the frailties which are well recognized, we probably cannot avoid some waste, some loss; but we can adhere to the well-understood plan of having all these expenditures settled through the Comptroller General's office before the payment is made, and thus minimize the unlawful use and diversion of the people's money.

I hope no substitute which would break down this audit will be accepted by the Senate. I see such a substitute lying on my desk. I know that up to this morning the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] had not indicated that he would accept my amendment. The amendment is not a partisan move. It is in the interest of the people of the United States. It ought to be accepted without any contest; but, in any event, I appeal to all Senators who are interested in restoring thrift to this Government of ours to support the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am going to offer certain perfecting amendments to section 6 of the committee amendment. The first amendment I offer is exactly the language of some of the statutes we have passed in recent years. It provides that so far as current expenditures for equipment and the like are concerned, there shall be a preaudit before the expenditures may be made; but as to contracts and obligations and business transactions between the board and a municipality, the examination should come after the contract has been entered into, for the purpose of reporting to Congress its exact provisions.

Later in the day I propose to offer an amendment providing that the contracts in which loans are made to municipalities or other public authorities shall not become valid until the President approves them, so that we shall have first the responsibility of the organization itself which enters into the contract after negotiation; and second, a provision that that contract shall not become valid until the President approves it.

Of course, I am not opposed to an audit, and the Accounting Office will audit every expenditure and every contract made by this public authority. I am merely complying with the acts of Congress which have been heretofore passed, some of them by unanimous vote, in which has been provided the method of audit which is provided in my substitute.

I fear, and I am sure those who have studied this subject fear, that the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be, although it is not so intended, of course, to hamstring the board in a way so as to make their work ineffective.

I offer an amendment as a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 42, line 12, after the word "expenditures", to insert a comma and the words "subject to audit in the General Accounting Office", and on page 42, to strike out the sentence beginning on line 18 and all of lines 19 through 25, inclusive, and to insert "Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property, and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be examined by the General."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I seek information from the Senator from New York. Is it intended, by the suggestion as now given in the name of a substitute, or by any other provision of the bill, to take from the jurisdiction of the present Administrator, the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, all power of making contracts, supervising the loans, controlling the accounts, and assuming the responsibility while he is compelled to exercise the authority?

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that that is an entirely different question. This amendment does not deal with the question as to whether or not the Secretary of the Interior shall have supervision over the acts of the board. That is coming up at a later time in an amendment which the majority leader and myself and some others interested are attempting to draft. This amendment does not deal with that subject.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator. Then I shall wait for that amendment to add any other observations I may care to make.

Mr. WAGNER. I also wish to say to the Senator that I have already stated that the contracts made are not to be valid, as provided in another amendment to be proposed, until the President of the United States shall approve them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it seems to me the argument the able Senator from New York makes for his substitute and against the original amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont is chiefly, if not solely, that we did the same thing in the case of our previous emergency establishments when we created them. I think that is begging the question, or, to put it differently, I think that emphasizes the precise reason why the Senator from Vermont is justified in his position. Of course, we had to do things swiftly and in an emergent fashion when we were dealing with emergency instrumentalities. The board proposed to be set up by the pending bill is not an emergency instrumentality, it is not to be temporary. This program will live for 60 years. If we are not going to move out of emergent necessities in 60 years, we are going to fold up anyway. It seems to me utterly unreasonable to suppose that a 60-year program can be built on our emergency formula instead of on the general law. The Senator from Vermont offers the general law. The general law ought to apply in a 60-year program. The Senator from New York offers an emergency formula, which ought not to apply in a 60-year program.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I call attention to the language of the substitute proposed by the Senator from New York, because the language to which I shall advert is the guillotine that has cut off the head of the Comptroller General heretofore, and the language is here for that purpose now. I refer to the provision on page 2, starting in line 2, as follows:

and vouchers approved by the administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be examined by the General.

This is just another effort to revolutionize our Government and to take away from the people a check upon the expenditure of their money which would be effectual. This is the Government against the people, and the people will see it some day, if they do not see it now. This money does not belong to the administration; it is not its money; it is the people's money that is about to be expended, and the people are entitled to an audit. No administration of an authority that can spend billions of dollars of the people's money should go unaudited and have the right to have its own auditor and its own vouchers bind all officers of the Government, except that the transactions of the authority shall be examined by the General Accounting Office. What boy's play that is; how absurd and ridiculous, when an authority represents the United States Government against the people, so far as an opposing interest goes.

I do not think by any fair and well-considered action the Senate could adopt this amendment, because it is nothing more than writing into the bill a reform and reorganization of the Government pro tanto. We have done that to a certain extent heretofore under the claim that it was necessary to do it because of an emergency. There is not any excuse; there is not any justification for it today.

I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. O'MAHONEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say only a few words on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Has the Senator from Kentucky the floor?

Mr. BARKLEY. I was recognized.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to make some comments on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will follow the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish only to say that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has in it the potentiality of holding up all contracts, all loans, all projects, which might be worked out by the Board in its effort to make the proposed law effective. In the enactment of all the emergency laws by which we have made loans to home owners, and farmers, and banks, insurance companies, railroads, and industries, we have never required a preaudit on the part of the General Accounting Office in order that the authority created might be exercised.

There has been no abuse of that authority on the part of any of the lending agencies. There has been no general complaint on the part of the public or on the part of Congress because we did not require the General Accounting Office to audit all the loans and grants and the authority granted to these different agencies, and, because of that, the work which we outlined in the acts has been promptly done; relief has been promptly granted, and without any injustice being done to the Government.

We are embarking on a new field, I grant, in which we are undertaking to deal with the housing problem by the creation of slum-clearance districts and areas under the general jurisdiction and supervision of an authority which we create. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont shall be agreed to, it will bring about a situation which we refused to create in connection with all these other agencies, and will thereby delay activity and delay the coordination between the Federal Government and the local authorities in the carrying out of the purposes of the proposed act. Therefore, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I find a clause in the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, and also in the original bill, and I am wondering whether the Senator from Kentucky, our leader, approves it. It provides that the vouchers approved by the administrator for such expenditures of the funds of the authority shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government. How far is an audit to avail us if the vouchers shall be conclusive upon all officers of the Government, including the General Accounting Office?

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator mean by the original bill, the bill as introduced?

Mr. ADAMS. The language to which I refer appears on page 42 in the committee amendment. It appears on page 2 of the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], in lines 7, 8, and 9.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not necessary to include that language in the amendment of the Senator from Vermont if it is already in the bill. What I am talking about is the requirement of a preaudit by the General Accounting Office before the authority created by the bill may go forward with its work.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator think we ought to make any voucher issued by an administrator final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government, regardless of the facts underlying the issuance of the voucher?

Mr. BARKLEY. I should, of course, yield to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to interpret that language, because the bill under discussion is his bill; but I presume that language means that in a preliminary sense, before the expenditure of the money is made, the vouchers issued by the administrator shall be binding upon the officers of the Government and shall be honored and recognized by those officers. I do not interpret that to mean that there shall not finally be a final audit of the accounts under the authority of the law, just as it is now the custom under the regulations and the law.

Mr. ADAMS. I am making the inquiry. That is why I directed my question to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], because I knew I would get the last word from him.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator has presumed upon his great friendship for me. I should not claim such final authority.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator believe it would be wise to strike out of the bill the language referred to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], so that any expenditure will be subject to whatever is required to be done under the general law applicable to all audits?

Mr. BARKLEY. So far as I am concerned, I should not insist upon the retention of that language; but I defer to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I may say that I have taken this language from the other statutes which we have passed.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Is that language the same language that is contained in the bill authorizing the soil-conservation expenditures? It seems to me the language now under consideration is much stronger than that language.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say that I think that language is contained in similar statutes.

Mr. President, I have no qualms with regard to this language. An impression seems to have been created that there is to be no audit or examination of these contracts. There is to be an audit and examination of these contracts for the purpose of making reports to Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. All that the Senator from New York wants is that the contract shall be subject to the same law that is applicable to loans provided for in similar legislation?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. There will be no difficulty in arriving at language to bring that about.

Mr. WAGNER. Is that not what this language means?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. On page 2, lines 4 and 5, of my amendment, will be found the words—

Obligations and expenses for any of the foregoing purposes.

The word "vouchers" refers to vouchers connected with expenditures and obligations "for the foregoing purposes."

For my part, I should like to accept the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. I think it would be much more sensible to strike out that phrase entirely instead of limiting it as I tried to limit it by my amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator, in his opening remarks upon this amendment, to say that he had taken, if not verbatim, the language contained in the Social Security Act, or, at any rate, the substance of it; and that act, as I understood him, contained the provision that there must be a pre-audit as well as a subsequent audit.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator from Utah must have misunderstood what I said. I did not intend to say that. I took the first part of section 6 (a) contained in this bill, and inserted in it limiting words as follows:

In which its obligations and expenses for any of the foregoing purposes—

So that there would be a limitation upon this absolute power to spend the money. That is, they could expend it as they see fit on their own voucher, and their voucher would be final upon all officers of the Government with respect to those things that are mentioned in the first part, namely:

Administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for instruction, for traveling expenses, and for such other facilities and services as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper administration of this act.

The general law now requires an audit as to all expenditures of major sums. Of course, I should prefer to have an audit provided for in the case of all these expenditures; but I had an idea, which did not prove to be correct, that my amendment would be accepted if I allowed that freedom of expenditure with respect to the administration of the offices. That did not succeed, evidently.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] to the amendment which I am about to ask the Senator from New York to accept as part of his substitute.

During the discussion yesterday, Mr. President, I gave notice, which will be found on page 10489 of the RECORD of yesterday, of my intention to offer an amendment to this section today. The amendment which I propose is to add in line 18, on page 42, at the end of the first sentence, the following proviso:

Provided, That a showing of necessity therefor shall first be made to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress.

The effect of that amendment is to retain in the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate the power to pass upon the detailed expenditures of this authority, as they now have the power to pass upon the expenditures of all other branches of the Government.

The bill as it was originally drafted, which the Senator from New York is now amending, would have given to the housing authority the power to spend its entire appropriation without question by any other official of the Government. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermonth [Mr. AUSTIN], while it would exempt from the provisions of the general law the general administrative expenditures, would require a preaudit of the loans and grants which are made by the housing authority.

Mr. President, it seems to me that exactly the reverse should be the case. I believe that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, if perfected by the suggestion I now make, would be preferable to that offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think the amendment the Senator suggests is very appropriate. I want to do everything possible to be sure that these expenditures are made for proper purposes, and I am quite willing to accept provision for any kind of an examination that may be suggested. I am going to accept the Senator's amendment for that reason. I am sure, however, the Senator will agree with me that a preaudit of all these loans and contracts for loans may tie up the activities of this board.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I quite agree with the Senator; and I am suggesting this amendment now because if it is inserted here it will be in the nature of perfecting the substitute which the Senator is offering for the provision in the committee amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is a very useful amendment. I am quite willing to perfect my substitute accordingly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, Mr. President, may it be understood that the substitute which is now being offered by the Senator from New York includes not only the two provisions printed in his amendment, but the additional suggestion I have made?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). The Senator from New York has perfected his amendment by accepting the amendment to his amendment suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. The Chair may call attention to the parliamentary situation by saying that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] offered an amendment which is a substitute for section 6 of the committee amendment. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has offered a perfecting amendment, which is now modified by the change suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The question is on the perfecting amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]; and after that shall have been disposed of the question will be on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] as a substitute for section 6 of the committee amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WAGNER. If my so-called perfecting amendment should be adopted, then the question would come on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont as perfected?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has offered a substitute for section 6. The Senator from New York has offered a perfecting amendment to section 6, along with the Senator from Wyoming.

So, after section 6 of the committee amendment is perfected, then the vote would come on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont, as the Chair is advised.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry to be so poorly informed as to the rules; but does that mean that there will be anything left to be voted upon after my perfecting amendment is adopted, if it should be adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator's amendment should be accepted, then section 6 of the committee amendment would be perfected, and the vote would then be on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont as a substitute for section 6 of the committee amendment as perfected. The Senate would have a choice, as the Chair is advised, between the committee amendment as perfected and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which also would be subject to amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to state that I have an amendment to section 6 which I wish to offer before a vote is taken on the proposed substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will have to be offered before a vote is taken on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I make a further parliamentary inquiry, because I am not very clear as to the situation? Assume, for the sake of argument, that the perfecting amendment which I have offered to the committee amendment shall be adopted, will it absolutely replace the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, or will there be something additional?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not replace it; it is a perfecting amendment, and all perfecting amendments to section 6 will have to be disposed of before the vote may be taken on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have the floor. I think I understand what the Senator from New York has in mind. May I state that the purpose I have in mind in offering at this time the addition is to aid the Senator from New York in perfecting the amendment, which is section 6 (a), as it appears in the reported bill. If the substitute shall be adopted, it will be for us to vote down the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming has correctly stated the situation, and the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, as modified.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to yield first to the Senator from Rhode Island, who has been trying to ask me a question for the last 5 minutes.

Mr. GERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he considers that his amendment would change the policy of existing law?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not at all. The amendment which I have proposed will preserve the principle of existing law with respect to all expenditures of the housing authority which is to be created. It will require that authority to make a showing before the Bureau of the Budget and a showing to the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate before any expenditures are made; but, added to what the Senator from New York has proposed, it will exempt preaudit in certain instances, such as loans to borrowers and grants.

Mr. GERRY. Does not existing law require preaudits?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It does. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont would exempt from the preaudit all the general expenditures of the housing authority, and I am sure he did not intend it to have that effect.

Mr. GERRY. Does the Senator's amendment exempt preaudits?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It does. So far as my amendment accords with that offered by the Senator from New York, who has greatly improved the section as it came from the committee.

I think I can explain it best by reading the amendment of the Senator from New York. It provides that "such financial transactions of the authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property" shall be exempt from preaudit.

I may say to the Senator that if the housing authority is going to function, in my opinion that exemption should be granted.

Mr. GERRY. What I am trying to ascertain is whether the amendment proposes a change in the general policy that has been pursued heretofore in the case of similar boards?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; it is the same policy which has been followed with respect to certain other boards. It is the policy which was followed in the case of the Farm Tenancy Corporation bill which, when it came before the Senate some days ago, I succeeded in perfecting in much the same way as is proposed by the amendment I have offered to perfect the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question? I should like to understand the Senator's interpretation of the amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he understands his amendment would require a showing before the Bureau of the Budget and the Congress of necessity for the following expenditures, namely:

> Administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for instruction, for traveling expenses, and for such other facilities and services as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper administration of this act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly. It would require that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, if the Senator will yield further, I ask if he understands that his amendment would apply to the following things:

> (1) The making of loans, contributions, and grants under this act; (2) the use of money borrowed by the Authority and the sale or exchange by it of securities and obligations; (3) the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property either in connection with low-rent housing and slum-clearance demonstration projects or otherwise; (4) the reimbursement of States and political subdivisions thereof for expenses incurred in the acquisition of property to be conveyed to the Authority; and (5) the payments to States and political subdivisions thereof in lieu of taxes.

Does he intend that his amendment shall apply to those matters?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is now reading from his amendment, is he not?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator whether the words he has read are taken from any part of the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; the language contained in clause 1, as found on line 10, page 2, of my amendment, was taken from page 44 of the bill as to loans; from page 45, as to contributions; and from page 48, as to grants.

In the second bracket, beginning with line 12, the words "the use of money borrowed by the authority and the sale or exchange by it of securities and obligations" come from page 63 of the bill; the language in bracket 3 comes from page 54; that in bracket 4 from page 53; that in bracket 5 from page 54.

They all refer to the power to spend money contained in the bill and directly refer to the sum of $750,000,000 and the $26,000,000 in addition and to other sums that may be appropriated or contributed in the many years the proposed law is intended to be operative.

The question is, as to those larger sums of money, those greater expenditures, does the Senator believe that his amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wyoming has expired on the amendment. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then I will take my time on the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would be glad to give my time to the Senator on his amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understood that the Senator from Vermont was speaking in his own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Vermont has all been consumed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not time given on each one of these amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has exhausted his time on his amendment and also on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. But I am inquiring now of the Senator from Wyoming as to his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But, as the Chair understands, the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming has been accepted by the Senator from New York; the Senator from Wyoming has the floor, and the Senator from Vermont has been asking some questions.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Senate no interest in these amendments? Has no Senator a right save the Senator from New York? Can the Senator from New York bar other Senators from discussing this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not at all, but the Senate agreed that beginning today no Senator should speak longer than 10 minutes on the bill and 15 minutes on any amendment. The Senator from Wyoming has spoken for 15 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. On what amendment did I speak?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am speaking on my own amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York is the one pending before the Senate, and the only one pending at this time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will take my time on my own amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has already taken his time on the amendment pending before the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, I will take my time on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. May I speak upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont is not pending. The Senator from Wyoming has 10 minutes on the bill. He has exhausted his time on the pending amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was trying to obtain a little more time. I shall take my time upon the bill. If I cannot talk upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, nor upon my own amendment, I shall take my time upon the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am not——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Vermont is talking in my time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator understand his amendment applies to those matters described in the provisions to which I called attention?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my understanding that it does not apply to those provisions. If the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] will agree with me, I will change the suggestion which I asked him to incorporate in his substitute and which he so graciously did. I shall restate it in this manner:

Provided, That a showing of necessity therefor and of the necessity for all other expenditures shall first be made to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York accept the modification proposed by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WAGNER. What effect would it have upon the amendment?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The only effect would be that before appropriations are made the authority shall make the same character of representations to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress that are required of all other governmental agencies.

Mr. WAGNER. It does not deal with the subject of contracts?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; it does not deal with the subject of loans or contracts.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may the amendment as modified and accepted by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Wyoming be read so we will understand what it is we are voting on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be read.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion first? I suggest to the Senator from New York that in line 6 of his amendment, after the word "examination", he add the words "for postaudit", thus making it clear that these transactions, after they are made, shall be subject to a postaudit.

Mr. WAGNER. That is the intent and I have no objection to adding those words.

Mr. BYRD. In other words, it should provide for a preaudit and a postaudit.

Mr. WAGNER. If there is a preaudit, is a postaudit needed?

Mr. BYRD. A preaudit does not always apply to the completed transaction.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York does not have the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if it is necessary for some one to take the floor in order that Senators may ask questions, I will take the floor myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has exhausted his time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask recognition in my own right in order that Senators may ask questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina to ask the Senator from New York a question.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to ask the Senator from New York whether he has agreed to the modification having reference to a preaudit of all expenditures? I will say to the Senator that the suggestion I made a few moments ago was that that question should be left to the determination of general law. There is an issue in the reorganization discussion at this time as to preaudits and postaudits. I think the provisions of this bill should be applicable as the general law shall provide as hereafter determined, and that we should not at this time in this bill commit the Congress to the preaudit suggested when that is a question to be determined hereafter in the reorganization bill. The pending bill should merely provide that expenditures by the authority shall be subject to whatever audit shall be hereinafter provided as to all other agencies, because there is a controversy about the matter at the present time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator from New York will not agree to the suggested modification about a preaudit. That is the very point I made against the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] a while ago.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment does not provide a preaudit of contracts.

Mr. BARKLEY. We cannot tell as to whether it may require a preaudit.

Mr. WAGNER. Not being an expert on these matters, I submit to the advice of experts. I am informed it would probably complicate the situation somewhat, so I decline to accept the modification proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. KING. I renew my request that the amendment of the Senator from New York, as modified, may be read so we shall know what it is we are to vote on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, of the Senator from New York will be read for the information of Senators.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 42, beginning with line 11, it is proposed to strike out through line 7, page 43, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 6. (a) The Authority may make such general expenditures, subject to audit in the General Accounting Office, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for instruction, for traveling expenses and for such other facilities and services as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper administration of this act: Provided, That a showing of necessity therefor and of necessity for all other expenditures shall first be made to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress. Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property, and vouchers approved by the administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be examined by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe. Such examination shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the Congress and to the Authority of expenditures in violation of law, together with such recommendations thereon as the Comptroller General deems advisable.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that does not include the modification offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has offered an amendment, which is now the pending question. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the Senator from New York, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment of the committee on page 42, lines 11 and 12, after the word "expenditures", it is proposed to insert "subject to preaudit and postaudit in the General Accounting Office."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot accept that as a modification. It will have to be offered as a separate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to discuss his amendment?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendment would simply carry out exactly what the Senator from New York says the bill means. It would subject all expenditures to a preaudit and a postaudit. I want to make it clear and definite that expenditures shall be subject both to a preaudit and to a postaudit. The Senator from New York has said that is what he wants. So I cannot see why he objects to the amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. That raises another question altogether.

Mr. BYRD. No; it does not raise another question. It makes clear that instead of merely an audit, there shall be a preaudit and a postaudit. If the Senator understands his amendment to include a preaudit and a postaudit, and he has stated to the Senate that it does, I cannot see why he should have any objection to the adoption of my amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. That means that before any money could be expended under the terms of the bill, insofar as the Senator's amendment would affect it, it would have to be preaudited, and then after it had been expended it would have to be postaudited to see whether it had been spent in accordance with the preaudit.

Mr. BYRD. That is the present law, which applies to all expenditures of the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate is not quite accurate in saying it is the present law. So far as I am concerned, there is no objection to making the expenditure of the fund provided by the bill subject to the general law in effect; but under the Senator's proposal it would be mandatory that there should be a preaudit of every expenditure before it could be made, and then it would be subject to a postaudit after the expenditure had been made.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I know that the Senator from Virginia has very strong views on this particular subject; but I desire to ask the Senator whether he would not be willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky that the audit required of vouchers under this appropriation shall be in accordance with the general law, and not specify a preaudit, when the question of preaudit and postaudit is one as to which there is such controversy at this time?

Mr. BYRD. In reply to the Senator from South Carolina I will say that the amendment of the Senator from New York does not provide that the auditing shall be done in accordance with the general law.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask the Senator whether it would not be satisfactory to him if it were provided that the auditing should be in accordance with the general law. Then if the law provides for a preaudit it will be all right, and if it does not the matter will be settled, and we shall not have that controversy at this time.

Mr. BYRD. I should be willing to modify my amendment to provide that the vouchers shall be subject to audit in accordance with the general law.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is all right.

Mr. BYRNES. I think that is the best way to solve this problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York accepts the modification of the Senator from Virginia. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York as modified by the language suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Virgina [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have offered another amendment on page 2, line 6, which provides that the transactions shall be examined and postaudited.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I inquire whether the amendment of the Senator from Virginia was offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Virginia had offered an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York; that the Senator from Virginia then modified his amendment, and that his modified amendment was accepted by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. The modified amendment being simply that the audit shall be according to the general law?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Then, Mr. President, I offer another amendment on page 2, line 6, adding the words "for postaudit", so that it shall read "shall be examined for postaudit." Will the Senator from New York accept that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question in that connection. If the auditing is to be done under the general law, is there any need for that language? The audit would include that anyway.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from New York says "shall be examined." Frankly, I do not know what the word "examined" means; and I desire to give to the Comptroller General power to examine and postaudit the loans and grants.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had reference to the language already agreed to, suggested by the Senator from Virginia, about auditing the accounts under the general law. Does not that cover the point?

Mr. BYRD. But that applies only to the expenditures, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky. I am now referring to the loans and grants. If the Senator will examine the language on page 2——

Mr. BARKLEY. I have examined it. I will say to the Senator that I propose to offer an amendment at another place in the bill covering all the loans and grants, and contracts for them, providing that they must be approved by the President before they shall be executed.

Mr. BYRD. All I am asking is that after the word "examined", which may not necessarily mean an audit, the words "for postaudit" be inserted. The Senator from New York has said that that is the intent of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I suggest that in place of the word "examined", if the Senator desires, the word "audited" be inserted.

Mr. BYRD. That will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that modification is accepted by the Senator from New York, the question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York, as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee.

The modified amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] to section 6 of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may we have the present status of this section read? I may wish to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the section as amended.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. As amended, the section now reads as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. On what page?

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Page 42. [Reading:]

SEC. 6 (a). The Authority may make such expenditures, subject to audit under the general law, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for instruction, for traveling expenses, and for such other facilities and services as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper administration of this act: Provided, That a showing of necessity therefor, and of necessity for all other expenditures, shall first be made to the Bureau of the Budget and to the Congress. Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property, and vouchers approved by the administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be audited by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that as the objective which he has been seeking has largely been accomplished by the amendments adopted, it might be fitting for the Senator to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, under the circumstances I think it is expedient for me to withdraw the amendment I have offered, if I may be permitted to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the right to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 60, line 8, after the word "involved", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That any such contract for a loan, annual contribution, capital grant, sale, lease, or mortgage shall contain a condition requiring the maintenance of adequate playground facilities in connection with the housing project involved.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I wish to make only a brief comment on this amendment. I am very sure it requires no comment, but it is a matter which has long had my interest.

Senators will notice that on these exhibits "Before and After" of the alley dwelling authorities, after the alleys have all been taken away we are shown a beautiful space, filled with automobiles. We are not shown what happened to the children who played in those alleys. We are not shown where they went. We are not told that they are now surrounded on all sides by automobiles.

This amendment should appeal to those of us who come from districts where there are slums, and who see children, as I see them in my own city, coming out of teeming tenements—little white-faced kids whose only knowledge of a rushing brook is the water-filled gutter after the rain, whose only knowledge of a green field is a cemetery to which they have followed some little white coffin whose inmate has been crushed to death by an automobile. Take up the Washington Post, and there is a headline and a picture of a handsome little 4-year-old boy who, the newspaper tells us, was killed by a bus while playing in the streets. In my own newspaper published in Hudson County, N. J., the Hudson Dispatch, there is another, a little girl, 4 years old, killed while playing in the street.

Mr. President, my amendment provides that play spaces shall be provided. In my own State since 1913, 38,526 minors have been permanently maimed by automobiles. During the past 4 years 1,100 children have been killed on the streets of my State; and yet my State has been praised for reducing the number of accidents. In New York 582 children were killed in the one year, 1935.

What does a playground cost? Here is the catalog of one of the large playground equipment manufacturers. For $500 a park playground outfit can be obtained. Add $2,500 for a 500-unit slum clearance, and you have a playground that will take care of 1,500 children. I know I do not have to convince Senators as to the importance of this amendment. I simply ask the Senate, in the name of the children of the United States, to give them a place in which to play and consider them in connection with the question of housing.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I believe this is a very creditable amendment and one which I heartily endorse. I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF AMERICAN TROOPS FROM CHINA

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beseech the Senate to allow me for a moment to divert the subject. The morning newspapers bring us intelligence that certain Americans in China have been greatly imperiled. I see the prospect of danger ahead of us and take the liberty to bring to the attention of the Senate a matter which I feel should be promptly acted upon.

We cannot be unmindful of the fact that a few days ago French troops advanced and, through some error or by some form of collision, became involved with the troops of the Orient, and some of the French officers and their men were killed. We find that American women stepped out from their homes in Peiping and, out of a spirit, perchance, of humanity—we hope not curiosity—wandered behind the bags that were serving as a fortress or buttress, and risked themselves in a manner wherein they would have been killed but for the very sudden and efficient action of the watchers near by.

Mr. President, so long as the United States continues to maintain a regiment of soldiers at Peiping and at Tientsin the prospect of collision between those soldiers of America and the soldiers of Japan is very evident. A clash may occur, which may result in some of our soldiers being killed and some of our citizens being greatly injured, and thus a controversy in some form may ensue between our country and Japan. Inquiry might be made as to who was to blame, and, if the blame happened to rest on us, then demand would be made for the payment of a proper penalty to Japan.

I respectfully urge upon this honorable body that the time has come when our Government should withdraw that regiment from China and bring it home or direct it to some place where necessity justifies, in order that it may no longer remain in a position where it may cause the friction and the conflict.

Mr. President, when the Boxer Rebellion broke out some years ago, and after there had been an adjudication, or adjustment, by which some sum of money was allowed the United States as a penalty, which afterward, through our generosity, was returned to China for educational purposes there, we still continued to maintain an army of occupation in China, upon the theory that from Peiping to Tientsin, which is like going from here to Baltimore, there should be a thoroughfare and there should be an army behind it to support that avenue in the event of obstruction. But now a new China has developed; it is not the same China or the same government. Again, with aerial navigation, and the railroad which has been built, the reasons for maintaining those troops in China, as in the past, no longer exists.

It may be that the State Department has conceived that the old treaty still prevails. It is evident to us all that the arrangement, as there never was a treaty, by which we kept those soldiers there, has ceased to have a reason. So I respectfully urge that the duty of the United States is now to do as it did in Mexico, and has lately done in Spain, advise American citizens to leave, and aid them, wherever it can, to leave with security, but not to leave ourselves in such a position that at any time there may come an embroilment and confusion that could lead us into a conflict more serious than any other, barring war.

For these reasons I take the liberty of bringing the situation to the attention of this honorable body, and I say now that at the appropriate moment I shall offer a resolution embodying my views as thus outlined, and ask the expression of the Senate. For the present I will not occupy further time, but will yield to the Senator from Kentucky, who wishes to offer an amendment touching the measure now before the Senate.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provisions of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 43, at the end of line 19, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That no expenditure, grant or loan, or contract for the expenditure, grant, or loan of funds under this act shall be undertaken by the Authority except with the approval of the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have discussed the amendment with the Senator from New York, the author of the bill. I will say, in a word, that the object of the amendment is to allow the President to have some check upon contracts for the expenditure of money and the making of loans and grants under the proposed act. The bill authorizes obligations on the part of the Government to the extent of $700,000,000 or more but does not provide that the President shall sit in or be consulted or have any jurisdiction over the entering into of the contracts. Therefore, I think the amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Kentucky. I think the amendment is in every way admirable. It would assure a responsible check upon the expenditures and the grant of loans by the board. I think it is a very excellent amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am sure that the able chairman of the committee will not disagree with the motion I am about to make. I move to strike out section 12, beginning on page 50, relating to demonstration projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out section 12, beginning in line 13, page 50, as follows:

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 12. (a) The Authority may develop and administer low-rent-housing and slum-clearance demonstration projects in order to demonstrate to localities the benefits to be derived therefrom. No such projects shall be commenced in any locality without the consent of a governing body having jurisdiction over such locality: Provided, That not more than one demonstration project shall be commenced hereafter in any one locality and that the total estimated development cost of all such projects commenced in any one fiscal year shall not exceed $25,000,000.

(b) As soon as practicable the Authority shall sell its demonstration projects or divest itself of their management through leases.

(c) The Authority may sell a low-rent housing demonstration project only to a public housing agency. Any such sale shall be for a consideration, in whatever form may be satisfactory to the Authority, equal at least to the amount which the Authority determines to be the fair value of the project for housing purposes, less such allowance for depreciation as the Authority shall fix. Such project shall then become eligible for loans pursuant to section 9, and either annual contributions pursuant to section 10 or a capital grant pursuant to section 11. Any obligation of the purchaser accepted by the Authority as part of the consideration for the sale of such project shall be deemed a loan pursuant to section 9.

(d) The Authority may lease any low-rent-housing demonstration project, in whole or in part, to a public housing agency or a consumers' housing society: Provided, That the tenant eligibility for a project leased to a consumers' housing society shall not be limited to the members of such society. The lessee of any project, pursuant to this paragraph, shall assume and pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, and shall pay to the Authority such annual sums as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project. The provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., Supp. VIII, title 40, sec. 303 (b)), shall not apply to any lease pursuant to this act.

(e) In the administartion of any low-rent-housing demonstration project pending sale or lease, the Authority shall fix the rentals at the amounts necessary to pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, plus such additional amounts as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desire to understand clearly the amendment. It merely strikes from the bill the authority of the Federal housing board to build demonstration projects?

Mr. KING. Exactly. As a part of my remarks, in connection with this amendment, I offer a statement by Secretary Ickes respecting the matter, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

V. DECENTRALIZATION OF THE HOUSING PROGRAM

I believe that the construction and operation of housing projects can be carried on most effectively by State and local public agencies and that the Federal Government should encourage the decentralization of the housing program. The authorization of a purely non-Federal housing program would make it necessary for States and local public agencies to assume their share of the responsibility in the solution of the housing problem.

I therefore recommend the omission of section 12, which provides for construction by the Federal Government of so-called demonstration projects. I am convinced that the program will be more successful if it is undertaken solely on a non-Federal basis, except for Federal financial and technical assistance. Projects undertaken by local housing authorities will, in my opinion, be given much greater local cooperation and financial assistance because of the local responsibility for the success of the projects and for the establishment of low rentals. I have already referred to the enactment of housing legislation in 27 States and to the pendency of similar legislation in other States. A Federal program consisting solely of loans and grants to State public agencies would stimulate the passage of such legislation in the States where it is needed and would also stimulate the creation of local housing authorities.

With respect to the low-rent housing projects heretofore undertaken by the Federal Government, the bill properly provides that these should be completed and disposed of, as soon as practicable, by sale or lease to local public housing agencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am about to send a proposed amendment to the desk, but before sending it forward, I should like to ask the Senator from New York what he would consider the maximum rent per room per month that could be paid by those of the lowest incomes?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, that is a very difficult question to answer, because it depends entirely on what section of the country is involved.

Mr. TYDINGS. In New York, for example, where the highest rent would be paid?

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot say.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would it be $5 per month per room?

Mr. WAGNER. The lowest income group may not be able to pay $5 a month, or they may be. It is a matter as to which we will really have to trust the board, to some extent, to determine a rent which the low-income group may be able to pay and live in decent quarters.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before offering my amendment, I shall read it, and I should like to have the attention of Senators, because I believe the amendment has some merit. The amendment deals with the rent subsidy provision and provides:

Provided, That the Authority shall make no loan until it is demonstrated that the revenue to be derived from rent of the building at not more than $5 per month per room shall be exclusive of interest on the loan equal to a net return of 3 percent of the estimated total cost of said building including demolition of slum building, development, construction, and other costs incidental to the capital outlay.

Mr. President, I will state the philosophy of the amendment. The Government is going to lend $700,000,000 at around 3-percent interest. It is going to guarantee the repayment of the bonds issued, and I do not feel that the board ought to make loans and guarantee loans unless it can be reasonably demonstrated that the rent at not more than $5 per month per room will furnish sufficient net income, exclusive of interest on the loan, to equal 3 percent of the capital outlay. If the project cannot earn the interest on the loan which the Government is making, then the loan ought not to be made. Certainly it ought to be demonstrated before the loan is made that the project can earn at least sufficient to pay the interest on the loan which the Government has guaranteed.

If this amendment should be adopted and be inserted at the end of section 10, it is my intention to offer it for insertion at the end of section 11, which sections provide the two ways in which the Government may subsidize rents.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, would the Senator's amendment spell profit to the Government?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. McCARRAN. If it would, naturally we would be opposed to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me answer a little more in detail. The bill assumes that the Government will borrow money at 3 percent or less. Therefore I have made the requirement that the net revenue from rentals, exclusive of interest on the loan, shall be 3 percent as a condition to making the loan. Three percent would barely furnish enough to pay the interest, without any provision whatsoever for a sinking fund.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I have no desire to interrupt him, but I do have a desire to express myself to the effect that what is proposed should not be considered a profit-making project; and, furthermore, my idea is that this is a Nation-making project.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is right.

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, we can best go forward by taking care of the lowly and the humble, those who have no ability to take care of themselves. I think the Government can well afford to subsidize to a large extent this project, because by doing so we shall build a nation from the standpoint of building for those who are unable to build for themselves. That is my view, and that is the reason why I asked the question of the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate what the Senator has said; but, as I understand the amendment, it would not, even if its provisions were administered in the best of faith, effect the objectives to which the Senator addresses himself, and to which the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has addressed himself, or to which he will address himself.

What does the amendment provide? It provides only that the board, when acting upon a request for a loan, shall have it reasonably demonstrated, first, that when the building is completed and its total cost ascertained or estimated, sufficient revenue shall be derived, by charging not more than $5 per month per room, at least to pay the interest on the loan, without any provision being made for a sinking fund.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator give an illustration? Let us say that the local authority has applied for a $10,000,000 loan, and has submitted its plan for building houses.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will use that as an illustration. I will consider the city of Baltimore, and make the illustration apply to that case. The city has men who are capable of making a survey of the area to be cleared. It has men capable of designing buildings, with a courtyard or a park, or whatever plan may be adopted. Finally the plans are complete for the demolition of the old building and the construction of the new building, either on the same site or at some other place, so that when the plan is completed the administrator in Washington has it before him. If I could do so, I should provide that as part of the operation of making the loan the lowest possible bid for doing the work should accompany the application. The city should advertise for bids, and the lowest bidder should be selected, and the low bid should accompany the application filed with the board. The board should know for what amount the contractor would agree to do the completed job.

Mr. WALSH. The local board does all this. It submits the estimates.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment. I am talking about borrowing the money from the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH. Under the bill, all that the Federal board does is to look over the plan, look over the bids, look over the estimates, and say, "Here is your loan."

Mr. TYDINGS. Exactly. In other words, the Federal Government is not concerned one iota as to whether or not it is going to have returned to it even the interest on $700,000,000 of the money of the people of the country which is handed over to the local boards. I say, if we are going to give $700,000,000 to these local boards, let us give it to them; but if we are going to lend it to them, let us lend it to them under such conditions that at least we shall know we are going to get back the interest on the loans.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator. I am very much in accord with the Senator's views in many respects. I regard this proposal as a national project. I do not regard it really as a loan. I think this a nation-building project. I think public moneys are going to be expended in this building project for building the Nation from the ground up. When we speak of interest I think we are speaking in harsh terms, because I do not believe that the Government eventually will get any interest from these loans. If it gets its principal back, it will be very much more than I expect, and I think more than the Congress of the United States can expect. So, for that reason, I think perhaps the Senator's amendment may be just a little harsh.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator to say that if the Senator fully understood what I have in mind I believe he would consider my view a tenable one.

I wish the Senator to understand that I have not provided in the amendment that there must be sufficient funds for interest and sinking fund. I have not provided in the amendment that the loan must be repaid. I present it only to keep out propositions which are not economically sound, even from a slum-clearance standpoint.

Mr. McCARRAN. With that I am entirely in accord.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe the Senator is.

Mr. McCARRAN. Because I believe the Senator's mind is running along with mine, that it should not be subject to——

Mr. TYDINGS. Grab-bag stuff.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. I would use the term "grab-bag stuff" advisedly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me have the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] with respect to a practical proposition.

Here is $700,000,000 for slum-clearance projects all over the country. The minute it is assumed that the Federal Government is simply going to lend for the objective, without any idea as to whether or not eventually there will be houses built, for which we will furnish loans to the lowest income group, without any idea that the Federal Government is seeking any check on the cost, the net result will be an urge for every municipality to come down to the Federal authority and take home all the money it can get, and build these projects, because no provision is made in the loan for the liquidation of the loan or for the payment of the interest on the loan.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator give an illustration of what, under his plan, may be done with a loan of $10,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Maryland say there is no provision for repayment?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will allow me to finish, I think I can maintain that statement and not contradict what the Senator has in mind.

Of course, it is supposed that the loans will be paid. If it is supposed that the loans will be paid, why, then, complain against a condition precedent to the contract which, at least, will provide that sufficient revenue shall be furnished to pay the interest? All I am asking is that when the plans are submitted to the Federal authority, the estimated revenue shall be at least 3 percent of the estimated cost of the finished project, interest excluded. In other words, if the estimated revenue at $5 per month per room is not sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds issued for the 80 percent advanced by the Government, then I say the proposition probably ought to be reexamined in the light of good business administration.

There is nothing in the amendment that would destroy the operation of the Senator's philosophy. What I am trying to do is to throw sufficient safeguards around the measure so that it will stand up in the light of public scrutiny as being a humane measure, to meet a condition where money is not the prime consideration, but where money is considered, insofar as it can reasonably be considered, in the interest of good administration, and so that the program will have sound public support in the long run.

Now, let me consider the illustration that the Senator from Massachusetts asked me to use.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, does the Senator realize that the bill presupposes that no loan will yield in rentals, without a subsidy, sufficient money to meet the capital and interest obligations on the loan?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator realizes that the amendment does not ask for any capital amortization fund whatsoever. I am dealing with the project before it is built. I am dealing with the application that comes before the board. I am trying to compel the board to cause the local authority to see to it that the Federal money will go as far as possible in order to meet the needs of the situation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, how can that be done when the whole theory of this bill is—and it would not be here otherwise—that we shall provide capital because local authorities cannot build housing profitably, nor can they do it without a subsidy or grant from the Federal Government?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not questioning that at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the Senator's amendment comes to this—and it is with that in mind that I would support the Senator's amendment—that this program shall not be made the subject of a promotion scheme.

Mr. TYDINGS. Nor shall projects be initiated by town criers.

Mr. McCARRAN. Nor shall such things be started by town criers.

Mr. TYDINGS. This proposition does not touch slum-clearance and buildings. It is preliminary. When an application comes in to the central authority, it is accompanied by such data that the central authority may know whether or not, for the amount of money which it is asked to advance as necessary to complete the project, there is a probability that the revenues derived from the rents on a low-rental basis will at least pay the interest on the loan and nothing more. That is all.

Mr. WALSH. So the Senator's proposition is that the United States housing authority, before taking favorable action on an application from a local authority, must be assured that the rental will meet the requirement of 3-percent interest on the capital loan?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is all. It does not provide $1 for a sinking fund. It simply provides the minimum, as to whether or not the project can at least pay the interest when the building is new, when there is a great demand for its rooms, and when, as shall be provided, the rooms will rent for not more than $5 per month per room.

Mr. WALSH. That is another condition.

Mr. TYDINGS. It may be that it ought to be $6 or $4.

Mr. WALSH. The rent must not be more than $5 per room for the total number of rooms rented, and the income from those rooms must indicate a 3-percent return on the investment?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. I think I now understand the Senator's proposition.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am trying to understand the amendment of the Senator from Maryland. Is he proposing, when the loan is made——

Mr. TYDINGS. Before the loan is made.

Mr. WAGNER. Or before the loan is made, as a condition precedent to making the loan, that the local authority which constructs the building must give assurance that there will be at least a 3-percent return upon the money loaned?

Mr. TYDINGS. Exclusive of interest.

Mr. WAGNER. Three percent exclusive of interest? Does the Senator mean 3 percent upon the principal.

Mr. TYDINGS. Three percent exclusive of interest.

Mr. WAGNER. Then the Senator means upon the principal loan?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. Upon that basis it would mean that the rent charged would have to be high enough without any subsidy to bring a return of at least 3 percent. Am I correct about that?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; the Senator is not correct, because we do not lend the full amount of the cost of the project; we only lend a percentage of it, do we not?

Mr. WAGNER. A hundred percent on the cost of the project may be borrowed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, may I develop my illustration to see if I can make a little clearer what I understand to be the Senator's plan?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. The local authority asks for $1,000,000. The interest at 3 percent on that amount is $30,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. It must be shown that the houses are going to be rented for approximately $5 a room.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not more than that.

Mr. WALSH. Not more than that. So that they must present a project comprising approximately 600 rooms. For 600 rooms at $5 a room the rental would be $3,000 a month, which would be approximately 3 percent on $1,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is not quite it, but the Senator is "getting warm."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maryland on his amendment has expired.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes on the bill, and may proceed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me start out with the application under this amendment and trace it all the way through. The city of Boston wants to engage in a slum-clearance campaign. The cost of demolishing the slums and building the new slum-clearance buildings will be $1,000,000. Before the authorities of Boston come to Washington they have the plans all completed for demolishing the old slums and plans are all completed for erecting the new building.

Before the application is filed with the central authority bids are asked covering the cost of demolishing the old buildings and the erection of the new ones. The lowest possible bidder is tentatively awarded the contract, which, for the purpose of my illustration, we will assume is for a million dollars. Appended to the application to borrow a million dollars are the bids showing what the work can be done for in accordance with the plans and specifications, which likewise come with the application. The local authority looks it over and at not more than $5 a room estimates what the gross income would be if all the rooms were rented. Then it estimates what the operating expenses, repairs, and what not, would be and subtracts that from the gross income. The only thing that is not subtracted is the interest on the loan. When those expenses are taken from the gross income, that leaves a net income, except that the interest on the loan is not a part of the gross expense. If the amount of money remaining equals 3 percent of a million dollars, or $30,000, to be exact, then the proposition comes within the limit. If, on the contrary, it equals only 1 percent of the amount they ask for, it stands to reason that they cannot construct a building and give low rents and pay even the interest on the million dollars which they are borrowing from the Federal Government. Do I make myself plain?

Mr. WALSH. I think I now understand the Senator's proposal.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from New York understand me now?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not quite understand the proposal as yet.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator was not listening.

Mr. WAGNER. I was listening.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know it was not the fault of the Senator from New York, because he was answering questions.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator turned his back on me, but I listened as best I could. I know he cannot talk to everyone at the same time. Let me see if I understand it clearly now.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will ask the Senator not to be long, because my time is limited.

Mr. WAGNER. I have some time left, and the Senator can use that.

The Senator takes the cost of the whole project, which may include the loan from the Federal Government. The local authority may make, say, a 30- or 40- or 50-percent contribution toward the construction of the project. Nevertheless, although the Federal Government may only have loaned 50 percent of the cost of the project——

Mr. TYDINGS. I see the Senator's point, and I will be glad to modify the amendment and make it 3 percent on the amount the Federal loan is contributing toward the project.

Mr. WAGNER. That would be an improvement.

Mr. TYDINGS. This amendment probably, in the light of further study, might need additional modification, although, for the time being, I do not see that it does, but I do not want to be captious about it. Will not the Senator accept the amendment in the spirit in which I tender it?

Mr. WAGNER. Not in the form in which it is now.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will make the correction the Senator suggests, and will he not then accept it and take it to conference? All I ask is that reasonable safeguards be thrown around the money which is loaned, so that there will be a reasonable expectancy that at least the interest will be returned. It seems to me that is a fair request.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to have anything put into this measure which I think is not in accordance with its objective, but at the same time I wish to be generous. I think I have been generous during the last 3 days in accepting amendments, particularly as to the financial features of the bill.

There is a provision, however, I may say to the Senator, on page 45 which reads:

> Such loans shall bear interest at such rate, not less than the going Federal rate at the time the loan is made——

Mr. TYDINGS. I am familiar with that.

Mr. WAGNER. And—

> be secured in such manner, and be repaid within such period, not exceeding 60 years, as may be deemed advisable by the authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is just what I want to point out to the Senator. Here we are requiring that these loans be secured and be repaid with interest. All I am trying to do is to make sure that the board which will make the loans will appreciate the fact that that particular provision means approximately what it says, and that the board will carefully go over the plans and specifications and costs and the intended revenue and what not, and at least make certain that there will be enough in the project to pay the interest.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think what the Senator from Maryland really wants is that the board which is to lend the money shall appreciate the fact they are dealing with Federal money and that Federal money cannot be frittered away.

Mr. TYDINGS. That we are not willing to give away money, but we want to know that it is being handled with all reasonable care.

Mr. McCARRAN. And we want those who are deserving to have the benefit of the money which is to be expended.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from New York himself has properly said that this is only the beginning of what he hopes will be a continuing plan. I wish to point out to the Senator that there is no better way to get public approval for this plan, public support for it, than to have it reasonably safeguarded at the beginning when it is in an experimental stage; and if such safeguards as I have suggested were thrown around it, I predict that, in the long run, it would aid the project rather than bring it into disrepute.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to study the amendment for a moment, Mr. President. The Senator, as I understand, has agreed to limit it to loans made by the Government. I want to be sure, however, that it does not in any way interfere with the provision giving subsidies. What I have in mind is that we all agree that the low-income groups should not be made to pay more than they can afford to pay.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the reason I put in the words "not more than $5 per room per month." Perhaps it should be $6, or perhaps it should be more. I took the figure suggested by the Senator, so that I would give the Senator "a break", not only because of the idea of revenue, but it would be more likely that the building would be self-sustaining.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator does not mean, of course, to say that the building shall earn 3 percent exclusive of the subsidy which is given?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not. What I am trying to do is to get the board before it lends the money to know what is doing; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland, I think, has agreed temporarily to withdraw the amendment, so that it may be given further study.

Mr. TYDINGS. I temporarily withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland temporarily withdraws his amendment. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few moments ago I offered an amendment which was agreed to on page 55, section 15, line 22. The following words ought to be eliminated because they are superfluous in view of the elimination of section 12. The words I move to strike out are "or in undertaking any demonstration project pursuant to section 12."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, in section 15, page 55, lines 22 and 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "or in undertaking any demonstration project pursuant to section 12."

Mr. WALSH. There is merely a perfecting amendment, in view of the other amendment which has been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, my colleague was concerned as to whether the District of Columbia is included in the bill so as to secure the benefits of it. I invite his attention to page 36, line 23, where it is provided:

> The term "public housing agency" means any State, county, municipality, or other governmental entity or public body.

Turning to page 38, line 1, we find this statement:

> The term "State" includes the States of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Territories, dependencies, and possessions of the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is entirely satisfactory. I want to be sure that this fine work which was explained yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], which has been carried on in the District of Columbia, should not be disturbed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. The District of Columbia authorities informed me that their attorney has advised them that the language in the bill is not sufficient to include the District of Columbia.

Mr. COPELAND. I had the same information.

Mr. WALSH. I have some doubt about it myself, but I see no reason why it should not be harmonized and the language suggested by the Senator substituted for the language of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, since my colleague is so certain, and I think he is doubtless right, that the District of Columbia authority is fully protected, there should be no reason why we should not make assurance doubly sure by adopting the amendment which I have suggested.

Mr. WAGNER. I assure the Senator there can be no doubt about it because we include those who are to be benefited, among others the States of the United States, and then on page 38 we say that "The term 'State' includes the District of Columbia." I am sure that is as clear as it can be made.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that it is.

Mr. WAGNER. I hope the Senator will take my word for it.

Mr. COPELAND. I know that the record now is so perfect that we do not need to be disturbed about what the courts may say, but I have had such an intimate relationship with the alley-clearance project in the District of Columbia from the time that it was first mentioned that I should want to be very certain indeed that it would not be interfered with. I am going to accept the assurance of my colleague.

I want to ask my colleague once more about the advisory committee which I mentioned yesterday, a national housing advisory committee. I want to extend a little bit the argument I made yesterday, and I hope I may induce my colleague to accept an amendment in that regard. As a matter of general policy where broad discretion and large powers are delegated to bureaus and boards, we should establish some orderly way in which they may receive the advice and counsel of a representative group of citizens. This is only a logical working out of the checks and balances theory of the Government. As bureaus and boards become powerful they themselves and the Congress and the public can unquestionably benefit by the receiving, in an orderly way, of the judgment of especially qualified citizens regarding policies, practices, and objectives.

I mentioned yesterday and repeat today that the British Government has a long record of effectively utilizing commissions created by the Parliament, appointed by the respective ministers concerned, and drawing to their membership a variety of eminent personalities from private walks of life. These are not salaried commissions. They are voluntary commissions. They make their reports to the departments of government and sometimes to the Parliament. The example which is familiar to everyone is the famous McMillan Commission, which dealt with financial policies and problems. Several commissions have been used in connection with the development of the British housing policy. In 1935 Parliament arranged with a permanent central housing advisory committee. That is found in the British Housing Act of 1935, part II. This advisory group was selected by the Minister of Health and is representative of the leading interests concerned with housing. It includes such figures as Sir Raymond Unwin, probably the most eminent name in city planning and housing.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I may say that Sir Raymond Unwin has been in this country. He heartily approves such legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I know that. What I am saying, as, of course, my colleague knows, is not any evidence of lack of appreciation of the legislation, because I have in my heart a very urgent desire to have this bill enacted into law. My judgment is that, with all the fine record he has made in the past, my colleague has never done any finer thing than to sponsor the proposal now pending before the Senate.

Sir Raymond Unwin is well known and would naturally support this kind of legislation. Then, too, there is Sir Harold Bellman, head of the Abbey Road Building Society, which has a capital of over $200,000,000.

I am not going to quote at length from the British hearings, although I have them, indicating the importance of these bodies. I shall quote briefly from the British hearings:

> The main reason for appointing an independent board was to protect the Government departments from political pressure by would-be borrowers, and to enable Parliament to enact general laws without authorizing public money to be advanced to borrowers in particular cases where such advances were not obviously justified in the public interest.

It seems to me that if we had such a statutory advisory body it would do much to coordinate the activity and program of the United States Housing Authority and make it properly supplement or complement the work of private enterprise. In the absence of such statutory bodies, the only advice sought by bureaus or boards is largely from their own employees or from persons either in agreement with them or presumptuous enough to present opinions and suggestions. A statutory body, composed of eminent citizens serving without any compensation whatsoever and representative of the various interests concerned, could do a substantial public service and their recommendations would be of interest to Congress.

I call attention again to the fact that when Secretary Ickes appeared before the Committee on Education and Labor he said:

> I believe that the management and control of the affairs of the Authority should be vested in one executive. An advisory board can be created to provide opportunities for the expression of different points of view if it is felt that this would be helpful in shaping the policies of the Authority.

Then Mr. Howard A. Gray, Director of Housing in the Department of the Interior, under Secretary Ickes, at page 16 of the 1937 Senate committee hearings, said:

> With respect to the formulation of policies, an advisory board should be created to provide an opportunity for the expression of different points of view.

There is ample precedent for what I am suggesting. In the original Federal Reserve Act there was included a Federal Reserve Advisory Council, which has functioned right down to the present time. The Federal Home Loan Bank Board's activities are surveyed and assisted by the Federal Savings and Loan Advisory Council, created by Congress in 1935.

In conclusion let me suggest that the establishment of such a council or committee by statute would give to it an importance not felt by simply an appointive committee, and through such a body the interest and support of substantial groups would be encouraged and enlisted for an appropriate public housing program pointed clearly to the underprivileged.

Incidentally, the financial grants made in connection with public housing in Great Britain clear through a body composed of bankers and influential men in London, known as the public works loan commissioners. This is not exactly an advisory group, but has been used in properly protecting the Government in connection with advances or loans to local authorities for housing purposes.

Mr. President, I will now state what I am proposing. I ask the clerk to read the amendment I offered yesterday. It is found near the top of page 8109 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The clerk will read the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 23. There is hereby created a national housing advisory committee which shall consist of 16 members, 8 to be appointed by the Authority, and 8 to be named from organizations designated by the Authority, having due regard to a representation of public housing, mortgage credit, labor, and construction interests upon such advisory council. Each organization shall name its representative and all members of the committee shall serve without compensation, but shall be entitled to reimbursement from the Authority for traveling expenses incurred in attendance at meetings of such committee. The committee shall meet at Washington at least twice a year and oftener if requested by the Authority. The committee may select its own chairman, vice chairman, and secretary, and adopt methods of procedure and shall have power:
> (1) To confer with the Authority and other public officials on any matter which may be referred by the Authority to the committee, dealing with the housing question, public or private, and any matters arising in connection with the execution of laws relating to housing.
> (2) To request information and to make recommendations with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of the Authority and also to consider the operation of enactments relating to housing and make to the Authority such recommendations with respect to these matters as the committee thinks desirable. The recommendations here directed shall be printed as a part of the annual reports to Congress of the Authority.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it will be seen that this committee has no authority beyond simply giving advice. I assume that there will be a housing problem in this country so long as we have human beings, certainly so long as we have cities. There are in the country agencies that are active in building houses, notably the building and loan associations. What they have done through 100 years has meant more to the poor, or to those in humble circumstances, in the way of gaining homes than the work of all other lending bodies in existence. We ought to have the advice of the building and loan associations, of the savings banks, of real-estate boards, of all who have an interest, philanthropic or selfish, in building homes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Did the Senator from New York ever know of a building and loan association which did not exist for mutual gain, for profit? Shall we take the advice of building and loan associations so that mutual gains or profits shall creep into this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no; oh, no! What I have in mind is that there shall be an advisory board to call attention all the time to what private enterprise may be doing, or what church enterprise or philanthropic or racial enterprise may be doing, in the way of providing homes. I would not have any profit creep into this question. I would not have any provision in it that might, directly or indirectly, seek to benefit the others; but I believe there is virtue in the amendment, and I hope my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] will give it consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment has expired.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to draw the attention of both the able junior Senator from New York and the able senior Senator from New York to that which, to my mind, is ever present in this bill—the opportunity for promoting projects for personal or political gain or advantage. If we are going into a great national philanthropic scheme, then I am for it 100 percent; but if we are going into something out of which there may be a direct or indirect personal profit or personal advantage, or advantage to some group, due to the fact that that group may have control over the votes of the lowly and the humble who may be subjected to their will to gain housing in these projects, then I say it is time to pause, time to consider, time to investigate.

I believe both the senior Senator from New York and the junior Senator from New York are interested in the broad expanse of this subject, that which will bring benefit to the needy, the lowly and the humble; but I see an avenue whereby those who, seeing the opportunity, may take advantage of it to promote these schemes, using Federal money for their promotion, using the lowly and the humble as their agency through the medium of their votes to gain advantage, and thus put over a scheme which may have financial gain to some group, though inadvertently so far as the Federal agency is concerned.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator says there may be financial gain to some particular group. It must all be done by public authorities—Federal, State, and local. We shall have to trust them.

Mr. McCARRAN. I know the Senator believes in what he says; but is not that the very thing we should safeguard by our expressions here?

Mr. WAGNER. I think the matter is very well safeguarded by the bill itself, as well as it can be safeguarded.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall be very glad to answer the question of the Senator from New York

Mr. COPELAND. The proposal I have in mind is definitely set out. There are to be 16 members, 8 of them to be appointed directly by the Authority; so at least half of them, 50 percent, are to be appointed by the Authority.

The other eight are to be named from organizations designated by the Authority—perhaps one from the building and loan associations, perhaps one from the savings banks, perhaps one from, we will say, the Baron Hirsh organization in New York, which has done a great deal of work.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not familiar with that organization. I do not know about it.

Mr. COPELAND. And so there are other organizations which are nonprofit making, which are purely philanthropic.

The thought I had in mind was that there might be the possibility, through this committee, of coordinated effort. They might not bring any helpful advice to the authority, but, on the other hand, they might bring very helpful suggestions. Furthermore, the authority could make use of such advisory committee to present various problems. Is it wise for us to go into smaller cities? Is it wise for us to go too much into the rural districts? Is it wise for us to concentrate in the great centers of population? That is what I had in mind.

Take the case of an authority such as this, which is dealing with large financial and business problems. It seems to me they would be glad to have the advice of such a committee. In my own experience as an administrator I brought into existence certain civic bodies, organizations, and advisory committees, and I found them most helpful.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to answer the inquiry of the Senator from New York in two ways.

First of all, if he is going to deal with building and loan associations or with savings associations, each one of those associations has, as a primary object, something for its members or stockholders; and that is out of this question. This is not a problem in which personal gain or Federal gain or community gain should be considered, save and except the advantage that will be given to someone who has no housing, no shelter, so that he may be sheltered. That is the object and aim and purpose of the proposed legislation. But I do see an advantage in the Senator's suggestion that those who have had to deal with this subject through the years might have a fund of valuable information which they could supply to the authority which is to initiate this great project.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the information which they have could be volunteered to the authority without making them officials of the Government. The amendment provides for the creation of a committee of 16, 8 of whom are not to be appointed by any agency of the Government, but are to be selected by a private organization. In addition to the question of whether or not we have any authority under the Constitution to authorize private organizations to appoint officers of the United States, even though they are of an advisory character, and draw money out of the Treasury for their expenses, I myself have serious doubt whether or not building and loan associations and savings banks are sufficiently concerned with slum clearance to be of any value even on an advisory committee.

If they had been very much interested in the matter, they would not have waited until we passed a law making Government money available for that purpose. These organizations are not primarily interested in clearing out unlivable houses and substituting houses that are livable, as the Senator will recognize, and I am afraid that we would be inviting trouble if we should attempt to surround this authority with a board of 16 men, half of them selected by the authority and the other half by private organizations, who would all the time be on the neck of the authority requesting or demanding some action in which they themselves might be interested.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky, the leader of the majority, I should like to say that my view is that what could be gained out of advice—and that is all that could come out of it—could be gained without any legislation, perhaps. The advice might be very valuable, because those from whom it would come would have gone through a long period of experience, and naturally any agency should call upon those who have had the experience for advice. But that advice would always be couched in terms of profit, because those organizations have existed for profit. Had they not existed for profit, they would have gone into these great housing projects without regard to profit, and out of this project with which we are dealing now there should be no profit, not even profit to the extent of interest to the Federal Government. That is about as broad an expression as one could make.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Are any copies of it available? There is none at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that during his absence from the chair the amendment was reported from the desk.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The written copy of it is not available at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is undoubtedly familiar with the fact that a great many amendments are offered from the floor of which written copies are not available.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Am I in order in asking to have it read again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is undoubtedly in order. Without objection, the amendment will be stated again.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before that is done, may I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that the amendment is found printed in the RECORD near the top of page 8109?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, at the appropriate place, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 23. There is hereby created a national housing advisory committee which shall consist of 16 members, 8 to be appointed by the Authority and 8 to be named from organizations designated by the Authority, having due regard to a representation of public-housing, mortgage-credit, labor, and construction interests upon such advisory council. Each organization shall name its representative and all members of the committee shall serve without compensation, but shall be entitled to reimbursement from the Authority for traveling expenses incurred in attendance at meetings of such committee. The committee shall meet at Washington at least twice a year and oftener if requested by the Authority. The committee may select its own chairman, vice chairman, and secretary, and adopt methods of procedure and shall have power:

(1) To confer with the Authority and other public officials on any matter which may be referred by the Authority to the committee, dealing with the housing question, public or private, and any matters arising in connection with the execution of laws relating to housing.

(2) To request information and to make recommendations with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of the Authority and also to consider the operation of enactments relating to housing and make to the Authority such recommendations with respect to these matters as the committee thinks desirable. The recommendations here directed shall be printed as a part of the annual reports to Congress of the Authority.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Would the Senator feel any differently if the amendment were made so broad that all of the members of the proposed committee should be appointed by the authority, omitting the reference to other organizations and the delegation of power to them?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say frankly to the Senator from New York that I believe the pending bill contains every safeguard that is necessary in order to guarantee the interests of the public, and also the interests of those for whom the measure is intended, and I do not believe it is wise to complicate the legislation by setting up a big advisory committee drawn from any source, even though they were all appointed by the authority, or even by the President. I do not see the necessity for it. The information referred to can be obtained, and the experience of men can be drawn upon by the authority, and undoubtedly will be drawn upon; but to complicate the matter by having a large or even a medium-sized committee of this kind acting in a sort of quasi-official capacity I think would confuse and complicate the situation rather than clarify it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The British experience indicated that an authoritative committee of the kind proposed did have a useful function to perform. The very fact that it was statutory gave it a dignity and standing. But from what my leader and my colleagues have said—and my colleague tells me he would prefer not to have the amendment in the bill—I am not sufficiently interested in it to press it, for I do not want to embarrass the authors of the bill. I do not in any way whatever wish to add to the bill any features which might be regarded as embarrassing to those who have worked hard to formulate the measure. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from New York withdraws the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from New York to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes, Mr. President, reluctantly; but I defer to my colleague in the matter.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send two amendments to the desk, and ask to have them stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out all of section 5 (b) after the word "named", on page 41, line 16, and to substitute in lieu of the stricken matter "and shall be represented in all litigated matters by the Attorney General or such attorney or attorneys as he may designate."

It is also proposed to strike out the second sentence of section 13 (a), beginning with the word "In", on page 52, line 15, and ending with the word "title", in line 20, as follows:

> In the acquisition of any land or site the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, shall not apply, but the Authority may avail itself of the services of the Attorney General acting in accord with his powers under such section to procure information relating to the state of title.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to state that these amendments are satisfactory to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make the offer as one amendment, or as two amendments?

Mr. BLACK. They are offered as two amendments. In order that Senators may understand what the object is, I can state it in about half a minute.

The bill, as written, does not give to the Attorney General of the United States control over litigation. The first amendment would leave the control over litigation to the Attorney General instead of leaving the control to attorneys specially appointed by the board.

The second amendment merely puts into effect the general law which now exists, which requires that the Attorney General shall approve all titles to property before a purchase is completed. That is the sole purpose and object of the amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I take advantage of the opportunity to get the floor for a moment.

This morning I received a letter, as perhaps my colleague did, from the real-estate board of New York, and they make two criticisms, or the same criticism in a double way. I quote this statement:

> The bill in its new form makes a gesture in the direction of slum clearance, but contains an exception which would permit construction of any number of projects without the removal of a single slum building.

That is the first criticism. The other is like it.

Mr. WAGNER. Does not the Senator think the questions should be answered one at a time?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say, in answer to my colleague, that the bill is just as clear in its terms as it can be in providing that no project may be undertaken under this legislation unless it involves the clearing of slums and the building of a substantial number of units equal to those that are demolished in the slums. Apparently, those writing the letter have been misinformed.

Mr. COPELAND. I was sure of that, but I wanted to have it a matter of record, because I understood that, on the one hand, the slums that are wiped out are to be replaced by worthy buildings.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. The second criticism is:

> Paragraph 3 declares that new construction must be accompanied by the "elimination" of a substantially equivalent number of slum dwelling units—

As suggested now by my colleague—> but kills the effect of the provision by stating that such elimination may be deferred in case of a shortage.

Mr. WAGNER. That has been eliminated.

Mr. COPELAND. It has been eliminated?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. So our friends in New York have been misinformed?

Mr. WAGNER. Our friends in New York have been misinformed.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], on page 41 of the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on agreeing to the other amendment of the Senator from Alabama on page 52 of the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 60, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

> (6) No contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, lease, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this act shall be entered into by the Authority with respect to any project costing more than $4,000 per family unit or more than $1,000 per room.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the purpose of that amendment is to prevent the extravagance which has occurred in other homestead projects built throughout the country. I asked the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] what he estimated would be the average cost of these family units. He said $4,000, or $1,000 per room. My amendment is presented for the purpose of preventing the expenditure of more than $4,000 per family unit.

Mr. President, I think the Senate will be somewhat interested in hearing something about the extravagance and the waste of public money that has occurred. I make the statement without fear of successful contradiction that in the homestead projects, and especially at Tugwelltown, there has been a willful waste such as has, perhaps, never occurred before in any civilized country. I make that statement advisedly, upon the basis of the investigations I have conducted.

At Tugwelltown, not far from the city of Washington, the sum of $14,239,951 has been spent for the construction of 880 home units, at an average cost of $16,182 each. Those are supposed to be for the low-income group of the country.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, did I correctly understand the Senator to say that the cost was $16,000 a unit?

Mr. BYRD. Sixteen thousand one hundred and eighty-two dollars per family unit. I should like the Senator from Pennsylvania to go out and see what the United States Government has received for the expenditure of this money. He will see poorly constructed buildings, built of cement block. Some of the buildings have porches which are no wider than two or three of these desks.

Mr. President, let me tell the Senate of some few expenditures that have been made in this resettlement project. The sum of $456,000 has been spent at Tugwelltown for landscaping, for the beautification of the grounds. An amount equivalent to $5,000 for each family unit has been spent for landscaping under the inspiration of Dr. Tugwell, who conceived these projects several years ago.

I call attention to the overhead expense—and excessive overhead expense is what I think we should attempt carefully to safeguard against. At Tugwelltown $120,000 has been spent just for surveying the land, and $198,000 has been spent for land preparation, although no farming is done at Tugwelltown. Notwithstanding that fact, the Resettlement Administration purchased 12,000 acres of land for the construction of city dwellings.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in what State was that land purchased?

Mr. BYRD. In the great State of Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. We in Maryland call it Greenbelt, having local pride; and I hope the Senator will not change the name of it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Do the figures of overhead contain any part of the $2,600,000 spent for traveling expenses for the Resettlement Administration and $2,400,000 spent for telephone and telegraph tolls?

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that only a small part of that expenditure is included in these figures.

Let us now see what the overhead expense was for Tugwelltown. I am not including the survey.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate, will the Senator please inform me and others interested under whose administration and by whose direction this money was spent?

Mr. BYRD. This money was spent by the direction of the President of the United States, sir, who visited Tugwelltown not long ago and gave his public approbation to it.

Mr. President, the administrative expenses at Tugwelltown were $531,000. That is, before one dollar was spent on construction, $531,000 was spent for overhead on the grounds. That does not include the overhead in the Washington office. These figures come from the General Accounting Office of the United States Government. They are not the figures from the Resettlement Administration. So long, Mr. President, as the General Accounting Office remains an independent branch of the Government, we may depend upon getting unbiased information as to the financial affairs of the Government; but if the bill now pending in the Congress, with the approval of the President, shall be passed, the General Accounting Office will cease to be an independent branch of our Government, and no longer will Members of Congress be able to go to the financial documents of this country with any assurance that they will obtain truthful and accurate information as to the financial affairs of our country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder if the Senator would mind, in his remarks, describing the average size of the houses which cost $16,000 each?

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that there were different types of houses. Some were four-room houses; some were five-room houses. A great many of them were built jointly in the form of apartment houses. Many are not single houses.

I hope Senators will take a half hour some Saturday afternoon and go out to Tugwelltown; and if they do I think they will then agree with me that never in the history of this country or any other country has there been such a willful and deliberate waste of public money as has occurred there, and as has been duplicated at the other 232 projects that are being built throughout the country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to enter a rival for the high honor the Senator has nominated. I think if he will look at Matanuska, Alaska, where 200 farms of an average of 40 acres apiece have now cost $25,000 a farm, there will be rivalry for the brass washer that the Senator is passing out for the championship.

Mr. BYRD. I am glad to have that information; and the committee of which I am chairman will investigate it.

A spokesman for the administration said a short while ago that this was an experiment, and that all experiments were costly.

Why is it necessary to conduct 232 costly experiments, that being the number of homestead projects now being built? Why, may I ask, is the building of a house an experiment? People have built houses from the beginning of time. That is the only explanation that has been made by those in authority as to this gross waste and extravagance in the spending of public money—saying that it is an experiment, although 232 of these costly experiments are going forward throughout the country today.

I have mentioned the overhead on the property at Tugwelltown. There is another item of overhead, and that is the cost of the overhead here in the city of Washington in the office of the Resettlement Administration; $1,921,000 was spent for overhead here in Washington.

I do not want to take up too much of the time of the Senate in the discussion of these matters, but I desire to refer to another project as reported by the General Accounting Office, and that is the project at Hightstown, N. J. There, $20,163 was spent per home unit; and the overhead expense on that proposition——

Mr. DAVIS. How many rooms are there in one of those units costing $20,000?

Mr. BYRD. The number of rooms varies, I will say in answer to the Senator. I am not exactly familiar with the number of rooms, but the units vary from four to five rooms.

Mr. DAVIS. And the cost is $4,000 a room?

Mr. BYRD. There are from four to five rooms to each family unit. Remember, Senators, that these are not in all cases individual buildings. Sometimes buildings are constructed adjacent to each other, constructed as are apartment houses. The overhead expense at Hightstown was even greater than at Tugwelltown; $947,000 was spent at Hightstown, N. J., on the ground for overhead expense, and in addition to that $522,000 was spent in the city of Washington. In addition to that, $24,000 was spent for management, and $27,000 for inspection. On that project 40 percent was spent for overhead. Forty cents out of every dollar of that appropriation went for the payment of supervisors, of surveyors, of people traveling around the country, which expense did not contribute to laying one brick or placing a single stone.

Then down in my own State, at Newport News, Va., a homestead was built for the occupancy of 200 colored families at an expense of $9,233 per family unit. It is intended, Mr. President, to rent to people in low-income groups houses costing from $9,000 to $16,000 and $20,000, and exact from them a rental based, I assume, on the value and the cost of the construction of the units.

I now desire to tell the Senate what aroused my interest in this proposition. I live in the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia; and last summer I saw homesteads there built for the use of the mountain people. I assumed, of course, that those homesteads were costing about $1,500 to $2,000 apiece. I investigated the matter and found they were costing from seven to eight thousand dollars per unit. They were costing that sum mainly because of the overhead expenses, for foremen, surveyors, supervisors, and endless other employees engaged on the work. Just think of it, Mr. President, $8,000 for the construction of a mountain shack—for that is all it is—not even plastered, not even painted.

I said to Mr. Wallace, "I wish you would investigate this extravagance, because this project is near my home, and I do not care to see the Government's money wasted and squandered under my nose." I said, "Will you be kind enough to investigate it, and, if my charge is correct, not proceed with the construction of those projects that have not as yet been begun?" Mr. Wallace refused to investigate it; he refused to discontinue the construction of such projects, although I, as Senator from Virginia, was willing to assume full responsibility before my constituents for suspending the expenditure of over a million dollars of Federal money in my own State. He refused to do it. So that expenditure is going merrily on. Eight thousand dollars are being expended for the construction of these mountain shacks, which, by the way, will not be occupied by the mountain people, because everyone familiar with the habits and environment of the people from the mountains know they are unwilling to live in close proximity to others. And as yet not one contract has been made for the occupancy of a single one of these 175 houses. When I made the complaint at least one-half of the houses had not been started, and nearly a million dollars could have been salvaged and returned to the United States Government if Mr. Wallace had seen fit to make an investigation, and then if my charge was correct to discontinue the waste of the Government's money.

So, Mr. President, in the Shenandoah Valley these seven homestead projects for the supposed occupancy of mountain people are being built in the form of little villages, although it is contrary to every instinct and every inheritance of these splendid people to live in close proximity to others.

This project will stand as a monument so long as these shacks may last—and they will not last long, because of their flimsy construction—to the gross extravagance and willful waste of public money by the Resettlement Administration.

I am not going to take up more of the time of the Senate but I want to urge the Senate to limit the expenditure of this fund, because, Mr. President, the Government, under this bill, is embarking on a program that is eventually going to cost not $700,000,000, but perhaps many billion dollars.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What the Senator says about Tugwelltown—about which I know nothing, because I have never been there—is interesting, and also as to these other towns or projects. Does the Senator, however, not recognize the difference between the policy affecting the expenditure of money under the Resettlement Administration, where the fund was made available out of the Public Treasury and controlled by officers of the United States Government, and the policy under the provisions of this bill, which places all these building-construction projects under local authorities, the Federal Government merely furnishing money by loans and grants? My understanding is that the cost of the houses and the size of the houses will be under the control of the local housing authorities, set up by the States and the localities, to which loans are to be made by the agency proposed to be created by the bill. So I think the Senator should realize that, although the extravagance, waste, and all that he says about the Resettlement Administration may be true, for the sake of argument, as to which I do not know, it is quite a different proposition that we now have before us. I should like to have the Senator state whether he thinks that a limitation of $4,000 for the whole United States would afford sufficient leeway for the construction of houses worthy of inhabitance by persons in the low-income groups who have never really had a break in life but for whom we are now undertaking to provide some respite. Does the Senator think that a thousand dollars per room, which not only includes the cost of construction of the house itself but also the land and the entire project, is sufficient to guarantee a house worthy of the sponsorship of the United States Government through the agency of local housing authorities referred to in the bill?

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that the Federal Government, as I understand the explanation made by the Senator from New York, guarantees 75 percent of the loans that are to be made.

Mr. TYDINGS. It may provide a hundred percent.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there is no fixed guaranty. The Senator means a guaranty as to what?

Mr. BYRD. As to repayment.

Mr. WAGNER. No. Every dollar that is loaned is to be repaid at the going rate of interest, plus one-half of 1 percent with which to take care of the expense.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator said yesterday, as he will find if he will look in the RECORD, that the Government guaranteed 75 percent.

Mr. WAGNER. I never intended to say that, for there is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Government may furnish a hundred percent.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Maryland says the Government may furnish a hundred percent.

Mr. WAGNER. In the form of a loan the Government may furnish a hundred percent, but probably in very few cases will it be called upon to do so, for the local authorities will make their contributions.

Mr. BYRD. Then I understand also that the Federal Government pays a subsidy. Therefore, no matter what the houses cost, those who put up the houses will not lose because the Government guarantees a subsidy? Am I correct about that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the subsidy comes in relation to the rent. The subsidy, as I understand, is the difference between the rentability of the particular project and the amount that would be justified as rent based upon the cost of the project.

Mr. BYRD. That is exactly correct. As I understand the process, the buildings will be valued and then the Federal Government will pay a direct subsidy representing the difference between what the rental should be to include all costs and the rental that is to be paid by the tenant.

Mr. WAGNER. What does the Senator mean by what the rental should be? I am sure the Senator does not mean what his remarks would seem to indicate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Virginia has expired on the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I will take time on the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Virginia certainly sympathizes with our object in endeavoring to take care of the low-income group whom private industry cannot serve and who cannot afford to pay the rent required to make even very small decent living quarters possible. We are dealing with unfortunate human beings, and the subsidy represents the difference between what the rents would be to carry all the charges, including amortization and everything else, and what the low-income group can afford to pay for rent.

Mr. BYRD. That is what I said.

Mr. WAGNER. That is entirely different from what may be implied by the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BYRD. That is what I said, namely, that the Federal Government will pay a subsidy, and that those who borrowed the money with which to build the houses would not suffer any loss, because the Federal Government would pay a sufficient subsidy to make sure that they earned interest on their investment and paid all other costs.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that the Government is to loan $700,000,000, and that it is to provide a subsidy which will amount during the 60 years to more than $1,200,000,000, for which the Government will get no return whatever.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is undoubtedly correct. So if the Government should not lose the principal—and I expect it to lose a larger part of it—it will certainly pay the subsidy out of the Treasury; and that makes it all the more imperative why we should restrict the cost of the buildings, in view of the experience we have had under the Resettlement Administration.

The Senate adopted an amendment a little while ago providing that the grants and loans shall be approved by the President of the United States. I ask the Senate what protection has been given the expenditure of the Resettlement money by the approval of the President of the United States, who allocated the money out of the lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. President, perhaps it is an unpopular thing for a man to speak along business lines in the Senate, but I, for one, believe $4,000 per unit is sufficient. I think a good house can be built for $4,000. I built one the other day on my farm for $2,000 and it has plumbing, water, and light. I stand here upon my responsibility as a Senator and say that if we want to clean up the slums of this country, if we want to provide houses for those of the low-income groups, we should not spend more than $4,000 on any house.

Those who are in the low-income group could not pay rental on $4,000 if charged in the ordinary course of business. In the ordinary course of business the charge would be 10 percent, 4 percent being for taxes and insurance and repairs, and 6 percent for interest. If that were charged in this case it would mean an average annual rental of $400.

I say to the Senator from New York that the best thing he can do to make a success of this scheme, of this plan—and I am willing to concede that it represents a sincere effort on his part to improve the condition of the underprivileged people in the slums—is to safeguard the expenditure of the money so that it will not be wasted and squandered, as is being now done, as shown by the figures that I have presented to the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes, of course, that the local authorities that are to be in charge of slum clearance projects and the reconstruction of houses in slum areas must clear away the slums before they can begin building houses? Do the Senator's $4,000 limitation and $1,000 per room limitation mean that the cost of the demolition of the slum areas, the clearing of the ground, and the building of new houses must be included in the amount that may be loaned, and which is to be limited to $4,000 per house and $1,000 per room?

Mr. BYRD. No doubt some salvage will be realized in clearing away these properties.

Mr. BARKLEY. Aside from the salvage, would $4,000 cover the clearance of the slum areas before construction of the houses could be begun?

Mr. BYRD. I stand upon my proposition that $4,000 is sufficient, $1,000 per room, which is what the amendment provides. The average value of all the houses in the cities of the United States, according to statistics given me, is $4,400, and that is for houses built by the industry, the perseverance, and self-denial of the average citizen who owns his own home and who does not come to the Government and ask the Government to build a home for him and then subsidize the rent. If we are going to subsidize the rent to the extent of 75 or 80 percent, why not give these homes rent free? What is the material difference between subsidizing at 75 percent and subsidizing at 100 percent, and will not the demand ultimately come upon the Congress, if this bill shall be enacted into law, to do what has been done in many other instances—ask the Government to give the buildings completely free to the people, free of cost, and free of any rent? Who can guarantee that that would not occur?

Yes, Mr. President, it may be unpopular to do so in this atmosphere, but I assert again that $4,000 is enough for a home for the man who wants to get out of the slums where he is probably occupying a home now worth not more than $500 or $1,000. The homes which it is proposed to construct will not be individual houses. They will be built in rows. The wall of one will be the wall of another. There is no reason to spend more than $1,000 per room for them.

I do not desire to take any more of the time of the Senate. I simply ask the privilege of having a yea-and-nay vote on my amendment, because I believe the time has come for the United States Senate to do what it can to prevent the further wasting of public money by the different bureaus in Washington, bureaus that seem to think they own the Government, bureaus that pay no taxes themselves, but that seem to think they have a divine right to waste and squander the money of the people of the United States as they see fit.

Mr. President, I think the Senate should understand that we are embarking on one of the most costly ventures ever undertaken in the history of our country. We are doing it with little consideration. I venture the assertion that aside from the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], no two other Members of this body understand the complicated provisions of the bill. I dislike to make that assertion, but I have sat here and attempted to understand it myself, I have read the RECORD, I have read the statements of the Senator from New York, and I repeat we are about to pass a bill involving the Government in the expenditure of possibly billions of dollars in future years without a clear understanding on the part of the Members of the Senate.

No emergency is involved. What reason exists for passing the bill now so hurriedly? The conditions which are complained of have existed for a long time and will probably continue to exist for a long time to come.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to point out to the Senator that the same humane arguments were made to support the Resettlement Administration that are now made to support slum clearance.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct. The same arguments were made then that are being made now.

Mr. President, I shall take no further time except to say that it is my desire that we shall have a yea-and-nay vote on my amendment.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, may I make an inquiry concerning one matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will have to be in the time of the Senator from Washington, because the time of the Senator from Virginia on the amendment and on the bill has expired.

Mr. BONE. Very well. I have before me section 9 of the bill, in which it is clearly declared to be the purpose to authorize the agency set up under the bill—that is to say, the local authority—to acquire property on which to erect the new slum-clearance projects. The acquisition of land in a city like New York or Philadelphia or Chicago would probably involve the expenditure of a good deal of money because of the value of the land there. As the Senator from Virginia was speaking, I was wondering if it was within the limits of possibility to acquire that type of land, if it was to be acquired by some local governmental subdivision, build houses or dwellings or apartment houses for $4,000 per unit. It might be built for $4,000 per unit conceivedly, but I am wondering in my own mind whether it would be possible to acquire the land upon which to build and then construct an apartment house for $4,000 per apartment or unit. That is a very practical question. I seriously doubt that it could be done in many very large American cities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia may answer the question in the time of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BYRD. Of course, that would necessitate a very careful investigation all over the country, but I am so anxious to have some limitation placed upon the expenditure that, if the Senator from Washington is willing to support my amendment, I will include cost of land.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the efforts of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to reduce governmental expenditures. I am not informed as to the particular subject to which he has referred, but, knowing his conscientiousness, I am willing to accept his word as to the extravagance involved in the projects to which he has referred.

But that is not the question involved here. As the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] pointed out, here the money is to be spent by the local authority, and certainly the local authority will be astute enough to see that, consistent with decent housing, these projects are built as cheaply as possible, because they are obligated to pay back every cent of the money which they borrow, with interest at the going rate plus one-half of 1 percent.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator make clear to the Senate and to me exactly what is meant by his statement? Are not the local authorities specifically guaranteed adequate interest by subsidy from the Government?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, those who are not in sympathy with our efforts to do something for the one-third of the people of the United States who are ill-housed, to give those unfortunate people who have not sufficient income to enable them to live in decent quarters a chance for life, will feel that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia ought to be adopted and the bill ought to be defeated. I say very candidly to the Senate that if the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is adopted it will kill the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, yesterday the Senator from New York——

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator going to ask me about my own estimate?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I was just coming to that point. A Senator asked the other day what was my average estimate of the cost of construction per room. I said my estimate is $1,000 average. That does not mean $1,000 maximum. I say now that would mean an average of figures ranging from $1,500 to $500. If we limit the expenditure to $1,000 per room, it would mean that only very small areas of the United States could have slum-clearance projects. Some of the projects are going to be quite expensive, because we will have to acquire the property, clear the slums, and demolish the buildings before we can begin the construction of houses.

While I am in sympathy with the efforts of the Senator from Virginia to bring governmental costs as low as possible, I see a certain danger in fixing a maximum, because if it is too low it would mean that our efforts to help this low-income group would be absolutely frustrated, and the board, in its efforts to carry out the provisions of the bill, would be absolutely paralyzed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if a maximum should be fixed, in an effort to comply with the maximum it might be necessary to build cheap, shoddy houses that would really be of no avail in trying to work out these slum problems.

Mr. WAGNER. Houses that would be absolutely worthless.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand the Senator to say that the average cost in New York City is $1,000 a room.

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; I beg the Senator's pardon. I said that was the average throughout the country.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The average throughout the country is $1,000 a room?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What would be the average in New York?

Mr. WAGNER. I have been informed that just for the construction of the rooms the average would be around $1,500 or $1,600 per room. I do not know how authoritative the information is.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Would not that largely depend upon the price fixed in condemnation, for instance?

Mr. WAGNER. It would be dependent upon all those circumstances—the price fixed in condemnation, the cost of demolition, and the cost of construction of the new building. It is provided in the bill that whenever a project is constructed, slums must be cleared at the same time.

Some of these slum areas, frankly, are not cheap property, for the reason that three or four families live in an apartment which should be occupied by one, all of them contributing to the rent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question at that point?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Bearing in mind that in response to a query from the Senator from Washington the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] said that he would be willing to exclude the cost of the land, I ask the Senator from New York whether it might not be desirable to fix such a maximum cost per room as the Senator and his experts would feel to be proper, so that we should have the assurance of going before the country with the knowledge that there was a maximum which would not be exceeded.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I am talking about the cost of construction of the room. I have not included in that amount the cost of the land and the cost of demolition, because those are separate subjects.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly. Suppose the amendment were redrafted so as to read that exclusive of the cost of the land, no project should cost more than $1,600 per room, or $6,400 per building.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, that would be an improvement on the amendment in its present form; but I doubt whether the Senate at this time can afford to put on a limitation which might deprive some communities entirely of any slum clearance. That is my fear. I understand that the Senator from Wyoming is for economy; but a moment ago the Senator spoke of assuring the country that we should not exceed a certain maximum expenditure.

Of all the legislation before us, this has the universal approval of the people of our country. I have collected editorials on the subject from all the leading newspapers in the country. Whether they are the most conservative newspapers that have been pleading for economy, or otherwise, they have approved and are pleading for the passage of this proposed legislation, because they recognize in it not only the solution of a social problem—of course, all of us, as humanitarians, are primarily interested in the matter from that standpoint—but they see a great saving to the Nation through taking these unfortunate persons out of places where disease and crime are generated and spread into other quarters of the country. That is a matter of statistics.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So far as the objectives of the measure go, I do not believe it will be possible to object to what the Senator is saying. Certainly I do not.

Mr. WAGNER. I know that is true.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I sympathize with the objective which the Senator has in mind. I am asking these questions merely in an effort to find out if there is not a ceiling that we can establish in the bill, believing that if the Senator agrees to some maximum limitation he will be serving his own cost best by so doing.

Mr. WAGNER. If we could fix a reasonable ceiling, while I doubt whether it would satisfy everybody, no doubt it would satisfy a great many persons. The difficulty is in arriving at a reasonable ceiling. After all, this is a bill for a period of 3 years. Each year Congress is to be informed as to exactly what the board does. I mean, it is under the constant supervision of Congress; and I think the Senator from Wyoming will agree with me that since the money is now being decentralized, and is to be spent by the local authorities, the local authorities are going to be astute. The money will not be wasted; and I will say to the Senator that the municipalities have a wonderful record in their relationship to the Federal Government. There has not been a single case where the loan made has not been repaid when due; and, as I said yesterday, the Federal Government has actually made a profit on the enterprise, because the Government went into the market and sold the bonds and securities at a profit to the Federal Government.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. I wish the Senator would tell the Senate frankly—I know he wants to be entirely frank—exactly what guaranty is made to these localities by the corporation which the bill establishes as to subsidizing rents.

Mr. WAGNER. We are adopting exactly the same system that every other country has.

Mr. BYRD. I am not asking that. I should like to know what the proposition is.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator that I am going to answer his question in my own way.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has not answerd it. I have asked him the same question at least six times, and it has not been answered yet.

Mr. WAGNER. I am going to try to answer it for the Senator. I wanted to preface my answer by referring to the successful experience of other countries, because it ought, in some way, to guide us in a new enterprise, as it has guided us in other directions.

In England and in the other countries it has been found economically wise to clear the slums; and it has been discovered there, as, of course, all of us know who have studied the subject and have been sufficiently interested in the underprivileged to study it, that these unfortunate people do not earn enough to pay a rent which would give a profit to private enterprise. Therefore, there are two alternatives. Either we must allow them to stay in the slums and continue not only their sad and tragic environment but also continue the generation of crime and disease, or the public must make a contribution toward lifting them out of the slum areas, and thus make a great contribution toward the welfare of our country in addition to the social problem which will be solved.

So what must we do? Since private enterprise admits that it cannot serve these people, and since the slum area is so unfit for human habitation that no citizen should be asked to live therein, I think the country has decided, and I feel confident the Congress will approve, that we, together with the local authorities, must make a contribution toward the rent of these individuals; and I will state the way in which it is determined. This, I say, is the system adopted by all of the other countries:

A loan is made. It is not going to be 100 percent in all cases. In the case of many municipalities, the municipality will make a contribution for the cost, in addition to tax-exemptions; but, whatever the loan may be, it is made to the housing authority. Upon that loan—that is, of course, after going all through the examination of the standards, and all that sort of thing—the project is constructed. We have a mandate in the bill that these projects shall be built for the lowest-income group; so we first ascertain what rent is necessary to meet all the carrying expenses, the amortization of the loan, and all the other expenses that go into the operation of the building. We then discover, say, that the rent necessary to be charged is $6 per month per room.

Mr. BYRD. Do the carrying charges include interest?

Mr. WAGNER. They include everything that goes into the liquidation of the debt and the carrying charges of the building. So we determine that, say, $6 is the monthly amount we must charge if we are to meet all carrying charges.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator says "we." He is speaking of the locality, I assume.

Mr. WAGNER. I am speaking of the locality, plus the Federal board. They, together, determine that amount as the result of careful calculation. Let us assume that the low-income group in this particular area can afford to pay no more than $5 per month per room. Then, in order to reach the low-income group in which I am interested, and in which I think other Senators are interested, and in which I am sure the Senator from Virginia is interested, we add $1 per month so as to bring that room within the reach of this low-income group; and that $1 per month represents the subsidy.

Mr. BYRD. But what I am endeavoring to get clear in my mind—and I hope the Senator will be patient with me—is this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have a very important question which I should like to ask the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from New York on the amendment has expired. He may speak on the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. I will speak on the bill long enough to——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think I was recognized by the Chair. I shall be glad to yield to these two Senators.

Mr. BYRD. What I have been trying to get clear in my own mind is this——

Mr. WAGNER. One minute. I am going to be very particular. I am not going to be lectured again by the Chair. Have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that the Senator from New York might continue on the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Chair. Then I will yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it seems to me this whole proposition depends on the extent to which the Federal Government guarantees to the locality, by reason of these subsidies, the repayment of interest and amortization in the construction of the buildings. Now, just one second. If the Federal Government——

Mr. WAGNER. Did the Senator ask me a question?

Mr. BYRD. I want to make myself clear. The Senator from New York took plenty of time to make himself clear.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. BYRD. If the Federal Government guarantees a sufficient rental by way of subsidy to pay the interest on the buildings that are built by the localities, then it does not make much difference to the localities what the buildings cost, because the localities are guaranteed the payment of their interest and their rental and their amortization.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, the two subjects are dealt with entirely differently; but I shall have to concede to the Senator that the question which the Senate must determine is whether we are to serve this low-income group. If we are not to try to shelter in decent homes this low-income group, then we need not discuss the bill any further.

Mr. BYRD. I am not arguing that question with the Senator. I only asked the direct question whether or not the statement I have made—namely, that the Federal Government is to pay to the locality a sufficient subsidy to take care of the cost and the interest—is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. It may not be. Let me say to the Senator that the contributions each year have this advantage: There may come a time when no subsidy at all is paid, when the low-income group——

Mr. BYRD. All right.

Mr. WAGNER. I am half through. The Senator is getting very impatient.

Mr. BYRD. Go ahead. I am not impatient.

Mr. WAGNER. There may come a time in this revision period when the low-income group will have improved its condition so that it could afford to pay a higher rent. Under those circumstances the subsidy would be reduced. This is an automatic thing, and it has helped in every country which has undertaken it.

Mr. BYRD. What I am trying to bring out is that the localities erect the buildings, and if the tenant is unable to pay an adequate rental to take care of the interest and the carrying charges, then the Federal Government steps in and pays a sufficient rental. Therefore the unit, whether it is a city, or a county, or whatever it may be, that constructs the building, is not going to lose; the Federal Government is the one that is going to lose.

Mr. WAGNER. Not at all. They have to repay the entire loan.

Mr. BYRD. Oh, yes, they do; by means of a subsidy from the Federal Government.

Mr. WAGNER. We do not know how much that subsidy may be. It may be very small. It may repay only one-half the interest.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator think this low-income group about which he is talking—and I am thoroughly in accord with that——

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator is, he should not suggest this amendment, because he may be able to do in Virginia what he suggests, but there will be very few areas in the United States where a room can be built for a thousand dollars, and under the Senator's amendment this benefit would be limited to a few localities, and I am sure the Senator does not want to do that.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator told me this morning that he would agree to $1,300.

Mr. WAGNER. No; I said fifteen hundred. I have inquired since, and I have been told that I am making a serious mistake, that in the larger sections of the country I may be doing them an injustice. I want to reach a limit somewhere. I am sorry I cannot agree with the Senator in this. But the Senator must not get angry with me for that.

Mr. BYRD. I never get angry with the Senator from New York. I am simply trying to obtain information.

Mr. WAGNER. My desire is that as little as possible, under the circumstances, shall be expended, but at the same time I want to help the low-income group, and I do not want by indirection to kill the legislation, and it can be done in that way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator postulates his view with respect to the big cities upon the theory that the slums must be taken over.

Mr. WAGNER. Must be cleared.

Mr. KING. Is it necessary to house these underprivileged people in the slums? Why may we not insist that the cities and States, under their police power, get rid of these unsanitary conditions and then get suitable land, not in the slums, upon which to construct houses for occupancy by these people?

Mr. WAGNER. In order to make this absolutely a slum-clearance bill—and it is proper, and it is one of the fine contributions of the Senator from Massachusetts—whenever we build houses for the underprivileged we absolutely must remove slums; and we ought to do that. I am in absolute sympathy with that, and under the provision suggested I am afraid slum clearance would not in all instances take place.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Can the Senator from New York advise us of the approximate cost of the new buildings erected by the British Government in London under their slum-clearance program, something near the average cost translated into American money?

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry I am not informed as to that, but the British Government—where the statute has no limitation, and is very flexible—they have adopted the system which I just described, that is, that the Government lends to the municipality for the purpose of constructing the building, and that loan with interest must be repaid. The Government determines what rent the low-income group shall pay, and what rent is sufficient to amortize the bonds and pay the other expenses, and the difference the Government contributes.

Mr. BONE. That may answer my question. Does the British Government make any grants by way of a subsidy on the construction cost?

Mr. WAGNER. No; it grants loans for the purpose of constructing a project, and, of course, there also must be a slum clearance in connection with the project. After that is all done, then the local authorities determine what rent they would have to charge if they had to pay all of the running expenses plus the interest and amortization, the installment payments upon the loans. That, say, is £2, or £1. Then they will find that the low-income group they house can afford to pay. That, of course, is always lower, and the difference the British Government contributes.

Mr. BONE. That is an outright contribution?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; just as is provided here.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator as to whether he has any figures as to the cost of a room in one of these slum-clearance projects?

Mr. WAGNER. I have not any figures on hand as to that, but I have been told that the average throughout the country is about $1,000 per room for the construction of the room only, not taking into consideration the value of the land. I am sorry I have not the figures.

Let me say, also, that while I have no criticism to make of the housing division of the Interior Department, who have done well under the circumstances, except in a few instances where they were granted a larger subsidy, they have not reached the low-income group, and unless we reach that class all of these efforts will be of no avail.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder what, for example, some of these projects with which we were entertained would cost per unit. Has anyone the cost per unit of any of the projects illustrated on the wall of the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator may call that entertainment; I call it a tragic story.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am talking about the improved buildings, not the slums. I am talking about the cost of putting up the improved buildings.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry I cannot inform the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator whether he would have any objection to compelling municipalities which want this Federal money to put up at least 10 percent of it before they come to Washington? Why give them 100 percent of the money?

Mr. WAGNER. We do not give them 100 percent of the money.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, yes; we do.

Mr. WAGNER. We lend it to them, and it is an indictment of our municipalities for the Senator to suggest that they would not repay the obligation. They have repaid on every occasion.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I can prove instantly that they will not pay the obligation. The proof is that if it costs $1,500 a room and there are four rooms, that makes $6,000; 10 percent of $6,000 is $600, and $600 divided into 12 monthly payments amounts to practically $50 a month, in round numbers. None of these low-income groups can pay $50 a month rent. That is just plain arithmetic, and does not need any argument to back it up. Certainly, if the Senator's own statement that it takes $1,500 a room——

Mr. WAGNER. It does in some cases, I am told.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us figure $1,000 a room. If there are four rooms in a house that makes $4,000, and 10 percent of $4,000 is $400, and $400 divided into 12 monthly installments makes $33.33 a month. According to the testimony, the people who are to be taken care of are people making $50 to $60 a month, and how in the name of common sense can a house renting for $33.33 a month be rented to a person who is making $50 a month unless the Federal Government makes up the difference? That is just plain arithmetic.

Mr. WAGNER. Does not the Senator agree that the Federal Government ought to make up——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, am I speaking in my own time? I ask to be recognized on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. TYDINGS. Here is a bill which does not require New York City or Baltimore to put up a dime, not a cent. Here is a bill which its sponsors claim is for the purpose of providing housing for people who make $50 or $60 a month.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment. Let me build the case. Here is a bill where the type of houses to be constructed cost $4,000, about, and more; $4,000 is the bottom price. By every rule of arithmetic a person making $50 or $60 a month could not pay $33 a month rent. Now let us face the facts.

The community is not compelled, by the pending bill, to put up one red cent, and when I offered an amendment, 10 times as mild as that offered by the Senator from Virginia, to compel the authority before making any of these loans to ascertain whether or not the prospective rent would yield, exclusive of interest, 3 percent on the loan, the Senator from New York would not accept it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. If the finished product cannot earn at least enough to pay the interest on the Government loan, how in the name of common sense is it going to furnish sufficient revenue to amortize $700,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator said a moment ago that these municipalities were getting their money from the Federal Government for nothing.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. The municipality will in the first place have to put up its bonds as collateral for the loan which is made. Whatever the Senator may think of the municipalities of the country, let me tell him again, and repeat it again and again for his benefit, that they have never defaulted on their loans.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, we had in this very body, and the Senator from New York voted for it, a measure to permit municipal bankruptcies, to let municipalities forestall all their obligations. That was acted on right in this body.

Mr. WAGNER. Whatever I voted for by way of legislation permitting something to be done, let me tell the Senator what the record is in the R. F. C. and the P. W. A., that the municipalities have repaid all of their debts. And, more than that——

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot yield further.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not like these indictments of municipalities.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the P. W. A. we require the municipality to furnish 40 percent at least of the amount of money it gets from the Federal Government. In the pending bill we do not require the municipality to furnish one single, red cent.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a provision in the bill——

Mr. TYDINGS. Where is it?

Mr. WAGNER. That when a loan is arranged for they may take into consideration the question of tax exemptions.

Mr. TYDINGS. I maintain, Mr. President—and I have read the bill from beginning to end—that there is not one line in it that compels the municipality to put up as much as 1 percent of the cost of a project, 2 percent of the cost of a project, or any other percentage of the cost of a project.

Mr. WAGNER. But they are going to repay the loan, are they not?

Mr. TYDINGS. How can they repay the loan when the Senator's own figures show that the families which are going to be put into these buildings will not earn more than twice the amount of the rent which the Government charges?

Mr. WAGNER. That does not answer the question. The Senator charges that the municipalities in this country and the housing authorities are not going to repay to the Government this loan.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I charge that.

Mr. WAGNER. That is an indictment which I have never heard uttered here before.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment. I say that because there is a provision in the bill, in two forms, that we shall pay an annual subsidy to each one of these municipalities which will furnish them sufficient of our money to pay us back their loans. That is in the bill. We are to give these respective cities a subsidy sufficient to allow low-income persons to occupy these buildings, and the subsidy is sufficient so that there will be enough money added to what the tenant pays to repay the Government the interest and the sinking fund on the loan; and it is our money that the municipality pays back to us.

Let us face the facts. I am not particularly opposed to that, if the Senate wants to do it; but I am sick and tired of hearing that these municipalities are going to repay these loans when there is not a bit of wording in the proposed legislation which will require that to be done. There is not a line which provides that New York City shall be made to put up one cent in order to get $50,000,000, perhaps, to build a slum-clearance project. There is not a single line to that effect in the bill; and if persons making $50 or $60 a month are going to live in houses that cost $6,000, every person in America knows that they have not sufficient income to pay the rent of that sort of quarters, provide for amortization of the loan, and pay the interest and the running charges.

Before this bill is completed I think we should not only adopt an amendment limiting the cost of these quarters, but I think we should have an amendment at least to make the municipalities put up 25 percent of the money. Why? Because if we do not do that there will be a mad rush to Washington. All this money is going to be loaned. "We do not have to put up any of it" will be the cry. Civic and local responsibility will be entirely absent, and every mayor in America, with just pride, will want to tell his people of the fine slum clearance he provided during his administration with money that came from Washington, with money that his successor may or may not pay back. If the cost of it is questioned, he will say, "Of course, the people who are living in those homes make only twice as much as the monthly rent; but, gentlemen, there was a provision in the national law which required the Government to pay sufficient subsidy to furnish your city with enough money with which to pay back the loan to the Government."

This bill, with all due respect, in my opinion—and I do not wish this statement to reflect upon its sponsors—has never been honestly presented to this body. The supposition that these loans are going to be repaid is absolutely fallacious, so far as the bill is concerned. If they are repaid, it will result only as a matter of municipal honor, if you please. There is nothing in the bill to compel the repayment of the loans; and my prediction is that if the bill passes in its present form, a subsequent Senate will pass a bill to make the payment of the bonds on the part of the municipality absolutely unnecessary.

I furthermore predict that New York will receive practically all the money that this bill contains. [Laughter.] I make the prediction that with the bill in its present form, at least half of the money will find its way into New York City or the immediately surrounding area and that the municipality will not put up a red penny.

Mr. President, I have no more to contribute, except to say that I think the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is liberal; that the cost per family ought not to be more than $4,000. If these people cannot be rehabilitated at $4,000 per family, then we had better give up slum-clearance, because there is not enough money in the country to carry it on upon a big scale.

In addition to that, I will say that I can take the Senator from New York to the countryside of America and show him people who work on farms who live under even worse conditions than some of those whom the Senator hopes to rehabilitate. True, they live in a healthier atmosphere and their living quarters are not so congested; but so far as the living quarters are concerned the average farm hand does not live in a $4,000 or $6,000 house by any means. He is lucky if he has one costing $1,000 or $1,500. If the Senator doubts that statement, I will provide him with physical proof within an hour after the session closes as to how the people in the country live.

Mr. President, this program cannot be carried on if houses are to be constructed requiring an annual rental of $600 per family for persons making $50 to $60 a month.

The Senator from New York the other day said that persons who made no more than $50 a month or $60 at the outset would occupy these houses. Since the Senator from New York said that the houses must cost at least $6,000 apiece, in the name of common sense, I should like to know how a person making $50 a month can pay the rent.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am not going to answer anything more than the suggestion, which I did not expect even the Senator from Maryland would utter here, that I am offering this legislation with the insincere purpose of getting all this money for the city of New York.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. In spite of what has been said on the floor, the city of New York in all of these expenditures has received no greater share than any other section of the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. No; not just now.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. Not just now. The Senator refused to yield to me. When I shall have finished I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not refuse to yield to the Senator, except to refuse to allow the Senator to make a speech in my time.

Mr. WAGNER. If an examination is made of the fifty-odd projects constructed throughout the country, only two will be found in the city of New York. There have been several heated statements made with reference to my activities, and I have not been happy under that challenge; but I shall have to rely, not upon what the Senator says, but upon the record I have made in this body.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has the floor. His time is not quite up.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I had no idea of reflecting personally on the Senator by assuming that his interest was confined solely to New York. I reiterate the statement that I am sure his interest in the bill springs primarily from his interest in New York, and I further reiterate that it will be remarkable if over 50 percent of these funds are not spent in New York. On that statement I stand, and I shall wait for the proof thereof if this bill shall pass.

To continue, I ask the Senator to answer a question, if he will be so kind. Will the Senator tell me how a house can be built costing $6,000 and rented to a person who makes $50 a month, and who has to pay $33.33 a month, and how that person can live in those quarters on that salary?

Mr. WAGNER. The answer is that I do not agree with the Senator's figures at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. They are just plain arithmetic.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is very good at figures, no doubt; but I cannot agree with that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, have I any time left?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; the Senator has some time left.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I reiterate that one would not need to be farther along than in the second grade, and he would not have to be very good at figures to answer that question. If a building costs $6,000, and the rental of the building is $600 a year, it certainly stands to reason that $50 a month rental has to come from some place in order to pay the rent, the carrying charges, the interest, the fire insurance, and so on. If a person makes $50 a month, it stands to reason that his entire income would be needed to pay the rent. I submit that the Senator has not shown how a person making $50 a month can live in a house costing $6,000 and pay $50 a month rent and continue to live.

Mr. WAGNER. I should just like to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. The Senate is working under a unanimous-consent agreement, and I insist on adherence to it, that no Senator shall speak more than 15 minutes on any amendment or more than twice on the bill and an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to the committee amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask consent to present a modification of my amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment. The language modifying the Senator's amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 5, after "$4,000", it is proposed to insert "exclusive of the cost of the land and cost of removing old buildings, less value of salvage."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the observations made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], as well as the very able address delivered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. I recall that in many of the contributions which have been made by the Federal Government a requirement has been made that the municipality, the county, or the State should make an adequate and substantial contribution. I will say in all frankness to my friend from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that I do not see any reason why the bill should not have contained a provision requiring at least 25 percent of the loan which will be made by the Federal Government for the removal of the slums to be contributed by the States.

It is an advantage to the city to get rid of the slums. The Senator has emphasized very properly, doubtless, the importance of getting rid of crime and insanitary conditions. Those are responsibilities resting upon the local government. If the city of New York, the city of Boston, or the city of Chicago have slum-clearance projects, if they can get a 75-percent subsidy from the Federal Government, they should be perfectly willing to put up at least 25 percent.

If the bill had not reached the stage in its development which it has now attained, I should recommend that it be recommitted for the purpose of having included in it an amendment under the terms of which 25 percent of all subsidies, particularly where contribution is made in cities that have slum clearances, should be provided by the cities themselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to the amendment reported by the committee. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert:

(6) No contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, lease, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this act shall be entered into by the Authority with respect to any project costing more than $4,000 exclusive of the cost of the land and cost of removing old buildings, less value of salvage, per family unit or more than $1,000 per room.

Mr. TYDINGS. On the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	King	Pittman
Andrews	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Davis	Lee	Reynolds
Austin	Dieterich	Lewis	Schwartz
Bailey	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach

Byrnes	Holt	Nye	Walsh
Capper	Hughes	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Overton	White
Clark	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], on which the yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. The Senator has made a very plausible argument for the adoption of his amendment, but I fear the consequences to the entire program if the amendment should prevail.

In the first place, I contend that there are absolutely no data upon which the Senate can determine the cost per room or per family of the projects to be undertaken under the bill. If there are such data in existence, they have not been presented to the Senate. The statement of the author of the amendment was to the effect that he had taken the average of the figures given to him in the debate a day or two ago by the Senator from New York. Of course, as everyone knows, the average represents a figure between the extremes, which may be as much as 50 percent above and 50 percent below the number fixed. Considering fluctuating building costs, for the Senate to write into a program which is to extend over a period of years a flat limitation of this character, in my opinion, would serve to frustrate and wholly defeat the objective which this bill has in mind. If that is what the Senate desires, I contend that it would be much better for a majority of the Senate to vote down the bill rather than to pass a measure which ostensibly is to inaugurate a long-range housing program, but which will contain in it a limitation that will prevent its achievement.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator not recognize the fact that in this bill and others of its kind we are converting a democracy into a patrimony?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not recognize that any such issue is involved in the measure.

Mr. McCARRAN. One more question. Does the Senator not realize that by the passage of this bill, for which I will vote, we are appropriating public money that we do not hope to get back, but out of which we hope to build a nation from the foundation up?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in the limited time that is available on this amendment, I cannot discuss all the fundamental problems which are involved in the subject of housing. I will say, however, that, in my judgment, an adequate housing program is absolutely essential, and I do not believe, as suggested by the Senator from Nevada, that it involves any change in the fundamental character or concept of this Government or its objectives. I think that it is perfectly proper, under our traditional policy, for the Federal Government, in cooperation with municipalities, counties, and States, to act jointly to meet a problem of this magnitude.

But, Mr. President, what I am primarily concerned with for the moment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia. I contend that the record will show that there are no data upon which an intelligent determination can be made that the limitation which the Senator from Virginia proposes by his amendment is feasible and that this program can be carried forward if the amendment is adopted.

As every Senator knows, building costs, for example, have been mounting during the last year; they have been going up at a rapid rate. If this bill had passed at the last session of Congress and we had attached to it an amendment—assuming that we had the information and data upon which to base such an amendment—limiting the cost per room and per family, it is perfectly obvious to every Senator that the increased building costs within the last 12 months would have made such an amendment so restrictive that it would have absolutely paralyzed the program.

I am as concerned as is the Senator from Virginia that these housing projects should be built at the lowest possible cost, but I contend that those who believe in this proposed legislation and who desire to see the program made workable and feasible should not vote for amendments which are not calculated to make the program effective.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. Please understand me. I do not mean to say what I have said captiously.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I grant that; I assume it to be so.

Mr. McCARRAN. But we must guide our course in the future by the lights which are given us from the past. We know the Tugwell project has exhibited an example upon which the entire country looks with a frown. Are we going on with that, or are we going on with something that will be safeguarded so that from the very foundation up there will be assurance that Tugwellism will not creep into it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In response to the Senator's question I wish to say I have not made any investigation of the cost of the Greenbelt project, nor have I made any investigation of the cost of the Shenandoah project referred to by the Senator from Virginia; but, so far as this proposed legislation is concerned, I think it has been carefully drafted and is calculated to produce low-cost housing projects. I think the arrangement which has been set up in the bill will achieve that objective.

What I am concerned about is that the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is so drawn as to make it impossible for projects to be built as they are designed to be built under this program. The difficulty, as I have suggested, is that in fixing a limitation of this kind, based on the average figure given by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] in debate, we have not sufficient information upon which to predicate the whole program. So far as I am concerned, I am anxious to see the foundations and fundamentals of the program sound, but I am likewise anxious to see some foundations built in this country upon which low-cost houses may be erected. I contend there are no figures and no information upon which to justify the Senate in writing into the bill the limitation proposed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to comment merely on the argument that there is no information to sustain the amendment of the Senator from Virginia. No data are necessary for Senators to know that the average homes of their respective constituencies cost less than $4,000, plus cost of land. The average home at $4,000, plus the cost of land, would be a $5,000 property. Two-thirds of the American people live in properties worth less than $5,000. If it is going to ruin the bill to ask those who now live in slums to live on the same plane as two-thirds of the American people live, then I do not understand the merit of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to the amendment reported by the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and vote "yea." If the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that Senator has not voted.

Mr. HALE. I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina. Not being able to obtain a transfer, I shall have to withdraw my vote.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is necessarily detained.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are detained on departmental matters.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on official business connected with the Battle Monuments Commission.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] is absent on official business. He has a pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. If present, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] would vote "nay", and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], who is absent in France as a member of the Battle Monuments Commission, has a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 39, as follows:

So Mr. BYRD's amendment to the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to insert the following:

This act shall expire 3 years after the approval thereof: Provided, however, That all contracts entered into and all commitments made by the board shall be carried out by such agency or authority as the Congress may designate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I gave notice of this amendment yesterday; and I have elected to modify the amendment by providing for the expiration of the act at the end of 3 years.

This bill provides for the appropriation of some $26,000,000 for the first year but gives to the board of directors the power to issue securities and sell them, the securities, of course, having the full endorsement of the Federal Government. The directors are authorized to sell $200,000,000 of securities immediately after the passage of the act, $250,000,000 after July 1, 1938, and $250,000,000 after July 1, 1939. So all of the money provided for the board will be in its hands 1 year after the termination of the act under the amendment I have offered. Provision is also made in the amendment that all contracts made by the board, and all commitments made by the board, by way of subsidy or otherwise, of course, shall be carried out by such agency as the Congress may designate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does that include the rent subsidies which the bill authorizes to be paid forever?

Mr. GEORGE. I think so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator's amendment contemplate that they shall continue to be paid?

Mr. GEORGE. All rent contracts made prior to the expiration of the law would be faithfully executed under the amendment. I think no other amendment would be fair.

Mr. President, this bill is founded upon the philosophy that there is in this country a group of low-income producers who cannot live in sanitary and reasonably comfortable houses unless the Government subsidizes them. That is the doctrine. It is plainly stated in the bill. There cannot be any controversy about it. I desire to repeat that the bill proceeds upon the theory that the low-income producers in this country can never live in fair homes, in comfortable homes, in decent homes, unless the Government subsidizes the rent; in other words, unless it helps to pay the rent through some form of subsidy. The amendment proposes that when we embark upon a program founded upon that philosophy, we shall certainly limit the operation of the act to a period of 3 years, which will give the act full opportunity to demonstrate whether or not the philosophy is sound, and whether or not the Government ought to commit itself to that doctrine.

Mr. President, for another reason the amendment ought to be adopted. If it is not adopted there will not hereafter go into housing any private capital. It will be the end of a private program for building houses in America. Private capital will withdraw from the field. The bill will end it, and we shall have state socialism now and forever if we do not limit the operations of this measure. I want to see the people properly housed. I want to see them have the opportunity of living under decent, sanitary, wholesome conditions; but we have generally done that in America. Throughout all of our history we have generally done so. We now say, however, that we have reached a time when our low-income producers cannot possibly do so relying upon their own means. Mr. President, you and I know and all people know that when we adopt the policy written in this measure private capital perforce will stay out of the field, and it ought to stay out of the field, and if it has good judgment it will stay out of the field, because it cannot enter the field in competition with a Government housing program such as is presented in this bill.

A great deal has been said about this program providing for the return of the money. It does not provide for the return of the money. There is not a municipality in the United States that will borrow this money that would ever expect a creditor, with the judgment we are now called upon to display, even to require them to repay the money.

The bill provides for the furnishing of every dollar of money to build these houses, every dollar of the three-quarters of a billion which they can expend within the next 3 years, without even requiring the municipality or the public housing authority to match a penny of the money put up against it.

The authority would not only be spending public money, Mr. President, but one public agency would be spending the money of another public agency, and since the beginning of time, economy never has been exercised under any such program as that. The man who spends another man's money will waste it, and when one public agency is spending the money of another public agency, the money of the taxpayers, there is double waste, no check, no restriction.

Mr. President, the Government can, in the first instance, make an outright grant of not exceeding 25 percent, and 25 percent of the money is going before any of it leaves the Treasury. The Government is going to make the loan to the municipality, and the power exists to make the grant, and that is lost, given away, before the transaction is ever made.

The Administrator of Public Works has engaged in housing enterprises, and good physical properties have been built, but down in the city of Atlanta, where a unit was constructed for those in the low-income group, the Government in actual practice, as a businessman would call it, wrote off 40 percent of the actual investment before they could get any renters in the houses on the basis required by the legislation which authorized the renting of the houses. Forty percent of the project in the city of Atlanta was given away to start with before they could get anyone actually in the low-income producing groups to qualify as renters.

Mr. President, the bill not only provides for an outright expenditure by the board of approximately three-quarters of a billion dollars, but it gives the board the power to commit the Federal Government to the payment of an annual subsidy to the amount of $20,000,000, or, during the life of the bill, to the payment of a billion two hundred million dollars. Yet there is only the pledged word of a city, or of a housing authority created by a State legislature, or by some political subdivision, and that pledged word is given under conditions that should lead anyone to know that there will be no repayment to the Federal Treasury of the money save the subsidy, and the subsidy alone, which the Federal Government has granted.

The proponent of the bill says that the municipalities in the United States have lived up to their obligations. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is held up as an example. Jesse Jones is a businessman. He made the loans of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on a business basis. Jesse Jones would no more think of advancing a single dime under the conditions of the pending bill than he would undertake a solo flight to heaven. Loans made to municipalities were never for a hundred percent of the project which the city desired to enter into or to complete, and very great caution was taken in the execution of all those loans.

The amendment merely proposes that the act shall expire 3 years after its approval, more than 13 months after the date when the board can have realized the last penny it is at present authorized to borrow upon the credit of the United States. It also takes care of the contracts made by the board during the life of the board throughout the full period of 20 years, or 60 years, as the case may be, through some agency created by the Congress.

There is every reason, Mr. President, why the amendment should be agreed to. Are we in any position to say or to know that this program is not experimental, and can we close our eyes to the obvious fact that, entering the field, we must occupy the whole of it, so far as the low-income producers are concerned, in every section of the country? Is not the period of 3 years a sufficiently long time to experiment with this kind of a measure? It seems to me that the amendment would give the legislation ample opportunity to demonstrate its value, and at the same time afford a very weak and a very insufficient check upon legislation of this kind passed to operate indefinitely, and throughout the balance of time, or until at least Congress takes some adverse action upon it.

It may be true that the low-income group in this country can never occupy homes which will be at the same time decent, and wholesome, and presentable, as American homes ought to be, without Government subsidy.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to venture a suggestion, as he is commenting on the low-income group. There has been established by amendment to the bill an additional group. There is the low-income group, and then the lowest-income group, and under the amendment adopted yesterday the housing is provided only for the lowest-income group.

Mr. GEORGE. I am aware of that. The Senator from Colorado is correct; but that was done in all good faith, to make certain that the occupants of these houses were people who could not afford to pay what is called an economic rent. So it is proposed to provide a rental which is less than the economic rental by and through the subsidy.

Mr. President, what is the subsidy? The subsidy is or may be 3 percent, practically, upon the total of $700,000,000 which the Housing Corporation or directors are authorized to give by way of loans or by way of grants. Out of that subsidy alone will the Government be able to be partially reimbursed.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The program itself is only for a period of 3 years, and at the expiration of that time no further commitment can be made—that is, 3 years from the beginning of the program—unless Congress gives further authority to the board. If Congress at the end of that time decides not to give any further authority, as a matter of course the work of the board will terminate, except as to the carrying out of existing contracts.

As I understand the amendment, the Senator provides for the absolute termination of the activities of the board 1 year earlier.

Mr. GEORGE. I modified the amendment so as to make it 3 years from the date of the approval of the act.

Mr. WAGNER. That will permit only 2 years of construction, because surely during the first 6 or 7 months no construction can possibly begin. As I understand it, the Senator is reducing by 1 year the operation of the act, so far as the lending of money and the entering into a contract is concerned.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; I am not reducing the period for the expiration of the act. Practically the work might not be completed, but I am providing that all contracts entered into by the board or commitments made by it shall be carried out.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. The bill as it is now provides for a program of only 3 years, and I do not see any reason for not giving the board at least 3 years' time in which to carry on its activities; and the country will say whether or not these projects are successful, and it will be seen whether or not public opinion will support them. I am sure public opinion will support them. It seems to me that the time to terminate this legislation or to extend it is for the Congress to decide at the expiration of the 3 years. This amendment is simply another shortening of this program, and, as I said, another limitation placed upon the housing program as originally proposed. In spite of what the Senator said, I think the country is in support of this measure. I also believe that private enterprise is not invaded in any way by this proposed legislation. Witness after witness appeared before our committee representing businessmen who said that private enterprise could not take care of the slum dwellers of the country, the low-income group, and therefore there is no other way of doing it except with the aid of Government. That is universally conceded.

I express the hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the committee amendment appearing on page 68, between lines 15 and 16.

Mr. GEORGE. On this question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

I also announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent in France in connection with the dedication of battle monuments.

I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate upon departmental business.

I further announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] is engaged upon official business and is necessarily detained from the Senate.

I further announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE]. If present and at liberty to vote on this question, the Senator from Virginia would vote "yea", and the Senator from Idaho would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] are paired on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 47, as follows:

So Mr. GEORGE's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

CHANGE IN NAME OF CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE—VETO MESSAGE

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to ask the privilege of laying a veto message of the President before the Senate at this time. The reason for this is that the attention of the Chair has been called to the fact that at one time a veto message was sent to the Senate and was not read the day it was received but was read the next day, and now there is a question in the courts as to whether it was received in time. The Chair does not think that a veto message of the President ought to be passed over, and the Chair has been waiting for an opportunity to lay this veto message before the Senate and is taking the liberty of doing so at this time. The clerk will read the veto message.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill 1284, entitled "An act to change the name of the Chemical Warfare Service."

The bill proposes to call the present Chemical Warfare Service the Chemical Corps.

It is my thought that the major functions of the Chemical Warfare Service are those of a "service" rather than a "corps." It is desirable to designate as a corps only those supply branches of the Army which are included in the line of the Army. To have changed the name to the "Chemical Service" would have been more in keeping with its functions than to designate it as the "Chemical Corps."

I have a far more important objection to this change of name. It has been, and is, the policy of this Government to do everything in its power to outlaw the use of chemicals in warfare. Such use is inhuman and contrary to what modern civilization should stand for.

I am doing everything in my power to discourage the use of gases and other chemicals in any war between nations. While, unfortunately, the defensive necessities of the United States call for study of the use of chemicals in warfare, I do not want the Government of the United States to do anything to aggrandize or make permanent any special bureau of the Army or the Navy engaged in these studies. I hope the time will come when the Chemical Warfare Service can be entirely abolished.

To dignify this Service by calling it the "Chemical Corps" is, in my judgment, contrary to a sound public policy.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 4, 1937.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The veto message, with the accompanying bill, will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and be printed.

EXPENSES OF PARTICIPATION IN EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL ROAD CONGRESS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Eighth International Road Congress, to be held at The Hague in June 1938.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 4, 1937.

[Enclosure: Report.]

HARRY BRYAN AND ALDA DUFFIELD MULLINS ET AL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1640) for the relief of Harry Bryan and Alda Duffield Mullins and others.

Mr. NEELY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have been very much impressed by the statement of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that this is not a measure for the benefit of the great cities, particularly the great city of New York, but is a national program, and that we have need for low-cost housing in all parts of the country. Consequently, I am offering an amendment which I hope the Senator from New York will accept, as it will bear out his theory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 66, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

(d) That the Authority shall not expend or lend or contract to expend in any State a greater proportion of the total funds available to it by appropriation or loan than the proportion which the population of such State bears to the total population of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am trying to insure that there will be a fair and equitable distribution of the benefits of the bill. The amount provided is, of course, entirely inadequate to meet the great problem upon the basis of the $4,000 limit fixed by a recently adopted amendment. Upon the theory which has been advocated that at least one-third of the population of the United States are without adequate housing, it would require over $40,000,000,000 adequately to house them. It seems to me when we are dealing with only $1,000,000,000 we ought to distribute it equally. I am quite sure the Senator from New York does not want to lay himself open to the accusation that it is the great cities which will monopolize the funds.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if I were as provincial as the Senator seems to intimate and thought of New York alone, I would favor the amendment because New York State has 10 percent of the population of the entire country, so that under the Senator's amendment it would get at least 10 percent.

Mr. ADAMS. A statement was made on the floor that New York City would get about 50 percent of the fund and I wanted to repudiate any such idea as that. [Laughter.]

Mr. WAGNER. That statement was made, I suppose, to prejudice the legislation. There is no doubt about that, but I am not concerned with such statements. We have to amuse one another occasionally.

Here is the difficulty with the proposal of the Senator from Colorado. We are proposing to clear the slums wherever they are found. There may be States which have no slums at all. Does the Senator contend some part of the money should be expended there? There may be small States which need more than their share under a measurement by population, because they have a great many slums that ought to be cleared. In other words, is this carrying out the purpose of the bill, which is to clear slums and aid the low-income group wherever they may be?

Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado the funds would be limited to the States according to their population. I think the amendment really would be to the disadvantage of the less populated States of the Union. It would not carry out a national purpose. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, even though my State would get an advantage under it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to read as follows:

Provided, That no State, either in the form of a loan or a grant or a subsidy, shall receive more than 10 percent of the funds included in this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland offer that as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is my purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have not had time to consider the amendment, but it seems to me under the circumstances the Senator would freeze some of the funds. If some of the States should make no application the board might take the view that an application might come sometime during the period of 3 years, but if no application should come then part of the money would be frozen and not used. It seems to me that would be the effect of the Senator's amendment. I am willing to accept the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have no idea of freezing any of the funds, but it seems to me if we incorporate a precautionary provision that no State shall get more than 10 percent of the funds we do what the Senator from New York has said he wants to do, namely, let the slums be cleared, but at the same time provide that they shall be cleared to some extent all over the country wherever they exist. It seems to me by allowing not to exceed 10 percent to any one State we have protected the States where the most slums exist and at the same time have prevented a larger sum being expended there which all the people of the United States must pay in the long run.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. We all know that slums, in the ordinary sense in which we understand the term, exist more numerously in proportion to the population of the States. In the agricultural sections there are no slums as we ordinarily understand slums. We know there is inadequate housing in sections even in the rural districts. We all have those experiences, and probably most of us have lived in houses that would not be regarded as the best for human habitation. I myself have lived in such houses.

Ordinarily slums are regarded as congested, undesirable sections in large centers of population where crime may be encouraged or where disease may prevail because the conditions are almost intolerable for human habitation. If the amendment of the Senator from Maryland should be adopted, and no State could get more than 10 percent of the funds, in States where the population is sparse and scattered and where there are no congested regions and therefore no need for what we call slum clearance, no application would be made and no local authority would be set up for that purpose, so no portion of the fund would go to them. Then where would that part of the fund go that was left unused?

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator from Kentucky concede that there are at least, perhaps, 20 States in the Union where there are some slums?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point is that it is perfectly possible under the bill for 50 percent of this money to go to one State or 30 percent to go to one State, although slum conditions prevail in many States. The only purpose of my amendment is to provide, insofar as we have the money and wherever slums are found, for such a division of the money that no one section would receive all the benefits while another section would receive none. Perhaps my figures are too low.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator knows I do not want to favor one State or a half dozen States, and yet in order for any State to avail itself of the privileges of the bill it must organize a local housing authority and must initiate projects itself; it must come to Washington and ask for a loan or grant of the funds necessary to carry forward those projects.

Of course, in the administration of the program of making the loans and the grants the board has discretion, and under an amendment which was adopted today none of the applications could be effectuated except with the approval of the President—not the present President alone but any President who happens to be in office at the time.

Does not the Senator think that affords sufficient safeguards against the concentration of the expenditure of this money in any locality?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator that if I thought that I would not have offered the amendment. I could take the Senator to small towns in Maryland or Kentucky, not places where there are great congested areas with millions of people, but I could take him, for instance, to the town where I was born and spent all my life, and I could show him some alleys and other places where disease is rampant. Indeed, I could show him from the criminal statistics of small towns that a great deal of crime comes from those small areas. I could show him places where people in my own home town—Havre de Grace, Md.—would be glad to live in a house that cost $1,000 in exchange for the one in which they are living.

I admit that there are slums in New York City and in Chicago and in many other places in the country; but I am somewhat of the opinion that because of the magnitude of the problem we are apt to focus all our attention on it where it exists in the worst form, and not spread our solution of it equitably over the country.

The Senator from New York very properly said that he did not think the amendment of the Senator from Colorado was altogether fair, because if it were applied to every State of the Union there might be a State with no slums in it. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish my sentence. The Senator from New York said that if we divided the funds on the basis of population, we might award a portion of this slum-clearance money to a State having no slums. I have proposed to modify the amendment of the Senator from Colorado so as to provide that no State shall receive more than 10 percent of the total amount.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Marylands wants to do me an injustice.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not mean to do so.

Mr. WAGNER. What I said was that there might be some States which would not get any of this money——

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I said.

Mr. WAGNER. But that the authority might feel obligated, because application might come in, to set aside that money.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what the Senator said; and I wanted to accept his argument and viewpoint, and fix the matter so that the money will be spent where the slums exist, but no one State will get all of it, or half of it, or even a third of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator's amendment contemplate that this limitation shall apply from year to year, or over the entire life of the proposed act?

Mr. TYDINGS. It contemplates that whatever money is to be expended, no State shall get more than 10 percent of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the Senator knows that the amount of money that may be expended depends upon how much Congress appropriates.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. The appropriations will be made from year to year.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am talking about the $700,000,000 we are going to lend.

Mr. BARKLEY. That has to come out of an appropriation.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. We authorize the obligation, but we do not appropriate the money.

Mr. TYDINGS. But I propose that it shall be authorized under restrictions.

Mr. BARKLEY. From year to year we will appropriate the money. Does the Senator mean that in any one year no State shall receive more than 10 percent of the total, or that that shall be the case over the entire period?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is very technical, Mr. President.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me answer it, then. The Senator has asked me the question, and I say that what I propose is that the line shall read that no State shall receive more than 10 percent of these funds. If we should appropriate only $70,000,000, no State would get more than $7,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would mean, then, that in any year when one State was further advanced than the others and prepared to go forward with this program, it would get only one-tenth of the amount.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of the total appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the next year some other State might be prepared to go forward, but in that year no State could get more than 10 percent. All of the States cannot move forward simultaneously.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; but this is the money we are authorizing to be loaned, which amounts to $700,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Loaned and granted and otherwise disposed of.

Mr. TYDINGS. My proposal is that no State shall get more than $70,000,000 of the $700,000,000 which is authorized in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. By the adoption of that amendment I am afraid we should hamstring and halter this whole program. If we should assume that 6 States would be ready to go forward with a program next year, and that the other 42 States would not be ready, under the amendment no State out of the 6 could get more than one-tenth of the amount available for that year.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. As I understand the Senator from Kentucky, if possible, he wants to leave the matter so that the board may give 90 percent of the total amount to a certain State in 1 year if it is ready to go ahead.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not want the board to give 90 percent of the total amount to one State; but, assuming that Congress is going to appropriate each year the amount necessary to carry out the program, no State that is ready to go forward ought to be held back simply because the other 47 States do not happen to be ready.

Mr. TYDINGS. Congress does not have to appropriate. Under the provisions of the bill $700,000,000 is authorized to be loaned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Authorized, yes; but it will never be paid out unless it is appropriated.

Mr. TYDINGS. There will be a guaranty fund. It will not come out of the Federal Treasury in the way of money.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I find that my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado] has upon the table an amendment having the same purpose as the one I offered which is in much better form, and happens to be in print, whereas mine was difficult to read. I should like, therefore, to perfect my amendment by substituting the one heretofore offered by my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] modifies his amendment of the committee amendment in the form which will be read by the Clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 66, line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. —. (a) All amounts made available pursuant to this act for each fiscal year for loans, annual contributions, or capital grants by the Authority to public housing agencies shall be apportioned by the Authority among the several States in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States as shown by the latest available Federal census. The first such apportionment shall be made and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury within 30 days after the date of enactment of this act, and thereafter each such apportionment shall be made and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury at the beginning of each fiscal year.

(b) So much of the amounts so apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year. Any amount so apportioned to any State which is unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure as herein provided shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury in the same way, as if it were being apportioned under this section for the first time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I now offer my substitute amendment to the improved amendment? My amendment proposed as a substitute reads:

That no State, either in the form of a loan or grant or subsidy, shall receive more than 10 percent of the funds included in this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That substitute is pending.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to discuss for a minute the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and the substitute amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

I think I can discuss this particular bill and these particular amendments without any claim that I may be actuated by selfish motives. I take pride in the fact that the State which I in part represent has no slums, and probably we shall not receive any money as the result of the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to inquire of the Senator if he understands that the bill is strictly limited to what he and I know as slums, or whether it has a broader meaning and is intended to provide housing for persons in circumstances that are not sanitary, not wholesome, and not adequate, even though not what I think of as slums. I think a slum is a place congested with many persons gathered together. There are in my State numbers of persons who ought to have, and I should like to have them have, better housing; but we have no slums, though we have a need for better housing.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is precisely the point which I wish to discuss; and the precise question which the Senator from Colorado submits is to my mind the most effective argument against the amendment which he offers.

It is interesting to me to note, and it is a little difficult for me to understand, that the Members of this body who have most consistently objected to Federal expenditures, who have with all sincerity contended that Federal expenditures should be limited, are the ones who are presenting this amendment and this substitute, which, in my opinion, would result in more Federal expenditures than any other possible measure which might be enacted by this session of Congress.

What does the substitute propose, and what does the amendment propose? Instead of this being a slum-clearance proposal, an activity upon the part of the Federal Government to try to solve the problem of slums in this country, if this amendment or this substitute is adopted it will mean that the Federal Government is going to accept the responsibility for housing in the United States. I do not believe the Federal Government should accept the responsibility of taking out of the Federal Treasury money with which to provide housing in all parts of the United States. I believe the reason why this bill is justified, the reason why the Federal Government as a Federal organization is justified in putting money into the housing problem, is the fact that in certain parts of the United States we have, as a result of inadequate housing, a further problem of crime, a further problem of disease; and it is perfectly proper for the Federal Government, recognizing that the results of such crime and the results of disease spread throughout the country, to spend money in particular localities to solve the housing problem when that problem results in the creation of slums, which, in turn, results in crime and disease.

If this amendment or the substitute shall be adopted, it will mean that the Federal Government will say that it is the problem of the Federal Government to provide adequate housing for everybody in the United States. If the amendment or the substitute shall be adopted, it will happen that next year or the year after and in the future years the Members of this body will say, "We have not adequate houses in our communities. The Federal Government says it is its problem to take care of the housing of the people of the country, and we want our share."

In the consideration of this problem we cannot be provincial. On the Pacific coast we are interested in the crime problem in the city of New York. I had the feeling a number of years ago, when we had the problem of the enforcement of the prohibition law, that we would not have difficulty in my State in enforcing the prohibition law to nearly so great an extent as we did have it, had it not been for the examples of lack of enforcement and the impossibility of enforcement in the city of Chicago, say, or in the city of New York.

When crime is bred in any part of the country, the results of that crime spread throughout the entire Nation, and it is upon that basis and that basis alone that we are justified in the adoption and the enactment of the pending bill.

I ask the Members of this body not to be provincial. I ask the Members of this body to recognize the fact that if the Federal Government is to participate in the solution of this problem, it may be that the city of New York will get a large proportion of the money. Some of us representing farming districts asked the Federal Government to assist agriculture in its difficulties, and I have not heard the Representatives from the State of New York and the city of New York objecting to the expenditure of Federal funds for agriculture.

I realize that it might be popular for me to go back home and say, "I stopped the city of New York from getting all of this money." But I call to the attention of the Members of this body who favor the balancing of the Budget, and who favor the limitation of Federal expenditures, the fact that the precedents they are now making would open the door to greater Federal expenditures than probably any other act we might pass.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Would the Senator have us understand that it is his judgment that if the pending bill shall be enacted without including either the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado or the substitute offered by the Senator from Maryland, we will go through the coming year, or any year while the act is in force, without paying the full amount that is authorized under the law?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not understand that anything I have said would so indicate. It certainly was not intended.

Mr. BURKE. I understand, then, that the Senator agrees that the full amount authorized will be paid. How, then, does the amendment or the substitute offered have anything to do with increasing the drain on the Treasury? If we are to pay the full amount anyway, it would seem to me that the amendment and the substitute have to do only with the distribution of the funds over the country, rather than with the total amount to be paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If we adopt the substitute, and thereby have the Federal Government assume the responsibility for housing people, when the Senator from Nebraska goes back to Nebraska he is going to be called upon by his constituents in Nebraska to come here next year and not merely have this program extended to Nebraska, but to have the amount doubled, or trebled, or quadrupled.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. One reason why I have been inclined to favor the bill is that we have been assured by the sponsors of the legislation from the start that this was not only a slum-clearance measure, but was in aid of agricultural areas, and that the benefit was to be spread all over the country. I did not know we were dealing here merely with the slums of New York City and Chicago, and those that I saw in Seattle when I was there a couple of years ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I hope the Senator has not been as inaccurate in the rest of his statements and questions as he was in the last portion of his remarks, in reference to the city of Seattle, because while the Senator was in Seattle he saw no slums there. He saw the beautiful shores of Lake Washington. The junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] is in the Chamber, and possibly at this time he could rise and describe what the Senator saw while he was in Seattle. He could do it much more adequately than I could.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in answer to what has been stated by the able Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to say in his presence that in all my life and in all my travels I have never witnessed a more beautiful spot upon the face of this earth than the home city of the Senator from Washington, the city of Seattle, with one exception, and that exception is the little gem city of the mountains, my home town, Asheville, N. C. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I dislike very much to disagree with my able colleague from the State of Washington, because I recognize in him a most friendly feeling, and it is ever a disappointment, I may say, to have to disagree with any of my colleagues. But in this particular instance, upon the subject on which he has just spoken, I am forced to take an opposite position, for the reason that I must look after the interests of North Carolina to the best of my ability, and if $700,000,000 of the people's money is to be expended, I want North Carolina—God bless her!—to have her part [laughter], although she does not need it particularly.

My fellow Senators know there is no more progressive State in the Union than the great Commonwealth of North Carolina. There is no State that has less slums and fewer poor people than my State. But we are not dealing alone with the slums in this instance. Under the pending bill, every State in the Union will be entitled to make application for a part and a portion of the $700,000,000. I respectfully call attention to that provision of the bill appearing on page 54, line 14:

> The Authority may dedicate land for parks, playgrounds, and other recreational facilities, for sewers, for the opening or widening of streets, for incidental improvements, or for any other public purpose, and may grant licenses and easements upon such terms as it deems reasonable.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator that as soon as I can catch the eye of the Vice President I intend to offer an amendment right at that point. I shall now read the amendment, because of the Senator's reference to that portion of the bill.

The amendment is on page 54, line 18, to strike out the period after the word "reasonable" and to insert the following:

> Provided, That upon the certification of the Secretary of the Interior that persons owning lands not suitable for agricultural purposes within existing and authorized national parks or national forests have tendered satisfactory options for their sale to the United States for national-park purposes, the Authority may allocate to the said Secretary not to exceed $1,000,000 for their acquisition so the vendors may rehabilitate themselves on other lands more suitable for agricultural purposes.

I submitted that amendment to the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. WAGNER], and I am very hopeful that he will accept it. That will in small measure tend to distribute the funds to the extent mentioned, and, in my judgment, will add greatly to the benefits of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York should accept the amendment which will be offered by the Senator from Tennessee, the State of the Senator from Tennessee will perhaps be provided an opportunity to procure a few hundred thousand dollars for one purpose or another, and so we shall find——

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I did not mean it that way. My proposed amendment will not instruct the Authority as to what it shall do; it is not binding on the controlling body; but it will authorize the Authority to do just what the bill in subsection (f) on page 54 provides. It lodges with us the benefits of that section, and will apply to any portion of the country—not to the Senator's State particularly, not to my State particularly, not to the State of New York particularly, but to any portion of the country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] will accept it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in order that every Senator here may be placed in the position of procuring for his State a part and portion of the $700,000,000—which, of course, he will want to do—I hope the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] will be accepted by the Senator from New York.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest that we strike out the title and call this a "pork barrel" bill, so that $700,000,000 may be distributed to the States. Of course, however, I am opposed to the amendment suggested by my friend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], or to any amendment that would result in the bill being characterized as a "pork barrel" bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the amendment would not cause the bill to be characterized as such at all. It merely provides that all portions of our country may have an opportunity to present their claims under the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the committee amendment.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I am wondering whether in this connection we may be informed as to what the pending amendment is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Mr. TYDINGS' amendment, offered as a substitute for Mr. ADAMS' amendment to the committee amendment, is as follows:

> That no State, either in the form of a loan or grant or subsidy, shall receive more than 10 percent of the funds included in this act.

ESTATE OF CHARLES PRATT

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. GIBSON], who is absent on senatorial duties, I ask unanimous consent that there be laid before the Senate the action of the House on Senate bill 449.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 449) for the relief of the estate of Charles Pratt, which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out all after "Corps," down to and including all of line 7 and insert "to the administrator of the estate of Charles Pratt, deceased, formerly of Chittenden County, Vt., the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the United States", and on page 1, line 11, after "1934", to insert a comma and "which injuries contributed to his death a few months thereafter."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot conclude the consideration of the bill tonight. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as chairman of the Commitee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably from that committee the following nominations:

George D. Hopper, of Kentucky, now a Foreign Service officer of class 4 and a consul, to be a consul general.

Robert Frazer, of Pennsylvania, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and consul general at London, England, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to El Salvador, vice Frank P. Corrigan;

Frank P. Corrigan, of Ohio, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to El Salvador, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Panama, vice George T. Summerlin;

Frederick A. Sterling, of Texas, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Bulgaria, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Estonia and Latvia; and Arthur Bliss Lane, of New York, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Yugoslavia, vice Charles S. Wilson.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably Executive U, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, being an international agreement for the regulation of whaling, signed at London, June 8, 1937, and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 18) thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Agnes Van Driel, of Illinois, to be Chief, Division of Technical Training.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] yesterday asked me to allow that nomination to go over. Today he has asked me to let it go back to the committee. I have no objection; and the Senator from Illinois now will speak for himself.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to have it understood in the Senate that proceedings have taken place in connection with this nomination which the Senate ought to understand and fully disapprove.

Here is a nomination sent to the Senate in connection with the Social Security Board and charged to the State of Illinois. It develops upon investigation that my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH] does not know the lady, nor has the Representative from her district ever heard that she ever lived in the district. I have never been honored even by having been asked to present her name to the Senate. An investigation develops, however, that one of the heads of the Department had known the lady sometime ago. The lady is now in Europe, and he finds her name agreeable to be sent in here and nominated as a member of the Board and charged to the State of Illinois, because it develops that once she attended the University of Chicago.

I beseech the Senate that this nomination be returned to the appropriate committee, and I join the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] in requesting that investigation then be made as to how this lady came to be named and charged to the State of Illinois, and that the official who is responsible for this kind of conduct be brought before the committee for appropriate examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James L. Houghteling, of Illinois, to be Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters on the calendar.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, August 5, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Albert P. Shirkey, pastor of the Francis Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church South, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, in whom alone is peace and victory, grant us in this hour the consciousness of Thy presence. In humble gratitude we turn to Thee as a people. Thy mercies have been without number. In Thy strength, and Thy strength alone, have we met our overwhelming trials. It is Thy hand that has guided us when the path was dark and the way was steep. "Lord God of Hosts be with us yet, lest we forget."

We thank Thee that we still believe that Thy kingdom can come and Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. In this task we bless Thee that we have Thy grace to assist us. We thank Thee for this ideal that leaps the barriers of race and creed and girds us in the common task to make known to the unfortunate that we are not only our brother's keeper but our brother's brother.

Bless Thou the President of our United States. We are grateful that Thou hast seen fit to raise him up as our national leader. We thank Thee for the work he has done. Comfort his heart. Give him peace of mind. Grant unto him the spirit of wisdom and understanding in all things.

We thank Thee for our national leaders, for their consecration of time, and talents, and means. We thank Thee for this same spirit of unselfishness, through them, that has taken hold of the heart of the Nation. We thank Thee for their leadership that has brought abundance of life to little children, strength and courage to men and women, and that has safeguarded the lives of youth. God grant that when they stand at the throne of Thy judgment they shall not have reason to be ashamed but in confidence shall expect "Well done."

O Lord, this is a day that is trying the souls of men. We pray that those who lead us and represent us may prove themselves men of God. May the spirit of the lowly Nazarene be theirs—"I came not to be ministered unto but to minister." We know not what the future holds of marvel or surprise, but grant that it shall find written upon our minds and hearts "In God we trust."

In our own security we cannot help but feel the pain of other peoples. We thank Thee for peace within our own borders. Hear our prayer for peace throughout the whole wide earth. In the name of the Prince of Peace we ask it. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ANALYSIS OF THE WAGE-HOUR-CHILD-LABOR BILL

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a brief analysis of the bill (S. 2475) to provide for the establishment of fair labor standards in employments in and affecting interstate commerce, including minimum wages, maximum hours, and child labor, and for other purposes. This analysis contains no comment whatever, but is only a naked, boiled-down analysis of the bill. I think this will be the most important measure to come before the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress. I know from contacting many Members that they have not had and probably will not have time to read this rather lengthy bill. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this analysis in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has suggested we are going to pass the most important bill of this session and that the Members of Congress will not even have time to read it. I hope the gentleman is wrong, because we certainly should at least have time to read the bill before we are compelled to vote upon it. Which bill does the gentleman mean?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am referring now to the bill S. 2475, which has passed the Senate and is now before the House Committee on Labor.

Mr. MICHENER. I shall not object, but I hope the gentleman will intercede with somebody in authority, so we shall at least have time enough to read the bill before we are compelled to vote upon it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say that I shall take pleasure in furnishing a copy of the bill to the gentleman as soon as I get off the floor.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a request to bring up the labor bill at this time?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; this is just a request to insert in the RECORD a brief analysis of the major provisions of the bill.

Mr. RICH. I want the gentleman to know we are not going to let that bill be brought up here by surprise.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to print the analysis for the benefit of my dear friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

ANALYSIS OF MAJOR PROVISIONS OF S. 2475, THE WAGE-HOUR-CHILD-LABOR BILL

LEGISLATIVE DECLARATION

Section 1: Declares that the employment of workers under substandard labor conditions in occupations in interstate commerce, in the production of goods for interstate commerce, (1) causes interstate commerce and the channels and instrumentalities thereof to be used to spread substandard working and living conditions; (2) directly burdens interstate commerce in the free flow of goods; (3) constitutes an unfair method of competition in interstate commerce; (4) leads to labor disputes affecting interstate commerce; (5) directly interferes with the orderly and fair marketing of goods in interstate commerce. Requires remedial legislation.

Definitions: Interstate commerce, employer, employee, etc.

CLASSES OF EMPLOYEES EXEMPTED FROM THE ACT

Section 2: List of exemptions from the word "employee", which means exemption from the act. The exact words are set out: Executive, administrative, professional, local retailing capacity, seaman, railroad employee, employee common carrier by motor vehicle, air-transport employee, express company, taking of fish, sea foods or sponges, agriculture, farming in all its branches, cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, forestry, horticulture, market gardening, cultivation and growing of fruits, vegetables, nuts, nursery products, ferns, flowers, bulbs, livestock, bees, poultry. (Also includes definitions in the Agricultural Marketing Act.)

Any other agricultural or horticultural commodity.

Any practices ordinarily performed by a farmer or on a farm as an incident to such farming operations, including delivery to market.

LABOR STANDARDS BOARD

Section 3 sets up a Labor Standards Board, composed of five members, appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate. Consideration to be given to industrial and geographic regions. The term of office is 5 years and the salary $10,000 per year. The Board may employ certain skilled personnel without regard to the provisions of the civil service. All other employees are subject to the civil-service laws. This section vests the Board with the usual administrative powers of boards and commissions.

MINIMUM WAGES, MAXIMUM HOURS

Section 4 gives tthe Board power to establish minimum wages, not more than 40 cents per hour, and maximum hours, not less than 40 hours per week.

SEASONAL EXEMPTIONS FROM HOURS

When the services are seasonal, section 4 exempts certain activities from the hour provisions of the act, leaving them subject to the wage provisions of the act. They are as follows:

Ginning and baling of cotton.

Canning, packing, packaging of fish, sea foods, sponges.

Picking, canning, processing of fruits, vegetables.

Processing beets, cane, maple into sugar and sirup.

Plant located in dairy production areas in which milk, cream, butterfat are processed, shipped, or manufactured if owned by a cooperative as defined in the Farm Credit Act.

Processing or packing perishable agricultural products during harvesting season.

CONSIDERATIONS IN FIXING WAGES

Section 4 provides that in fixing minimum wages the Board shall consider:

The cost of living.

Transportation costs and freight rates where discriminatory.

Local economic conditions.

Value of services which would be relevant in a lawsuit where services are rendered without contract.

Wages established for like work by collective labor agreements under collective bargaining.

Wages paid for like work by employers who voluntarily maintain minimum-wage standards.

CONSIDERATIONS IN FIXING HOURS

The section also provides that in fixing the maximum workweek the board shall consider—

Relation of the work to physical and economical health, efficiency, and well-being of employee;

Number of persons available for employment in the occupation;

Hours of employment for like work by collective labor agreements under collective bargaining;

Hours of employment for like work maintained by employers who voluntarily maintain a maximum workweek.

COLLECTIVE-BARGAINING AGREEMENTS PROTECTED

Section 5: Provides that nothing in the act shall be construed to interfere with, impede, or diminish the right of employees to bargain collectively, to obtain a wage in excess of the minimum, or a shorter workweek than the maximum, or otherwise to obtain benefits and advantages not required by the act.

This section also provides that a minimum wage shall not be deemed illegal or unfair because it is in excess of the minimum of the act, and the maximum workweek will not be deemed illegal or unfair because it is shorter than the maximum under the act.

EXEMPTIONS FROM LABOR STANDARDS WITH RESPECT TO WAGES AND HOURS—OVERTIME—APPRENTICES—DISABLED EMPLOYEES

Section 6: Where necessary, and under regulations, employees may work overtime, at time-and-a-half pay.

Where the board finds that the special character of the employment or limited qualifications of employees makes such employment justifiable, it may permit employment at a wage lower or for a workweek longer than the standards of the act.

Apprentices may by order work at a lower wage than the minimum, subject to time limitations fixed by the act.

The board may also license the employment of persons impaired by age, physical or mental deficiency, or injury at wages lower than the standard.

The board may permit overtime employment in seasonal or peak activities, maintenance, repair, or other emergency work at pay not exceeding time and a half.

PROHIBITION OF SHIPMENT IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Section 7: Prohibits the transportation, delivery, or sale in interstate commerce of goods produced in violation of the labor standards of the act, or to employ under substandard labor conditions any employee engaged in interstate commerce or in production of goods intended for such transportation and sale.

PROTECTION OF STATES FROM SUBSTANDARD LABOR CONDITIONS IN OTHER STATES

Section 8: Empowers the Board to require the elimination of substandard labor conditions and maintenance of standard conditions in States producing goods which compete with other States having standard labor conditions.

TARIFF STUDIES ON COST OF PRODUCTION

The section provides for the study of differences in cost of production at home and abroad with a view to determining whether tariff changes should be made to equalize such differences.

CLASSIFICATION OF AND DIFFERENTIATIONS BETWEEN EMPLOYERS, EMPLOYEES, AND LOCALITIES WITHIN AN OCCUPATION

Section 9: Provides that the Board may classify employers, employees, and employments within an occupation according to (1) localities, (2) population of communities, (3) number of employees, (4) nature and volume of goods, (5) such other differentiating circumstances as the Board finds necessary.

It is declared the policy of the Board to avoid the adoption of any classification which effects an unreasonable discrimination against any person or locality.

This section also declares it to be "the policy of the Board to establish such minimum-wage standards as will affect only those employees in need of legislative protection, without interfering with the voluntary establishment of appropriate differentials and higher standards for other employees in the occupation."

It also provides for restrictions or prohibition of industrial home work as the Board may find necessary to prevent circumventions or evasions.

HEARINGS

Section 10: Provides that labor standard orders shall be made, modified, or rescinded only after a hearing.

Notice of the hearing must be given by publication in the Federal Register not less than 10 days before the hearing. The hearing shall be public and records kept.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Section 11: Provides that before making an order establishing a minimum wage or a maximum week for employees in any occupation, an advisory committee shall be appointed by the Board, composed of an equal number of persons representing the employers and the employees in such occupation and not more than three disinterested persons representing the public.

The committee shall investigate and report information necessary to a fair determination. The Board may accept or reject in whole or in part the recommendations of the committee or resubmit the matter to a new committee.

INVESTIGATIONS

Section 12: Empowers the Board to make investigations and gather data, subpena witnesses, compel attendance, take testimony, require production of records, and invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts thereon.

ENFORCEMENT

Section 13: Authorizes the Board to bring an action in the proper district court of the United States to enforce compliance.

RECORDS—LABELS

Section 14: Requires the keeping by employers of wage and hour records and the posting of orders issued by the Board. The section empowers the Board to require that goods subject to the act shall be labeled with information deemed necessary to assure compliance. No person other than the producer shall be prosecuted for transportation or sale of unfair goods who has secured a representation in writing from the consignor that the goods are not produced in violation of the act.

BOARD MAY UTILIZE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Section 15: Empowers the Board to utilize the Department of Labor in making investigations and inspections. Authorizes the Secretary of Labor to cooperate with State agencies, with the consent of the State agency.

BOARD MAY ISSUE, CHANGE ORDERS

Section 16: Authorizes the Board to issue, amend, and rescind regulations and orders when necessary; and relates to other usual procedure.

VALIDITY OF CONTRACT

Section 17: Declares invalid any contract or understanding in violation of the act.

RECOVERY FOR UNDERPAY AND OVERWORK

Section 18: Authorizes recovery by employees for underpay or overwork, by a civil action, together with costs and attorneys' fees.

RELATION TO OTHER LAWS

Section 19: No provision of the act shall justify noncompliance with any Federal, State, or local law establishing a higher minimum wage or a lower maximum week than established by the act.

COMMON CARRIERS EXEMPT

Section 20: Exempts from liability or penalty any common carrier transporting goods in the regular course of its business.

COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

Section 21: Provides for review in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals by any person aggrieved to by any order of the Board.

JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

Section 22: Vests jurisdiction in district courts of the United States of violations of the act, and, concurrently with State courts, of all suits and actions at law to enforce any liability or duty under the act.

PENALTIES

Section 23: Fixes the penalties at a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both. The case of each employee constitutes a separate offense. The discharge of the employee for filing a complaint or testifying in an investigation is within the penalty clause. The making of false statements and refusals to testify are also within it.

CHILD LABOR

Section 24: (A) Provides that all goods produced after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, and transported in interstate commerce, shall upon arrival and delivery in any State be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State as though produced therein.

(B) Makes it unlawful to transport or aid or assist in transporting any goods produced after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, from one State to another in violation of any law of such State.

(C) Makes it unlawful to transport or aid or assist in transporting any goods produced on or after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, unless the goods are conspicuously labeled as set forth in the section, including on the label the name and address of the shipper and consignee, the nature of the goods, and a summary statement of the kind of work in which child labor was utilized.

(D) Makes it unlawful for any person who has produced goods wholly or in part through the use of child labor, on or after January 1, 1938, to knowingly transport such goods in interstate commerce.

This furnishes a three-way approach to the constitutional question.

CHILD LABOR DEFINED

(E) Defines child labor as employment of a person under the age of 16 years and as employment of a person under 18 years at extra hazardous work.

(F) Carries a penalty by fine of not more than $1,000 and forfeiture of the goods to the United States.

In any proceeding under the section a showing that "the goods" were produced wholly or in part by child labor subsequent to January 1, 1938, and within 6 months after the date of the alleged violation, at a place of employment where "said goods" were so produced, would be prima-facie evidence that the goods were produced through the use of child labor.

The Secretary of Labor, through the Children's Bureau, is charged with the enforcement of the child-labor section.

Section 25: Separability clause.

Section 26: Effective 120 days after enactment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief editorial from a Virginia paper with respect to the provisions of the bill (H. R. 7681) to provide grants in aid to the States for conservation purposes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suppose the gentlemen on this side of the aisle all know that putting newspaper editorials in the RECORD is contrary to the rules of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MAVERICK. No; it is not.

Mr. RICH. I said it was. Yet you let them go in. Are you going to continue this policy? If you are, all right; but it is wrong.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I take the responsibility, and I am not going to object to the request of the gentleman from Virginia. However, I do want to reserve the right to object to make this statement:

I think the insertion in the RECORD of newspaper articles and newspaper editorials is a bad practice. I think it is a practice which is and will be embarrassing to us all if it is continued. I trust Members will not in the future ask permission to insert newspaper editorials in the RECORD.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not objecting to the request of the gentleman from Virginia, and I stated in the beginning I was not going to object to his request. I have been put on this kind of a spot many times myself but have never inserted one such article in the RECORD in my life. The situation is that some friend may see an editorial in some paper in my district and think it ought to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I am not going to insert such an editorial in the RECORD, but it makes it embarrassing for some of us who do not insert such matters to have editorials from papers in other districts in other States go into the RECORD.

I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from Texas has stated. It does seem to me there should be some way an understanding could be reached between the two bodies on the subject of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have seen periods—and we do it periodically over here—in which the House scrupulously tries to protect the RECORD. What happens? Some constituent sends an article or an editorial to a Member of the House and asks him to place it in the RECORD. The Member writes back and tells the constituent he is sorry he cannot do it because we are trying to protect the RECORD. The constituent sends the article to a Senator, and the Senator jams it into the RECORD.

So far as I am concerned, I believe the RECORD ought to be protected against all kinds of articles and a lot of other stuff which goes into the RECORD that is both needless and expensive, and does not raise the House in the estimation of the people of the country who read the RECORD. However, as long as the other body is going to put such material in the RECORD at random, I do not think the rule ought to be invoked against the Members of this body.

Mr. RAYBURN. Frankly, I think the two committees on printing, or the Joint Committee on Printing, might make some arrangement by which the RECORD would be protected in the House and in the Senate. It is pretty hard to have the RECORD protected here, and then, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has stated, have the material go into the RECORD through another body.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say that I agree with the majority leader. The chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing [Mr. LAMBETH] and the late Speaker Byrns made complete statements to the House last year regarding this matter, and the House at that time agreed with them.

I may say that the record of the House is better than that of the Senate with regard to inserting extraneous material in the RECORD. I wrote Senator HAYDEN earlier this year and asked if the Senate would desist from this practice, and he stated he thought it could be accomplished. However, if Senator HAYDEN, who is a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, has taken the matter up with the Senate the Senate has not acted upon it to my knowledge. It is a shame they have not done so. I claim it is the fault of the Senate that they are not taking some action so that the Joint Committee on Printing has not come in here with a definite rule. I am pleased that the majority leader is trying to hold this down. If we do our duty, then it is up to the Senate, and they will be responsible for the extraneous matter which goes into the RECORD. The RECORD is not the proceeding of Congress; it is a journal of everybody's thoughts throughout the Nation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an editorial on the Dust Bowl situation and its effect on California, a very constructive and illuminating article.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to take issue with the statements that have been made with reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There is a great deal said on the floor about the extra cost of these insertions into the RECORD. As a matter of fact, there is practically no extra cost. We already have the Government Printing Office, we have the employees on the roll, and we have the machinery. The only extra cost is simply the cost of the ink and the paper.

There are a great many of these editorials, let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] and other Members of the House, that discuss questions before the Congress in a specific way and in a better way, perhaps, than the Member could do it himself, and he wants the rest of the membership to have the advantage of it and therefore asks that it be put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Not only this, but I know there has been constant opposition to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from certain publications throughout the country, but the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the greatest editorial publication in the world. It is the only one where the material that goes into it is scrutinized before it is ever printed, not by one man but by 434 Members. It gives people information that is stated on the floor under cross-examination or under the most careful scrutiny. I do not agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I do not agree with my other colleagues who contend that we are piling an additional burden upon the American people by liberalizing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and making it a real, live publication.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I may say that I have never asked this privilege before and I would not ask it now except that this editorial deals with a problem in which every person in the United States is interested.

Mr. RANKIN. Why, of course.

Mr. COLDEN. And it contains a great deal of interesting information.

Mr. RANKIN. Instead of making an ironclad rule here to try to exclude material from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, let every article that is proposed stand on its own merits, and if Members think that someone is trying to put something in the RECORD that is improper, then object to that; but I believe in liberalizing the RECORD for the purpose of giving the Congress and the country information.

Mr. COLDEN. I may also say to the gentleman that there is no partisanship in this article.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be a record of the happenings of Congress or is it to be a publication that anything can be put into, including editorials from California to New York, or if anyone in this country wants to say something, he can have it put into the RECORD? Many people think it contains the facts with respect to proceedings, but when you add a lot of editorials there is about as much bunk as facts.

Mr. RANKIN. You can object to them individually if you care to do so, but a great many of the articles ought to go into the RECORD, because they are informative.

I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the majority leader has just made a statement as to what he considers wise procedure for the House to take in this matter, and then we find that a Member immediately rises and asks unanimous consent to do away with what the majority leader has suggested.

I believe there ought to be one rule for all Members, and that there should not be any discrimination. If one Member is going to have the right to extend editorials and newspaper articles in the RECORD, every other Member in the House must have the same right. I think while the gentleman is now making his request we should establish the policy, and if his request is granted, then the same procedure should be followed with respect to other Members of the House.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that a number of such requests have come from his side of the House, and I have never objected.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not going to object to the gentleman's request, either. I am simply saying that if the gentleman is permitted to put in the editorial after the statement of the majority leader, then every other Member of the House must have the same right.

Mr. COLDEN. The majority leader probably would not have objected if he had read the editorial.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have not objected to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

(Mr. MAVERICK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

FARM LEGISLATION

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that the farmers of this Nation are about to be crushed between two stones.

Due to the great difference of opinion between the representatives of the several organized farm groups, said to include less than 20 percent of the farmers of the Nation, and the inability to determine the wishes and what is for the best interest of the remaining 80 percent, the committees on Agriculture of the House and Senate have announced that they will not be able to report a bill for permanent farm legislation at the present session of the Congress.

Then last night the President is reported as stating that he has no intention of asking Congress to authorize loans on this year's crop or exercising the loaning powers now vested in the Commodity Credit Corporation, unless and until crop control legislation is enacted.

In the meantime the price of farm products is rapidly declining, and I am fearful that this statement by the President will accelerate the fall in price. We have this year the most expensive cotton crop ever produced in the South and already the price is below the cost of production.

On top of this we are told that we must enact at this session the pending wage and hour bill and the pending slum-clearance bill, both of which will add considerably to the cost of every necessity the farmer must buy.

Such a program is unfair to the millions who labor from daylight to dark and produce the food and clothing for this Nation. I appeal to the Committees on Agriculture to help us in this hour of distress. I appeal to the President to authorize loans to bolster the rapidly declining market, and I appeal to the Rules Committee of this House not to place on the calendar this other class legislation until the farmers, the greatest class on earth, are properly provided for.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table, not very long.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Chicago Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUGAR

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution for printing under the rule, which was referred to the House Calendar:

Resolution 297

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7667, a bill to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the business of today, and the special orders heretofore granted, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL ROAD CONGRESS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State, to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Eighth International Road Congress, to be held at The Hague in June 1938.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 4, 1937.

[Enclosure: Report.]

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. Today is Calendar Wednesday.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-four Members are present, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. COCHRAN further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7373. An act to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1047. An act to authorize the city of Pierre, S. Dak., to construct, equip, maintain, and operate on Farm Island, S. Dak., certain amusement and recreational facilities; to charge for the use thereof; and for other purposes;

S. 1129. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept from the State of Utah title to a certain State-owned section of land and to patent other land to the State in lieu thereof, and for other purposes;

S. 1266. An act to authorize the city of Chamberlain, S. Dak., to construct, equip, and maintain tourist cabins on American Island, S. Dak., to operate and maintain a tourist camp and certain amusement and recreational facilities on such island, to make charges in connection therewith, and for other purposes; and

S. 1379. An act to authorize the Five Civilized Tribes, in suits heretofore filed under their original jurisdictional acts, to present claims to the United States Court of Claims by amended petitions to conform to the evidence; and to authorize the said court to adjudicate such claims upon their merits as though filed within the time limitation fixed in said original jurisdictional acts.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7472) entitled "An act to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

ALLOWING CREDIT FOR OUTSTANDING DISALLOWANCES AND SUSPENSIONS IN ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. COCHRAN (when the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I call up the bill (S. 1935) to authorize and direct the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit for all outstanding disallowances and suspensions in the accounts of disbursing officers or agents of the Government for payments made pursuant to certain adjustments and increases in compensation of Government officers and employees.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1935; and, pending that motion, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if we can agree on time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is proper to state to the gentleman that under the rules the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill, inasmuch as it is on the Union Calendar. The rules also provide for 1 hour of debate on each side.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a request of the gentleman.

I had understood that Union Calendar No. 5015, the C. W. A. bill, was to be called up first. Is that correct?

Mr. COCHRAN. The Committee acted on Senate 1935 first, and I think it is only proper that we call up that bill first.

Mr. GIFFORD. Under the requests I have, I shall have to demand time for this side. I wanted it on the other bill. If the gentleman would present the other bill first, it might be I would be willing to agree on the other bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why not present this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole and dispose of it, and then call up the other bill immediately? That will expedite matters.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1935.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1935, with Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill against which we hope nobody in the House will vote. This is merely a matter of bookkeeping. It will call for no voting of money out of the Treasury. None of the gentlemen on the left will have to ask, Where will the money come from? The money has already come and has already gone.

It involves quite a number of items and harks back to the newest day of the New Deal. It is recommended by the Department of the Interior.

You heard the reading of the bill. This is the reason this law has to be written on the books. In fact, it has already passed the Senate and it passed the committee of the House without a dissenting vote. The committee voted unanimously recommending the passage of the bill. Not a voice was raised against it in committee.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I only have 10 minutes. If the gentleman will wait about 5 minutes, I will yield.

Now, this has come in this shape: The new measures for disbursing moneys were really arms of the old departments. When the New Deal was voted and the C. W. A. and the C. C. C. and the P. W. A. and those departments came in, it necessitated a jumping up of salaries and involved some lightning bookkeeping. In some cases they would report a man's salary for a slight increase under Executive order that the Attorney General had allowed and had ruled legal. In some of the other departments there was a clash of opinion between the Comptroller's department and the Attorney General. The Attorney General wrote an opinion allowing the President to jump up some of these men who were at work in a new department, up to, say, $1,000 a year or $3,000 a year. Lord knows they were getting little enough, but acting on that, this was done under Executive order which ran until July 1, 1935. So Congress, in passing the New Deal laws, did not prevent this dual method of bookkeeping. It is just as though you made a trough for a pig pen. The first time you put water or food in it it will always leak a little somewhere. It is amazing that the leaks were no greater in size and in number.

This report shows something over 12,000,000 items. The shortage is less than one-half of 1 percent up to that date, July 1, 1935. The whole thing will run now to about $200,000. Remember, that the money has already been paid out. What we want to do today is to charge it off as bookkeeping. We think that no more just law was ever passed or ever will be passed. It is not as though we had to reach down into Uncle Sam's long jeans for more money; it is merely a matter of adjustment. The Senate report shows actual items aggregating something like $172,000. This lacks just a little of being all of it.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Would the gentleman kindly give us an illustration of one of these items and tell us how the items accrued and why?

Mr. PATRICK. The Attorney General wrote an opinion in which he stated that he believed an Executive order under which this was paid would allow the salaries of those working under these departments to be increased, and that it was justified.

Mr. TABER. But at the same time he knew that the Comptroller General had ruled that these salaries were being paid at an excessive figure.

Mr. PATRICK. The Attorney General had written his opinion. The Comptroller General disagreed. That difference of opinion is still outstanding; there is still disagreement between these two departments.

Mr. TABER. On the 4th of April 1934, according to the report, the Attorney General rendered his opinion, stating that the situation was as the gentleman said. On the 19th of April, in the report accompanying the bill, is another letter from the Attorney General indicating that he knew the Comptroller General had already ruled that the act was illegal and that the salaries that could be paid under the rulings of the Comptroller General were much less than the ones he advised could be paid.

Mr. PATRICK. There had been communications between the Attorney General and the legal department. The Attorney General disagreed and stated that in his opinion he did not think the Department was in error. He still stands by that statement, and the opinion of the Attorney General still stands on record. To ease everybody's pain, however, why should we not pass this bill and charge the whole thing off, properly?

Mr. TABER. Why should we pass a bill when an outfit has deliberately gone contrary to the ruling of the Comptroller General as to the expenditure of money?

Mr. PATRICK. What does the gentleman mean by "an outfit"?

Mr. TABER. For instance, this P. W. A. outfit.

Mr. PATRICK. P. W. A. did not do it; and Mr. Ickes paid what he was asked to pay P. W. A., like all others.

Mr. TABER. They paid a rate of salary which the Comptroller General had ruled was illegal, and which they knew the Comptroller General had ruled was illegal.

Mr. PATRICK. Under an opinion of the Attorney General and under the Executive order of the President of the United States. What more authority could they want?

Mr. KELLER. Which is the higher authority?

Mr. TABER. The Comptroller General, under the budgetary law, has the authority to fix the accounts of all the officers of this Government.

Mr. PATRICK. But there was an Executive order from the President of the United States on this very subject.

Mr. TABER. The Comptroller General had the authority to do that.

Mr. PATRICK. The Attorney General said the President had that authority and the money was paid under his opinion. We are now seeking to pass a law to make it right, so that there cannot be any dispute between the Attorney General and anybody else, even a Republican. If any mistake was made, it was an initial mistake of Congress in not making proper provision. I was not a Member at that time. I just came here in January, but, being here, I am just as much a part of Congress as any other Member. I say had the law been properly framed this mistake would not have arisen at all. It is nothing short of the duty of Congress now to rectify the mistake and to write off these disallowances. It will do no good to let them stand on the books, for certainly Uncle Sam is not going out into every little town and hamlet in the United States and try to collect this money. It would cost $50 for every 50 cents that could be collected.

Mr. CHURCH. It will not cost anybody a cent.

Mr. PATRICK. No.

Mr. CHURCH. What would happen if we did not pass this bill?

Mr. PATRICK. It would remain as it is now, a disallowance charged as a deficit.

Mr. CHURCH. Then this bill is not needed.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman says we do not need it. Let us pass it anyhow. It will not do any harm, even according to the gentleman's construction of the matter.

Mr. STEFAN. As I understand, this $200,000 had already been paid out?

Mr. PATRICK. Certainly; every dime of it. It was paid out before July 1, 1935, and it is carried as a disallowance against the departments, against the War Department, under which came the C. C. C.; against the Interior Department, the Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, one item against the Civil Works Administration, and one item of $3 against the Department of Commerce, all running to and already accounted for $172,000, and it will not run over $200,000.

Mr. GIFFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] opposed to the bill?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I trust the House will not be too impatient. I have had many requests for time on this side of the aisle. Personally I do not wish to be blamed for insisting on the time properly allowable to our side for discussion of this bill. It is small wonder that the Members on that side of the aisle do not want to discuss these bills. We did not expect that. Theirs can only be a defense. I hope that some constructive criticism may be advanced during the debate. It would seem that both of these bills might be considered together.

I call attention to the fact these letters in the reports are dated 1934. In this bill, however, they ask forgiveness for all that happened in the year 1935. The experience they had the first year of getting into trouble did not seem to prevent repetition. They see but little risk in its continuation. Here is a case involving the advice of the President's own Attorney General. Has not the Attorney General got him into trouble enough already? Is it not to be expected that an administration which has Executive orders would be backed by its own Attorney General? With our experiences of the law, we know it is easy to find ways and loopholes to render favorable decisions. The Attorney General may find ways to back up his President, although the said Attorney General has led him badly astray on some matters lately. We have, therefore, the duty to scrutinize the opinions of the Attorney General when he differs from our own authority, the Comptroller General of the United States.

The Comptroller General says, in effect, in these reports, that we might as well throw up our hands; we cannot collect such small amount of money, although wrongfully spent, and why hold a few innocent disbursing officers, who should not be harassed for their obedience to those higher up? Some of these amounts are small amounts; but although small, cannot be recovered from the fellow who got the money. Certainly it will be difficult to get enough out of it to make it worth while to bring suits. So he practically admits that we might as well let them do anything they wish, and after 3 or 4 years come in here and be granted relief and absolution.

The gentleman who just spoke stated this bill was unanimously agreed to by the committee. I did not happen to be in the room when the committee finally agreed to report the bill, but even 2 years ago I would probably have voted in committee to have the bill considered on the floor of this House because it would have given us a splendid opportunity to discuss the situation. We are not now to let you forget the situation existing at the time.

I regret I have not an address I made on the subject in 1934. I hoped it was in this book that I have here. It has been misplaced. It contained some facts bearing on this matter. I want to remind you that the gay Mr. Hopkins, as we called him in those days, himself made statements about the rank frauds of the C. W. A. Yes, he made more emphatic statements about them than we did. Do you not remember those ejaculations of his about the C. W. A.?

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Is there any evidence in all these myriad of cases of one slightest tinge of fraud in connection with all of these disbursements?

Mr. GIFFORD. No evidence was allowed to be presented. When the Executive issued these orders it was interpreted to mean, "Hire any lawyer you want. Pay him any wages you desire, no matter what the Classification Act says, and no matter what the law says." And we know in many cases who were hired. We had it shown in many instances the many relatives and friends who were put on the pay roll. Why, it would be a shameful recording here if it were shown how politics were played with funds granted to relieve human misery.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. In referring to the favoritism shown in this matter, what does the gentleman refer to as favoritism here in these little items where a man was getting $35 or $36 a month? There is not a salary in here that runs over two or three thousand dollars a year.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, no wonder the gentleman wants to divert my attention from what I was saying. If you will look on page 7, you will see 5,000 disallowances in this bill, and the amounts run from a small amount of money to $400. Multiply 5,000 by 400, and it would not be so little.

I wish to bring to your attention that back in 1933 I voted for $3,300,000,000 for public works. We were anxious to let the President grant relief. The funds remained idle nearly up to Christmas, as they could not devise ways to spend the money. They could not get the plans ready to undertake projects of public works. I had the tables here one day, and I showed that in the whole of the State of California, where the need was very great, scarcely 100 men were allotted work even after 9 months. Christmas was coming on. So they suddenly thought of the C. W. A. Mr. Hopkins was told, "Get the money into the hands of our people before Christmas." They sent to even the wealthiest towns in the country that did not need money—yes; even wealthy towns in Massachusetts—half of the amount they were spending for relief and another sum to pay for putting people at any kind of work. All over the United States it was reported that men were getting checks and wondering why the checks were being received. They had not done a bit of work. It was probably the worst phase of political manipulation of funds that has ever been recited in American history. That is why we ask for an hour, and later still another hour, to comment on such conditions and perhaps take to heart the lesson to be learned from it.

We had our friend Harry Hopkins before the committee one morning only. I wanted him to explain these things. The majority would not let us have him except for that one morning, and at that meeting many members of the committee alighted on me. I had but time to discuss matters with Harry Hopkins. How they did protect him; and not another day would they give us. They would not let Tugwell come before the committee in order that we might investigate his expenditures. We have had to be content with such opportunities as are granted on this floor in order to get any attention. Only a few peanut bills have been allowed to be considered in that committee, supposed to watch expenditures. Perhaps I ought not to criticize the committee. They evidently worked with the leadership of the House, as perhaps they should. I have never claimed that the Republicans might attempt the same procedure, although they would not succeed if I were the chairman of the committee, and I do think you will believe that.

Now we have an opportunity, if desired, to recite the story of those days. The checks did get into the hands of the people before Christmas, and in many instances for doing nothing. When we opened that discussion with Mr. Hopkins, I went before the committee with a heavy folder filled with charges and complaints from all over the country. Sometimes you can get the facts. How can you get information? Make a little trouble and you will get plenty of information. I started to make trouble by criticizing C. W. A. I received plenty of facts and suggestions. I wrote Mr. Hopkins two very polite letters. He is the only head of a department who in my 16 years of experience here has refused to answer my letters. I simply asked him why he gave those checks to wealthy towns that did not need the money, whose tax rate was low, and which were looking after their poor people all right, but I received no answer.

We know the wages paid by Mr. Hopkins to the southern workers and how their Governors finally went to the President and said, "Do not pay $3.20. You have ruined our agriculture." They finally made Mr. Hopkins change some of his socialistic views and agree that in future he would pay only the local wage. However, he had about ruined southern agriculture by paying three or four times as much for labor in certain grades as those workers had ever received.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. They belonged to the party and they could not too openly criticize. As soon as they could they formulated another method, F. E. R. A., under which Washington took supreme authority. The State and local authorities had to have approval from Washington before they could get a little hole dug in the ground anywhere in the country unless it had been carefully inspected and approved by Federal men and quintuplet statements of all sorts filed before they could start work.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I have been reading this bill, which is rather short, and also the report of the committee. I think the sum involved in all of these discrepancies in accounts is approximately $250,000.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the other bill.

Mr. MAY. I heard the gentleman state, I think, that he voted for the appropriation of $3,880,000,000. It was $4,880,000,000 for which the gentleman and I voted.

Mr. GIFFORD. I said I hoped I did.

Mr. MAY. Laying aside every question of political interest, partiality, or prejudice, does the gentleman now think that a discrepancy of $250,000 in the expenditure of that vast sum, with the other appropriations, is unusual, and ought not to be expected in the accounts of this Government?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have explained fully to the gentleman that this is not a large amount, but 2 years ago I said I would vote for it so as to get it on the floor in order to have an opportunity to talk about it, and they withdrew it, and the committee said they wanted none of that backhanded support.

Mr. MAY. Does not the gentleman think that inasmuch as the amount is so small it would probably be cheaper to charge it off by some bookkeeping method than to try to collect it?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am against the bill simply because I have to be, or else make a precedent of great importance. I know how hopeless it is to collect it. You cannot remedy any of these frauds which have been perpetrated in the last few years. However, it is not necessary to legalize it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman used the word "fraud", which is absolutely unfair.

Mr. GIFFORD. I perhaps should reserve that until the C. W. A. bill comes up.

Mr. COCHRAN. There is nothing here to show there was fraud of any kind in connection with this matter.

Mr. GIFFORD. I withdraw it and shall apply it to the next bill that is to come up.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman has told the House he has requests from many Members on his side to make speeches on this bill. I want to know if the gentleman has anyone over there with the courage and the fairness, as Charley Dawes had on an occasion such as this in connection with another famous inquisition, to get up and tell the truth, that this money was spent to "lick" the depression.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not think the gentleman need have any compunctions about the people on this side lacking courage. Personally, I think I have shown enough of that, although not perhaps good judgment in doing so.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman think that paying employees $400 or $500 apiece more than the Classification Act allowed, in violation of the law, was helping to "lick" the depression?

Mr. GIFFORD. They claim that in this report, but the Comptroller General himself says, "It is no use; it is all wrong; but you cannot collect it, and it would be expensive to try to do so." He thinks we might as well get it off the books. It may cause us trouble in audits in the future.

I voted for the $3,300,000,000 because our President was the only President I had. It was the only relief bill I could vote up or down, and I have done the same on other occasions. I had tried to subtract, to amend, and to make constructive criticisms, but when I have been faced with the fact that that was the only bill I could vote up or down and that he was the only President I had, I sometimes have had to yield and vote for it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. When House Joint Resolution 117 came up authorizing the President to spend $4,880,000,000 it had section 6 in it, which was to the effect that "anyone criticizing this bill will be imprisoned for 2 years or be fined $5,000." I came to the conclusion when the President of the United States sent that bill up to the floor of the House that he was not fit to administer anything, and from that time on I have had no confidence in him.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the gentleman's viewpoint, and I reiterate that for 2 long years they have not dared face the effect of reporting this bill, while we have been waiting for this opportunity to at least get time to talk about these expenditures of the Government. We are asking for this time, therefore, that we may have such an opportunity, and it is perfectly in order, Mr. Chairman, to discuss expenditures. There is much that should be said on this subject.

Mr. Chairman, the other bill that is coming before us has a much worse odor to it, and I probably shall not take much further time, as I may wish later to speak on that particular subject, but these things do have an unpleasant odor. I wish it understood by this House that I have not been against everything done by this administration. My job has been to criticize expenditures and I want to appeal to you that I am not quite in the same class as indicated in this illustration. Once a man said to a lady, "That child of yours is spoiled", and she said, "'Taint so; all my children smell that way." [Laughter.] I do not want you to apply it to me although you feel like doing it. I try to recognize much of the good that has been accomplished, and I say again that he is the only President I have, I wish him well, but we on this side must curb you in your extravagances and remind you of many grievous errors.

Some of us are busy at this moment trying to look into a housing bill calling for a billion dollars to be given away, with no treasury whatever to take it from. Yet you are still pursuing these rainbows with no funds and with absolute fear to place more taxes on the people. We wonder where you are going! Do not begrudge us our opportunity to take 2 hours to criticize these important matters.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is an ideal opportunity for our Republican friends to take advantage of an unfortunate situation and inject politics into this debate, and, as the previous speaker has indicated, not say a word in reference to the merits of the bill.

Now, where does this legislation come from? The bill came to the House of Representatives and to the Senate in a letter from the executive branch of the Government calling attention to a situation that it asked to have corrected by passing legislation to relieve disbursing agents of what you might term liabilities brought about due to conflicting opinions between the Comptroller General's office and the Attorney General of the United States. That is how the legislation happens to be here today.

The Attorney General held in an official opinion that the President of the United States had the right to issue an Executive order to adjust the salaries of what might be called temporary or emergency employees. The Comptroller General's views were in conflict with the views of the Attorney General. Acting on the advice of his legal adviser, the President issued the Executive order and his Cabinet officers and other administrative officers adjusted the salaries in keeping with the Executive order.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not right now. Let me follow my line of thought.

It so happened during this emergency that disbursing officers through which to clear these expenditures were borrowed, you might say, from various departments.

Strange to say, in this instance most of the disbursing officers who are holding the bag are disbursing officers of the War Department, borrowed to clear the expenditures that were made as a result of the emergency appropriations of the Congress. Every unanimous-consent day, every Private Calendar day, we pass bills here relieving disbursing officers, and I challenge any Member to recall during the present Congress when anyone rose in his seat and objected to those bills. They passed without objection. But here comes a bill that has to do with some of the emergency expenditures, and so my good friends on the Republican side, especially the ranking member of the committee [Mr. GIFFORD]—whom I am pleased to call my friend—see an opportunity to talk a little politics.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a moment. The great majority of the employees who were benefited as a result of this Executive order have left the service. There is no opportunity to collect the money. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] said, the money is gone. What is the procedure under which the money could be collected? I wish you gentlemen would pay special attention to this explanation. The Comptroller General of the United States says to enter suit against the disbursing agents on their bond. That sounds good—let us say we will make the insurance company, the bonding company, the goat. Then the Government will be reimbursed. But when you do that, who is going to represent the Comptroller General of the United States in the courts? There is only one person who can represent the Comptroller General of the United States in such suits to recover under the bonds of the disbursing agents, and that happens to be the Attorney General. So the man who has said that the Comptroller General is wrong is the man who will have to go into the court and attempt to recover the money from the bonding company.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. In just a moment. Naturally if that be true, certainly the attorney for the bonding company will immediately call attention of the court to the fact that the attorney for the Government, the Attorney General, has issued an order which he will present as exhibit no. 1, in which he had notified the President of the United States that the Executive order which the President was about to issue was legal in every way, and, therefore, the attorney for the defendant will ask the court to dismiss the case, and what else can the court do? Therefore, how will you ever collect the money that has been paid to the temporary and emergency employees, probably seven-tenths or even nine-tenths of whom are no longer with the Government? This is nothing more than a bookkeeping transaction. No money has to be appropriated.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not just now. I desire to proceed for a moment and will then yield. It brings about a situation which your special committee on reorganization is confronted with and that is the constant dispute between the executive departments of the Govenment, the Attorney General, and the Comptroller General over the question of control of Government expenditures. It so happens that I have read considerable in reference to the right of a legislative body, be it the Congress of the United States or a State legislature, to control an appropriation after it has once been made. I have read a decision concurred in by a present Justice of our Supreme Court in a New York case, where the court held that the Legislature of New York did not have the power to control money after once the legislature has made the appropriation. The legisfature and the Congress could demand an accounting, but the question is, Can it exercise control after appropriating money?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes. I repeat the Congress no doubt can demand an accounting from the officials of the Government but there are numerous decisions where the right to control is denied. As I say, that is one of the important questions confronting your reorganization committee, at the present time, and it has given us no little concern. We have spent many, many hours discussing it. I do not know what conclusion we will eventually reach, but we are working on it, and do not be surprised if a bill does not come in here at this session of Congress upon the subject.

Getting back to this legislation, it is simply a matter of bookkeeping. The bill has already passed the Senate. There was no discussion in the Senate. The executive branch of the Government sent the bill to the Congress. What are we going to do? Shall we talk politics all afternoon about a measure that we are asked to pass to clear disbursing agents who are absolutely not responsible for the opinion of the Attorney General nor for the executive order issued by the President of the United States? I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, if this is a matter of bookkeeping, as the gentleman says, let me ask this question. If you have paymasters who are bonded by bonding companies, in which the insurance premium is paid for the purpose of having the paymasters make a distribution of Government funds according to law, then why should you exempt the bonding companies and make the taxpayers pay the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. I say to the gentleman if there was any fraud whatsoever in connection with this matter I would not be on the floor of the House speaking in support of the bill. The money is gone, and as I just explained, if you sue the disbursing agent on the bond, the only man who can enter suit for the Government of the United States is the man who has already decided that the Comptroller General of the United States is wrong in his interpretation of the law.

Mr. RICH. Then it is not a question of bookkeeping, but it is a question of good common-sense business methods; and if you have not got paymasters in the service capable of doing a thing and doing it right, you ought to get rid of them.

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me ask the gentleman a question in reply to his question. The gentleman is a big-business man. He has a big manufacturing plant in Pennsylvania. If he gave his paymaster orders to do something and his paymaster refused to objey him, what would he do? He would kick him out of the building. That is what he would do; and that is what would have happened to the disbursing agents of the Government if they had not followed the orders of their superiors.

Mr. RICH. If the laws you inculcated are wrong, you are asking the administration to do something that was not right, and then you are at fault. You and I, as Members of Congress, and this Congress, are at fault for passing such laws. There is no excuse for such business as that. It is contrary to all good, sound principles of business.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thought the gentlemen on that side of the aisle would go very far today, but I did not think there was any Member on that side who would get up and say that I am at fault in connection with this matter. I yield now to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Were these opinions to which the gentleman has referred rendered before the disbursements were made? I refer to the opinions by the Comptroller General.

Mr. COCHRAN. That I cannot say, but there was a question at issue. There was a controversy between the executive department and the Comptroller General. Then the legal adviser of the executive branch of the Government—the Attorney General—rendered an opinion to the President of the United States. Based on that opinion the President issued an Executive order and the President's subordinates carried out the Executive order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield myself 3 additional minutes in order that I may yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to ask the gentleman a question, his answer being extremely important to me. The gentleman is chairman of the committee. I am the ranking Member on this side on that committee. My question is, because of the recent ruling of the Comptroller General, with a certain trip to Europe to study cooperative methods from the money of the Commodity Credit Corporation, used at the express invitation of the President of the United States, and now the Comptroller General having ruled that each member of that expedition must make good; I ask the chairman of my committee now what attitude he is going to take when forgiveness is asked of our committee?

Mr. COCHRAN. When I have evidence presented to me and understand both sides of the question, I will be able to speak on the subject, and not until then.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I further ask if he thinks there would be any more chance of recovering it in any way?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will not discuss the question until I understand exactly what is involved. I do not have any knowledge that would warrant me in speaking on the subject. When I have the facts I will be perfectly willing to discuss it, but not until then.

Mr. GIFFORD. Did I not send the gentleman a complete abstract——

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not going to become involved about a controversy that has absolutely nothing to do with this legislation.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, it is exactly on all fours with this.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman said he challenged anyone to point to any objection on the Consent Calendar to these bills for the relief of disbursing officers. I would like the RECORD to show that the Claims Committee has objected to some of these bills and some of the bills have never come to the floor, because they have been objected to in the Claims Committee. There we have considered these bills on their merits. Where we thought they were meritorious bills we have recommended them to the House, but many bills have been stopped in the committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentleman that the committee of which I am chairman has likewise refused to report a great many bills of that character. I asked about bills that have been reported.

Now, in conclusion, let me impress upon the Members of this House that the representative of the Acting Comptroller General of the United States came before the committee, your committee, and recommended to the committee that this bill be passed. That is the recommendation of the Acting Comptroller General of the United States that was made to your committee on last Thursday. In the last Congress Comptroller General McCarl recommended to our committee that the bill be passed.

As I said, there is absolutely no politics in this legislation. This is a clear-cut matter. There is absolutely no chance whatever to recover the money. If you want to relieve the disbursing agents and clear the record, the way to do it is to pass this bill. If you do not, it is your responsibility and not mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk about this bill, and I want to talk about the kind of a bill it is and the purposes it accomplishes and the situation out of which it grows, so that when the Members of the House come to vote upon the bill they may know just the kind of methods they are asked to forgive.

After the $3,300,000,000 appropriation was passed in 1933 and after the $950,000,000 appropriation was passed for the C. W. A. in 1934, and after certain funds were authorized to be spent, amounting to upward of $500,000,000, at that time by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for so-called relief purposes, ruling were made by the Attorney General of the United States as to the amount of salary that could be paid to individual employees of the P. W. A. and affiliated organizations.

Under the budgetary law it is the absolute duty and power of the Comptroller General of the United States to fix the balances of all of the officers of the Government. He is the one who has the responsibility of determining the effects of the laws which relate to those disbursements. That is his responsibility. The Attorney General, after the Comptroller General had made the ruling that these salaries should not exceed the amount that is provided by Congress in the Classification Act, after the Comptroller General ruled that the act of Congress—that is, the Classification Act—fixing salaries applied to those employees who were working under P. W. A. and kindred organizations, the Attorney General makes a ruling that the salaries may be fixed by the President; so that every one of these disbursing officers whose acts you are asked to condone performed those acts deliberately after the decision of the Comptroller General as to their invalidity. Does the Congress want to go back upon the action of its own Comptroller General, who under the law has the power to do these things? Does Congress want to condone deliberate violations of the law? This is the point at issue.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman make the statement that this was all done after the Comptroller General's ruling had been made?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. PATRICK. Where does the gentleman get authority for that statement?

Mr. TABER. I hold in my hand a report by Mr. PATRICK, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, Report No. 1414, to accompany S. 1935. This is the authority for my statement. Let me call the gentleman's attention to what is stated in that report and then I shall be willing to take an explanation.

I find from the report that on April 4, 1934, the Attorney General made this ruling. On April 19 of the same year, 2 weeks later, he wrote another letter, which appears on pages 2 and 3, in which in the second paragraph on page 3 appears the statement that the Comptroller General had on February 20, 1934, ruled that these officers were subject to the Classification Act. I do not see how the gentleman can get away from his own report.

Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman hold that all of these payments were made after that?

Mr. TABER. Almost all of them were. Very few were made before that date.

Mr. PATRICK. But the Attorney General had then held that it could be done, had he not?

Mr. TABER. He ruled on April 9 that it could be done, but that was almost 2 months after the ruling of the Comptroller General which held that it could not be done; and the Comptroller General is the man charged by law under the authority of this Congress with the power, right, and duty of fixing the balances of the different officers of this Government. When a disbursing officer by mistake spends money in a way which might raise a question as to his authority for the expenditure, there might be doubt as to what should be done and that might be a case in which Congress should square his accounts; but when an officer deliberately, after the accounting officer who has the duty of fixing the balances goes ahead and spends money in violation of law and in violation of the law as fixed by the authority which has the right to fix those balances, I do not think that this Congress ought to pass a bill legalizing deliberate illegal acts. That is the way this bill appears to me. I do not look at it from any standpoint except the standpoint of the facts and the way the bill and the laws stand.

If we expect disbursing officers of the Government departments to respect the law as we lay it down, if we expect them to keep their disbursements within the provisions of the law, we must refuse to condone deliberate violations of the law and deliberate expenditures of funds which are not authorized by law. I hope that the House will consider this bill upon its merits, upon the facts that appear clear and undisputed, and that it will not put its stamp of approval upon expenditures by disbursing officers that are illegal. If we do not adopt this kind of policy there is no hope for representative government in the United States; and I hope that when the Members act on these questions they will vote for the law and not against the law.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, addressing myself first to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], I may say that when I said that he was responsible I did not mean that he personally was responsible. I meant the Members who passed the House joint resolution giving the President of the United States power to expend $4,880,000,000 without putting any strings to it were responsible. God forbid that I should say anything detrimental to the gentleman from St. Louis, because he is my friend, and I think he is a pretty good fellow. Why, I like him immensely.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman belongs to that group, I think, because he voted for that bill.

Mr. RICH. No; I did not vote for it.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman does not say he has voted against all relief appropriations. I am sure he does not want to convey that impression.

Mr. RICH. When I saw that House Joint Resolution 117, sent here by the President, contained a provision that anyone who disagreed with him would be fined $5,000 or imprisoned for 2 years, I made up my mind that anyone who asked that power of Congress was not responsible, and I broke with the President right there.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the President of the United States——

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. If the gentleman will be for me, I will be for him, and I will be for him on the outside, too. [Laughter.]

The objection I make to this legislation is that by law we require paymasters to be bonded and the Government pays bonding companies premiums to protect the Federal Treasury, so that the money will be expended as it should be according to law.

Then we come in here with a bill exonerating these bonding companies to the tune of $250,000. I say that is not good business.

If I were accused of being a businessman and voted for a resolution like this, I would think there was something wrong. If you people vote for it, you can form your own opinion.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is not nearly as bad as the one that will follow. That bill provides for the exoneration of paymasters to the extent of over $900,000. I think the Members of Congress ought to give a lot of consideration to these two bills before they are passed.

Of course, there is a difference between the Attorney General and the Comptroller General of the United States; but why is it that the President of the United States has not appointed a Comptroller General to look after the funds of the Federal Government? Why has he not appointed a man months and months ago, when the term of Mr. McCarl expired? I want to say there is something wrong. The President should have appointed that man a long time ago, but he has permitted this condition to continue. We do not know how much money has been loopholed out of the Federal Treasury on which we do not have a proper accounting.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman object to the former Republican Member of the House who is now Acting Comptroller General?

Mr. RICH. I do not care who the man may be who is Acting Comptroller General, if he does not do his duty according to law, whether he be Republican or Democrat. I hold no brief for Republicans and I hold no brief for Democrats when they do the wrong thing. The question I want to bring up here is that right is right and wrong is wrong.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman will give me some more time, I will.

Mr. COCHRAN. The former Comptroller General of the United States was Mr. McCarl, a Republican. The present Acting Comptroller General of the United States is a former Member of this body whom we all like, Dick Elliott. McCarl in the last Congress and the other in this Congress, through their representatives, appeared before the House committee and asked that committee to pass this bill. If the gentleman cannot follow a former secretary of the Republican congressional committee, Mr. McCarl, and a former Republican Member of this House, who is he going to follow?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, if the President of the United States had done his duty he would have appointed a good, sound Democrat to succeed Mr. McCarl if he did not want Mr. McCarl, a Republican, in that office. No; he left it vacant; and for why? Well, I have my own opinion.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is that an indication the gentleman does not approve of Mr. Elliott?

Mr. RICH. No; I am not questioning the veracity of the gentleman or anybody else. Why does he not give him a permanent appointment? But I claim the President does wrong when he permits this thing to go on and not make an appointment. You do not know where the end is. You do not know whether they have stopped now in misappropriations. You may come in here later on with similar legislation. We have given the President of the United States these large sums of money without any rules or regulations to govern the expenditure thereof. You have given him unlimited power, when, as a matter of fact, that power should have been retained in the Congress of the United States. This money should have been expended back in the States, where the people know who this money is going to, where the people know who should receive the money so it will be spent honestly and wisely. The people would then have known it was properly expended. But now you come back here and want the Federal Government to raise additional revenue in order that these bills may be paid off or charged off the books forever. It is not the proper course to pursue, but on account of poor Government management it may be the only thing you can do. This bill is one of the prices we must pay for inefficient Government administration.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, this is a most interesting thing that comes before us today. We are being called all sorts of things by the Republicans and allusions are being made to fraud under the confession that not a single item of fraud has been discovered.

Mr. Chairman, when this matter first came up the United States was a nation of hungry people. We had in office a President just before that time who said, prior to his election, that he would give us 4 years of prosperity—gave us a little coin on which it stated, "Good for 4 years' prosperity." What did we find at the expiration of his term? Smokestacks were standing lonely and no smoke coming therefrom. The road was full of hitchhikers. You could not get anything for your farm or your farm products. There were the biggest failures by the smallest banks and the most absolute failures by the biggest banks, and people hitchhiking. The wolf was standing at the back door and the stork coming down the chimney, and this all under the supposed head of good times and the accepted program for prosperity. Now we hear these Republican gentlemen get up here and say how we smell to them. The gentleman from Massachusetts says "all nigger babies smell that way." May I say, however, I am afraid a Republican does not smell much better to a Democrat than a Democrat does to a Republican.

Let us think of the Teapot Dome. Let us think of the actual frauds that were committed during previous administrations. Now we have a little deficit of less than one-half of 1 percent involving 13,206 items. Boiled down it totals some $200,000 in the 13,000 items. They jump up here and yell and wail. This is just a little natural leakage that came about and yet they try to tell you about some sort of difficulty between the Attorney General and the Comptroller General. May I say, Mr. Chairman, the Comptroller General is for this bill, the Attorney General is for this bill, and the Department of the Interior is for this bill. They all want it. The money has been spent. How are we going to get it? If Uncle Sam were to undertake to follow up 13,206 items it would involve an expenditure of $50 for every 50 cents collected.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman talks about Teapot Dome, but the men concerned with that were put in prison when they did wrong.

Mr. PATRICK. Yes.

Mr. RICH. That is what they ought to do with every fellow in this administration who does wrong. If they did do that, we would have to build so many prisons in this country that all the Public Works money from now on could be spent in building prisons in which to put Democrats who are doing wrong.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman please realize that in all these cases there is not even the slightest taint of fraud? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] referred to favoritism. This $200,000 is distributed over 13,206 cases. This is hot favoritism. Believe me, when the Republican boys put on a little steam for favoritism, they really do it. Why, do you remember under the Mellon administration when Mr. Hoover was, as some of them said, a member of the Mellon cabinet here, good money was paid into the Treasury, but after it was properly paid, and when the Nation was suffering, when hands were out and folks were in rags and starving, and banks were breaking on every hand, then we saw it paid right out of the United States Treasury back to them? To the rich boys. This was a little error, of course, but in favor of the wealthy population—no effort was ever made to correct it. Now Congress made this error and Congress is trying to correct it. Have we found at last that even if a mistake is made it can be made in favor of the poor fellow? All the mistakes the other boys have made seem to have been made in favor of the rich baby. Well, then, if we can make a mistake we can make a few little mistakes in favor of the poor boys, 13,206 of them, cumulating to the appalling sum of $200,000. Now we are asking to set them off. It is already charged off, as far as that is concerned. You will never get a dime of it back, no matter how much you vote against this bill. Therefore, let us vote it up, get rid of it, have it done with, and charge it off.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman admit that Comptroller McCarl did a wonderful job and saved the Nation millions of dollars?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; and he is for this bill. What are you griping about? He is not griping.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of section 7 of the act of March 3, 1933, as amended and extended, the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit for all outstanding disallowances and suspensions in the accounts of any disbursing officer or agent for payments made pursuant to adjustments and increases in compensation of officers and employees of any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States made or granted during or for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1934, and June 30, 1935, pursuant to the provisions of Executive Order No. 6746 of June 21, 1934, and Executive orders which that order superseded, in all cases in which the compensation of such officers or employees was paid out of emergency appropriations; and no amounts so paid and not heretofore recovered shall be charged against the payees on account of said payments.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 1935) to authorize and direct the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit for all outstanding disallowances and suspensions in the accounts of disbursing officers or agents of the Government for payments made pursuant to certain adjustments and increases in compensation of Government officers and employees, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I announce the death of our former colleague and friend, Frederick R. Lehlbach, who, with the closing of the Seventy-fourth Congress, completed 22 years of service in this body. He was known as an authority on parliamentary procedure, was often called on to preside over our deliberations, and his rulings on complex questions are frequently recalled and praised.

One of New Jersey's most distinguished citizens, Mr. Lehlbach was born in New York City, but he came to Newark as a boy. He was graduated from Yale, studied law in New York Law School, and became a member of the New Jersey bar. For 3 years he was a member of the State assembly, and later he became assistant prosecutor of Essex County. Appreciating his devotion to the public service, his sense of patriotism, his keen legal insight, his constituents sent him to Congress in 1914, and he served all during the trying times of the World War and the post-war depression. His committee assignments included Rules, Civil Service, and Merchant Marine.

All who knew Fred Lehlbach will feel a deep sense of personal loss in his passing. My State knows it has lost one of its greatest friends.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS ON CIVIL WORKS ADMINISTRATION PROJECTS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I call up the bill (H. R. 8081) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for overpayments of wages on Civil Works Administration projects and waiving recovery of such overpayments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8081, with Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which I expect to hear discussed at length by our Republican friends, because it has to do with the C. W. A.

You all recall that at the outset of the Roosevelt administration the President decided he was not going to follow the policy of his predecessor and tell the starving people of this country that recovery was just around the corner. Instead he immediately took action. He appealed to Congress for money. The Congress responded and appropriated money to help the starving people. For a period we had what was called the direct dole. No one approved of the direct dole, not even those who were receiving it. Therefore in order that the unfortunate people of this country who were unable to secure employment and earn sufficient money at least to give their wives and children something to eat might have some relief, there was created what was known as the Civil Works Administration. No one attempted then and no one attempts now to state that the projects which were inaugurated under the C. W. A., as it was known, provided for any lasting improvement. The thought was to give these poor, unfortunate people a little work to do in order that they might be able to hold up their heads and say, "I earned this money which I am using to feed my wife and children", rather than have them say, "This money was handed to me."

Some method had to be found to disburse the money. In an emergency of this character the President thought it best to use a permanent organization, and he issued the necessary Executive order, which provided that the disbursing agents of the Veterans' Bureau would clear the pay rolls of the C. W. A.

There were millions of men on the C. W. A. rolls, and these men all had wives and children who were looking to them for support. It was an outstanding emergency, such as we had never experienced before. You could not pay them every 15 days or every 30 days, but it was therefore necessary to pay them every week. Now, stop for a moment to realize the work that was necessary to prepare the pay rolls for millions of people. What did they do? If the unfortunate people had not received their money on Saturday night, you would have had a riot in every large city in the United States. You could not wait until Saturday to make up your pay rolls. It was necessary to make up the pay roll on Wednesday or Thursday, and those who were employed on Thursday received pay for the full week. You all know what the pay was—$1, $1.50, or $1.75, and in a few instances, $2 for those who were in charge of squads. By fixing up the pay rolls on Wednesday or Thursday the C. W. A. employees received their checks on Saturday. That was absolutely necessary.

Several years afterward it was discovered that a large number of people—the number being small in comparison with the total number employed—had been fortunate enough to secure other work on Friday or Saturday and did not complete the week but were paid for a full week. In other words, overpaid for a day or two.

The testimony before the committee shows that there was approximately $800,000,000 spent on C. W. A. work. There is probably $500,000 or $600,000 of overpayments to 300,000 or 400,000 men, each involving a dollar or a dollar and a half or $2. You can see the small percentage of the men who were employed who were overpaid and you can realize the small percentage of the total amount that is involved in the overpayments.

As I have said, the disbursing agents of the Veterans' Administration were called upon in this emergency to clear the pay rolls, and when the Comptroller General found some of the overpayments, naturally he notified the disbursing agents of the Veterans' Administration. These men had never gone over these pay rolls. It was impossible for them to do so, because there were millions of names on the pay rolls every week. There is a charge against these disbursing agents on account of this shortage, and this bill is to grant the Comptroller General of the United States the privilege of allowing credits in their accounts.

Someone may get up here and ask, Why not collect the money? Do you figure that anybody can collect $1 or a dollar and a half or $2 or $3 from three or four hundred thousand people who were on the relief rolls? It would be absolutely impossible to collect it, and if you attempted to collect it, the cost of collection would far exceed the amount of the overpayments.

This bill, like the one just passed, was sent to the Congress by the executive branch of the Government. In the last Congress, when Mr. McCarl was Comptroller General, he sent his administrative assistant, Mr. Frank Yates, to the committee, and Mr. Yates recommended that the bill be passed. Last week, when the committee considered this bill again, Mr. Yates again came before the committee, representing the present Acting Comptroller General of the United States, Mr. Elliott, a former Member of the House, and recommended to the committee that the bill be passed.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Now, that is all there is to the legislation. Undoubtedly this afternoon you are going to hear a great deal in reference to C. W. A. Some of them might talk about P. W. A. and W. P. A., but I have told you just exactly what the situation is in reference to this legislation. There is no fraud involved. Our Republican friends are entitled to 1 hour. I do not know how much time they will want to use, but when they get through, remember that this money is spent, and there is not one single word of evidence before the committee to indicate that there is any fraud whatsoever involved in these overpayments and that no appropriation is necessary. This measure is to clear the accounts of the disbursing agents of the Veterans' Administration who were borrowed in this instance and acted as a result of an Executive order issued by the President of the United States.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MEAD. May I ask the gentleman how much money is involved in this legislation?

Mr. COCHRAN. Somewhere between $500,000 and $600,000; might be a little more. They have not checked up on all of the rolls, and I may say that the Comptroller General of the United States figures that at the rate they have audited the accounts it will run up to $600,000 or, perhaps,

$50,000 more than that. They have not audited all the accounts, and, as a matter of fact, they expect the Congress of the United States to relieve these disbursing agents, because they know the money cannot be collected, and if the Congress does take such action, then the Comptroller General's Office will be saved the expense of auditing these accounts. In that way you save money.

Mr. MEAD. Has the Comptroller General approved the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not only has the present Acting Comptroller General approved the bill but General McCarl, when he was Comptroller General, urged the committee to pass the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], being opposed to the bill, is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. As I said before about the other bill, it was presented to the committee in 1934. The happenings were during the latter part of 1933 and the early part of 1934—and noticed, not several years afterward, as suggested by the last speaker, but brought to our attention early in 1934. The committee took the matter up and decided not to bring it to the floor at that time for discussion. As time goes by we forget things, we misplace things. My notebooks have been misplaced. Probably the records of the Controller are hidden down in Alexandria or some other place, as they are scattered about in different places, for there is not room in Washington for them. They do not know how much is really involved here. The public knew at the time that these mistakes, so-called, were prevalent all over the country where pay rolls were O. K.'d, although no work whatever was performed. It was talked about enough at that time, and if this bill had been brought on the floor at that period, certainly you would have heard much about fraudulent transactions. Of course, the Attorney General says it is wise to pass the bill and forget it, but the danger is that it is a precedent for other similar situations. What is the use of my trying to dig up wrongfully spent funds if all we can do is to come here and say that we will forget it and forgive not only the disbursing officers but even those who got the money? We do not know how much these transactions amounted to in this bill, but there are a great many involved, although each one, of course, was fairly small.

Mr. Chairman, I know that we are not interested particularly in this or any other legislation that can be brought forward here during this month in this Congress. Everybody is tired out; you are out of patience, and Members are unwilling to listen to a sober serious talk on the condition of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PATRICK. To ask the gentleman whether refusing to pass this bill will help one penny in respect to the condition of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. GIFFORD. No. Mr. Chairman, the money has all been spent, like the matter of the junket over to Europe, to study cooperatives, where it has been ruled it should not be spent. Yet it has been spent, and you will forgive them, and all that has been useless work. No one seems to care anything about it. You seem willing to excuse anything over there on the majority side. You want no constructive criticism such as we gave you on the C. C. C. camps and many other bills, although you like to say that we offer nothing constructive. We are simply taking the opportunity to remind you of these things, lest you forget; that is all.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is an able legislator and one of the hardest working Members of the House, popular with the Members on both sides, and he has done his best to defend this legislation, to cover up the mistakes and financial blunders of the administration. All he has done actually is to show the need for the General Accounting Office, the necessity for having an independent General Accounting Office that is not afraid to be independent and take a firm stand against illegal expenditures, and to uphold and protect the acts of Congress and the intent of those acts as passed upon by the Members in both the Senate and the House. This is probably the first time that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has brought in legislation at this session and I think, therefore, it is the proper and the opportune time to discuss in a general way the expenditures in the executive departments of the Government. Charity, it is said, begins at home. Economy likewise, should begin at home.

Therefore, if you want to find out if this administration is practicing economy, all we have to do is to analyze the Executive Office appropriations, the appropriations for the White House under the New Deal and prior to the New Deal. In 1928 the expenditures were $337,560. In 1937 they were $500,130. In addition to that the House of Representatives has just adopted a bill giving the President six Executive administrators with a salary of $10,000 each, or a total of $60,000. You may easily add on another $60,000 for extra secretaries for those administrators, for stenographers, for maintenance of quarters, and above all for traveling expenses. No one can foresee what the traveling expenses of those six Executive assistants will amount to in 1 year, but judging from the President's fishing trips at the expense of the Government it will be a considerable sum.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. In connection with the six assistants provided for in the bill just passed by the House, it is my recollection that that was an integral part of the reorganization recommendations, and it is my personal opinion that that bill should have been the last bill to pass. In my opinion, the President, if the bill should become a law, would not appoint the six unless the general reorganization plans go through, because there will be no necessity for them.

Mr. FISH. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman, and actually took the floor at that time to make identically the same argument—that they were putting the cart before the horse, that the six assisant administrators were supposed to be coordinators for the proposed reorganization of the various departments and the bureaus of the Government. But in spite of that fact, and so stated in the committee report, the first bill to be brought in was a bill to create these six new jobs at $10,000, and it passed the House of Representatives in spite of the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself that they were not needed and would serve no useful purpose.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Does the gentleman feel that the President needs those six chamber boys any more than the Supreme Court needs six wet nurses? [Laughter.]

Mr. FISH. Well, having lost on one I suppose he would like to win out on the other. I stated at the time that if we had a reorganization bill, which we will not have at this session of Congress, we could well afford to give the President one or two cordinators to coordinate the reorganization of the departments and bureaus of the Government. But, as the gentleman well said, there is no need now for these six Executive administrators. What is the reason for them? What have they got to do? Are they to be a sort of Russian Ogpu, a secret service, to act as snoopers and spies for the Chief Executive upon the Members of Congress and the Senate and even upon the departments of the Government? Are they to form a reprisal staff and carry tales to the President? Are they to serve as secret agents to crack down on foes and critics of the administration and to compile up-to-date blacklists? The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] is quite right.

This bill providing for six executive assistants should not have gone through, and it only shows the inefficiency and the ineptitude of the House of Representatives in jamming through legislation of that kind by a party vote, when it is not needed. It will probably be killed in the Senate, where finally word will be brought that a mistake has been made in the hurry to jam through legislation before adjournment. The House of Representatives or its Democratic Members, acting like a lot of rubber stamps, has turned over the legislative powers to the Executive and passed the bill for six executive assistants, and now we find out that we have just been made fools of; that there is no need for the legislation and that it will die unmourned in the Senate.

Nevertheless, these figures show a tremendous increase in expenditures for the White House, $337,560 in 1928 and $500,100 in 1937, without taking into consideration the proposed six assistant administrators, which will add another $120,000, if not more, when additional secretarial and traveling expenses are taken into consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, if the reorganization goes through, the gentleman sees the need for some extra assistants?

Mr. FISH. I do.

Mr. McCORMACK. Whether it should be six or four?

Mr. FISH. One or two coordinators ought to be sufficient.

Mr. McCORMACK. One or two or six. With reference to the increased appropriation, the gentleman has made his investigation and I accept his figures as correct. However, will the gentleman not, in all honesty, recognize the fact that the expenses in 1937, no matter who may be President of the United States, whether Mr. Landon had been elected—and I am speaking purely impersonally—the expenses would have been much higher, no matter who was President? Even though the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] had been nominated and elected, the expenses would have been much higher in 1937 than they were in 1928?

Mr. FISH. Oh, I will admit they would have been somewhat higher, but at the same time I insist that economy begins at home. The way to practice economy is to practice it at home. The way to cut down appropriations is to cut down your own appropriations. According to the press this morning the first month's Treasury deficit, that is, for the month of July just passed, amounts to $249,384,405, twice that of a year ago, despite the fact that receipts have increased. The Social Security tax brought in $53,000,000. This tax only went into effect this year. Where does the increase come primarily, in arriving at the factors that caused the deficit? The statement shows that in nearly every item of departmental expenditures the amounts last month exceeded July 1936. That is in departmental expenditures—not for recovery, not for relief, but in the permanent departments of the Government the increase has taken place.

Naturally, if that is so, there is no chance whatever of balancing the Budget. Six months ago the President said that the total national debt would not exceed $35,000,000,000. That, he predicted, will be the all-time peak. Today it is $36,700,000,000, or $1,700,000,000 more than the highest peak set by the President only 6 months ago. I know it is dangerous for any politician to predict anything, but I think I would be perfectly safe to stand here and predict that by the end of the next fiscal year we will have a national debt of over $38,000,000,000.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FISH. Certainly.

Mr. PATRICK. Would voting for this bill or refusing to vote for this bill help one dime in adjusting the national debt or financing the deficit that we have?

Mr. FISH. I am leaving it to the other Members on my side to make the arguments on the merits or demerits of this particular legislation. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] unfortunately was out of the room when I paid tribute to him for his ability and his industry as a Member of this House, and his popularity, but he can read that in the RECORD and send it to his constituents later on. [Laughter.]

I propose to offer an amendment and I cannot see how the gentleman from Missouri, in view of what I have said about him, can possibly make a point of order against it. [Laughter.] We are considering a bill emanating from a committee which has to do with the expenditures in the executive departments. This is the amendment that I propose to offer to the bill. When you hear it perhaps you will understand why I praised my good friend from Missouri so highly, but even at that it was deserved praise.

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from the Presidential office after their second term has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic, and fraught with peril to our free institutions; and be it further

Resolved, That the House of Representatives commends the observance of this precedent.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman's amendment comes so close to the border line that I suggest that he give it to the Parliamentarian now so he can be studying it to see whether or not it is germane.

Mr. FISH. I knew the gentleman would not object himself; I did not see how he could.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New York does not mean that any attention will be paid to that sort of amendment even though he proposes it.

Mr. FISH. I do not claim that it amends the Constitution of the United States, if the gentleman means that; but I hope that the gentleman has more regard for the Members of the House of Representatives than to think that if this resolution were passed and the President would ignore it or that the people back home would not approve the action of the House.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman advise the House whether he has any precedents for such an amendment or for such action on the part of the House?

Mr. FISH. I am glad that my friend from Massachusetts asked that question, because there are some actual precedents. In 1875 an identical resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives and passed by the overwhelming majority of 234 to 18. That was under the Grant regime. In 1928, at the end of the Coolidge administration, a practically identical resolution was introduced in the other body by Senator LA FOLLETTE and after considerable debate it was adopted by a 2-to-1 majority. This resolution is identical except that it refers to the House of Representatives instead of to the Senate.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Were those resolutions introduced as original bills or as riders to some harmless bill like this?

Mr. FISH. I am not sure how it was introduced in 1875 because I was not here then. [Laughter.] And I do not know about the rules of procedure at that time. They seem to change a little from year to year. As far as the La Follette resolution is concerned, I think it stood on its own bottom. I do not think it was a rider, but I am not quite sure. The debate was quite extensive on it at the time. There is one thing certain, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, this resolution is in line with the cardinal principle of the Democratic Party. It is almost interwoven into the political faith of all Democrats. Not only does this resolution carry out the precept laid down by George Washington, but more than that, it carries out the example set by such great Democrats as Thomas Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and Jackson; so that no Democrat who believes in the old Democratic Party principles and has faith in the political philosophy of his party for the last 100 years could find any very good reason for voting against it. I introduce it and offer it in good faith and in all sincerity, because I believe that it is more needed, far more needed, today than at any other time in the history of our Republic.

Whether we have a good, bad, or an indifferent President makes no difference in this case. We all know, whether we are Republicans or Democrats, that we have concentrated and centralized vast power in the Chief Executive and set up a one-man government, and that day by day we are giving him more and more power; so that he could if he wanted to exert the power, the influence, and the prestige he has together with his control of a huge amount of patronage and of lump-sum appropriations, renominate himself—through the very powers that this Congress has given him. For this reason, therefore, not questioning the qualifications or the record of President Roosevelt, the time has come if we are to continue to delegate and surrender our legislative power to the President together with control of the pursestrings, that we should at least protect our representative and constitutional form of government by passing a resolution of this kind. We should make it very clear that it is the determined wish of Congress, of Members on both sides of the aisle, that no President should serve for more than 8 years, and that no President should renominate himself more than once through the use of the patronage and the power that we ourselves have conferred upon him. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, this debate has very naturally turned into a political discussion. For this I am sorry, because we should be directing our attention toward the purposes of the legislation, the consideration given to it by the committee, and the action taken by the Comptroller.

The chairman of the committee deserves our praise, not only for his energetic work in connection with this legislation, but for his accomplishments in this and previous sessions of Congress.

The committee deserves credit for the meticulous care exercised by it in the presentation of this bill. Both the former and present Comptrollers General, both Republicans, merit the nonpartisan tribute of Members on both sides of the aisle for recommending the adoption of this measure.

Mr. Chairman, there is one phase of the question that has completely missed our attention. This covers an expenditure of public money during the darkest period of the Republic's history, and, in addition to the sustenance gained thereby by the impoverished workers of America and the contribution to the improvement of the physical properties of our communities, it made a mighty contribution to the saving of the Nation and the preservation of our democratic ideals.

Not so far back there was a different philosophy exhorted by certain Members of the House, but in each successive month the spiral of deflation accelerated to a degree that America could no longer stand without ruin coming to us industrially, financially, and even politically. So, early in this administration we tried a new philosophy, and within a short period of time we basked again in the sunshine of a new and more secured prosperity.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is rather interesting when we listen to some of these critical speeches to note that during the World War our national debt increased $20,000,000,000 for the purpose of killing human beings and during the depression the increase in our national debt has been for the purpose of saving human beings.

Mr. MEAD. I am indebted to my distinguished colleague for the contribution he makes. I want to add the statement that since the coming of the day of the modern power machine we have enjoyed three periods of prosperity in America; namely, the one he mentioned, the period of prosperity that resulted in the destruction of life and property during the World War. The second period occurred when this country lent billions of dollars to the nations of the world for public works improvements abroad. When we stopped lending money to the foreign nations, and asked for repayment of our loans our market became stagnated and was cleared only when we passed these appropriations for relief in America, such as contained in the bill that is being discussed on the floor of the House this afternoon.

That brings to my mind the thought that if we are going to have giant power machinery we are not going to have a balanced Budget until there is a balance in the budget of the farmers and the wage earners of America. They alone, by their buying power, must clear the American market or else we must doom the machine and consider it a failure. America's power to produce has claimed too much attention in the past. Let us give heed to America's power to consume. We must have a balance between the available jobs and workers. We must have a balance between production and consumption. We must have a balance between wage levels and prices. We must then have a balance in the Federal revenues and expenditures. Unless we have a complete balance there is no virtue in a balanced Budget. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr, Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the statement made by the Chairman of the Committee on Expenditures [Mr. COCHRAN] a few moments ago when he said that there were no politics in this bill. Then he went on to explain how the Hoover administration had promised that prosperity was just around the corner. If anybody tried to inject politics into this bill, it was the genial chairman of the Committee on Expenditures [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. After awhile I will yield.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] did not explain this bill and let the membership of the House and the people of the country at large know what it is intended to cover.

When the Congress passed House Joint Resolution 117, giving the President of the United States the power to spend $4,880,000,000, the Congress went beyond its jurisdiction and gave up powers to an individual that really belonged to the Congress. That was the first mistake.

Section 4 of that House joint resolution stated:

> In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the President is authorized to establish and prescribe the duties and functions of the necessary agencies within the Government.

We gave the President of the United States by that resolution the power to make laws. This is contrary to the Constitution. We put all of that power into his hands.

What did we do when Mr. Hoover was in office? The Congress of the United States did not do anything. They would not give him any power, no legislation, nor would it give him any money. That put the country in the condition it was in at that time, and still you on that side accuse President Hoover of bringing about this depression.

Any man who says that has not any brains. Any man who says that has not any common sense. Any man who says that does not know what he is talking about. If there ever was a man in this country who worked hard for the United States it was President Hoover. [Applause.] He was one of the finest and most conscientious Presidents this Nation ever had. Why, when there was a catastrophe during a Democratic administration on the Mississippi River, or over in China, or any place in the world, and they wanted somebody to go and take charge of the work, every Democratic President in power since that man was 20 years of age sent for him and put him in charge of the mission. They knew him, they knew his ability, and had confidence in him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman will secure more time for me I will yield to him. You know it is awfully hard to get time. You yield to these genial Democrats and they use up all your time and will not give me the opportunity to say what I want to say.

Mr. Chairman, let us look at this bill. After the paymasters have spent this money, contrary to law, contrary to the Constitution, and after they paid out more than they should have paid, and they were bonded by the Federal Government, we want to clear the insurance companies. This overpayment is attributable to mismanagement, inefficiency in Government administration. Now, you want to relieve those insurance companies of the payment of $800,000 or more. You do not know how much is embodied in this bill. There is not a Member of the House or a member of the committee who knows. It may be up in the millions of dollars, way up into the millions of dollars. Where will you get the money?

We Members of the House of Representatives all took an oath and an obligation to support the Constitution of the United States. Every man who becomes a Member takes that oath. When we voted for that bill and granted the power contained in it, those of you who voted for the bill disobeyed your oath and obligation. Now you want to come in here and put the Federal Treasury further in the hole. You want to release these bonding companies when they should pay the bill. You relieve them of their obligation after you have paid the premium. I have never heard of anything so dumb or so asinine in my life. I leave it to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HAINES], if any businessman were to do anything like that he would think there was something wrong with him.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me, inasmuch as he has referred to me as a businessman?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HAINES. May I ask the gentleman if the committee held hearings on this proposal?

Mr. RICH. I was on the committee last year when it held hearings.

Mr. HAINES. They reported this bill unanimously to the House?

Mr. RICH. No; I do not think there was a unanimous report on it.

Mr. HAINES. I understood this bill was reported unanimously to the House by the committee.

Mr. RICH. I do not believe it was unanimously reported.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not think it was unanimous. Those who were against the bill were asleep.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was a member of the committee, and, while he had a good laugh in the committee, he realized the necessity of relieving these disbursing agents.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman going to give me more time?

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman offered no objection, but stated he wanted to have a little fun when the matter came onto the floor. That is the whole story, and the gentleman will recall it.

Mr. RICH. I do not recall ever saying I wanted to have some fun with this. I like to have fun. I think it is a fine thing for everybody to have fun, but I think it is a fine thing for Members of the House of Representatives to have a little good common sense with their fun. We ought to be careful that it is not all fun in here, because sometimes I think we are having more fun than doing a good business job in the laws we are passing. We ought to be very careful that we stop this fun making and get down to good common sense, get onto solid terra firma, and do things in the right way and in a businesslike way.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, the entire membership knows that the gentleman from Missouri does not recall any such conversation as he has just indicated. The gentleman from Missouri also likes to have his fun.

Mr. RICH. Well, he is a good fellow. We like to have fun with him, too.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Pennsylvania likes to have fun at the expense of the Democrats, and I like to have fun at the expense of the Republicans.

Mr. RICH. Now, you know what he does. He likes to have fun at the expense of the Republicans.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Most of this Democratic fun is at the expense of the taxpayers, is it not?

Mr. RICH. You said something; I agree with you. Expense! We have had nothing but expense ever since we have been in here under this Democratic administration. The people of this country realize it. Let me read now the Treasury statement of the United States, showing that on July 30 we were $36,709,916,635.50 in the red. Why, never in the history of this country has our Nation been in such a precarious position. You have increased this debt $16,500,000,000 since this administration came into power.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. It seems to me I read something some time ago about the Democratic administration hiring a fan dancer by the name of Ruby Bae, of Minneapolis, in order to have a little fun at Government expense.

Mr. RICH. The Democratic administration has been fan dancing a long time. I think the people of this country are about sick and tired of fan dancing. They are going to make this Democratic administration accountable for the things it is doing. They are not going to permit it to go on and cause this Nation to be engulfed in financial disaster.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. They are not going to allow it to continue to increase expenditures. Why, the chairman of the Rules Committee knows what this Treasury statement is, and he does not like it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I must yield to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, because the chairman of the Committee on Rules does not like to see this Treasury statement in this condition, and he knows we are increasing the expenditures daily this year over what they were last year, to the 30th of this month, $2,537,500 a day more than the expenditures of a year ago. More, I say. Why, it is wrong, and nobody knows it better than the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Now I must yield to the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman is one of the most successful businessmen of this country.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman does not mean me.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman has probably profited more by what has happened in the Government in the last 4 years than most businessmen. The gentleman will admit that the resources of this country are worth at least $350,000,000,000, with a national debt of only $35,000,000,000, roughly?

Mr. RICH. Thirty-six billion seven hundred million dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. All right, we will take the extra billion.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman made a mistake.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman show us any business in America, whether it is his own business, United States Steel, a railroad, or any other business in this country, whose funded debt is as low as 10 percent of its assets?

Mr. RICH. Well, I will say to my colleague from New York, the chairman of the Rules Committee, in the first place he has me in the wrong category when he refers to the United States Steel Corporation and some of the other organizations.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, applying it only to the other organizations, does the gentleman know of any business that can show such a statement?

Mr. RICH. However, I do know something about business and I do know that when we permit this country to do the things that are being done now, when the President said that in 1938 we were going to have a balanced Budget, and when we are spending more money and going into the red faster this year than we did last year, at the end of this year, Mr. Chairman of the Rules Committee, you will find that instead of having a balanced Budget, we will be in the red $2,000,000,000 more and you cannot help yourself, if you do not stop this ridiculous, extravagant spending spree.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Now, just answer the question.

Mr. RICH. Because the President of the United States does not know how to economize. He does not know what the word means. His father had to give him his money in trust, because he knew he was not responsible. Now, you men here in Congress must not put all the power in his hands when he is not responsible. You should guard him and protect him and defend him and help him and aid him and assist him.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, I have no gas mask [laughter], but if the gentleman will get down to brass tacks and answer my question, whether his business or any other business in this country has ever been able to do business with a debt of about 10 percent of its assets——

Mr. RICH. Well, I will answer that question in this way. I see what the gentleman is driving at. You know last year we passed a bill providing a tax on undistributed incomes. When they passed that bill they wanted to have every business in this country go into the red. They wanted them to pay out their income and use up their surplus so they would have nothing in case they ever had another rainy day. When they passed that law, may I say to my friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], they did it for the purpose of trying to put the business interests of this country in a precarious condition, because the chairman of the committee and his assistants said they were afraid to pass such a law and apply it to banks and insurance companies for fear they would wreck them, but they wanted, definitely, to wreck the business interests of the country and put them in the position that the chairman of the Rules Committee would like to have them, and they will all be there very soon if we do not watch out and change that law, and I know the chairman will do everything he can to help change that law.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Has the gentleman now expired? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I will have to yield first to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman tell the House and the country whether there is any danger to our people in only owing 10 percent of our assets?

Mr. RICH. Well, I will say to the chairman of the Rules Committee that when the Congress and the people in the country today have to spend twice as much as they receive, when they are going to pass this debt on to your children and your children's children and to children yet unborn, and you are not able to solve the problem yourself, you are just doing what people in business do who do not know anything about business, and you are going to wreck this Nation.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. We are passing on to our children $350,000,000,000 of assets with only a debt against those assets of $35,000,000,000, and that is not a bad balance sheet. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 more minutes.

Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to remind the gentleman that he should tell the gentleman from New York that the assets of the people of the United States are not to be compared with any business. The gentleman well knows it and well knows how foolish it is. The liabilities of any business can be turned into money readily and the obligations of business can be satisfied, while we have only the method of taxation to take it away from the people, and if you dare tax our people a very little more, you will wonder what the assets are.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman's palatial mansion on Cape Cod and the clothes on his back are the assets of the United States.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is just what I thought—the clothes on our backs. That is just what they are, assets of the United States, and I commend the gentleman for his illustration.

Mr. RICH. Now that the gentleman has used up my 2 minutes, will the gentleman yield me 5 minutes more?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. RICH. Now, we are getting at the idea back of all this. It is the idea of some Members of Congress to take the homes of people who have tried to save money, whom they call capitalists because they own a home, and to take the clothes off a man's back and do everything they can to bring them all down to a common level, when we have some people in this country who are industrious and thrifty and want to save and try to get ahead and do something to give employment to other people. We are wrecking that moral fiber in mankind that is represented by the words "work and thrift."

They want to break those people down and not give manufacturers an opportunity to go out and employ people. Jim Farley said last week that the depression is over. The American Federation of Labor says that there are 8,000,000 people still out of work. If 8,000,000 people are out of work, and you are spending money at the rate you are now, I can see no salvation for this country unless we change the course of things and obey the Constitution——

Mr. COX rose.

Mr. RICH. And here is one of the strongest defenders of the Constitution that we have in the House, and I take my hat off to him and am very glad to yield to him.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] speaks of passing on to coming generations an institution of the value of $350,000,000,000 that owes only $35,000,000,000. What would the indebtedness amount to if you added to the $35,000,000,000 the private indebtedness of the country and that of the States and of the counties and other subdivisions of government? In other words, would it not mean that we would pass on to the coming generation an institution that owed as much as it was worth?

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman for that contribution.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. I think the debts of the municipalities and the States and various subdivisions of government would be equal to or more than what we have in the Federal Government. I think it is something that needs the most serious consideration that we as Members of Congress can give to it.

Mr. COX. As for myself, I applaud the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] for the fine service that he is performing in this House, because I agree that it is perfectly insane to continue to spend beyond our income.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. ENGEL. C. F. Childs & Co., of New York, in their investment bulletin for July 1937, give the total estimated private and public indebtedness in 1935 at $118,537,000,000. That indebtedness has increased since 1935 to approximately $125,000,000,000.

I recently looked up the amount of State and municipal or local indebtedness, and it was $19,000,000,000. Our national debt is approximately $37,000,000,000, making a total public debt of $56,000,000,000, leaving $69,000,000,000 private indebtedness. In other words, our public debt is within $13,000,000,000 as large as the total private debts in this country. For every dollar the people owe privately they owe nearly another dollar publicly. The people of America, whether individually or as businessmen, must not only pay the interest on the $69,000,000,000 they owe privately but also on the $56,000,000,000 public debt.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Outside of any debts we owe abroad, will the gentleman tell us what difference it makes among citizens in this country owing each other?

Mr. ENGEL. I answer the gentleman in the words of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt when, in his first message to Congress in March 1933, he said:

> For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road to bankruptcy. With profound seriousness I point out to the Congress the profound effect of this fact on our national economy. Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on the rock of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

When President Roosevelt spoke, the national debt was $20,000,000,000. Today it is $36,000,000,000.

On October 19, 1932, at Pittsburgh, Candidate Roosevelt said:

> Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors. If excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, tax-sold farms, and, hence, in hordes of hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain. Our people and our business cannot carry its excessive burden of taxation.

In the last fiscal year of the Republican administration ending June 30, 1933, the Government collected $1,855,174,208 in taxes. The first year of the present administration the Government collected $2,954,038,131; the second year, $3,621,043,062; the third year, $3,899,663,202; and last year they collected nearly five and a half billion dollars, passing 14 revenue measures in 3 years.

On September 29, 1932, at Sioux City, Iowa, Candidate Roosevelt said:

> I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peacetime in all our history.

Despite the fact that the present Democratic administration has collected nearly $16,000,000,000 in revenues in 4 years, they ran the country in debt $16,000,000,000. I think these facts ought to convince the gentleman from New York as to what difference our public and private debts make regardless as to whom they are due.

Mr. RICH. Read the statements of President Roosevelt made in 1932 about Government expenditures and economy in government, and then think what the man is doing today. It is almost unbelievable. To me it is one of the most serious things that confront this Government, and I hope the Members of Congress, after they pass this bill, because they are set to do it, will take these matters into consideration. From what I have learned of this bill the matter was wrongly handled. We should never have permitted these paymasters to go on and do this. Inefficiency in government. That matter should have been handled by the States and the municipalities, and I am sure the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will agree with me on that. If we had carried it out in that way, probably we would not have to wipe off another million or more of debt. We have learned our lesson. You are going to be asked to pass another relief appropriation of about a billion dollars. Remember, when that time comes, that you ought to say how the money is to be spent, where it is to be spent, and who is to administer the expenditure of that fund; and if you will do that, then we will get on common ground and be doing the right thing; and I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures that rather than go out and try to spend a million dollars to collect this we better pass this bill today. We will term it "inefficiency in government by this administration."

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask this recognition in order that I may ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] a question, to see if I understood him correctly, whether he made the statement as I have it—and I have gotten it from the reporter—that during the World War our debt increased over $20,000,000,000 for the purpose of killing human beings. Did the gentleman mean that?

Mr. McCORMACK. The money was spent for war purposes in which the lives of human beings were involved.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thought the gentleman did not mean the other.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, that is the construction to be placed on the remark. I am glad the gentleman made the inquiry, inasmuch as he misunderstood me.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute. I cannot let this debate go by with the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. O'CONNOR of New York] that a debt of only $36,000,000,000 is not to be worried about.

Just add five billion more than we are spending this year and attempt to assess it by taxes this same year and you will find out very quickly how serious that little percentage would be to the American people. We have gone now to the limit of the patience of our people whose Government it is. We have gone way beyond our proper right in spending their money. Even though our debt is only 10 percent of our wealth of $350,000,000,000, it is vastly different than a private corporation that can sell its assets. We can only tax and an unreasonable tax would be resisted. The comparison is so bad it is odious.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, let us hark back for a second and see what this is all about. This is merely a bill to write off in this case the sum of about $500,000, which is less than one-half of 1 percent of the expenditures that were directly connected with the enterprises under which it arose.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. PATRICK. That was the testimony before our committee and it was not even challenged.

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly, but that testimony goes only as far as it goes. It does not show what the possibility or probability of fraud might have been.

Mr. PATRICK. If you were to embrace those in which no mistake at all was found it would be more tremendous than that. It is remarkable, speaking for itself. The idea is that the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Pennsylvania find in this a great invasion of the constitutional rights of the people. They get up as Republicans, defenders of the faith. Gentlemen, did you ever think of what irony there is in the Republicans defending the Constitution and saying they are the defenders of the faith? The Republican Party was organized at Jackson, Mich., on July 6, 1854, and dedicated to the principle that the Constitution of the United States was a "covenant with Death and an agreement with Hell", and they said, "There is a higher law than the Constitution. Let us tear it up and throw it out of the window." Thus came the Republican Party. Whenever they get up defending the Constitution they give me a pain where I would rather have pleasure. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. No. I mean by that, it gives me a pain in the neck. [Laughter.]

Do you know what this came out of? Not an item in which anybody gets a scintilla or a hint of fraud, but Uncle Sam was trying to feed hungry men, ragged men, men sleeping in briar patches and on benches in the parks. There was a time when the United States was the blessed land of room enough—farmers could enter all the land they could cultivate. That was a time when all could get along, and the doctrine of America then was "root hog or die." But along about Woodrow Wilson's day we moved up into a newer day. A newer gate, a newer door was opened to folks in the United States, and the doctrine then became not "root hog or die", but it became "live and let live." Too often that proved to be not enough for those with shorter legs, shorter arms, shorter minds, and lesser opportunities in life; and now, gentlemen of the Congress, the doctrine must be not "root hog or die", not "live and let live", but "live and help live"; and in distributing the kindly Christian doctrine of "live and help live", when we were trying to do it, trying to pass out food to the hungry and milk to the starving, naturally a few crumbs fell and a few drops slopped over. It is amazing to me that it is as slight as it is. Now all we are doing is asking the Congress, which could not pass a perfect law, when we are asking you to write it off as good bookkeeping—and it is already written off as far as actual practice is concerned, and there is no possibility of it going any further—they see red and go to hollering about the Constitution of the United States and that we are invading the principles of the Constitution. It is blasphemy when a Republican stands up and tries to say he is defending the Constitution of the United States from a Democrat. It cannot be. It just "ain't" like that. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield.

Mr. RICH. We are not trying to defend the Constitution from Jeffersonian Democrats, but we are trying to defend the Constitution from new dealers. The trouble is you do not have any Democrats. They are nothing but new dealers. What we want is good, sound Jeffersonian Democrats and good, sound Republicans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. PATRICK. Then I ask you how in the name of all that is good and holy, or constitutional, is refusing to vote this law invading the constitutional rights of a human being in the United States?

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman want me to answer?

Mr. PATRICK. Yes; if the gentleman can. I know he cannot.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman speaks of $800,000 or $1,000,000 as crumbs. The gentleman does not know what finance is if he calls that sum of money crumbs; it is a whole lot more than crumbs.

Mr. PATRICK. Where is the constitutional point? The gentleman does not realize what the Constitution is; no Republican, I fear, really does.

Mr. RICH. The constitutional point came up when the new dealers gave the President this power.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for any overpayment of wages heretofore made to or on behalf of any person for services rendered in connection with any project under the Federal Civil Works Administration, nothing to suggest fraud appearing, and in such cases where credit is allowed in the accounts of the disbursing officer under this act no recovery shall be required from the person receiving the overpayment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am always glad to listen to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], even when I do not agree with the gentleman personally. I am not flattering the gentleman when I say that I consider him one of the hardest working Members of the House. He is a man for whom I have the most profound respect personally and officially, and in disagreement I respect his right to entertain the views he does. Nothing, however, made me feel more sorry than when I just heard the gentleman express on the floor of the House the cheap, malicious, false piece of rumor.

Mr. RICH. What was it?

Mr. McCORMACK. Wait a minute; take your time. I am sure that upon reflection the gentleman from Pennsylvania will delete from his speech the remarks that he made when he gave credence on the floor of the House to a false rumor about the parent, the late father of the President of the United States, leaving his property in trust because he did not have confidence in his ability to administer the property. That is cheap rumor; it is a falsehood. I never thought I would see the day when any Member of Congress would undertake to dignify on the floor of the House that rumor which we have seen in the scandalmongering columns of some writers.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will yield to the gentleman if he wants to apologize for having made that statement, but for no further purpose will I yield to the gentleman on this particular occasion.

Mr. RICH. I am going to reply.

Mr. McCORMACK. No, no; I am not yielding for a reply. Does the gentleman apologize?

Mr. RICH. I say——

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman apologize?

Mr. RICH. If the statement is wrong, certainly I would.

Mr. McCORMACK. The sins of affirmation and of detraction are the worst sins known to mankind. The sin of affirmation is committed when a man circulates something which he knows is false or states something which reasonable inquiry would have shown was false, and of detraction when he states something that is truthful when there is no necessity for stating it other than to hold somebody up to public ridicule and contempt.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. The honorable thing for the gentleman to do, if the remark was made in the heat of extemporaneous debate, unwittingly, as we all make remarks at times—the honorable thing for the gentleman to do is immediately to say that he did not mean it and to express his apology. But if the gentleman does not, the fact remains that he made the statement; that he has without intent given dignity on the floor of the House to a rumor that is a falsehood, to something that only what the knock-down artists, as we call them in politics, put into circulation for the purpose of undermining the leadership of the President of the United States.

I would be here making the statement I am now making if the same thing had been said about any President of the United States, because, Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States is my President. Whether he be Republican or Democrat, he is the President of the United States and is entitled to respect, particularly because of the great position he occupies. Particularly when a rumor is a contemptible lie no such statement should be permitted to be made on the floor of the House by any Member without being challenged; and I challenge the statement recently made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman and my congenial colleague from Massachusetts, I hope and pray that the day will never come when I shall falsely accuse men. I would not want to falsely accuse any individual in the United States, nor make an accusation if I knew that the rumor was false. However, it has been a common rumor on the floor of the House, and I have never heard it denied, that the father of the President of the United States did will to him an estate in trust. If that is wrong, then I apologize to the House of Representatives; I apologize to the American people; I would apologize to the President of the United States himself, if he would permit me to go in and interview him and make the apology.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not what I am taking issue with. The gentleman went further and said his father did it for certain reasons. That is where I take issue with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Then, perhaps because of certain reasons I do not know of, I am in error, and I will apologize. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. I knew the gentleman was big enough to do that.

Mr. RICH. I was assuming that was the case. Maybe I was wrong in making that statement, and I am glad to apologize [applause], because I do not want any assumption on my part to lead anyone to a wrong impression.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman accept the assurance of people who might know, that the President has always been a man of moderate means, and that at the expiration of his term he must engage in some business in order to make a livelihood?

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman would tell me that, I would believe him.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, I am telling you.

Mr. RICH. I believe it, then. Your word is good enough for me any time, and if you tell me that I believe it. You ought to know. I would not disbelieve it.

If he is in that position, then I hope that someone will offer a bill giving him a pension. I would vote for it. [Laughter and applause.] I think any man who serves as President of the United States ought to be protected and ought to be cared for, even if I do not agree with him all the time.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say in reference to this matter, and I hope that I shall never make a statement in the House of Representatives or any other place that might be construed by anybody to be a false accusation of anyone.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8081) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for overpayments of wages on Civil Works Administration projects and waiving recovery of such overpayments, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the call of committees.

LIBERALIZING PROVISIONS OF EXISTING LAWS WITH RESPECT TO WORLD WAR VETERANS AND DEPENDENTS

Mr. RANKIN (when the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6384) to liberalize the provisions of existing laws governing service-connected benefits for World War veterans and their dependents, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that general debate on the bill be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between the ranking minority member of the committee [Mrs. ROGERS] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6384, with Mr. MCCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which liberalizes the provisions of existing laws with reference to World War veterans insofar as they apply to the widows and orphans of disabled veterans and the dependent parents of veterans who died from service-connected disabilities. This is the first time the Congress has really come to the point of doing justice to those mothers and fathers who sent their sons to the war and never saw them again.

I am going to explain briefly what this bill does. In the first place, it increases the compensation of widows of World War veterans who died from service-connected disabilities in several ways. The compensation of widows between 50 and 65 years of age is raised from $35 to $37.50 per month, and for widows above 65 years of age it is raised from $40 to $45 a month.

The bill also provides for taking care of dependent fathers and mothers whose sons died in the war or from service-connected disabilities by raising their compensation to $45 a month where there is one dependent. Where there are two parents living, we make it $25 a month for each. If a parent is drawing $57.50 insurance a month, then, of course, he will not benefit under this law, but if there is only one parent living and he is drawing below $45, we add enough to make it $45 a month and guarantee that the parent shall receive this amount during the remainder of his life. If there are two parents living, as I have stated, we make the amount $25 each.

The reason for this is that it has been more than 20 years now since America entered the World War. The men who were killed in the early days of the war or who died in the early days of the war and left insurance to their parents provided that the money should be paid in monthly installments over a period of 20 years. The 20 years is now expiring. By November 11, 1938, the insurance payments on every veteran who was killed in the war will cease. This bill prevents the aged fathers and mothers of the veterans from being turned out without any compensation or without any hope of compensation in their declining days. I regard this as one of the most meritorious pieces of legislation we have ever been able to bring from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

This bill also carries a provision with reference to the disabled war veterans. Under a regulation issued by the Veterans' Administration, veterans with double amputations have been considered as totally and permanently disabled; that is, if a man lost an arm and a leg in the war, or an arm and an eye, he was considered totally and permanently disabled for the purpose of drawing his insurance. However, in the last year or two the court held that this was not necessarily the case. We are writing this provision into law in this bill, providing that under such circumstances the veteran is totally and permanently disabled for the purpose of drawing his insurance.

Another provision concerned with World War veterans applies in cases where a veteran disappears, as a great many of them are doing, such as insane veterans. They cannot be found. Some of them drown themselves, commit suicide, or are lost. We provide that under such circumstances their dependents may draw their compensation. This will not cost anything, because the checks are piling up to be paid to them when they are found.

We also provided in the bill that where a veteran had a service-connected disability of 10 percent or more and died from some other cause, his widow and orphans should be given compensation. There was a controversy over this provision, and it has been agreed that if an amendment is adopted raising that to 20 percent and then confining the payments to widows who have had children by the veteran, the bill would be approved at the other end of the Avenue, provided also that one other amendment is adopted. Under the provisions of this bill, as the law now stands, a veteran's widow comes under the law if she married him prior to 1931. We had provided also that she should come under the provisions of the law if she had lived with him 10 years. This could not apply until 1941. We also provided that if she had children by him, even though she married him after 1931, she could take under the provisions of this bill. We have been asked by the administration to strike out that 10-year provision because of its effect on other veterans' legislation. It could not apply to a single World War veteran until 1941. I took this proposition up with the veterans' organizations and said to them, "If we adopt these two amendments, it will be satisfactory to the administration and the bill will be approved." Without a dissenting vote or a dissenting voice, they urged that we agree to this compromise in order to get the bill passed. I shall offer the two amendments when we reach the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am extremely regretful that the administration felt the widows with no dependents were not entitled to compensation.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts cannot go any further in that direction than I have gone.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I realize that.

Mr. RANKIN. However, I am getting the best I can get, in order to be sure this bill goes through and takes care of the dependent fathers and mothers who will be left out if this bill does not become law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Mississippi be good enough to state once more the nature of the amendment which he proposes to offer, and which, as I understand it, would be applicable to the first section of the bill relating to the 10-percent disability? This should be made very clear, because that is a very important part of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. The amendment simply strikes out the figure "10" and inserts the figure "20", and adds—

Provided, That a widow shall not be entitled to compensation under this section unless a child was born of her marriage to the veteran.

This is what the amendment amounts to.

Mr. BIERMANN and Mr. FISH rose.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. The widows who get compensation under the section to which the gentleman has just referred, do not get the standard compensation; that is, a widow under 50 years of age, does not get $30.

Mr. RANKIN. No; the compensation provided under 484.

Mr. BIERMANN. About $22 a month.

Mr. RANKIN. Something like that. They do not get as much compensation as the widow of a veteran who died of a service-connected disability.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Is there any provision in the bill that takes care of the provisional World War officers and their dependents?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. FISH. Would it be proper to offer such an amendment to the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. I would not agree to accept any amendment at this time, I will say to the gentleman from New York, for the simple reason that we have agreed to hold this down to its present limitations and to accept the two amendments in order that the bill may be signed at this time.

Mr. FISH. Has the gentleman any assurance from the Chief Executive that he will sign the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman has that assurance?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I am not going to embarrass the gentleman by proposing any amendments, but I would like to say to the gentleman, now that he has the floor, that I will at least ask him when his committee meets at the next session to take up the case of the provisional officers and see that justice is done them.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman that I have been trying to get the provisional officers taken care of under the Adjusted Service Compensation Act ever since I have been a Member of the Congress and have failed so far to get them taken care of.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman being chairman of this committee, I am sure, if he takes it up again and puts his heart in it, he can get proper action taken. Will the gentleman give me assurance he will make a fight in that direction?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I will talk with the gentleman when that time comes.

Here is a section of the bill to which I failed to refer:

SEC. 5. That notwithstanding any provision of law or veterans' regulation, except as to emergency officers' retirement pay, reenlistment in the military or naval service on or after November 12, 1918, and before July 2, 1921, where there was prior service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, shall be considered as World War service under the laws providing benefits for World War veterans and their dependents.

I think everybody will agree that this is a reasonable provision and one that should be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to yield time to other Members, and I may say to the House now that I have tried for years to get these dependent parents taken care of. I had a letter from a gold-star mother today thanking me, as she said, for bringing out a bill which she said could never be of any benefit to me in a political way.

So what we are doing here has no politics in it, but I saw these old parents then, these fathers and mothers during the war, telling their sons good-bye as they sent them to war, never to see them again, and I have seen them dependent on the small amount of insurance that has been allocated to them and the small compensation we have given them. Invariably the insurance went to someone else. The time has come when they have long passed the days of their earning power. For this reason I have labored throughout this session to get this legislation written in such a manner that we could get it passed by both Houses and signed by the President in order that we might do belated justice to these people who made the supreme sacrifice in the war, because nobody could have suffered more than these fathers and mothers. For this reason I have struggled throughout this session to get this piece of legislation to the floor of the House, and I trust you will go with me on these amendments in order that they may be adopted, the bill passed, and become a law before the Congress adjourns. [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I think the gentleman and his committee are to be congratulated for the fine work they have done, and while they have made some provision for these dependent parents, I trust they will find it possible to give a little more aid to dependent children and orphans.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Missouri will not go any further in that direction than I will, neither will anybody in the House, but under the circumstances this is the best we could do. This bill as it is written has had the unanimous approval of the members of the committee, and they have agreed to go along with me on these amendments, which have been approved by all the veterans' organizations that are sponsoring this bill.

Mr. TERRY and Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. Section 5, on page 5, refers to service after November 12, 1918, and before July 2, 1921, as being considered as World War service.

You are considering time after the actual war was over as World War service?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; between the time the armistice was signed and the war was declared to be at an end, which was July 2, 1921.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. I think the members of the committee should know how extremely regretful I am that we have not been able to secure a bill which would give the Canadian rate of pay to the World War veterans and dependents of men who died of service-connected disabilities. The Canadians give such service-connected cases, widows and orphans of these people, double what we give them. I know the members of the committee realize how deeply I regret, just as they do, that the administration is not willing to agree to a bill that goes along with the rates provided in the bill we now have under discussion. The chairman of the committee has said that the members of the committee have agreed to go along with the lower rates. Mr. Chairman, I feel that I cannot go along with the provision that bars widows without children from the benefits of the bill. Under proposed amendment of the administration a widow with no child will not get a penny of pension. Many of those widows need the money more than do widows with children, because it is almost impossible for those widows to be placed upon relief. They take widows in the Works Progress Administration who have children. If a woman has a child, she is allowed to go on relief; but a widow without a child is often not taken. I know many of those women are having a desperate time, and I cannot go along with that provision. It is admitted that it will cost only $80,000. I believe it would cost very much less than that. I will not say that I am willing to accept this amendment, but I shall go along with the other amendments.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. We all realize what a good friend the gentlewoman has been of the veterans and their dependents.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Oh, I think we all are.

Mr. SHORT. And while we perhaps favor the position she has outlined, certainly we do not want to endanger the passage of this bill by loading it down with amendments which would cause the President to veto it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do not believe that the addition of $80,000 would mean a veto.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I would like to know just in a word or two the general provisions of the amendment referred to.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I shall go along with the bill, but the chairman's amendment—it is not the amendment of the chairman but it is an administration amendment—provides that a widow without a child is not entitled to a pension under this act.

Mr. RANKIN. If we want to kill this bill, that is the way to do it—vote down all these amendments.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am very much for the bill. It does not go as far as I should like. Does the chairman of the committee feel that that would endanger the bill?

Mr. HALLECK. That is without the amendment.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I mean without the amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I said it would endanger the approval of the bill. This amendment has the approval of the administration.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], he has stated that he has taken this matter up with the President and the President has dictated the terms of the bill which he will sign. That being true, I think we have learned particularly by this time to obey orders if we want to get anywhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute in order to correct a misunderstanding under which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] seems to be laboring. We knew this controversy was coming and we worked this proposition out and laid it before the President, and we have this agreement.

I now yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON].

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, as a veteran of the World War I appeal to the veteran Members of the House to support this bill in the form that the chairman of the committee has outlined it to us. This bill does not go as far as many of us would like to have it go, but sometimes a half loaf is better than no bread. I do not think we should penalize these widows and children of veterans, who gave their all in the service of their country, nor should we penalize the veterans themselves. Many points that have been bugbears to veterans for years are being cleared up in this measure. I believe that this is a good measure and certainly goes part of the way that some of us would like to go. I urge Members to support the bill. I am a member of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Disabled American Veterans, and I know that these veteran organizations want this legislation passed. I know that it is humane legislation which benefits veterans themselves but particularly benefits the loved ones of our comrades who gave their all for their country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional minute. I feel sure, Mr. Chairman, that the President would not veto this bill because of $80,000 added for the purpose I have outlined. We are spending billions of dollars in so many other directions for people who have not done anything in the service of this country. I cannot believe that for $80,000 the bill would be vetoed. I want to make my position clear.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield to me for a question?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I will yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. I do not want time myself, but I want to ask some questions. I am interested to know whether this committee has unanimously reported the bill or whether the bill comes from the White House, one of the "must" bills. Apparently there is some intimation that the bill must be accepted the way it is, without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

What I want to know is whether we are here to legislate or to accept something that we have been told the White House is in favor of? The time has come when we must decide whether we are to legislate ourselves or whether we must accept a "must" bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the debate thus far has indicated that the amendments are a "must" provision. But on the other hand I do think it is better to accept most of these amendments if we want to get any bill at all.

Mr. FISH. I know the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], chairman of the committee, and the ranking member of the committee, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], are friends of the veterans, and if they recommend to the House that this is the proper action to take, I suppose I have got to succumb to that kind of action, but I wish committees would bring in bills that we could discuss and amend and try to improve on instead of saying that we must take this bill because the White House approves it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The chairman of the committee and the members of the committee have done everything under the sun to get a rule for the bill. They have asked for suspension of the rules. Many Members of the House signed a petition to bring the bill onto the floor. So I think it is the administration rather than the Veterans' Committee that is to blame in this matter. We had the bill reported out of the committee early enough to secure action in the House.

Mr. FISH. I yield to the splendid judgment of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, we want to do what we can for the soldiers and their dependents. What is the use "kicking against the pricks"? We are faced with a condition here. We know what the situation is. Word has come up here and has been given to the House by the chairman of the committee, that it is impossible to enact a bill unless it is first supervised or blue-penciled by the White House. Now, we have the supervised or the blue-penciled copy. We know what the President will do. I hope we will pass the bill and get the best we can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] has expired.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is the bill as the committee would like to have it, or does it contain the provision which the President insists on having in it?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The bill does not contain the provision which apparently the President insists upon. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] will offer amendments at the proper time, which I understand the President insists upon.

Mr. MOTT. Is not the gentlewoman from Massachusetts of the opinion that if we passed this bill and it is vetoed by the President, we will be able to pass it over the President's veto? We have been able to do that with veterans' legislation thus far and apparently it is the only kind of legislation we can pass over the President's veto. I believe we can pass this over the President's veto and I think we ought to do it and pass the bill as it is.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think undoubtedly if it were not in the closing days of Congress, that is true, but it is perfectly possible for the President to pocket veto the bill after we adjourn, as the gentleman knows. The bill must still pass the Senate. That is why I am advocating accepting the best we can get. However, I feel we can secure the $80,000 to be paid to the widows without children, that I have mentioned, and still have the bill signed.

Mr. MOTT. I think we ought to pass the bill and if the President vetoes it, come back next session and pass another bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON].

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am glad to vote for this bill to liberalize the provisions of existing laws governing service-connected benefits for World War veterans and their dependents.

The bill is not as liberal as I should like, but as I understand from the chairman of the committee [Mr. RANKIN], who is a real friend of the veterans, it is thought that this is the best that can be accomplished at the present time, and as I understand, all veterans' organizations have endorsed the bill.

There is another class of our people who are sorely in need at this time, and of whom I wish to speak briefly. I refer to the cotton farmers of the South, who are just beginning to market their cotton for this year. The counties in my district last week began to receive their first bales, and within another week or so farmers all over Texas will be selling their cotton which they have made this year.

While the crop promises to be good, the price of cotton has been steadily decreasing and has been going down for several days, and is now about 2 cents per pound or $10 a bale lower than it was at this time last year, and if the market continues to decline, it will mean a still greater reduction in the price to be received by the farmers.

The situation is alarming and is causing much apprehension and concern on the part of cotton farmers, and if something is not done to prevent the decline in price, the farmers will be forced to sell at a price much below the cost of production.

Letters and telegrams are coming to me from farmers in my district, calling attention to this distressing situation, and pleading that something may be done to correct it.

One of my constituents from Leon County writes that they made a crop failure in his particular section last year, and that they are now about to begin the picking of cotton, but from the way the price is going down, unless something is done to prevent this decline, they will be ruined again. This letter is typical of many others received by me, and I know that the writers are not alarmists, but are sound, level-headed men, who are not exaggerating conditions in the slightest degree.

This morning about 40 Members of Congress from the Southern States where cotton is produced had a meeting in the caucus room, and the question was thoroughly discussed, and it was the sense of those present that something should be done immediately by the Government, and a committee was appointed to discuss the situation with the President and advise him of the serious condition of the cotton farmers and request his cooperation in preventing the decline of the prices, and to take action that would insure the farmers a price equal, at least, to the cost of production.

While it is too late at this session to pass legislation generally as to cotton, since this year's crop is already being marketed, a very effective way of insuring a fair price for this year would be for the Commodity Credit Corporation to make loans to farmers, and I have today introduced a bill directing the Commodity Credit Corporation to make loans to farmers at the rate of 13 cents per pound on cotton, where such loans are secured by cotton stored in warehouses approved by said Corporation upon such terms and conditions as similar loans have been made by said Corporation during previous years. And my bill provides further that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be directed to make available to the Commodity Credit Corporation sufficient funds to carry out this purpose—$450,000,000.

This is not a new or unusual method of dealing with the situation, but in the past has been resorted to, and this method has always tended to stabilize and hold the price so that manipulators and operators could not depress it, and, as a result, the farmers have received a fair price when such action was taken.

Under existing law, the President and the Secretary of Agriculture may have authority to make such loans, without further legislation, and I am hoping that action will be taken upon their part whereby loans can be made, but in order to insure that such loans shall be made and the price stabilized, I have introduced this bill.

The matter is of great importance, and action must be taken at once if the cotton farmers are to be saved and receive a fair price for this year's crop.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield for a question?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Is not the real trouble the fact that there is no great individual passion on the part of the committee for anonymity?

Mr. RANKIN. Just whatever that is.

Mr. MICHENER. We were told the other day that in order to have things go along smoothly there should be a greater passion for this particular virtue. The committee does not seem to appreciate that. In other words, they want to say something. They want to have something to do with it.

Mr. RANKIN. It seems to me that the one who wants to say something is not on the committee.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I have but one point to make. I believe that the most important justification of veteran legislation lies in the tremendous inequalities of sacrifice that every war brings to different groups of the population of a nation. One of the most terrible things about war is the fact that whereas a few people without sacrifice may become immensely wealthy, whereas others may go along in the even tenor of their way as before, there are some who are called upon either to go through the actual experience of fighting at the front or to lose dear ones in the conflict. For that reason, in spite of the fact that I would do anything I could do to keep this Nation at peace, I am convinced that one of the things that will help most to keep and promote peace is to see to it that the Nation deals with generosity with those elements of the population who have been called upon in the past to make the deepest and greatest sacrifice in connection with a war. I believe that it is equitable and just that this should be done. [Applause.] I hope the bill will pass. It is not as generous a bill as I personally should like to vote for. But as the chairman of our committee has so ably explained, it is evidently the best we can do under existing circumstances. After all it does provide better than is now done for many veterans' dependents. For the gold-star mothers and dependent fathers of veterans the bill is absolutely essential.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

CHARGING INSURANCE AGAINST COMPENSATION

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, so far in the discussion or that portion of the discussion that I have heard, nothing has been said with reference to the provision at the top of page 4 of the bill. I consider this a very regrettable provision in the bill. I read:

> The amount of the compensation herein authorized shall be paid in the event the monthly payment of compensation under Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (g) and the monthly payment of yearly renewable term, automatic, or United States Government life (converted) insurance does not aggregate or exceed the amount of compensation herein authorized.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I explained that in my opening statement.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I did not hear, I am sorry to say, the first part of the gentleman's statement. Does this provision stay in the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It seems to me that it is unfortunate if it does, because what it states is that despite the sacrifice the veteran made to keep his insurance going, or despite whatever sacrifice the family made so that he could keep his insurance going, that now it is going to be deducted in determining the compensation of these dependents. He bought that insurance and paid for it.

I have always objected to this procedure, and felt that it was unfair to require the veteran to pay for this insurance and then to hold that against his compensation. I know that Government attorneys point to compensation payments and plead that against decisions to pay insurance claims. It is confusing and it is wrong and it is unfair.

There is a distinct difference between compensation and insurance. Compensation is payment in return for the privileges and the opportunities the veteran deprived himself of. He bought this insurance; he has paid cash for it.

Had the veteran bought this insurance from a private firm the Government could not step in and do this, but here it comes in and says to him that although he has sacrificed to keep up his insurance his dependents will not be able to get the benefit of that added protection he paid for. He and his dependents are not put on the same footing as those veterans who bought insurance from private companies or who did not keep up any insurance at all. The widow and dependents of such a veteran will get the full amount of compensation, but if the veteran kept up his insurance the Government is going to charge that up against the compensation payable.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. We had that up with the veterans' organizations and the Gold Star Mothers when they were before us. All we are after, what we are driving at, is to arrive at a solution that will guarantee to these old people a compensation of $45 a month where there is one, or $25 a month each where there are two.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. What it amounts to, Mr. Chairman, is that the veteran who has bought his insurance for his dependents is losing the added protection that he thought he was buying for them. It should not be taken from them in this way.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand, but in many cases they were not getting any compensation and the insurance was expiring. We discussed that fully.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from South Dakota.

We discussed it thoroughly in the committee. We were interested in legislation that would save these old people, a good many of whom were drawing only the small pittance that has been allotted to them heretofore as compensation, and whose insurance was expiring. We arrived at this solution, this compromise, in order to take care of them.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I know the gentleman is personally not in favor of this provision. I recognize the fact that the gentleman was facing a very difficult situation. He certainly has been one of the best friends the veterans and their dependents have had. He faced a practical difficulty, and, if it was necessary to concede this to get the bill, I do not blame him. But I still say that it is unfortunate that the Government should do this, and whoever insisted on this certainly cannot realize what a small, unfair thing this is. The veterans' dependents are entitled to his insurance without counting it against compensation, especially the veteran who has paid for it and sacrificed in order to be able to pay for it. That amount ought not to be charged against the compensation that goes to his dependents. It is a mean thing for the Government to do.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to section 5, page 5, of the bill, where it is stated:

> That notwithstanding any provision of law or veterans' regulation, except as to emergency officers' retirement pay, reenlistment in the military or naval service on or after November 12, 1918, and before July 2, 1921, where there was prior service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, shall be considered as World War service under the laws providing benefits for World War veterans and their dependents.

I know a great many cases where service-connected disability has been denied to men simply and solely because of the fact they reenlisted right in that period. The Government uses the fact that these men reenlisted and says, "Well, you could not have reenlisted if that disability had been due to service", when, as a matter of fact, we veterans in the House know that in the confusion at the end of the war and in getting the men out of service, those who reenlisted were not subjected to a physical examination.

Does this bill change the remedy and put these men in a position where that extra term of enlistment will not bar them from the service-connected disability otherwise established?

Mr. RANKIN. It is my understanding it does. This only applies to men who served during the period of the World War and who reenlisted after November 11. Many of them went into Germany and some into other countries. This applies to those who suffered disability as a result of their service.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. If it eliminates the bar to those men who otherwise have been refused disability, I think that in itself is a splendid improvement.

Mr. RANKIN. That is what it does.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It extends the period of World War service or what is considered World War service after November 11, 1918, provided they reenlisted?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; and provided they served during the period of the war. I think the gentleman from Ohio will find it does just exactly what he wants done.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is very helpful to this bill.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the semipolitical discussion which took place on the opposite side of the aisle over a piece of meritorious veterans' legislation, I desire to ask the chairman one question. How long has legislation of this type been considered by the Veterans' Committee of the House?

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois I began introducing legislation of this kind as far back as 1928 or 1929. I finally succeeded in getting a bill reported out, I believe in 1931, which passed the House by a vote of 316 to 16, but it never got any further. That bill died in the Senate. I have been working on this proposition ever since I have been chairman of the committee and even before I became chairman of the committee.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, previous administrations have had this same type of legislation to deal with, but there was no legislation passed and the present administration has not seen fit up to this time to favor this kind of legislation, although it now agrees to cooperate with this committee by permitting this bill to become a law.

Mr. RANKIN. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I regret that anyone should inject the political aspect into a bill of this kind. This is the type of legislation the veterans throughout the country have been fighting for for a long, long time. It is meritorious, worth while, fair, and equitable. We are doing the right thing toward the dependents of veterans in this country. We are giving aid and comfort to those who cannot care for themselves. Mr. Chairman, the bill should pass the House without a dissenting vote.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, after the clear discussion of the legislation before us, I want to record myself as being in favor of this bill which has been so ably presented by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. Have the officials of the veterans' organizations been made aware of the fact this is the best legislation they can obtain, in view of the attitude of the President?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman, I spoke to the chairman of the committee [Mr. RANKIN], and he told me he had discussed the matter with various officials of the Veterans' Administration, and they felt that perhaps this was the best that could be done. I talked with an official of one of the organizations today, and he told me, while he regretted very much the amendments that would be offered to the bill and the cuts that will come about as the result of the Administration amendments, in view of the lateness of the session of the Congress and the possibility of a pocket veto, he thought probably it was better to accept the amendments.

Mr. REED of New York. Those of us who really want to help the veterans, then, will have to accept this legislation?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. We are in a very awkward position, and I may say in the past we have been placed in an awkward position so far as veterans' legislation is concerned.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts explain the meaning or the interpretation placed upon the word "reenlistment" in line 24, at the bottom of page 5? Under the laws governing the Army the term "reenlistment" has a definite meaning. I am wondering if it has the same meaning when used in this act.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand so.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. My understanding is that it has the same meaning.

Mr. RANKIN. My understanding is it does mean the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The fact is, a man must have reenlisted within 2 months after the expiration of his first enlistment to come within the term.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not sure, but I think these men did reenlist within 2 months of the expiration of their first enlistment. I think the men reenlisted almost immediately.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no doubt the amendment the gentleman has in mind applies to nearly all reenlistments. Most of the men in Europe at the expiration of their regular enlistments stayed on in the Army for another 3 years. However, under a liberal construction of this language, unless we know what the term "reenlistment" means, it might be construed to mean that a man who had served a few months, 10 months, or 2 years in the World War, had taken his discharge at the end of the World War, we will say, on November 11, 1918, for example, had gone back to civil life for 2 years, and then enlisted in the Regular Army before July 2, 1921, should be regarded as having reenlisted. If this man fell ill during that enlistment he would be regarded as suffering from an illness of service connection.

Mr. RANKIN. I think that is pretty farfetched, and would cover so few cases at the outside that the Government would not suffer very much of a shock.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am glad to have the gentleman's assurance that the word "reenlistment" means reenlistment as usually understood in the Army.

Mr. RANKIN. My understanding is as the gentleman has stated. However, this would probably cover one who reenlisted later, provided he became disabled prior to July 2, 1921.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything in respect to this bill, but since listening to some of the debate it has occurred to me that it might be well for me to say something regarding the bill, as I was a member of the committee.

I felt at the time the matter was before the committee, and I think you will all agree, that the primary and immediate necessity for this legislation arises out of the fact that the gold-star mothers and fathers, the dependents of veterans who actually lost their lives in the service of their country, are soon to be in want because the insurance which has heretofore been paid them is fast running out. This situation presented a question which the Congress had to meet.

In all my experience in Congress and before I came to Congress I have found very little criticism of the action of the Government which seeks to help the dependents of the veterans who were actually injured or lost their lives in the service. I think the majority of our people believe nothing is too good for those folks. Therefore, I believe this bill as it was originally reported by the committee is justified and deserves the support of the Members of the House.

A question was raised by the gentleman from South Dakota regarding the discrimination against parents who have been heretofore and are now the recipients of insurance payments. I took the position in the committee, as the chairman knows, although I was overruled, that this is in a measure a discrimination against them, for the same reason the gentleman asserted, that the insurance was paid for by the veteran to provide payments to his dependents. Compensation is different from insurance. In this particular bill as it will be applied the fact that insurance payments are being made will operate in some cases to decrease the compensation. However, I recognize the position of the other members of the committee and of the Veterans' Administration that in the interest of economy and in the interest of seeing to it that these people are taken care of without regard to the source of the money the bill as drawn will probably suffice and should be passed.

With regard to the proposed amendment to raise from 10 to 20 percent the degree of disability existing at the time of death, may I say I have no quarrel with that change. I have been accused many times of disagreeing rather violently with the President. I believe you all understand the reason for the present law and the 30-percent disability provision. The reason simply is that although the disability may not be the direct cause of death, it is safe to assume as a medical proposition, as a matter of medical science, that if a veteran was 30 percent disabled by a service-connected disability at the time of his death it is highly probable that such disability in some measure contributed to the cause of his death.

As you begin to reduce the 30 percent and reduce it too much you approach a situation where you probably could not get a good doctor to say it would be safe to assume that the disability did contribute to the cause of death. As the provision was originally written by the committee, at 10 percent, there was much to be said for it on a basis of sound reasoning. However, with the amendment raising the rate to 20 percent, it seems to me the provision is wholly within the realm of reason and within the realm of probability and deserves the support of every Member of the House.

Something has been said about political debate. I have not heard anything that struck me as being particularly partisan in this debate. I think the committee as a whole, without regard to politics, has tried to bring out a bill which would meet the situation as we saw it. I think we have that sort of a bill. I think it will still be that sort of a bill after these amendments are adopted, although I cannot particularly go along with the amendment which seeks to discriminate against the widow who has no children. She may be in just as great want as those widows who do have children. Her necessities in a year or two may be even greater than those of the others. Otherwise I shall be happy to support this bill. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, we have under consideration H. R. 6384, granting pensions to gold-star mothers, dependent parents, widows, and minor children of World War veterans, and granting relief to World War veterans in certain cases. This bill grants an increase of pension to the dependent mothers and fathers of World War veterans whose deaths were due to disabilities contracted in the service in line of duty. At the present time these dependent parents receive $30 per month—$15 each—if they are both living, and $20 if only one survives. This measure increases the sum to $50 per month to both parents—$25 each—or $45 in case only one parent survives. It grants some increase of pension to widows and children of World War veterans under certain conditions and subject to certain ages. The compensation of widows between 50 and 65 years of age is raised from $30 to $40 per month, and for widows above 65 years of age it is raised from $40 to $45 per month.

Under certain acts the widows and minor children of a World War veteran could not secure a pension unless it could be shown that the death of the veteran was due to disabilities contracted in the service in line of duty. This act was amended and permits widows and minor children to receive a pension if the veteran at the time of his death had permanent disabilities to the extent of 30 percent, which disabilities were contracted in the service.

The bill before us, as reported by the committee, provides that if the veteran had a permanent service-connected disability of 10 percent at the time of his death it will entitle the widow and minor children to a pension. This would have aided thousands of widows and minor children of World War veterans; but the President, we are informed, objected to this and one or two other provisions of the bill and insisted that it be amended and fix the permanent service-connected disability at the time of the death of the veteran at not less than 20 percent, and, as I understand Mr. RANKIN, the chairman of the committee, the bill will be vetoed unless the amendments requested by the President are adopted.

Many of us realize the attitude of the President toward veterans' legislation. While this bill does not meet the necessities of the situation and falls far short of what should be done in the way of legislation for the benefit of disabled veterans of the World War and their dependents, I wish to commend the chairman, Mr. RANKIN, and the ranking Republican member, Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, and each member of the committee for bringing in this bill and giving us an opportunity to do something at least for the gold-star mothers, the dependent parents, the widows, and minor children of World War veterans, and to give to a limited number of veterans some benefits. The Congress, the veterans, and their dependents are confronted with this practical problem—we must take this bill with the amendments suggested by the President or no legislation at all. Even though the bill unamended or a better bill might be forced through the House and Senate, Congress will soon adjourn, and the President could take advantage of his pocket-veto privilege, and Congress would not have an opportunity to override his veto.

We are advised by the chairman of the committee and others that this matter has been taken up with the various World War veterans' organizations, and under the circumstances they urge that the Congress adopt this bill with the President's amendments in order that something may be done at this session for these worthy cases, and I am supporting it because there is no opportunity to vote for and have passed a better bill.

Now, for many years the widows and minor children of Spanish War veterans and Civil War veterans have, and are now being granted, pensions under the law, even though the death of the veteran was not due to service, and there is no requirement that there must be any degree of service-connected disability at the time of death. I now favor, and have for a number of years favored, placing the widows and minor children of World War veterans on the same footing as the widows and minor children of Spanish War and Civil War veterans. It would cost some more money, but the widows and minor children of World War veterans need the money just as much as the widows and minor children of Spanish War and Civil War veterans. Believing in the justice of this position, I have for a number of years been introducing bills placing the widows and minor children of veterans of the World War on an equal footing with the widows and minor children of Spanish War and Civil War veterans. At the beginning of this Congress, on January 5, 1937, I introduced H. R. 1615 to carry out this purpose. I introduced a similar bill while I was a Member of the Senate. I shall continue my efforts along these lines until the discriminations against the widows and minor children of veterans of the World War and other veterans are eliminated.

The bill before us will be very helpful to a lot of most deserving dependents of veterans and to some veterans themselves. This Nation cannot do too much for the widows, minor children, mothers, and fathers of those who actually gave their lives in defense of this country and those who received substantial disabilities in the service in line of duty. This measure is especially necessary now for those dependent parents who have been receiving insurance benefits. These insurance benefits will expire in 1938, and it will leave many dependent mothers and fathers and widows without support.

This bill will help the veterans themselves. A great deal of World War legislation had been passed that was helpful to the World War veterans and their dependents and the World War period was fixed as beginning on April 6, 1917, and ending on July 2, 1921, as the World War officially closed on that date, and legislation for the veterans and their dependents was for the benefit of the veterans who served during that period. The Economy Act fixed the close of the war as November 11, 1918. Now, this bill provides that if a veteran entered the service before November 11, 1918, and reenlisted after November 11, 1918, he would be considered as a World War veteran up to the 2d day of July 1921. In my opinion this will benefit many thousands of World War veterans whose compensation has been cut out and who have been denied benefits.

Referring to the question raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], it seems to me that the 2-month limitation on reenlistment would not apply under this bill because it expressly says that anyone who enlisted prior to November 11, 1918, and reenlisted after that date and before July 2, 1921, would come under the provisions of this law—in other words, the veteran would have any time to reenlist from November 11, 1918, to July 2, 1921, and during that period of time he would then be considered as having served in the World War and be treated and considered as a World War veteran even though he might incur his disabilities after November 11, 1918. I am voting for the bill with the understanding that the provision of 2 months does not apply. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] if my construction of this language is correct?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I think the language means just what it states.

SHALL DISABLED VETERANS, WIDOWS, AND ORPHANS BALANCE BUDGET?

Some of our distinguished colleagues today are contending that we cannot afford to give these veterans and these dependents the meager sum that is carried in this bill. There were approximately 5,000,000 enlisted in the World War, and it is estimated that this measure will cost less than $10,000,000 annually. That would be less than $2 for each veteran enlisted in that war.

On January 5, 1937, I introduced H. R. 1532 which called for a repeal of the so-called Economy Act forced through Congress by President Roosevelt on March 19, 1933, and to restore to the World War veterans and their dependents the benefits of the various acts that were in force at that time. I introduced a similar bill early in the Seventy-fourth Congress in 1935. Other Members have introduced similar bills, but there is little hope for favorable action under the present administration. The President forced through Congress in March 1933 the Economy Act on the plea that the Nation must balance its Budget—it must not spend more than it takes in. The salaries of the President, Members of Congress, and others were reduced and there were other cuts made in other directions, but so far as I am able to learn, all of the provisions of the Economy Act that would effect economies and savings have been repealed except those parts affecting compensations, pensions, and other benefits taken from the disabled veterans and their dependents. These disabled veterans and their dependents should be the last group in this country who should be called upon to balance the Budget.

Now, this bill proposes to help the gold-star mothers, fathers, widows, and minor children, yet there are those who would economize by denying relief to these deserving groups and at the same time squander billions by adding more than 300,000 officeholders and in useless and boondoggling projects. We have pointed out many times that while the veterans and their dependents were cut to balance the Budget there was no effort made to balance it; in fact, this administration in a little over 4 years has created additional deficits approximating $16,000,000,000. This administration has spent almost two dollars for every dollar taken in. They have jumped our national debt from around $20,000,000,000 to nearly $37,000,000,000, and it continues to create deficits. For July, the first month of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936, the Government spent $123,000,000 more than it took in. For July, the first month of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937, it spent $249,000,000 more than it took in; in other words, the deficit for July 1937 is double the deficit for July 1936; yet there are some good new dealers who would deny relief to the dependent widows, minor children, mothers, and fathers of World War veterans—approximately $9,000,000 a year.

I strongly favor a sane, economical policy of administering the Government. The Budget should be balanced and kept balanced. We should not pay out more than we take in. Of course, if we continue the present policy, it means bankruptcy in the end. However, I am unwilling to force the disabled defenders of our country and the poor dependents of the veterans who gave their lives for our country to balance the Budget. For more than 140 years this Nation has taken care of its disabled defenders and their dependents and lived within its income. This is the only administration that has called upon the disabled defenders and their dependents to do the sacrificing in balancing the Budget.

These veterans and their dependents did not unbalance the Budget, and the meager sum carried in this bill will not unbalance the Budget. This is a very modest bill, bringing aid to worthy groups, the justice of whose claims cannot be questioned, and I sincerely hope it will be adopted without a dissenting vote. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I shall yield back the balance of my time. I am pleased that the gold-star mothers are partially taken care of by the provision which increases the pension payable to dependent parents. Many of these mothers are of advanced age and are in straightened circumstances. No one here questions the fact that our Government owes them protection in their declining years after the sacrifice they have made. Many months ago I introduced a bill which would give them this protection. I realize that the Members on this side are thoroughly in accord with the bill, so far as it goes, although they would probably like it to go much further. It does not go as far as we would like to have it go, but I shall not take up the time of the Committee any further. I believe the bill will pass by a tremendous vote.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I simply want to say to the Members of the House that under this administration and in this way we have been able to extend veterans' benefits, especially to widows and orphans in order to take care of the widows and orphans of those veterans who had service-connected disabilities but died from other causes.

I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to take full responsibility for these amendments. I worked on them with the veterans' organizations, and I have talked with the members of the committee and the Members of the House before we entered into an agreement and before going to the other end of the avenue, and so far as I am concerned I will sacrifice everything else in the bill in order to take care of these gold-star mothers and dependent fathers. I have no apology to make to anybody. Of course, if I had my way the bill might be different.

I was particularly gratified at the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], who has rendered especially helpful service in working out this problem, but so far as the responsibility is concerned, I am willing to take full responsibility for working out these amendments which, if adopted, will guarantee that these old people will be taken care of and taken care of at an early date and in a proper way.

As to the argument about their insurance, this is a compromise. We are not taking away anybody's insurance. We are doing just exactly what compensation is for. We are relieving these old people who lost their sons in the World War and guaranteeing them that the wolf will be kept away from their doors the rest of their lives.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is the chairman of the committee of the opinion we should vote down any amendments that might be offered?

Mr. RANKIN. I have some amendments I am going to offer to carry out the agreement to which I have referred, and I hope the gentleman from New York will vote for them.

Mr. ANDREWS. I will.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, June 28, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 38, secs. 503–507), as amended by section 1, Public Law No. 844, Seventy-fourth Congress, June 29, 1936 (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 508), in no event shall the widow, child, or children otherwise entitled to compensation under the provisions of that act be denied such compensation if the veteran's death resulted from a disease or disability not service connected, and at the time of the veteran's death he was receiving or entitled to receive compensation, pension, or retirement pay for 10-percent disability or more presumptively or directly incurred in or aggravated by service in the World War: Provided, That except as provided in section 6 of this act, compensation authorized by this section shall not be payable effective prior to the receipt of application therefor in the Veterans' Administration in such form as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may prescribe, but in no event shall compensation herein authorized be effective prior to the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 2, line 3, strike out the figures "10" and insert in lieu the figures "20."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the amendments to which I referred, which carries out the agreement referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 2, line 5, following the colon, insert the following: "Provided, That a widow shall not be entitled to compensation under this section unless a child was born of her marriage to the veteran."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the amendments to which I referred, embraced in the agreement.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As I stated before, the cost of granting this benefit to the widows without children is so small, $80,000, and the good to be derived by these women who are left alone so great that I feel the amendment should be defeated. These women cannot secure any work, and I know whereof I speak. I know the Members of the House have had many experiences of women who are left alone, women who cannot go on relief because they have no children, no dependents, who cannot be taken care of in this way. They, too, must live, Mr. Chairman. Their situation is desperate. I appeal to the Members of the House to vote against this amendment. I feel that its defeat will not cause a Presidential veto.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. In many instances these stepmothers who stand in the place of a mother to these orphan children do everything possible they can for the children.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is not the amendment under consideration. This amendment provides that a widow, if she has no children, will not benefit under this act. The widow with a child or children will secure a pension, but the widow without any children will not receive a penny.

Mr. GREEN. But if they are stepchildren?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The stepchildren would.

Mr. GREEN. But she would not?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. She would not.

Mr. GREEN. It is obvious in many instances that they do as much as they can for these children, and I think they should share in the benefits of this bill.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know it is extremely difficult for women to get work at this time, more so than at any other time in our history. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It was necessary to reach this agreement in order to get this bill passed at this session of Congress. For that reason we went over the matter very carefully, and I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman believe that if this amendment is not adopted, the bill cannot pass?

Mr. RANKIN. I do. The veterans' organization went over this very carefully. If we want to fritter away this opportunity to do something for these veterans and leave this bill either at the other end of the Capitol or at the other end of the Avenue, the way to do it is to vote down these amendments. If you vote down these amendments it will in all probability kill the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I know that the gentleman has been very diligent in his efforts to get legislation passed at this session, and I know that for a number of weeks he has been perhaps the most active Member of the House in trying to get this legislation enacted. However, I do not favor this amendment.

I want to compliment the members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation for their splendid work in presenting this legislation. I hope it may pass without a dissenting vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts)—there were ayes 106, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 2, line 5, after the word "Provided", insert the word "further."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 4 of Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1282; U. S. C., title 38, sec. 506), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That for the purpose of awarding compensation under the provisions of this act, as amended, service connection of disability and degree thereof at date of death may be determined in any case where claim has been or is filed by the widow, child, or children of a deceased World War veteran, except that proof of 10 percent disability or more at date of death and evidence as to service connection must be filed no later than 3 years after date of enactment of this act, or the date of death, whichever is the later, and evidence required in connection with any claim must be submitted in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 2, line 21, strike out the figure "10" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "20."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the Committee on World War Veterans' Affairs for its aggressiveness in getting H. R. 6384 finally before this body.

Mr. Chairman, this bill will carry needed benefits to dependents of service-connected World War veterans after the death of the veteran. The increase for widows and orphans is sorely needed. Also the increase for dependent mother and father from $20 per month to $45 per month, where one survives, is sorely needed. The increase of $50 per month for the two, where two survive, is not at all out of line and is none too liberal. The dependent parents of these veterans in many instances are old and totally unable to earn a living and are without other means of support. I shall vote for passage of the bill.

I take this opportunity to call to the attention of my colleagues H. R. 1991 which I have introduced. It is a bill to reenact the law providing for disability allowances for World War veterans and to restore former service-connected disability status. Under the provisions of this bill the rates of pay begin with 10 percent permanent disability, $12 per month. As disability increases, pension is increased to $60 per month for total disability. This is greater than was payable under the old disability allowance act; however, the veterans are growing older, the cost of living has increased, and the increased amount as carried in H. R. 1991 is none too much. These pension benefits will be paid to the veteran, regardless of the cause of his disability. We have a large number of worthy veterans who have been unable to establish, by sufficient evidence, service connection, while in fact many of these veterans are actually service connected. This bill will give them their pensions on these border-line cases and will also give pension to those who are not service connected. It is meritorious and should pass.

The bill also carries a provision which will make permanent temporary service-connected ratings. Under the present law and regulation of the Veterans' Administration, service-connected veterans are examined at intervals of a year or two by the Veterans' Administration to determine whether or not their temporary disabilities are still in existence. This is a needless expense to the Government and needless worry to the service-connected veteran. Any disability which has endured for a year or more should be given a permanent status and the veteran should have the right to call for examinations any time he feels his disability has increased. He now has this right under existing law. The provision in H. R. 1991 retains this right for him.

I call your attention also to H. R. 2728, which I have introduced. It is a bill to amend the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, by providing allowances for widows and children and dependent parents of veterans of the World War. Under the provision of this bill, pension benefits would be accorded to widows and orphans of World War veterans who die without having established service connection of any disability. Regardless of the cause of the veteran's death, the widow and orphans would be entitled to pension. It is important legislation and should by all means be enacted into law. In the past the Congress has accorded such pension benefits to widows and orphans of the veterans of other wars. It is obvious that the Congress will in the future accord these benefits to widows and orphans of our World War veterans.

It is time for us to do it now. I urge my colleagues to give careful and favorable consideration to these bills and to join in my efforts for their passage at this session or surely early in the next session.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That effective on the first day of the month next following the date of enactment of this act, the rates of death compensation payable under the provisions of existing laws or veterans' regulations to a surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent mother or father now on the rolls or hereafter to be placed on the rolls as a surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent mother or father of any World War veteran who died as the result of injury or disease incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War, shall be as follows:

Widow, age under 50 years, $30; widow, age 50 to 65 years, $37.50; widow, age 65 years or over, $45; widow with one child, $10 additional for such child up to 10 years of age, increased to $15 from age 10 (with $8 for each additional child up to 10 years of age, increased to $13 from age 10) (subject to apportionment regulations); no widow but one child, $20; no widow but two children, $33 (equally divided); no widow but three children, $46 (equally divided); (with $8 for each additional child; total amount to be equally divided); dependent mother or father, $45 (or both) $25 each. As to the widow, child, or children, the total compensation payable under this paragraph shall not exceed $75. The amount of the compensation herein authorized shall be paid in the event the monthly payment of compensation under Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (g) and the monthly payment of yearly renewable term, automatic, or United States Government life (converted) insurance does not aggregate or exceed the amount of compensation herein authorized.

As to the surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent mother or father on the rolls on the date of enactment of this act, any increased award herein authorized shall be effective from the date of enactment of this act and in all other cases, except as provided in section 6 of this act, effective dates of awards shall be governed by the provisions of veterans' regulations promulgated under Public Law, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 3, line 24, after the words "or father", strike out "$45" and insert in lieu thereof "$40."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer would reduce the amount of money that would be paid monthly to dependent fathers and mothers, from $45 to $40. At the present time it is my understanding that the amount paid to either father or mother who is dependent is the sum of $20. In the event both are dependent they are now receiving $15 each, or a total of $30. Under the terms of this bill that individual amount would be increased from $20 to $45, which, to my mind, is a rather large, and I think excessive, increase.

So far during the entire discussion of this bill on the part of Members of the House there has been no question at all as to the cost of this legislation and the increase in cost of veterans' benefits by reason of the passage of this legislation.

If you will look at the committee report regarding the proposed legislation you will find in the very last item a tabulation of the cost of the various sections.

Two sections are not tabulated, but those that are, show that the increased cost is $8,952,000 annually. At the time this bill was on the Consent Calendar I objected to its consideration. My reason for doing so was that this was too important a piece of legislation to be passed in that manner. I am glad it was not passed at that time, because since then there has been a conference held, which the chairman of the committee has already discussed this afternoon. As a result, one of the provisions to which I particularly objected has been removed, at least to some extent, namely, changing the 30-percent disability requirement. The effect of having that provision changed from 10 percent back to 20 percent means a saving of $761,000 annually.

It also means preventing the bringing in of general pension legislation in the immediate future, pension legislation that will be based not upon disability but simply upon the fact that the dependent is related in some way to a World War veteran, regardless of whether the veteran suffered any disability in service or not. I want to call this one thought to the attention of the House, that although for this present legislation there is ample precedent in the Civil War, Indian wars, and Spanish-American War, we must keep in mind the fact that every time we duplicate for World War veterans what we may have done previously for other classes of veterans we are not doing exactly the same thing because in prior wars the number of veterans was very small. When we do something for the World War veteran we are dealing with a group of over 4,000,000 and the cost is, therefore, exceedingly great.

I simply want again to call to the attention of the House the fact that unless we are very careful and very judicious in the legislation we pass in regard to increasing veterans' benefits we are going to find a demand on the part of the country for economy in regard to veterans' payments; and if that demand should crystallize I would anticipate, I am frank to say, that there would be even greater economies effected than were effected by the recent Economy Act of 1933. I am not calling these matters to the attention of the House because I wish to bring about an economy wave, but because I feel that Congress must not be too generous, for as we increase the cost of veterans' benefits we are the sooner going to reach that ultimate point beyond which we cannot go and at which the demand for economy will set in. This bill before us now is not fixed as to cost; on the contrary, the cost of this legislation will increase annually as more widows and other dependents become eligible.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. I would be interested to know, if the gentleman can give me the information, how much economy would be effected by reducing the amount from $45 to $40?

Mr. COSTELLO. Possibly the chairman of the committee can give the gentleman exact figures. It would be dependent upon the number of fathers and mothers who are receiving benefits at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell the gentleman that we are not going to save anything because we are going to vote down the amendment, but we could not possibly save over $1,000,000 if you penalized these old people by adopting this amendment.

Mr. COLMER. That $5 would not go beyond that amount?

Mr. RANKIN. No. It would amount to only about $1,000,000 at the outside.

Mr. COSTELLO. This section of the bill will cost the first year $5,827,000. I do not know the exact number of dependent parents who would be eligible. It is my understanding that this is one of the matters that was in disagreement between the chairman of the committee and those with whom he conferred, and who were in favor of making this payment $40 a month. It cannot be said that in voting for this amendment you are penalizing the parents, because even if it is reduced to $40, they will still be receiving an increase of 100 percent. You would still be doubling their benefits, as they now receive only $20 a month.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment is voted down. We cannot balance the Budget at the expense of the aged fathers and mothers whose sons were killed in the World War or died from injuries resulting from the World War. This amendment might save a million dollars, I do not know. It is not going to save anything, because the House will vote down the amendment.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. While I shall vote against the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO], I am sure the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] will admit it is quite necessary that we have a few conscientious objectors in this House. The distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has rendered a very good service.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not questioning that.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Since I raised the question, may I go on record as saying I hope this amendment will be rejected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]. He is thoroughly conscientious and able. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that he withdraw his amendment. We all know that within recent years the cost of living has increased tremendously. Living today is very expensive for these dependent fathers and mothers. I am wondering if the gentleman from California would not have a change of heart and withdraw his amendment?

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say in reply to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] that another reason for offering the amendment is to keep the parents more or less in line with the widows. The widows receive a varied scale of benefits from $30 to $45 maximum. The parents would receive this maximum uniformly all the way through. Of course, I presume the parents would be of the maximum age. You are also putting a high figure on all of these pensions. You are doing it for the World War veterans. You have done it for the Spanish-American War veterans and all of the others, and while $5 a month per individual is a mere pittance, when you spread it over a wide field, such as one covering veterans' benefits, it assumes alarming proportions. In this instance it is a $5 item monthly to parents; however, the demand would come in from other groups. You are raising the pension of the parent from $20 to $45, which is better than 100 percent. Other groups would come here and say, "Why not raise us from $20 to $45?" As you increase this amount, and you more than double it in this instance, other groups will come in and make the same demand.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment in an attempt to prevent this constant pecking at the Treasury, and I offer the amendment very sincerely.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the gentleman does that.

Mr. COSTELLO. The amount provided for in this bill is even a little more generous than the Committee on World War Veterans should grant to the World War veterans' dependents.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I feel the amount paid to the widows is too little also.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may say, in answer to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], that I received a letter after I had objected to the Spanish War veterans' legislation. This letter was to the effect I had done a good piece of work in opposing that bill because the bill was a bad piece of legislation. This man was 75 years of age, and the bill provided those who were over 65 would receive $60 a month. He was 75 and received the $60 a month already, so it was not doing him any good. Therefore the bill was of no value to him and, so, bad.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I wish the gentleman would help us draw up satisfactory legislation for the veterans.

Mr. COSTELLO. There should probably have been another proviso in that bill that all those over 70 years of age should be paid more. What we do in the case of one group we have to do all the way along the line to take care of all of them, and the cost is absolutely prohibitive.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And we ought to do what we can for every group.

Mr. COSTELLO. We are doing quite a bit for all the groups, and I think we have treated all of them very generously. In order to obtain satisfactory legislation, I introduced House Joint Resolution 442, which would provide for a thorough study of veteran legislation, not for the purpose of causing reductions but to bring about uniformity and fair and equal treatment for all—even to bring about increases for the real needy cases.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill is veterans' legislation headed in the right direction. I objected to the bill when it came up for consideration on the Consent Calendar for what I thought was a good reason, but the amendments as submitted by the chairman of the committee have corrected the bill sufficiently so that I shall most heartily support it.

The virtue of this bill is that it seeks to give benefit payments to the dependents of those who have suffered from their war service. I wish that legislation of this character could be devoted exclusively to the soldiers who are suffering from their war service, and to the dependents of soldiers who died of service-connected causes. I think it is a shame that the widow under 50 years of age, of a man who died on a barbed-wire entanglement in the Meuse-Argonne, should receive $30 a month and no more. I think it is a shame that a veteran totally and permanently disabled by his war service should receive only $100 a month. I think it is a shame that one who has lost both hands and one foot or both feet and one hand in the war, or one who lost both eyes while defending his country and has to have an attendant, should receive only $150 a month.

Mr. Chairman, the reason why the deserving receive too little is that this Congress has dumped out money with scoop shovels to veterans who did not deserve a single penny. I think people generally believe that the great bulk of this veterans' money that we vote goes to the deserving. That has not been the fact. Let me read some of the figures from the Budget.

In 1936, the bill for veterans' pensions and compensation was $2,349,000,000. In 1937, $1,152,000,000. In 1938 it will be $587,000,000.

But how much of that goes to men actually suffering from service-connected disabilities, or to the dependents of those who died of service-connected disabilities? This year only $200,000,000, which is one-eleventh of what we dished out in 1936, about one-sixth of what we dished out last year, and about one-third of what we are spending on veterans and their dependents this year.

This country should generously care for every soldier, sailor, and marine who is suffering from an actual war service-connected disability.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BIERMANN. If I have time, I will yield.

The dependents of those who died from service-connected causes should be generously cared for. However, it is financially impossible to do this and at the same time vote the kind of benefits you have insisted on voting in this House, and that the Congress has insisted on voting ever since the war closed. The mere fact that a young man physically fit and foot-loose served his country in time of war does not entitle him to one special monetary privilege. I used to believe that the Democratic Party was opposed to special privileges. I do contend that if a young man goes into the service of his country and suffers a disability, his country should most generously compensate and care for him, and if he dies his dependents should be generously cared for. We can make up our minds, however, to the fact that when we vote 11 times as much money to veterans and their dependents in general in 1 year as we give to the deserving, the deserving are going to suffer. We must make up our minds to one of two things, that either we are going to continue to make our pension system a system of grab, grab, grab, and the greatest sounding board for demagoguery in this country, or we must remodel it on the basis of compensation to those who deserve compensation. [Appause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

May I ask the gentleman from Iowa if the figure he quoted, $500,000,000, does not cover the veterans of all wars?

Mr. BIERMANN. This is a Veterans' Administration figure.

Mr. RANKIN. The veterans of all wars, not the World War veterans. Of course, more than half of that amount goes to the veterans of the War of 1812, the Civil War, and the Spanish-American War.

Mr. BIERMANN. Fortunately, there are only two pensions arising out of the War of 1812, one a widow of a veteran and one a child of a veteran who fought in a war that ended 122 years ago.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand there are only two widows of veterans of that war now on the pension roll, but the gentleman spoke about the figure for 1936 and 1937, which were the years the adjusted-service certificates were paid off. I may say to the gentleman, for whom I have the utmost respect, that it is hardly fair to put such figures into the RECORD without explaining that they cover the payment of the adjusted-service certificates. May I say further that there is not a man in or out of Congress for whom I have a higher regard than I have for the distinguished gentleman from Iowa. However, the gentleman talks about the money that we poured out to these people, but he did not mention the money we poured out not by millions but by the hundreds of millions and by the billions to people who never served in the war, placing upon the pay roll of this Republic—call it relief if you want to—many thousands of people who never served the country in any way.

Mr. BIERMANN. Relief has no connection with this.

Mr. RANKIN. We placed upon relief men who never worked or fought for this country. Many of these people are not even citizens of the country and never will be. Many of them are antagonistic to our form of government, if we want to get at the truth about it. It is hardly fair, when we are spending money on all these people who rendered no service to this Government, to criticize in that way the amounts which are being paid to the men who did serve their country, who were not responsible for the war, but, nevertheless, went overseas and did their best, and to their widows, orphans, and dependent parents.

Mr. BIERMANN. What I am principally criticizing is that those really deserving have been treated in many cases in a niggardly way by this country. The reason is that we have scooped out money to those who have no valid claim on the Government, without any regard for the deserving.

Mr. RANKIN. I regard the adjusted-service certificates as back pay to the men who served.

Let me say further that if we are going to take care of any group in this country which is in need or out of employment, I submit the men who put on the uniform when it was demanded and went to the front and did what they were told to do deserve the first consideration, instead of the great multitude of aliens of people who never fought or served this country in any way. [Applause.]

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman is a good lawyer and knows that is not a very logical argument. My contention is that we do not pay enough to the men and their heirs who deserve this money. The reason is that we pay too much to those who came out of the Army better, many times, than they went in.

Mr. RANKIN. There is not a disabled veteran who would not be for this bill as it is written, in my opinion.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am for it.

Mr. RANKIN. There is not a disabled veteran who does not want these dependent parents taken care of.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the gentleman know of a single able-bodied individual who served in the late war who at the present time is receiving compensation from the Government unless he has some disability that can be traced to the service?

Mr. BIERMANN. I can answer that question. There are 40,960 of them according to a letter I have before me from the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. RANKIN. No; except the totally disabled, who get $30 a month.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of what I consider the unfair statement made by the gentleman from Iowa in connection with the service men of this country, I hope the chairman of the committee will take the time to break down the figures which were submitted by the gentleman from Iowa in order that the House of Representatives and the country may know exactly what the veterans of this country who are physically fit, so to speak, the ones about whom the gentleman is complaining, actually receive at the present time from the Government.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am not complaining so much about the veterans as I am complaining about the action of this House.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say again to the gentleman from Iowa that during the trying times through which we are passing, the most stabilizing influence in this country is the World War veterans, the men who wore the uniform in 1917 and 1918. At this time, when we need stabilizing influences, they are the greatest assets this Government has.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Is it not a fact that in all the European countries whose forms of government have been changed such changes have been built around the veterans' organizations? In contrast, in this country, as the gentleman states, the veterans have been the stabilizing influence which have kept us in the path of democracy, and we ought to give them credit for it.

Mr. RANKIN. Absolutely.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last two words and asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the power of the President to appoint a successor to Mr. Justice Van Devanter was challenged in the Senate by a distinguished Member of that body, for whose legal ability, statesmanship, and patriotism I have the highest regard.

Being the author of the act involved in that discussion, and having had some responsibility for persuading the House to pass the bill, I feel that I should make a brief statement dealing with the question raised.

The act, which is brief, reads as follows:

Justices of the Supreme Court are hereby granted the same rights and privileges with regard to retiring, instead of resigning, granted to judges other than Justices of the Supreme Court by section 260 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 375), and the President shall be authorized to appoint a successor to any such Justice of the Supreme Court so retiring from regular active service on the bench, but such Justice of the Supreme Court so retired may nevertheless be called upon by the Chief Justice and be by him authorized to perform such judicial duties, in any judicial circuit, including those of a circuit justice in such circuit, as such retired Justice may be willing to undertake.

The provisions of the section of the Judicial Code referred to, enacted in 1919, permit district and circuit judges to retire from regular active service on the bench and become subject to lighter duties, and for successors to be appointed to such judges so retiring. It will be observed from the language that Justices of the Supreme Court are specifically excluded from the operation of the law.

At the outset it may be stated as a general proposition that everybody agrees what is proposed by the act referred to is a desirable thing to be accomplished. It affords the privilege to a Justice of the Supreme Court to retire when he has reached the age which existing law with regard to other Federal judges recognizes as an age at which Federal judges ought to be permitted to retire, and permits the appointment of a more vigorous judge to perform the onerous duties of the Supreme Court bench.

In the second place it is not claimed by anybody, as I understand it, that this law violates either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution which attempts to guarantee the independence of the judiciary as a coordinate branch of the Government. It is purely permissive, and in no manner coercive.

On May 18 Mr. Justice Van Devanter wrote the following letter to the President:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Having held my commission as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and served in that Court for 26 years, and having come to be 78 years of age, I desire to avail myself of the rights, privileges, and judicial service specified in the act of March 1, 1937, entitled "An act to provide for retirement of Justices of the Supreme Court", and to that end I hereby retire from regular active service on the bench—this retirement to be effective on and after the 2d day of June 1937, that being the day next following the adjournment of the present term of the Court.

I have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully yours,

WILLIS VAN DEVANTER.

The President replied:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
May 18, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. JUSTICE VAN DEVANTER: I have received your letter of this morning telling me that you are retiring from regular active service on the bench on June 2, 1937.

May I as one who has had the privilege of knowing you for many years extend to you every good wish.

Before you leave Washington for the summer it would give me great personal pleasure if you would come in to see me.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The question raised as to what Mr. Justice Van Devanter's status is and what would happen in the event he should demand the right again to sit on the Supreme Court and perform the regular duties of the Court notwithstanding his letter of retirement has nothing to do with the question of the power of the President to make the additional appointment.

Congress has authorized the President upon the doing of what Mr. Justice Van Devanter did to appoint another person to the Supreme Court. The number of Supreme Court Justices is not fixed either by the Constitution or by statutory law. The Constitution only provides that there shall be a Supreme Court. The law provides that:

The Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of a Chief Justice of the United States and eight Associate Justices, any six of whom shall constitute a quorum.

This law has to do with the composition of the Court, but fixes no limitation upon the number of Justices at a given time. This difference between the composition of a Court and Justices of that Court is made clear by another statute which provides that—

There shall be in each circuit a circuit court of appeals, which shall consist of three judges, of whom two shall constitute a quorum, which shall be a court of record, with appellate jurisdiction, as hereinafter limited and established.

That is the composition of the court but in one of the circuits there are now nine circuit judges, though the court remains a court of three judges.

By specific authority of the Congress, as stated, the President is given authority to appoint a new member of the Supreme Court whenever a member of that Court retires. There being no constitutional prohibition and there being specific legislative authority, it seems to me there can be no question as to the power of the President to make the appointment.

It may be observed that under the provisions of the act of 1919 referred to district and circuit judges have from time to time retired and have performed lighter duties, and other judges have been appointed to the places on the bench the retired judges formerly occupied without constitutional or administrative difficulties.

Even if it should be conceded that Mr. Justice Van Devanter, notwithstanding his retirement under the provisions of the act, is a Justice of the Supreme Court in the fullest sense, that fact could have no bearing, it seems clear to me, upon the question of the constitutional power of the President under the authority of the act of this Congress to make an additional appointment with the advice and consent of the Senate to the present personnel of the Supreme Court.

While not pertinent to the inquiry as to constitutional power to appoint, the probability of administrative difficulty may be considered with some interest. After all, what is the probability of a judge who has retired, as did Mr. Justice Van Devanter, ever being asked by the Chief Justice to return to the Supreme Court bench or ever being willing to return to the Supreme Court bench despite his retirement, even though asked by the Chief Justice to return? That possibility is so small as to make it a question only of academic interest. In fact that possibility, practically speaking, is nil.

In the first place, it would be known by such Justice, retired from the regular active duties and having accepted the status permitted under the act, that he would have great difficulty in establishing his legal right to sit again upon the bench from which he had retired.

As a matter of fact, any Justice on the bench who would retire and then try to get back on the bench would be restrained by his family or his friends. If not, there is a place to put people in that mental condition. They would never get anywhere near the Supreme Court Building to bother anybody, and, of course, no Chief Justice would ask such a man so retired to sit again on the Supreme Court Bench. As I see it, there is no constitutional or practical administrative difficulty to be feared with reference to this law which we devoutly hope, and as we believe with full justification, will prove greatly helpful to the public interest permanently and especially now in a very delicate situation.

I want to express, in conclusion, my admiration and appreciation for the restraint, patience, and mutual indulgence of the Members of the House and their kindness to me while we have all been trying to be helpful in this difficult situation. I am deeply grateful to you all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill may be considered as having been read.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, there are one or two other amendments to be offered, I may say to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That on and after the date of enactment of this act, for the purpose of payment of compensation under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, the term "widow of a World War veteran" shall mean a woman—

(a) (1) Who was married to the person who served prior to or during the period of service on which the claim is based; or

(2) Who was married to the person who served more than 10 years prior to his death: Provided, That in no event will the widow of a World War veteran, if otherwise entitled, be denied compensation if married to the veteran prior to July 3, 1931; or

(3) Who was married to the person who served at any time, provided a child or children were born of such marriage.

(b) No compensation shall be paid to a widow unless there was continuous cohabitation with the person who served from the date of marriage to date of death, except where there was a separation which was due to the misconduct of or procured by the person who served, without the fault of the widow.

(c) All marriages shall be proven as valid marriages according to the law of the place where the parties resided at the time of marriage, or of the law of the place where the ceremony was performed at the time thereof, or the law of the place where the parties resided when the right to pension hereunder accrued.

(d) Compensation shall not be allowed a widow who has remarried either once or more than once, and where compensation is properly discontinued by reason of remarriage it shall not thereafter be recommenced.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 4, lines 23 to 25, strike out the following: "more than 10 years prior to his death: Provided, That in no event will the widow of a World War veteran, if otherwise."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 5, line 1, strike out the following: "entitled, be denied compensation if married to the veteran."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 5, in line 4, strike out the following: "or children were."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: On page 5, line 4, insert before the word "born" the word "was."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] has stated he feels that the men with service-connected disabilities and the widows of men dying of service-connected disabilities are not receiving enough pension. Canada pays much more to such cases than does the United States. I heartily agree with him, and I wish the gentleman would join with me and with others in securing a higher amount.

I think the gentleman was not quite fair in his statement, although I know he did not mean to be unfair, about the amount paid to the other veterans and the work they had done.

With many others I have seen the disabled veterans ever since the war began and have worked with veterans' organizations. I have known that very many veterans now are suffering from disabilities that really were of service origin, but they have tried to carry on. Many men who are now getting benefits that perhaps the gentleman has claimed were unwisely given are in that class. Will the gentleman join with me in trying to secure a higher rate of compensation for service-connected cases?

Mr. BIERMANN. I will be very pleased to do that.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made earlier today.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That notwithstanding any provision of law or veterans' regulation, except as to emergency officers' retirement pay, reenlistment in the military or naval service on or after November 12, 1918, and before July 2, 1921, where there was prior service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, shall be considered as World War service under the laws providing benefits for World War veterans and their dependents.

SEC. 6. That notwithstanding any provision of law or veterans' regulation, awards of death compensation shall be effective as of the date of death of the World War veteran if claim is filed within 1 year after the death of such veteran.

SEC. 7. That a new section is hereby added to title III, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38), to be known as section 312, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 312. Without prejudice to any other cause of disability, the permanent loss of the use of both feet, of both hands, or of both eyes, or of one foot and one hand, or of one foot and one eye, or of one hand and one eye, or the loss of hearing of both ears, or the organic loss of speech, shall be deemed total permanent disability for insurance purposes. This section shall be deemed to be in effect on and after April 6, 1917, and shall apply only to automatic insurance, yearly renewable term insurance, and United States Government life (converted) insurance issued prior to December 15, 1936."

SEC. 8. That where an incompetent World War veteran, receiving disability compensation under title III of the act of March 28, 1934 (Public Law No. 141, 73d Cong.), disappears, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in his discretion, may pay to the dependents of such veteran the amount of compensation payable to dependents of deceased veterans who die from war service-connected disabilities: Provided, That in no event shall payment made under this act in any claim exceed the amount of compensation payable at the time of the veteran's disappearance.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk, to go to the last of the bill. It merely brings this legislation in line with other legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RANKIN: Page 7, after line 7, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 9. The penal and forfeiture provisions relating to pensions and compensation contained in Public Law No. 2 (73d Cong.) shall be applicable to claims for compensation under Public Law No. 484 (73d Cong.) as amended by Public Law No. 844 (74th Cong.) and this act."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I discussed this amendment with General Hines. He is very anxious to have this go in. It would have no particular application to the people in this country, because they are amenable to our courts, but we have a great many in foreign countries who could not be reached in that way. They ask that this provision be offered; and, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to take the responsibility of saying to the House that it will not hurt the legislation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman is willing to go along with General Hines?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Does it in any sense revise the provisions of the Economy Act, Law No. 2, referred to?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What would be the status of a widow who had a child by a soldier who has now attained maturity, if they apply the usual definition of a child in veterans' legislation?

Mr. RANKIN. The widow would be taken care of. It is the birth of a child that makes her eligible.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6384) to liberalize the provisions of existing laws governing service-connected benefits for World War veterans and their dependents, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking the vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-six Members have risen, not a sufficient number. The Chair has counted the House.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division upon the vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 205, noes 0.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I object to the vote upon that ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-three Members present, a quorum.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RANKIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay on the table House Resolution 292, which was a rule for the consideration of the bill just pasesd.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection .

TOLL BRIDGES UNDER SYSTEM OF FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY FREE BRIDGES

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7373) to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges under system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "1938" and insert "1939."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation may have until midnight tonight to file a report on the bill, S. 413, to create a commission and to extend further relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

THE LATE FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I was deeply shocked to hear the announcement made this afternoon by my colleague from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER] of the death of a former Member of this House, the late Honorable Frederick R. Lehlbach, who served in this body for 22 years. We were warm friends for many years and it became my lot as the nominee of my party in a district adjoining his to speak with him on public questions from the same platform. Of itself that was an honor.

The tribute delivered by my colleague was indeed a fitting one.

His home city and State and the Nation have lost a citizen who had served them honorably and well.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BOREN was granted permission to revise and extend his own remarks.)

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is entitled to be recognized for 20 minutes.

THE ROAD TO HELL—FOREWARNED IS FOREARMED

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, history, experience, and our own common sense all teach us that to be forewarned is, if we are intelligent and act upon the information, to be forearmed.

Likewise we know that the advice "In time of peace prepare for war", is sound. It was the foolish virgins who failed to fill their lamps with oil.

It is folly to shut our eyes to events, to ignore facts, and place reliance upon statements of good intentions. Hell, it is rumored, is paved with good intentions; and many who loudly announce their desire to serve have by their acts brought suffering, and sometimes worse, not only to individuals but to nations.

In an editorial in this morning's Washington Post, referring to a difference of opinion between Senator BYRD and Dr. Merriam as to the effect of the President's reorganization plan, the following is found. The caption is "The Road to Hell." The article continues:

> One of the greatest obstacles to constructive analysis of reform measures is the unwillingness of the average man to see beyond well advertised good intentions.
> * * * * * *
> If Congress always recognized the vital distinction between admirable intentions and probable performance, bad legislation would have much less chance of slipping through under the attractive guise of reform.

Hence it behooves us to look at fairly, face squarely and with understanding, present-day facts and proposed legislation, and prepare for the logical result.

Some have intimated that I am conjuring up visions of disaster which have no substance; seeing an ulterior purpose where none exists; in short, that I am an alarmist.

Quite willing am I to be classed with those geese on Capitol Hill in Rome, who in the olden days, by the flapping of their wings and their cackling, aroused and alarmed the citizens and saved the city from destruction, if by a warning I can call on guard those who love our Government and our country and are charged with its defense.

Regardless of the announcement of high purposes, of the statements of a desire to protect the many from the greed and selfishness of the few; of the anxiety to aid those who lack capacity or opportunity or who, by force of circumstances, have been unable to enjoy a fair share of the blessings of this world; in spite of the willingness to ignore the lessons of experience, and of the attempt to, by social, political, and economic formulas, wipe out the suffering and the inequality which today is less prevalent than ever before and the existence of which is due in large measure to envy, discontent, and undue ambition—the fact remains that there are today certain very definite forces at work which, in the past experience of the peoples of the world have in the end brought disaster.

Harking back to the Post's editorial, let me very briefly, but as earnestly as I may, call your attention to certain acts and certain legislation which have brought us a long, long way on the road toward centralization of power and which, if followed to the logical end, can only result in the destruction of our form of government, the deprivation of our liberties, and the establishment of a dictatorship.

We all know why, in our form of government, the three departments were created and separate powers given to each. We all know, notwithstanding our faultfinding and our criticism, that so far in the history of the world our form of government, measured by results, has proven itself—if judged by the extent of the liberty of its individual citizens, their material prosperity, and the opportunity given them—to be the best yet devised.

This being true, and conceding the proposition that improvement may be made, what excuse is there for destroying it?

Nevertheless, there has been a determined and, to a large extent, a successful effort to take from the Congress the power to originate and enact its own form of legislation. About this proposition there is no doubt. Every man here knows that it is true.

I but cite the fact that bill after bill, over which committees have worked for days and for weeks at times, are in the end rewritten to conform to the ideas of some department.

May I cite the proposed sugar legislation? The members of the Agriculture Committee know its history. Doubtless there is before every committee a similar situation.

The drive of the executive department to subjugate the judicial department is known to all. It has not been abandoned; it is but laid aside for the moment, and, while preparations for a renewed direct assault upon the Supreme Court are being made, flank attacks which tend toward the same purpose—the centralization of power—are being driven home.

The Wagner Act, with the National Labor Relations Board and its vast horde of spies, undercover men, special investigators, prosecutors, and judges, which are being sent into every nook and corner of the country, is being used, not for the purpose of securing justice for the worker but to oppress industry; to force those who in the past have created the jobs and given employment, to acknowledge that they have "met their master" and to convince the independent worker that he may pay tribute to the C. I. O. and to advance the ambitions and the power of John L. Lewis and his associates.

The National Labor Relations Board, if its actions be criterion of its capacity, has no knowledge of fair dealing or of justice. It has neither eyes nor ears, if the sights and the sounds which are presented to it are in conflict with its own preconceived notions.

It sends out its investigators. It selects the statements it wishes to present. By leading and suggestive questions, that information is brought out at a hearing, and it renders a decision finding some employer guilty of some unfair labor practice.

It is the mouthpiece of John L. Lewis and the C. I. O.

It proceeds on the same theory and with the same, although more refined, methods of those who conducted hearings in the torture chambers of old. It functions as did those who formerly advocated the burning and the drowning of witches.

It neither creates jobs nor meets a pay roll, nor assists in so doing, but as an engine of destruction it has not yet been surpassed. It is a disgrace to our civilization, and the day will come when we will wonder why we were so thoughtless as to give it life or permit it to live.

There is another body, the La Follette Senate Civil Liberties Committee, which is presenting a biased and untrue picture of conditions as they exist.

I cite but one instance, and upon that I will enlarge later. I refer to the Chicago riot, where the committee, which had or which should have had in its possession—for it had as a witness the man who took the pictures—pictures showing that the assault grew out of an attack by the rioters upon the police, deliberately led the public to believe that the Chicago police were guilty of brutality and staged an unprovoked assault upon peaceful women and men. If it did not conceal, at least it did not present, the pictures showing the inception of the riot; nor did it bring out all the testimony showing how the riot began.

The Senate committee has probably done as much to increase the membership of the C. I. O. as any one body. It has been freely charged and, so far as I know, never denied, that its investigators were with C. I. O. organizers in its campaign for membership, and its hearings have demonstrated beyond argument that it cares for but one side of the controversy.

So far as I know it has not yet produced a witness or a word of testimony to show coercion, violence, intimidation on the part of members of the C. I. O. toward workers who did not wish to join or to strike. It has made no inquiry into the destruction of personal property at the Apex plant at Philadelphia or in the sit-down strikes at Flint. So far it has said nothing about the violence used to drive hundreds of thousands of workers from their tasks.

The Senate Civil Liberties Committee should be given a dose of its own medicine, and there should be spread upon the public records, so that all may read, a history of its inquisition.

The reorganization plan of the President, as everyone who is familiar with the situation will acknowledge, takes power from the legislative and the judicial branches of our Government and vests it in the executive department.

The fact, as brought out in the Washington Post editorial, that this is under the guise of bettering our situation does not alter the purpose and, as the editorial hints, hell is paved with good intentions.

So we have this taking from Congress of its power to legislate; the attempt to take the judicial power which, for the moment, has been thwarted; this assault upon the independence and the liberty, not only of the industrialists, but of the independent worker, through the Wagner Act, the National Labor Relations Board, and the La Follette committee; not only the renewed attempt, under the guise of reorganization, to deprive the judicial and the legislative departments of their authority—but, in addition to all this, we have the tacit approval of the C. I. O. and its attempt to bring all labor under its rule, forcing it to pay tribute in order that men may work.

One further step has been taken and, if it succeeds, our Government is at the mercy of these organizations. I refer now to the organization of municipal, State, and Federal employees.

To combat this movement, I have offered a bill which would automatically separate from his employment each and every Government employee who takes steps to bring about a strike to paralyze the activities of the Government.

We all know how those seeking Government positions beseech us and solicit our aid to secure their jobs. These individuals who seek these positions know the compensation which they will receive and they know, or they could, if they wished, ascertain the conditions under which they must work.

They are in a class separate and apart from all other workers. They enjoy privileges and benefits which no other class of workers can enjoy. Their employer never goes into bankruptcy; pay day never fails to arrive and, ordinarily, there is no cut in the amount of their compensation, whether business be poor or otherwise.

They are serving not another citizen of the country—they are serving the Government itself. They owe allegiance and loyalty to that Government and the very fact that they constitute a privileged class and that their services are absolutely necessary, if Government is to continue to function, precludes all thought of strike.

So, too, should their position prevent them from attempting, by lobbying or otherwise, to coerce the legislative branch, either as to wages or working conditions. The right of petition remains, but the right of coercion never existed.

If we sit here and permit Government employees to organize for the purpose of enforcing their demands, permit them to join the C. I. O., permit them to strike, we have betrayed our trust and failed our Government in its time of need.

Now, today, at our doors is knocking for answer this question as to whether we, the representatives of the people, will be faithful to our trust and will perform our duty and turn back at the beginning this movement, which, if it be successful, will shortly be demanding that none but those who owe allegiance to its leadership can work for the Government or hold office under it, in short the "closed shop" applied to the Government.

Then, when that day arrives, we will have—not a government of, by, and for the people, but a government by the C. I. O. and its affiliates, or by whatever union may supplant it.

In January of this year, in this well, I begged of you Members from the South to come to our aid and to stop then the drive of the C. I. O., attempting to warn you that it would come to your communities.

To my regret I learn that it has gone South, and in the home town of that gentleman whom I admire so much, Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, it has closed a factory and threatens others.

Let us now, before it is too late, assert ourselves and, before we adjourn, pass the needed legislation which will put a stop to this Communist activity within the Government forces themselves.

In this instance there is no call upon Democratic Members to go contrary to the will of the President, for he has expressed the thought that Government employees have no right to strike and I am only asking that that thought be enacted into law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] is entitled to be recognized under special order of the House. The gentleman does not appear to be present.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOYER, for 2 weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. GREGORY, for the balance of the week, on account of important official business.

To Mr. ELLENBOGEN, on account of official business.

HOME MORTGAGES IN PENNSYLVANIA (S. DOC. NO. 92)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 157, agreed to July 27, 1937, a preliminary report on the total of home mortgages and other obligations acquired by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the State of Pennsylvania, the number of foreclosures made by the Corporation in such State, and other similar information, for the fiscal years ended 1934, 1935, and 1936, which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Hutcheson, of Huntington, W. Va., praying for the prompt adoption of the general legislative objectives of the President of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted by the United Shoe Workers of America, C. I. O., in the State of Massachusetts, urging the enactment of Senate Joint Resolution 176, favoring the employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted at Denton, Md., by women members of the Church of the Brethren of the Eastern District of Maryland, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the export of implements of war from the United States in peacetime as well as in time of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dorchester, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish the Federal Reserve System as at present constituted, and also praying that Congress exercise its constitutional right to coin money and regulate the value thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted a report (No. 1079) to accompany the bill (S. 1273) to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea, heretofore reported by him from that committee with an amendment.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7741) to amend the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936, to provide for the escheat to the United States of certain amounts, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1080) thereon.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 288) to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the New York World's Fair, 1939, New York City, N. Y., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1082) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4543) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to exempt vessels arriving for the purpose of taking on ship's stores and certain sea stores from the requirement of formal entry, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1083) thereon.

Mr. GUFFEY, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7949) to exempt State liquor-dispensing systems from the requirement of keeping certain records and rendering transcripts and summaries of entries with respect to distilled spirits, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1084) thereon.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8025) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes relating to the purchase of metal for minor coins of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SCHWARTZ, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 854. A bill for the relief of Robert Coates (Rept. No. 1085);

H. R. 2740. A bill for the relief of John N. Brooks (Rept. No. 1086);

H. R. 3058. A bill for the relief of former employees of the Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporation (Rept. No. 1087); and

H. R. 4526. A bill for the relief of Lake Spence (Rept. No. 1088).

Mr. SCHWARTZ also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2644) for the relief of Sherm Sletholm, Loneata Sletholm, Lulu Yates, Madeline Yates, and the estate of Ella A. Morris, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1089) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3426) for the relief of Rose McGirr, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1090) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 615) for the relief of Margaret Voorhees, a minor, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1091) thereon.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1816) to amend section 77 of the Judicial Code, as amended, to create a Brunswick division in the southern district of Georgia, with terms of court to be held at Brunswick, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1120) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1375. A bill for the relief of Wayne M. Cotner (Rept. No. 1092); and

H. R. 4156. A bill for the relief of George R. Brown (Rept. No. 1093).

Mr. HUGHES also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5963) providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York at Malone, N. Y., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1122) thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1869. A bill for the relief of J. Roy Workman, Adelaide W. Workman, and J. Roy Workman, Jr., a minor (Rept. No. 1094); and

H. R. 3987. A bill for the relief of the estate of Col. C. J. Bartlett, United States Army (Rept. No. 1095).

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2866. A bill for the relief of Vincent Ford (Rept. No. 1096);

H. R. 1207. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the estates of Marshall Campbell and Raymond O'Neal (Rept. No. 1097);

H. R. 1734. A bill for the relief of Sam Romack (Rept. No. 1098); and

H. R. 6059. A bill for the relief of Edith Jordan (Rept. No. 1099).

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 283) for the relief of Mrs. J. H. McClary, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1100) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2699) for the relief of Max D. Ordmann, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1101) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 420. A bill for the relief of Marjorie L. Baxter (Rept. No. 1102);

H. R. 1355. A bill for the relief of Lawrence E. Thomas (Rept. No. 1103);

H. R. 1794. A bill for the relief of the estate of Marcellino M. Gilmette (Rept. No. 1104);

H. R. 3503. A bill for the relief of George O. Claypool (Rept. No. 1105);

H. R. 3745. A bill for the relief of W. H. Lenneville (Rept. No. 1106); and

H. R. 3750. A bill for the relief of Jack C. Allen (Rept. No. 1107).

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 1767. A bill for the relief of the Rowesville Oil Co. (Rept. No. 1108);

H. R. 1770. A bill for the relief of the Farmers' Storage & Fertilizer Co., of Aiken, S. C. (Rept. No. 1109);

H. R. 1915. A bill for the relief of Charles Tabit (Rept. No. 1110);

H. R. 2488. A bill for the relief of A. H. Sphar (Rept. No. 1111); and

H. R. 3395. A bill for the relief of J. H. Knott (Rept. No. 1112).

Mr. BROWN of Michigan, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 886. A bill for the relief of Guideo Biscaro, Giovanni Polin, Spironello Antonio, Arturo Bettio, Carlo Biscaro, and Antonio Vannin (Rept. No. 1113);

H. R. 1690. A bill for the relief of Ralph Reisler (Rept. No. 1114);

H. R. 5229. A bill for the relief of Carson Bradford (Rept. No. 1115); and

H. R. 5622. A bill for the relief of Marian Malik (Rept. No. 1116).

Mr. BROWN of Michigan also, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1346) for the relief of Stillwell Bros., Inc., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1117) thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 5859. A bill authorizing the Territory of Alaska to transfer a certain tract of land to Sitka Cold Storage Co., a corporation (Rept. No. 1118); and

H. R. 7727. A bill to authorize the administration of oaths by the chief clerk and the assistant chief clerk of the office of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1081).

Mr. DIETERICH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 284) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim the 13th day of April of each year Thomas Jefferson's Birthday, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1119) thereon.

Mr. McGILL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 483) to provide for the confiscation of firearms in possession of persons convicted of felony and disposition thereof, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1121) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2253) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render final judgment on any and all claims of whatsoever nature which the Indians of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, or any tribe, band, or group having members living thereon, may have against the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1123) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2053. A bill authorizing the establishment of a revolving loan fund for the Klamath Indians of Oregon, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1124); and

S. 2054. A bill establishing per-diem payments in lieu of compensation and expenses for members of Klamath business committee and official Klamath delegates to Washington (Rept. No. 1125).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2594) authorizing the President of the United States to summon Sam Alexander before an Army retiring board, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1126) thereon.

REPORT ON TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, pursuant to section 2 of Public Resolution No. 40 of the present Congress, I have the honor to submit a report from the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance. This report is quite voluminous. I may say that it is being presented to the House of Representatives today, and the Committee on Ways and Means of that body will take up immediately the report, with a bill, for consideration, expecting to pass the proposed legislation before the close of the present session of Congress. Of course, the Committee on Finance will seek immediately to take up the bill after it shall have passed the House. I am going to ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so that all may read it, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the report was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LETTER OF SUBMITTAL

JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE,
Washington, August 5, 1937.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: Pursuant to section 2 of Public Resolution No. 40, Seventy-fifth Congress, I have the honor to submit a report by the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance.

Yours respectfully,

R. L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance.

REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

FOREWORD

On June 1, 1937, the President of the United States transmitted the following message to the Congress:

To the Congress of the United States:

A condition has been developing during the past few months so serious to the Nation that the Congress and the people are entitled to information about it.

The Secretary of the Treasury has given me a report of a preliminary study of income-tax returns for the calendar year 1936. This report reveals efforts at avoidance and evasion of tax liability so widespread and so amazing both in their boldness and their ingenuity that further action without delay seems imperative.

We face a challenge to the power of the Government to collect, uniformly, fairly, and without discrimination, taxes based on statutes adopted by the Congress.

Mr. Justice Holmes said, "Taxes are what we pay for civilized society." Too many individuals, however, want the civilization at a discount.

Methods of escape or intended escape from tax liability are many. Some are instances of avoidance which appear to have the color of legality; others are on the border line of legality; others are plainly contrary even to the letter of the law.

All are alike in that they are definitely contrary to the spirit of the law. All are alike in that tney represent a determined effort on the part of those who use them to dodge the payment of taxes which Congress based on ability to pay. All are alike in that failure to pay results in shifting the tax load to the shoulders of others less able to pay, and in mulcting the Treasury of the Government's just due.

I commend to your attention the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, May 29, 1937.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: As you know, the Treasury was surprised and disturbed by the failure of the receipts from the income tax on March 15 to measure up to the Budget estimates. Therefore, we undertook an immediate investigation. Only a preliminary report can be made at this time, because the complete investigation covering all the income-tax returns filed will require the balance of this year. Furthermore, since many of the returns of large manufacturing corporations have not yet been filed, the present report is confined almost wholly to data disclosed by the individual tax returns.

But even this preliminary report discloses conditions so serious that immediate action is called for. More than the usual examination and audit by the Treasury are needed. It seems clear that if tax evasion and tax avoidance can be promptly stopped through legislation and regulations resulting from a special investigation a very large portion of the deficiency in revenues will be restored to the Treasury.

I herewith enumerate some of the principal devices now being employed by taxpayers with large incomes for the purpose of defeating the income taxes which would normally be payable by them. As we continue our preliminary examination other devices are being disclosed.

1. THE DEVICE OF EVADING TAXES BY SETTING OF FOREIGN PERSONAL HOLDING CORPORATIONS IN THE BAHAMAS, PANAMA, NEWFOUNDLAND, AND OTHER PLACES WHERE TAXES ARE LOW AND CORPORATION LAWS LAX

Americans have formed 64 such companies in the Bahamas alone in 1935 and 1936, and 22 more were organized by Americans in the Bahamas during the past 2 months. Panama and Newfoundland seem to be even more fertile territory, since their corporation laws make it more difficult to ascertain who the actual stockholders are. Moreover, the stockholders have resorted to all manner of devices to prevent the acquisition of information regarding their companies. The companies are frequently organized through foreign lawyers, with dummy incorporators and dummy directors, so that the names of the real parties in interest do not appear.

One American citizen with a $3,000,000 Bahamas corporation has apparently attempted to prevent the Bureau of Internal Revenue from catching up with him by filing his individual tax returns in successive years from towns in New Brunswick, British Columbia, and Jamaica.

Another individual believes that he has been so successful in removing his assets from the United States to the Bahamas that he is defying the Treasury to collect a tax upon a $250,000 fee he has received; and by way of insult, he has offered to compromise his admitted tax liability of $33,000 for past years by a payment of $1,700.

Still another individual showed a large net loss on his personal return for 1936. In considerable part the loss was due to the large deduction he claims for interest on a loan made to him by his personal holding company. But the man in question is no object of charity, for his personal holding company, organized in Canada, had an income of over $1,500,000 from American dividends in 1936, though it has not yet filed a return.

Perhaps the most flagrant case of this character is that of a retired American Army officer with a large income from valuable American securities which he desires to sell at a very large profit. To escape our income- and inheritance-tax laws, he used the device of becoming a naturalized Canadian citizen, and 6 days later organized four Bahamas corporations to hold his securities. He and his lawyers apparently think that he can now sell his securities free from any taxes on his profits, since there are no income taxes in the Bahamas, and that he has adroitly escaped American taxes.

2. THE DEVICE OF FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES

Two New York insurance agents have caused the organization of insurance companies in the Bahamas with a view to enabling taxpayers to secure spurious deductions for interest through an ingenious scheme for the issuance of life-insurance policies. Americans who went into the scheme purported to pay a large single premium for their policies, but immediately borrowed back practically the entire sum. Under the plan the so-called policyholders sought to obtain a large deduction for interest on this loan, although the fact was that no interest was really paid. By this means five prominent Americans sought to evade nearly $550,000 in income taxes in the years 1932 to 1936. This fraud was discovered by the Treasury's investigators and all of the taxpayers have now submitted offers to pay the full amount of taxes evaded, plus interest. Until our investigation is completed, we do not know how many similar companies may have been organized in other countries, and utilized by our citizens; nor do we yet know whether this newly invented type of fraud has other ramifications.

3. THE DEVICE OF DOMESTIC PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

The rates of tax applicable to personal holding companies were reduced in 1936 at the time of the enactment of the undistributed-profits tax. It was believed at that time that the combined rates of the two taxes would be sufficient to insure the distribution of the entire incomes of these companies, and the consequent imposition of surtaxes upon their owners. This expectation has not been realized.

Thus, the single stockholder of one large personal holding company saved himself $322,000 by causing his company to distribute none of its income to him.

In another case, a man and his wife saved $791,000 through the use of personal holding companies in 1936.

In a third case, the personal holding company reported over $500,000 of net income but the total taxes paid by the two stockholders, husband and wife, were less than $60,000, due principally to credits for payments on indebtedness the holding company prudently incurred in accumulating properties for its owners. If the personal holding company had not been in existence, the stockholders would have paid over $200,000 additional income taxes.

Another favorite device is to organize a considerable number of personal holding companies, not only for the sake of reducing the tax but of increasing the Treasury's difficulties in auditing transactions between companies. At last accounts one man had caused to be set up some 96 companies scattered all over the country. Two other individuals were utilizing 23 personal holding companies.

4. THE DEVICE OF INCORPORATING YACHTS AND COUNTRY ESTATES

Many wealthy taxpayers today are dodging the express provisions of the law denying deductions for personal expenses by incorporating their yachts or their country estates, turning over to the yacht or to the estate securities yielding an income just sufficient to pay the entire expenses of operation. Hundreds of thousands of dollars in income taxes are annually avoided in this way.

Thus, one man's yacht is owned by his personal holding company, along with $3,000,000 in securities. He rents the yacht from his company for a sum far less than the cost of upkeep, and the company uses its income from the securities to pay the wages of the captain and crew, the expenses of operating the yacht, and an annual depreciation allowance. None of these items would be deductible if this individual owned the yacht personally.

A great many wealthy taxpayers are utilizing a similar arrangement for the operation of their country places and town houses.

One man has placed his $5,000,000 city residence in such a corporation; another, his racing stable, whose losses last year were nearly $200,000. The tax savings he thus sought to obtain through the use of the holding company were $140,000.

One wealthy woman has improved on the general plan of evasion by causing her personal holding company, which owns her country place, to employ her husband at a salary to manage it. She can thereby supply him with pocket money, and in effect claims a tax deduction for the expense of maintaining him.

5. THE DEVICE OF ARTIFICIAL DEDUCTIONS FOR INTEREST, LOSSES, ETC.

Taxpayers are seeking greatly to reduce their personal income taxes by claiming deductions for interest on loans to them by their personal holding companies, or on loans to them by their family trusts. These transactions normally have no business purpose but are merely an artificial means of shifting income from one member of the family subject to high surtax rates to another member of the family subject to lower rates.

Thus, one woman claims a large annual deduction for interest on a loan made to her by her husband as trustee of a trust which she created for their children. The mother thereby seeks to secure a deduction for her contribution to the children's support, and, since the trust is revocable by her husband, the parents still have the desired control over the property and its income.

In the same category are losses deducted by taxpayers who claim that their racing stables or hobby farms were operated for profit, even though a profit is never realized. Thus, a prominent manufacturer seeks a deduction of over $125,000 against his income from his business on account of his losses in operating a chicken farm.

6. THE DEVICE OF THE CREATION OF MULTIPLE TRUSTS FOR RELATIVES AND DEPENDENTS

Splitting income two ways, between husband and wife, reduces income taxes and leaves the family income intact. Splitting the family income many ways by means of many trusts, all for the same beneficiaries, may effect a much greater saving, while leaving the money actually in the same hands. For the creator of the trust often constitutes himself or his wife as trustee, and thus retains full control over the investment and disposition of the fund itself and of its income.

One thrifty taxpayer has formed 64 trusts for the benefit of four members of his immediate family, and thereby claims to have saved them over $485,000 in 1 year in taxes.

Another thrifty pair have constituted 40 trusts for their relatives, and a prominent lawyer and his wife utilize 16 trusts for the same purpose. The first pair maintains numbered brokerage accounts, and only at the end of the year are the beneficial owners identified. In this way innumerable transactions are carried on, often between accounts, which do not actually affect the beneficial interests of their owners but which are designed solely to reduce tax liability.

7. THE DEVICE OF HUSBAND AND WIFE OR FATHER AND CHILDREN PARTNERSHIPS

The purpose of these partnerships, like the multiple trusts, is to split the family income artificially into two parts; or, if the children are taken in, into still smaller fractions.

There are many instances of this kind; but to illustrate the point it is sufficient to cite the case of a New York brokerage firm which late in 1935 admitted into partnership the four minor children, two boys and two girls, of one of the partners. The tax saving he sought thereby in 1936 amounted to over $50,000.

8. THE DEVICE OF PENSION TRUSTS

For 10 years the revenue acts have sought to encourage pension trusts for aged employees by providing corporations with a special deduction on account of contributions thereto and exempting the trust itself from tax. Recently this exemption has been twisted into a means of tax avoidance by the creation of pension trusts which include as beneficiaries only small groups of officers and directors who are in the high-income brackets. In this fashion high-salaried officers seek to provide themselves with generous retiring allowances, while at the same time the corporation claims a deduction therefor, in the hope that the fund may accumulate income free from tax.

Thus, in one case $43,000 is annually appropriated by the corporation to a pension trust for the benefit of its two chief owners. One of the co-owners will retire at the age of 65 with a monthly pension of $1,725, and the other will retire at 60 with a monthly pension of $1,425.

These eight types of tax avoidance are sufficient to show that there is a well-defined purpose and practice on the part of some taxpayers to defeat the intent of Congress to tax incomes in accordance with ability to pay. In some cases the Bureau of Internal Revenue under existing law can establish a liability or, indeed, proceed on the ground of fraud; but many of these cases fall in the category of a legal though highly immoral avoidance of the intent of the law. It seems, therefore, that legislation should be passed at this session of the Congress in order to eliminate these loopholes which our preliminary investigation has proved, and that as a result of the further investigation this summer and autumn the next session of the Congress should finally close any further loopholes which may be discovered.

In addition to these cases of moral fraud, there are three other major instances in which the law itself permits individuals and corporations to avoid their equitable share of the tax burden.

1. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION

This is perhaps the most glaring loophole in our present revenue law. Since 1928 large oil and mining corporations have been entitled to deduct from 5 to 27½ percent of their gross income as an allowance for the depletion of their mines or wells, and the deduction may be taken even though the cost of the property has been completely recovered. Thus, in 1936, one mining company deducted nearly $3,000,000 under this provision, although it had already completely recovered the cost of its property. The amount of the deduction was a sheer gift from the United States to this taxpayer and its stockholders, and the revenue that we lost thereby was $818,000. Similar annual losses of revenue in the cases of a few other typical companies are $584,000, $557,000, $512,000, $272,000, $267,000, $202,000, and $152,000. The estimated annual loss of revenue due to this source alone is about $75,000,000. I recommended in 1933 that this provision be eliminated, but nothing was done at that time; and it has since remained unchanged.

2. THE DIVISION OF INCOME BETWEEN HUSBAND AND WIFE IN THE EIGHT COMMUNITY-PROPERTY STATES

This is another major cause of revenue loss, which is unjustifiable because obtained at the expense of taxpayers in the 40 States which do not have community-property laws. A New York resident with a salary of $100,000 pays about $32,525 Federal income tax; a Californian with the same salary may cause one-half to be reported by his wife and the Federal income taxes payable by the two will be only $18,626. The total loss of revenue due to this unjustifiable discrimination against the residents of 40 States runs into the millions.

3. TAXATION OF NONRESIDENT ALIENS

The 1936 act eliminated the requirement that a nonresident alien (without United States office or business) should file a return; fixed the withholding rate for individuals at 10 percent; and freed the nonresident alien from taxation on American capital gains. Since the total Federal tax upon a citizen or resident amounts to 10 percent of his total net income at about $25,000 (in the case of a married individual with no dependents), the withholding rate has proved in practice to be too low as applied to wealthy nonresident alien individuals. There are a number of cases of nonresident aliens with large incomes from American trusts or with large American investments whose taxes have been cut to one-third or one-fifth of what they paid under the prior act.

Thus, one American woman who married an Englishman had an income from this country in 1935 of nearly $300,000. Her tax for 1936 will, therefore, be approximately $30,000 as against over $160,000 under the prior law.

Another American woman who married a Frenchman has an income of over $150,000 from American trusts, on which she paid a tax of about $55,000 in 1935. Her tax is reduced to about $15,000 by the 1936 law. Although the tightening of the withholding provisions in 1936 will tend to insure more revenue from nonresident aliens in the lower-income brackets, the present taxing provisions are not satisfactory as applied to nonresident aliens with incomes in the higher brackets.

The problem of tax avoidance is not new. The Congress devoted particular attention to it in 1933 and 1934, and by legislation effectively put a stop to many evasive devices discovered then as having been in use. The practices outlined above can and should be stopped in the same way.

In conclusion, I have two observations to make from the evidence before me. In the first place, the instances I have given above are disclosed by a quick check of comparatively few individual returns. As I have said before, most of the large corporation returns have not yet been filed. The general audit of 1936 returns is just beginning. Nevertheless, it is likely that the cases I have digested above are symptomatic of a large number of others, which will be disclosed by the usual careful audit.

In the second place, the ordinary salaried man and the small merchant does not resort to these or similar devices. The great bulk of our 5,500,000 returns are honestly made. Legalized avoidance or evasion by the so-called leaders of the business community is not only demoralizing to the revenues; it is demoralizing to those who practice it as well. It throws an additional burden of taxation upon the other members of the community who are less able to bear it, and who are already cheerfully bearing their fair share. The success of our revenue system depends equally upon fair administration by the Treasury, and upon completely honest returns by the taxpayer.

The disclosures are so serious that I recommend that authority be given to the Treasury Department with an adequate appropriation in order that a complete and immediate investigation may be conducted. The cost of such an investigation will be returned many times over to the Treasury of the United States.

Faithfully,

HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

A feeling of indignation on reading this letter will, I am confident, be yours, as it was mine.

What the facts set forth mean to me is that we have reached another major difficulty in the maintenance of the normal processes of our Government. We are trying harder than ever before to relieve suffering and want, to protect the weak, to curb avarice, to prevent booms and depressions, and to balance the Budget. Taxation necessary to these ends is the foundation of sound governmental finance. When our legitimate revenues are attacked, the whole structure of our Government is attacked. "Clever little schemes" are not admirable when they undermine the foundations of society.

The three great branches of the Government have a joint concern in this situation. First, it is the duty of the Congress to remove new loopholes devised by attorneys for clients willing to take an unethical advantage of society and their own Government. Second, it is the duty of the executive branch of the Government to collect taxes, to investigate fully all questionable cases, to prosecute where wrong has been done, and to make recommendations for closing loopholes. Third, it is the duty of the courts to give full consideration to the intent of the Congress in passing tax laws and to give full consideration to all evidence which points to an objective of evasion on the part of the taxpayer.

Very definitely, the issue immediately before us is the single one relating to the evasion or unethical avoidance of existing laws. That should be kept clearly in mind by the Congress and the public. Already efforts to befog this issue appear. Already certain newspaper publishers are seeking to make it appear, first, that if an individual can devise unanticipated methods to avoid taxes which the Congress intended him to pay, he is doing nothing unpatriotic or unethical; and, second, that because certain individuals do not approve of high income-tax brackets, or the undistributed-earnings tax, or the capital-gains tax, the first duty of the Congress should be the repeal or reduction of those taxes. In other words, not one but many red herrings are in preparation.

But it seems to me that the first duty of the Congress is to empower the Government to stop these evil practices, and that legislation to this end should not be confused with legislation to revise tax schedules. That is a wholly different subject.

In regard to that subject, I have already suggested to the Congress that at this session there should be no new taxes and no changes of rates. And I have indicated to the Congress that the Treasury will be prepared by next November to present to the appropriate committees information on the basis of which the Congress may, if it chooses, undertake revisions of the tax structure.

The long-term problem of tax policy is wholly separate from the immediate problem of glaring evasion and avoidance of existing law.

In this immediate problem the decency of American morals is involved.

The example of successful tax dodging by a minority of very rich individuals breeds efforts by other people to dodge other laws as well as tax laws.

It is also a matter of deep regret to know that lawyers of high standing at the bar not only have advised and are advising their clients to utilize tax-avoidance devices, but are actively using these devices in their own personal affairs. We hear too often from lawyers, as well as from their clients, the sentiment, "It is all right to do it if you can get away with it."

I am confident that the Congress will wish to enact legislation at this session specifically and exclusively aimed at making the present tax structure evasion-proof.

I am confident also that the Congress will give to the Treasury all authority necessary to expand and complete the present preliminary investigation, including, of course, full authority to summon witnesses and compel their testimony. The ramifications and the geographical scope of a complete investigation make it necessary to utilize every power of Government which can contribute to the end desired.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 1, 1937.

In order promptly to consider and investigate the matters brought to the attention of the Congress by the above message, a joint resolution was introduced providing for the creation of a Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance. This joint resolution became law on June 11, 1937. It provided for a joint committee to be composed of six Members of the Senate who are members of the Committee on Finance, and six Members of the House of Representatives who are members of the Committee on Ways and Means. The requisite powers were given the joint committee to hold hearings, to examine documents, and to take testimony. Power was also given the joint committee to examine income-tax returns and related matters. Section 2 of the joint resolution referred to makes it the duty of the joint committee "to investigate the methods of evasion and avoidance of income, estate, and gift taxes, pointed out in the message of the President transmitted to Congress on June 1, 1937, and other methods of tax evasion and avoidance, and to report to the Senate and the House, at the earliest practicable date, and from time to time thereafter, but not later than February 1, 1938, its recommendation as to remedies for the evils disclosed by such investigation."

The joint committee having considered the subject matter submitted to it submits the following report:

The committee has held public hearings, beginning on June 17, 1937. Since that date it has been almost continuously engaged in holding such hearings, or in considering the subject of tax evasion and avoidance in executive session. Because of lack of time, the committee has confined itself for the present to those subjects which may be directly classified under the head of evasion or avoidance, leaving out of account subjects such as community property or percentage depletion which will receive further consideration by the joint committee.

The committee, as a result of its investigations, believe it is imperative at this time that legislation should be enacted in regard to the following subjects, with respect to which it has been shown that certain serious loopholes exist:

1. Domestic personal holding companies.
2. Incorporated yachts, country estates, etc.
3. Incorporated talents.
4. Artificial deductions for losses from sales or exchanges of property.
5. Artificial deductions for interest and business expense.
6. Multiple trusts.
7. Foreign personal holding companies.
8. Nonresident aliens.

Detailed recommendations are made on these subjects in the body of this report. The committee has examined the problem of certain alleged tax-saving devices based on single premium life insurance policies issued by fake foreign insurance companies. The committee believes the existing law is adequate to reach these cases. The subject of pension trusts has been passed over for the present, because it does not appear to have resulted in much loss of revenue to date. However, this matter will be reported on later.

The printed record of the public hearings held by the committee amply sustains the statements made by the President of the United States in his message. The committee strongly urges that legislation along the lines recommended be enacted at the earliest possible moment in order to protect the revenue, and in order that all may bear their fair share of the tax burden. The detailed recommendations of the committee follow.

1. DOMESTIC PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

The problem of the personal holding company has been one requiring the continued attention of the Congress beginning with the Revenue Act of 1913. All of the earlier revenue acts as well as the existing law contain provisions imposing additional taxes upon corporations organized or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon the shareholders thereof. These provisions have proved difficult of enforcement due to the fact that it is necessary to prove a purpose to avoid the imposition of the surtax upon the shareholders.

In the Revenue Act of 1934 a limited class of companies, known as personal holding companies, were singled out for a special surtax on undistributed profits. Under that act, personal holding companies were defined as corporations, 80 percent of whose gross income for the taxable year was derived from royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and gains from the sale of stock or securities, and whose stock to the extent of more than 50 percent in value was owned by not more than five individuals during the last half of the taxable year. In computing the number of individuals who owned such majority stock the act counted as one all members of the family in the direct line, as well as the spouse and brothers and sisters. The provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934 were continued in section 351 of the Revenue Act of 1936 with certain changes, the main change being in the rate structure. The advantage of this provision is that it is not necessary to prove a purpose to avoid surtaxes; if a corporation comes within the definition, the surtax automatically applies.

The provisions of section 351 have not entirely closed the loophole of accumulating surplus for the purpose of avoiding surtax. There are still a good many cases in which it is cheaper for an individual to accumulate income in a personal holding company, with no or very little distribution, than to cause a distribution of such income and pay surtaxes upon it. This is due mainly to the graduated rate schedule and the allowance of special cushions not granted to individuals or ordinary corporations. In an analysis of 4,457 personal holding companies' returns filed for the calendar year 1934 and the period from January to June 1935, an aggregate personal holding company net income of $53,000,000 was shown. Of the number of personal holding company returns filed only 374, or less than 9 percent, show taxable income under the surtax provisions of section 351. These 374 returns show a taxable income of only $5,000,000, or less than 10 percent of the total net income of the personal holding company group, and the taxes paid amounted to only $1,695,000, or about 3 percent of their aggregate net income. The remafning 4,083 personal holding companies paid no tax under section 351. However, the Treasury has made the following estimate as to the revenue yield of the present section 351, when dividend distributions are taken into account:

	Calendar-year liabilities
	1934	1935
Personal holding company surtax	$1,800,000	$3,000,000
Estimated individual income-tax liability from extra dividends paid by personal holding companies	33,900,000	46,100,000
Total estimated tax due to sec. 351	35,700,000	49,100,000

In order that individuals may not take advantage of these personal holding company provisions so as to reduce their taxes, the committee recommends the following changes in section 351 of existing law:

1. It is recommended that the present deduction for taxes imposed by section 102 or a corresponding section of a prior income-tax law be eliminated. This deduction is now allowed under section 351 (b) (3) (A). Under existing law a corporate taxpayer may be subject for 1 year to the provisions of section 102 imposing a surtax on corporations improperly accumulating surplus and for another year to the tax on personal holding companies. It seems contrary to public policy to permit the penalty tax imposed by section 102 on undistributed profits to be allowed as a deduction for the purpose of the tax under section 351. Since the tax under section 102 is computed upon undistributed profits for back years, it is believed that it should be paid out of accumulated earnings and profits rather than out of the current earnings and profits of the corporation for the taxable year.

2. It is recommended that the unlimited deduction allowed under section 351 (b) (3) (B) for charitable and other like contributions be restricted so as not to exceed 15 percent of the net income of the corporation. Under existing law individuals are entitled to a deduction for charitable contributions only up to 15 percent of their companies should be treated more favorably than individuals in this net income, and the committee sees no reason why personal holding respect. However, the committee recommends the retention of the special provision inserted in section 351 (b) (3) (B) of the Revenue Act of 1936, which granted an unlimited deduction, in the case of a corporation organized prior to January 1, 1936, to take over the assets of the estate of a decedent, for amounts paid in liquidation of any liability of the corporation based upon the liability of the decedent to make a contribution or gift to charity, to the extent such liability of the decedent existed prior to January 1, 1934. The committee believes such retention is justified by the fact that this deduction will not inure to the benefit of any private individual.

3. It is recommended that the unlimited deduction for losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets be omitted from section 351. This deduction is contained in section 351 (b) (3) (C). Under existing law personal holding companies may deduct losses from the sale or exchange of capital assets without limitation for purposes of computing the surtax under section 351. If such losses were incurred by an individual, they would be allowable under existing law only to the extent of $2,000, plus the gains from such sales or exchanges. In other words, an individual is less favored in this respect than a personal holding company. The effect of this elimination will be to prevent an individual, by transferring his income-producing investments to a personal holding company, from obtaining the benefit of deducting capital net losses denied to him as an individual.

4. It is also recommended that the 20-percent deduction allowed under section 351 (b) (2) (A) of existing law be eliminated. The existing law allows personal holding companies a special deduction of 20 percent of the excess of the adjusted net income over the amount of dividends received from other personal holding companies. For example, if the adjusted net income of a personal holding company in excess of dividends received from other personal holding companies is $20,000,000, 20 percent or one-fifth of this amount, namely, $4,000,000, may be accumulated without the payment of any personal holding company surtax whatever. The committee sees no reason for continuing this discrimination in favor of personal holding companies.

5. The committee also recommends the elimination of the deduction allowed personal holding companies for amounts used or set aside to retire indebtedness incurred prior to January 1, 1934. This deduction is contained in section 351 (b) (2) (B) of the Revenue Act of 1936. As a result of this deduction many personal holding companies have been able to escape the surtax under section 351 altogether. The committee is of the opinion that this special relief granted to personal holding corporations and denied to individuals should no longer be continued in the statute.

In referring to the deductions for capital losses, for debt retirement, and the 20-percent exemption mentioned above, the Treasury estimates that these three items alone resulted in a loss of revenue for the year 1936 of $9,237,000.

6. In order for a corporation to be a personal holding company, one of the conditions imposed by existing law is that at least 80 percent of its gross income for the taxable year must be derived from royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and, except in the case of regular dealers in securities, gains upon the sale of stocks or securities. The existing law excluded from this classification rents, mainly for the reason that it was not desired to interfere with bona fide and legitimate operating companies whose business consisted of the ownership and operation of office buildings, apartment houses, etc. However, it is believed that the entire exemption of rents from this classification has permitted certain personal holding companies which are not bona-fide operating companies to escape their just share of the tax burden. To prevent certain holding companies which are not bona-fide operating companies from taking advantage of this exception and to protect legitimate operating companies, the committee recommends that rents be included for the purpose of this classification unless they constitute 50 percent or more of the gross income of the corporation. This will prevent a corporation from getting out of section 351 by investing just enough in rents, say, 21 percent, and still deriving the remainder of its income from dividends, interest, etc. On the other hand, it will protect the bona-fide real-estate corporation and other corporations renting property and deriving 50 percent or more of their gross income from rents.

7. The next recommendation of the committee is to include in gross income, for the purpose of determining whether a corporation should be classified as a personal holding company, income received by a corporation from an estate or trust, as well as gains from the sale or other disposition of any interest of the corporation in an estate or trust. It is possible that the existing law might be circumvented by interposing trusts between the payer of the investment income and the personal holding company. Under such circumstances it might be contended that the personal holding company was not receiving income from dividends, interest, etc., but was receiving distributions as the beneficiary of the trust, and that such income lost its identity as interest, dividends, etc., in the hands of the corporate beneficiary. The committee, in order to overcome this contention, recommends that such income, including gains from the sale or other disposition of any interest of a corporation in an estate or trust, should be included in determining whether the corporate beneficiary is a personal holding company.

8. The next change suggested by the committee is purely a clarifying one. In classifying the sources of income for the purpose of determining whether a corporation is a personal holding company the law includes gains from the sale of stocks or securities. It is believed that this provision should be amended so as to make it clear that such language also embraces the gains from the exchange of stocks and securities as well as gains from the sale of stocks and securities.

9. In classifying the sources of income for the purpose of determining whether a corporation is a personal holding company the committee also believes that there should be included gains from futures transactions in commodities on boards of trade, and exchanges, with an exemption of gains on bona-fide hedging transactions in the case of corporations engaged in good faith in producing, processing, merchandising, or handling such commodities. In a case brought to the attention of the committee it was shown that a corporation had attempted to avoid this section by deriving 23 percent of its gross income from gains from speculations in commodities and still derive the remainder of its income, namely, 77 percent, from investment sources. The recommendation of the committee would remove this loophole.

10. The committee recommends that section 351 be amended to provide that if in any taxable year the gross income derived from interest, dividends, etc., equals 80 percent or more of the total gross income of the personal holding company, the gross-income test under section 351 for subsequent years shall be 70 percent of such investment income, instead of 80 percent, until a year for which the stock-ownership test does not exist, or until for each of 3 consecutive years, such investment income falls below the 70-percent mark. The reason for this amendment is that it is believed that if a corporation once becomes a personal holding company it should stay in that class until there has been a sufficient change in the sources of its gross income to warrant taking it out or until it ceases to satisfy the stock-ownership test.

11. The committee also recommends that convertible securities be included for the purpose of determining whether the stock of a corporation is owned by five or less individuals. It appears that the real owners of certain of these incorporated pocketbooks may own bonds or debentures which contain provisions under which the obligations may be converted into stock. In such cases it might be possible for the stock to be held by more than five individuals and at the same time have the interest of the real owner represented by convertible securities. It is believed that this existing loophole in section 351 should be closed in the manner recommended above and that the suggested provision should be applied in such manner as to produce the smallest possible number of individuals owning directly or indirectly more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock.

12. A similar situation exists in the case of options. The record ownership of the stock may be split up among more than five individuals, but less than five individuals may have an option to acquire the stock at any time they desire. The committee believes that this situation should also be corrected by providing that in the case of an option to acquire stock such stock may be considered as being owned exclusively by the holder of the option or the owner of the stock, and this rule likewise should be applied in such manner as to produce the smallest possible number of individuals owning directly or indirectly more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock.

13. The committee also recommends that in determining the ownership of stock by an individual there should be included the stock owned by a partner of such individual. Cases have been presented wherein five individuals may own 46 percent in value of the stock of the corporation and a partner of one of these individuals owns 5 percent. Under existing law, a corporation of this type would not be classed as a personal holding company. The committee believes the close business relationship existing between members of a partnership justifies adding partners to the class of individuals mentioned.

14. The graduated rates of existing law open two serious loopholes. First, the fact that graduated rates are less severe than the graduated rates applicable to wealthy individuals enables such persons to effect substantial savings by use of the personal holding-company device. Second, the graduated rates in the low brackets permit further saving through organization of multiple personal holding companies. The committee believes that the rates should be such as would encourage distribution in all cases. To overcome this tax advantage enjoyed through the formation of multiple personal holding companies, the committee recommends that the rates under existing law, which range from 8 percent on the first $2,000 up to 48 percent, be changed so as to provide a 65-percent rate upon the amount of the undistributed adjusted net income not in excess of $2,000 and 75 percent of the amount in excess of $2,000. No low minimum rate can be provided without enabling wealthy individuals to escape substantial taxes through the formation of multiple personal holding companies.

2. INCORPORATION OF YACHTS, COUNTRY ESTATES, ETC.

Increased use is being made of the device of incorporating yachts, city residences, country estates, etc., in order to avoid taxation of income at the rates prescribed in the higher individual surtax brackets or to obtain the benefit of deducting as corporation expenditures items not allowed to individuals, or both. The cases presented to the committee indicate that the plan in general consists of the transfer of the yacht or the real estate to a corporation for stock, or as paid-in surplus, or the yacht or real estate is purchased with cash provided by the stockholders. Securities, producing sufficient income to absorb corporate expenditures, are then turned over to the corporation for stock or as paid-in surplus. To lend color to the alleged business activity and to bring the corporation's gross income outside of the provisions of section 351 of the existing law, the corporation charges its principal stockholder some rent for the use of the yacht or real estate. The rent paid is usually much below the cost of the operation of the property and much below the amount which would be charged in an arm's length transaction. Since all expenses and losses of the corporation are claimed as deductions in computing the income of the corporation, a large part of the investment income is absorbed by expenses and losses incurred in the operation of the yacht or the real property. Since rents are not now included for the purpose of determining whether or not a corporation is a personal holding company, the taxpayer may also fix the amount of the rent for the yacht or real estate in an amount sufficient to bring his other investment income below the 80-percent test required under section 351 of existing law.

The committee finds no justification for permitting such tax advantage to these self-incorporated individuals. It is, therefore, suggested that the definition of personal holding company be so framed as to include in the 80-percent test the full amount received as rent or other compensation for the use of property by a corporation from any individual (whether a shareholder or not), who, together with his family and partners owns (directly or indirectly) 25 percent or more in the value of the securities which constitute "outstanding stock."

The committee also recommend that there should be disallowed as a deduction from gross income, the expenses of operation and maintenance (including depreciation) of property owned or operated by a personal holding company to the extent that expenses exceed the rent or other compensation for the use of such property, unless it is established to the satisfaction of the Commissioner.

(A) That the rent or other compensation received is the highest obtainable;

(B) That the property was held in the course of business carried on bona fide for profit; and

(C) That there was reasonable expectation that the operation of the property would result in a profit, or that such property was necessary to the conduct of the business.

To prevent a personal holding company from charging expenses in excess of its income for the operation and maintenance of property, such as yachts, city residences, and country estates, etc., against its investment income, such expenses should be disallowed unless the corporation can meet the conditions outlined above. This has the effect of placing the personal holding company on the same basis, in this respect, as an individual who cannot offset his personal expenses against his income. If the corporation establishes to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the second test is satisfied and that the property was necessary to the conduct of such business, it will not be necessary to prove there was reasonable expectation that the operation of the property would result in a profit, in order to obtain a full deduction.

This provision would not apply to a farm or a racing stable operated by the corporation itself where more than 20 percent of the gross income of such corporation came from such operations. This is because the corporation must first be a personal holding company before this provision will apply. Moreover, even if such a corporation is a personal holding company because more than 80 percent of its income comes from investment sources, it will still have the opportunity of escaping this provision by establishing that the property was held in the course of a bona-fide business carried on for profit and that such property was necessary for the conduct of the business. Even where an investment corporation is running a yacht, city residence, or country estate on the side, it is, nevertheless, recognized that certain property may be necessary for the conduct of its investment business, such as typewriters, office furniture, automobiles, and the like. Expenses attributable to such property would satisfy the third test.

3. INCORPORATED TALENTS

Cases presented to the committee showed that individuals organized corporations for the purpose of hiring out their personal services at a substantial increase over the amount of compensation such principal stockholders contracted for with their corporations. Since such corporations do not come within section 351 of the existing law, the excess compensation retained by the corporation is taxed at lower rates than would be applicable to such excess income in the hands of the individuals who performed the services. The committee believes this device constitutes a serious loophole in the existing law and recommends that the definition of "personal holding company" in section 351 of the existing law be amended so as to include, in applying the 80-percent test, the full amount received by the corporation from contracts for personal services (including gain from the sale or other disposition thereof) of any individual (whether or not a shareholder), who, together with his family and partner, owns (directly or indirectly) 25 percent or more in value of the securities which constitute "outstanding stock." The definition of the term "contract for personal services" should include the condition that a party other than the personal corporation has the right to designate the individual who is to perform the services. Someone, for example, such as an actor or artist, with more or less unique talents, incorporates himself and draws a salary from the corporation. The corporation contracts out his service with a third party and the difference between the amount paid to the individual as salary and the amount received from the third party is accumulated by the corporation.

Because of the condition in the contract for personal services that a party other than the corporation must have the right to designate the individual who is to perform the services, in order for this provision to apply, it would not apply to all cases where the corporation is hiring out its employees to third parties. Its application would be limited to cases in which such other party has the right under the contract to designate the individual who is to perform the service and where the individual so designated, with members of his family, own 25 percent or more in value of the securities which constitute "outstanding stock."

4. ARTIFICIAL DEDUCTIONS FOR LOSSES FROM SALES OR EXCHANGES OF PROPERTY, SECTION 24 (a) (6)

(a) There is a provision in existing law which denies losses in the case of sales or exchanges of property between members of a family or between a shareholder and a corporation in which such shareholder owns more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock. However, the existing law permits losses to be established through the sale or exchange of capital assets between a personal holding corporation and another corporation, even where both corporations are under common control, thereby permitting an advantage to be taken of any adverse change in the market price without an actual transfer of the assets into other hands. To correct this situation the committee recommends that losses be disallowed between two corporations if more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock of both is owned by the same individual (or members of his family) and if either one of the corporations for the preceding taxable year met the gross income test of a domestic personal holding company and during the last half of such taxable year met the stock ownership test of a domestic personal holding company, or either one of the corporations for the preceding taxable year met the gross income test of a foreign personal holding company and at any time during such year met the stock ownership test of a foreign personal holding company.

(b) Under existing law losses on sales and exchanges between an individual and his partner's corporation are allowed as deductions even though the individual himself may own some stock in the corporation. Because of the close relationship existing between partners, your committee recommends that losses should be disallowed between an individual and his partner's corporation if such individual owns stock in such corporation.

(c) The committee recommends that the existing law be clarified to confirm the Treasury's position that losses, for example, between a husband and his wife's corporation, or vice versa, whether or not he owns any stock in such corporation should not be deductible.

(d) The committee also recommends that losses between the settlor of a trust and the fiduciary of any trust created by the settlor should be disallowed. It has been the practice even in the case of irrevocable trusts for settlors of the trusts to shuffle back and forth between themselves and the trustees securities to establish losses even though they retained practical control over the trust.

(e) For the same reasons, the committee also recommends that losses should be disallowed between fiduciaries of any trusts created by a common settlor.

(f) The committee also recommends that losses should be disallowed between a fiduciary of a trust and any beneficiary thereof. In some cases it has developed that the trustee has sold securities to the beneficiary at a loss. The trustee has then taken advantage of this loss to offset the gain from other securities which has resulted to the direct benefit of the beneficiary, notwithstanding the fact that he still retains the securities in his possession.

(g) The committee also recommends that an individual owning stock in a corporation should be considered as owning, to the exclusion of any other individual, the stock owned by his partner for the purpose of denying losses from sales or exchanges of property. For instance, A may own 45 percent of the stock of a corporation and his partner own 6 percent of that stock. Although together they own more than 50 percent of the stock of the corporation, the existing law would permit A to take a loss for the securities transferred to the corporation. The committee's recommendation would prevent the deduction of a loss in such a case.

(h) The committee also recommends that section 24 (a) (6) of existing law be amended to include a provision similar to that contained in section 351 providing that the stock owned by a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners, or other beneficiaries. For example, A, who owns 45 percent of the stock of corporation X, may also own 50 percent of the stock of corporation Y, which in turn owns 25 percent of the stock of corporation X. If you look through corporation Y, you find that A, through his ownership of stock in corporation Y, really owns indirectly 12½ percent of the stock of corporation X, in addition to his direct ownership of 45 percent of stock in corporation X. Adding A's direct as well as his indirect ownership in corporation X together, we find that he owns more than 51 percent of the stock of corporation X. Therefore, under the committee's recommendation, A would not be allowed to deduct a loss on the sale or exchange of property to corporation X.

5. ARTIFICIAL DEDUCTIONS FOR INTEREST AND BUSINESS EXPENSE

The committee had presented to it certain cases wherein individuals were indebted to each other or corporations were indebted to the principal stockholders. In fact, it was pointed out that personal holding companies were being utilized for the purpose of establishing artificial deductions. The sole stockholder (or a member of his family) of a personal holding corporation borrowed all or a major part of its annual net income and paid interest thereon. In such cases the debtor kept his books and tax returns on the accrual basis and claimed as deductions the accrued interest. On the other hand, the creditor who was entitled to such payments, if he were on the cash-receipts basis, would not be required to report for income-tax purposes the amount owing to him until actual receipt of the money. Under such circumstances the discharge of the debt may be postponed for an unreasonable length of time with the result that the Government is delayed in getting its tax and in many cases the payments fall in a year of no income, with the result that little or no tax is paid. The committee believes that such practices between individuals of a family or between corporations under common control should be dealt with in such a manner as to encourage reasonably prompt discharge of such obligations.

It is, therefore, recommended that in the case of a transaction between persons, who under section 24 (a) (6) are not permitted a deduction for loss from sale or exchange of property, where the debtor makes his return on the accrual basis and the creditor makes his return on the cash basis, deductions under section 23 (a) (expenses) and under section 23 (b) (interest) accrued by the debtor within the taxable year but not paid within 2½ months after the close of the taxable year should be disallowed.

This proposal should serve to stimulate reasonably prompt payment of such accrued expenses in order that the debtor may secure the allowance of the deduction. No hardship should result from the requirement that the amount be paid within 2½ months after the close of the year of accrual, since expenses of this nature usually should be paid within that time in the ordinary course of business. While this restriction would be applicable only to individuals and corporations in relationships covered by section 24 (a) (6), this class represents the worst offenders in the use of this loophole.

6. MULTIPLE TRUSTS

The committee has given careful consideration to the question of avoidance of taxes through the use of multiple trusts to accumulate income. It is recommended that in the case of all trusts for accumulation, the $1,000 exemption granted under existing law be repealed. This will prevent many of these trusts from escaping tax entirely. For example, if an individual forms 50 trusts each of which has an income of $1,000 a year to be accumulated, under existing law no income tax is paid. Under the committee's proposal, the whole $50,000 would be subject to some tax. This may not be the best remedy for the situation, and this question will receive further consideration by the committee. It should be noted that the elimination of the $1,000 exemption would not affect trusts which distribute their income, since such trusts are not taxable and the beneficiaries have the right to a personal exemption under existing law.

7. FOREIGN PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

The testimony taken by the committee has shown that foreign personal holding companies are being utilized by citizens and residents of the United States as a device for tax-avoidance purposes. Income which otherwise would be subjected to the Federal income taxes is being diverted to, and accumulated by, such companies in order that the American shareholders may escape being taxed thereon. Because of the jurisdictional difficulties and the difficulties of collection of taxes involved in reaching these foreign entities, they present a distinct problem. While the provisions of sections 351 and 102 of the present law, which impose surtaxes on the undistributed profits of corporations, by their terms apply to foreign as well as to domestic corporations, it appears necessary for the protection of the revenue that a separate method of taxation be provided for with respect to certain types of foreign personal holding companies.

Although in most cases the foreign personal holding company is effectively beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, the shareholders of such corporation who are American citizens or residents are within such jurisdiction. Consequently it has been concluded by the committee that a method of handling this situation should be devised whereby the income of foreign personal holding companies might be taxed to the shareholders pro rata whether such income was actually distributed to them or not. The fiscal authorities in other countries where income taxes are imposed have been faced with a similar problem as to the taxation of foreign personal holding companies and Canada has now in effect a provision which in principle accords with the committee's proposal.

The committee's recommendation in general is that the undistributed part of a foreign personal holding company's net income should be included in the gross income of the American citizen or resident, just as if such undistributed income had actually been distributed. Provision has been made so that such income would not be again subject to tax when actually distributed.

This proposal recommends a method of taxation which is a departure from any previously used with respect to corporate income. The committee feels, however, that this innovation is necessary to protect the revenue and prevent further use of one of the most glaring loopholes now existing. The proposal would affect only foreign corporations which are owned 50 percent or more by five American citizens or residents (including members of their families) and which have the same type of investment income which makes a domestic corporation subject to tax as a personal holding company. Real foreign operating companies or widely held holding companies are not included. However, it should be observed that a few foreign corporations, not subject to these recommendations in respect to foreign personal holding companies, may fall under section 102 or section 351. The committee believes that the recommendation is not any more drastic than the situation requires. The detailed recommendations of the committee follow:

1. The undistributed adjusted net income of the foreign personal holding company for its entire taxable year should be included in the gross income of the American shareholders, (that is, United States citizens, resident aliens, resident estates or trusts, domestic partnerships, and domestic corporations) to the following extent:

(A) If the corporation constitutes a foreign personal holding company on the last day of its taxable year, then each American shareholder should include in his gross income the amount he would have received if the entire undistributed adjusted net income had been distributed by the corporation on such day; but

(B) If the last day on which the corporation constitutes a foreign personal holding company falls within and not at the end of its taxable year, then only that proportion of the undistributed adjusted net income for the entire taxable year equal to the portion of the taxable year up to such last day should be included in their gross income by the American shareholders as though distributed by the corporation on such last day.

In every case the American shareholder should include his distributive share of the undistributed adjusted net income of the corporation in his gross income for his taxable year in which or with which the taxable year of the corporation ends.

2. The undistributed adjusted net income should be computed by deducting from the adjusted net income the dividends-paid credit allowed under section 27 of the Revenue Act of 1936, computed, however, without the benefit of subsection (b) thereof, which relates to the dividend carry-over.

3. The adjusted net income should be computed by deducting from the net-income Federal income taxes paid or accrued under section 231 of the present law with respect to the taxable year.

4. The net income of a foreign personal holding company should be computed, not in the manner provided for in supplement "I" relating to foreign corporations, but in the same manner, and on the same basis, as the net income of a domestic corporation except that:

(A) The gross income should include the distributive share of the undistributed adjusted net income of any other foreign personal holding company in which the corporation owns stock. This provision is necessary in order to reach income being accumulated by a chain of two or more foreign personal holding companies.

(B) The deductions permitted under section 23 (d) (relating to taxes of a shareholder paid by a corporation) and section 23 (p) (relating to pension trusts) should not apply.

(C) Deductions for the maintenance and operation of yachts, residences, and country estates should be limited as proposed in respect to domestic personal holding companies.

It should be noted that the effect of recommendation number 4 would be to include in the net income of foreign personal holding companies interest received by them on obligations of the United States.

5. The entire undistributed adjusted net income of a foreign personal holding company for a taxable year with respect to which the American shareholders are required to return their distributive shares should be treated as paid-in surplus of the corporation. This rule is necessary to permit tax-free distribution of amounts returned by the shareholders as constructive dividends. By treating such income as paid-in surplus the subsequent distribution is not made out of earnings and profits so as to constitute a taxable dividend. Since the present law provides that all distributions are made out of earnings and profits to the extent available, the recommended rule would operate to require the corporation to distribute all of its accumulated earnings before it can make a tax-free distribution to the shareholders of the undistributed adjusted net income previously included in their returns.

6. The American shareholders should not be allowed any credit against their Federal income taxes for foreign income taxes, if any, paid by the foreign personal holding company in respect to the undistributed adjusted net income returned by them. The allowance of such credit is not administratively feasible although it might seem equitable under the circumstances. However, it should be noted that in computing the net income of the corporation a deduction for foreign taxes will be allowed to the same extent as in the case of a domestic corporation which claims no foreign tax credit.

7. It is recommended that a foreign personal holding company be defined in substantially the same manner as a domestic personal holding company is defined in section 351 of the existing law, with the following changes:

(A) Eliminate the exemption of banks, life-insurance companies, and surety companies, and provide that the five or less individuals must be American citizens or residents.

(B) In the gross-income test: (1) Change the minimum requirement to 60 percent; (2) do not limit gross income to gross income from sources within the United States; (3) include rents the same as proposed in the case of domestic personal holding companies; (4) include the same provisions with respect to incorporated yachts, country estates, etc., and incorporated talents as proposed in the case of domestic personal holding companies; (5) include income from estates or trusts and gains from the exchange of stock or securities the same as proposed in the case of domestic personal holding companies; (6) include gains from future transactions on boards of trade or commodity exchanges as proposed in the case of domestic personal holding companies; (7) include in the gross income of the corporation its pro-rata share of the undistributed net income of any other foreign personal holding company in which it holds stock; (8) provide that, if in any taxable year the gross income from the items mentioned equals 60 percent or more of the total gross income of the corporation, the gross-income test for subsequent years should be 50 percent until for each of 3 consecutive years it falls below 50 percent, or the corporation ceases to qualify under the stock-ownership test.

(C) In the stock-ownership test: (1) Include convertible securities and options the same as proposed in the case of domestic personal holding companies; (2) provide that in determining ownership of stock owned by an individual stock owned by a partner of such individual should be included; (3) make the test apply to any time during the taxable year.

8. It is further recommended that a 7-year statute of limitations on assessment and collection without assessment be provided to apply where the American shareholder fails to include in his gross income his distributive share of the undistributed adjusted net income of the corporation.

OBTAINING INFORMATION RELATING TO FOREIGN PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

It is difficult to secure complete information with respect to foreign personal holding companies formed by American citizens or residents due to the lack of effective jurisdiction over such companies. In order to make the new method of taxation in respect of foreign personal holding companies effective, it is necessary to give the Treasury the power to require certain information from American citizens, residents, and other American entities, with respect to the formation, organization, or reorganization of foreign corporations generally and also information as to the income, stock holdings, etc., of foreign corporations which are personal holding companies. It is the understanding of the committee that under the authority contained in sections 51, 52, 142, and 187 of the Revenue Act of 1936 the Treasury will require each person filing income-tax returns to set forth his ownership of stock in foreign corporations. Additional statutory authority is believed necessary, and the committee makes the following recommendations:

1. It is recommended that every person who, on or after the enactment of the proposed act, is an officer or director of a foreign personal holding company and every American shareholder who owns 50 percent or more of its stock, directly or indirectly (including, in the case of an individual, the members of his family), should, under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, and with respect to the period he holds such office, or retains such ownership, be required to file returns under oath monthly or at such other times as may be required by regulations, showing the name and address of each shareholder and class and number of shares held by each in such foreign personal holding company, together with any changes in stock holdings during such period, and the name and address of each holder of a security convertible into stock of such company, which the Commissioner under regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury prescribes as necessary for carrying out the provisions of the proposed legislation. It is recommended that this information be required if the company would have been a foreign personal holding company for the preceding year or for the taxable year beginning in 1936, if the proposed act had then been in force and effect, or if such person has reason to believe it will be a foreign personal holding company at any time during the current taxable year.

2. It is recommended that criminal penalties be imposed for willful failure to file the statement required in the preceding paragraph of a fine of $2,000 or imprisonment for 1 year or both.

3. It is recommended that an American shareholder owning 5 percent or more of the stock of a foreign personal holding company be required to set forth in complete detail in his tax return the gross income, deductions and credits, net income, adjusted net income and undistributed adjusted net income of such company.

4. It is recommended that, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, returns under oath be required to be filed by any persons who, after the enactment of the proposed act, aid, assist, counsel, or advise in, or with respect to, the formation, organization, or reorganization of any foreign corporation, which returns should contain such information as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary by rules and regulations prescribes as necessary for carrying out the provisions of the act. Such returns should be required to be filed monthly or at such other times as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by rules and regulations prescribe. This information is essential in order to ascertain those persons seeking to utilize the device of the foreign personal holding company. For obvious reasons, however, the requirement should not be limited to cases of foreign personal holding companies.

5. It is recommended that, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, a return under oath be required to be filed within 90 days after the enactment of the proposed act by every person who, since January 1, 1934, and prior to 90 days after the enactment of the act, has aided, assisted, counseled, or advised in the formation, organization, or reorganization of a foreign corporation, which return should contain such information as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, by rules and regulations, prescribes as necessary for carrying out the provisions of the act.

This information is necessary to ascertain those persons who have actually utilized the device of the foreign personal holding company. For obvious reasons, however, it should not be limited to the case of foreign personal holding companies. The date of January 1, 1934, is taken because it coincides with the effective date of the original provision imposing a surtax on personal holding companies.

6. It is recommended that criminal penalties be imposed for willful failure to file complete and accurate returns required by the two preceding paragraphs of a fine of $2,000 or imprisonment for 1 year or both.

ADDITIONAL LEGISLATION RELATING TO FOREIGN PERSONAL HOLDING COMPANIES

There appears to be no justification for the continued existence of foreign personal holding companies owned by American citizens or residents and it is believed that practically all of such companies have been created with the sole purpose of avoiding or evading the imposition of the surtax on their shareholders. It is believed as a matter of fiscal policy that the dissolution of such companies should be effected as promptly as possible and the committee accordingly makes the following additional recommendations to encourage such dissolution:

1. It is recommended that in the case of liquidation of any foreign personal holding company wherein the distribution of assets and dissolution of the corporation is not completed on or before December 31, 1937, notwithstanding the provisions of section 117 (a), 100 percent of the gains recognized on such liquidation should be taken into account in computing net income except that if evidence is submitted to the Commissioner prior to January 1, 1938, which establishes to his satisfaction that due to the laws of the foreign country in which it is incorporated, or for other reason, it is impossible to distribute the assets and complete the dissolution on or before December 31, 1937, the Commissioner should be authorized to extend such period to not later than June 30, 1938. Under existing law it is possible for as little as 30 percent of the gain to be taken into account in computing net income.

2. It is recommended that in the case of any person dying after the enactment of this proposed act owning stock or securities of any corporation which for its taxable year preceding his death met the gross-income test of a foreign personal holding company and at any time during such year met the stock-ownership test of a foreign personal holding company, the basis of the stock or securities acquired by the decedent's estate from the decedent or acquired by others from the decedent by bequest, devise, or inheritance should, notwithstanding the provisions of sections 113 (a), be (1) the fair market value of such stock or securities at the time of such acquisition or (2) the same as it would be in the hands of the decedent, whichever is lower.

3. It is the intention of the committee to consider measures for the treatment in the case of sale or exchange after December 31, 1937, of stock or securities of such corporations as foreign personal holding companies in such manner as to obviate the possibility of such sale or exchange under such circumstances or through such devices as to obtain the advantage of section 117 (a), and to recommend thereon at a later date.

4. The committee has made the recommendations above for additional legislation to prevent the use of foreign personal holding companies by American citizens and residents as devices for the evasion and avoidance of Federal income taxes and to encourage the prompt dissolution of existing companies of this type. The committee believes that these recommendations, if adopted, will contribute greatly to the attainment of these ends. It also recognizes the complex character of the problem and the difficulty of framing a tax law which is proof against all the varied and complicated devices involving the use of foreign entities which legal ingenuity may evolve in the future. The committee is therefore of the view that it should continue its study of this problem and should consider other and additional measures which may be feasible for preventing the use of spurious foreign entities to thwart the intent and purposes of the revenue laws. Accordingly, it is the intention of the committee to consider possible measures for the creation of administrative and judicial procedure, including criminal penalties, to prevent the formation and compel the dissolution of artificial foreign entities availed of by American citizens or residents to evade or avoid Federal income taxes and to make recommendations at a later date with respect thereto.

NONRESIDENT ALIENS

Section 211 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1936 imposes a tax on nonresident aliens not engaged in trade or business in the United States and not having an office or place of business therein at the rate of 10 percent upon their income from interest, dividends, rents, wages, and salaries, and other fixed and determinable income from sources within the United States, with no allowance for the deductions from gross income and credits against net income allowed to individuals subject to normal and surtax on net income. In the case of a resident of a contiguous country the existing law provides that such rate may be reduced to not less than 5 percent, as may be provided by treaty with such country. This flat tax, which is in effect imposed upon gross income, is in the usual case collected at the source by means of withholding, and has worked well, both from an administrative and revenue standpoint. The additional revenue derived is estimated to be not less than $15,000,000 per annum. However, evidence presented to the committee discloses that certain wealthy nonresident aliens have had their Federal income taxes substantially reduced by this new system. In fact, it has permitted certain former citizens of the United States who have now become citizens of other countries, but who derive a large amount of income from American sources within the United States, either directly or through an American trust, greatly to reduce their taxes. This is due in the main to the fact that if these individuals were subject to both normal and surtaxes the effective rate of tax on their income from American sources would be much higher than the 10-percent rate applicable to such income under existing law. To remedy this situation the committee makes the following recommendations:

1. Subject to the normal and surtax on net incomes from the sources mentioned in section 211 (a) of existing law, nonresident aliens (now taxable under that section) whose net income from such sources is more than $21,600, which is the approximate point at which the effective rate becomes 10 percent. It may be possible that some nonresident aliens may pay less tax under this proposal than they do under existing law. To remedy this the committee recommends that the tax under the proposal shall not be less than the tax which would be payable under existing law on the gross income from such sources. In order that this new rule may not unduly increase the tax on nonresident aliens whose net income is just sufficient to bring them within this proposal, the committee also recommends that the tax shall not be increased by more than the amount of net income in excess of $21,600. Nonresident aliens subject to this proposal will still be subject to the withholding provisions at the rates imposed under existing law but they will be entitled to a credit for the amount of tax which has been withheld at the source on such income in computing their tax on the income from the sources specified in section 211 (a). They will be entitled to the same deductions applicable to such income, and to the same credits, as in the case of nonresident aliens taxable under section 211 (b) of existing law, that is, nonresident aliens engaged in trade or business in the United States or having an office or place of business therein.

2. For the purpose of administering this proposal, the committee recommends that all nonresident aliens whose gross income from the sources specified amounts in the aggregate to $21,600 or more be required to file annual returns with the collector at Baltimore, Md.

CREATION OF THE JUDICIARY (S. DOC. NO. 91)

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Printing, I report a resolution which is of a routine nature, and ask that it may be given immediate consideration by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it be read.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 169), as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Creation of the Judiciary", prepared by Dr. George J. Schulz, Director of the Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress, be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it would not be necessary to get the consent of the Committee on Printing for the approval of the publication of a Senate document were it not for the fact that the document will require when printed more than 50 pages. When a Senate document to be printed is under 50 pages it is necessary merely to get the approval of the Senate. Therefore, I ask the approval of the Senate to the resolution, because the document exceeds the number of pages allowed, and in addition is in the opinion of the committee a most valuable and informative review of the subject, Creation of the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

CLAIMS OF NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 165) authorizing an investigation of the claims of the city of New Brunswick, N. J., for compensation for municipal services furnished to purchasers of lands from the United States Housing Corporation (submitted by Mr. MOORE on the 3d instant), reported it without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GUFFEY:

A bill (S. 2917) to amend Public Law No. 692, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 2918) to authorize the striking of an appropriate medal in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of Chicago, Ill., as a city; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 2919) for the relief of The E. F. Hauserman Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2920) for the relief of J. Harry Walker; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2921) to provide for the incorporation, regulation, merger, consolidation, and dissolution of certain corporations for profit in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 2922) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real-estate brokers in the District of Columbia", approved February 4, 1913; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MINTON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 196) to establish the Gen. Casimir Pulaski Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction of a permanent memorial to the memory of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski at Savannah, Ga.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 197) authorizing an appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Inter-American Radio Conference to be held in 1937 at Habana, Cuba; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 6384. An act to liberalize the provisions of existing laws governing service-connected benefits for World War veterans and their dependents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 8081. An act authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to allow credit in the accounts of disbursing officers for overpayments of wages on Civil Works Administration projects and waiving recovery of such overpayments; to the Committee on Claims.

LOW-COST HOUSING—AMENDMENTS

Mr. KING submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 1685, the so-called low-cost housing bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

IMPROVEMENTS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the survey section to insert:
"Channel or channels across Padre Island, Tex., from Laguna Madre to the Gulf of Mexico."

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE—ARTICLE BY SENATOR WALSH

[Mr. GERRY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Senator WALSH published in the Boston Traveler of Aug. 3, 1937, relative to the so-called Federal wage and hour bill, which appears in the Appendix.]

CONNECTICUT AND THE FIRST TEN AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION—ARTICLE BY THOMAS H. LE DUC

[Mr. LONERGAN asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Thomas H. Le Duc, of Yale University, entitled "Connecticut and the First Ten Amendments to the Federal Constitution", which appears in the Appendix.]

CONTRIBUTIONS TO DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE

[Mr. BRIDGES asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Washington Post of today relative to contributions to the Democratic National Committee, which appears in the Appendix.]

PARTITION OF PALESTINE

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have received several communications requesting a public statement with respect to the partitioning of Palestine. I ask that a telegram from the mayor of Fitchburg and a statement which I recently gave to the newspapers may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegram and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FITCHBURG, MASS., August 2, 1937.

United States Senator DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building:

At the request of the Zionist Organization of America, I am suggesting that you make a public statement demanding that Britain fulfill its pledges to the Jewish people.

ROBERT GREENWOOD.

STATEMENT OF HON. DAVID I. WALSH, OF MASSACHUSETTS

The British policy for the further partitioning of Palestine carries with it a direct menace to United States' interests in the welfare of the Jewish people.

The present attitude of Great Britain in proposing the partitioning of Palestine and further restricting Jewish immigration into that country, would appear to be a violation of her treaty with the United States, entered into December 3, 1924.

The famous Balfour declaration at the time of the World War was a pledge in behalf of the British Government that in the event of a successful outcome, the Jews would be given a national home in Palestine.

The United States gave enthusiastic approval to this measure and by unanimous vote ratified, confirmed, and repeated the Balfour resolutions, embodying the identical language of the British mandate.

To partition the Holy Land and deny the Jews who have settled there the rights to which they are entitled under both the mandate of the League of Nations and the treaty between the United States and Great Britain would be a deliberate breach of good faith.

Intimation that recent disturbances in Palestine were caused by the forcible attempt of grasping Jews to take land and work away from the Arabs has been vehemently contradicted. It will be recalled that half of the Jews of the world live in abject poverty and are the victims of unceasing persecution. For these European Jews, the promised land of Palestine is their only hope.

In my opinion, a protest against a breaking of faith with the Jews in Palestine should be voiced by our Nation in behalf of a long-suffering people.

ORSON THOMAS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 191) for the relief of Orson Thomas, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "to Orson Thomas", and on page 1, line 5, after "appropriated", to insert "to Orson Thomas, of Salt Lake City, Utah."

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SAM LARSON, GUARDIAN OF MARGARET LARSON

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 792) for the relief of Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor, which were, on page 1, lines 5 and 6, to strike out "Sam Larson, guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor" and to insert "the legal guardian of Margaret Larson, a minor, of Ephrata, Wash."; on page 1, line 11, to strike out "Fisheries" and insert "commerce on the highway between Soap Lake and Ephrata, Wash."; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Margaret Larson, a minor."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

ETHEL SMITH M'DANIEL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 972) for the relief of Ethel Smith McDaniel, which was, on page 2, line 4, to strike out "1 year" and insert "6 months."

Mr. TYDINGS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES CARROLL OF CARROLLTON BICENTENARY COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 171) relating to the employment of personnel and expenditures made by the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission, which was, on page 2, line 3, to strike out all after "funds" down to and including "agencies", in line 6.

Mr. TYDINGS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MAUDE P. GRESHAM

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Maude P. Gresham, which were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$8,750" and insert "$8,690.55"; on page 1, line 11, after "Gresham", to insert "and Agnes M. Driscoll"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Maude P. Gresham and Agnes M. Driscoll."

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JACK WADE AND OTHERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 893) for the relief of Jack Wade, Perry Shilton, Louie Hess, Owen Busch, and William W. McGregor, which were, on page 1, line 4, after "judgment", to insert "as if the United States were suable in tort"; on page 1, line 6, to strike out "respectively" and insert "all of Mancos, Colo."; on page 1, line 7, to strike out all after "damages" down to and including "by", in line 8, and insert "resulting from personal injuries sustained by them in"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Jack Wade, Perry Shilton, Louie Hess, Owen Busch, and William W. McGregor."

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. CHARLES T. WARNER

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1637) for the relief of Mrs. Charles T. Warner.

Mr. LEE. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. BLACK, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

WILLARD COLLINS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1401) for the relief of Willard Collins, which were, on page 1, line 7, after "Collins", insert "of Tipler, Wis."; on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500"; and on page 1, lines 9 and 10, to strike out "who were killed" and insert "and personal injuries to himself, suffered on."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provisions of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish to correct the form of the amendment which I offered yesterday, so that it will read as follows:

That not more than 10 percent of the funds provided for in this act, either in the form of a loan, grant, or subsidy, shall be expended within any one State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] and the substitute therefor offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

As I understand we are asked to enact a law dealing with an evil in this country. It is my understanding that the bill was brought to the floor of the Senate in good faith and for the purpose of removing slums and slum conditions. Population is no criterion for determining the existence of slums. It would be more in line with correctness and fairness to put the amendment on the basis of slum population and, as I understand it, that is what the bill does. It puts it on the basis of the slums and leaves it to the constituted authorities to determine where slums exist. To put it on the basis of population might be an appeal to Senators to vote to get some of the money for their States, when in some of the States there are no slums and that portion of the money would, of course, be tied up.

I am taking it for granted that the purpose of the bill is in all good faith to remove the existence of slums.

If this is a "gravy" proposal, the Senator from Colorado ought to modify his amendment to provide for expenditure of the money on the basis of square miles so that Oklahoma and Colorado could get more of it. If it is the purpose to remove slums, why not spend the money where the need exists? When we grease a wagon we put the grease where the squeak is.

Polygamy touched only one State, nevertheless it was declared a national evil and was abolished. Slavery affected only 10 States, but was abolished as a national evil. When bills were introduced in the Congress asking for relief from drought conditions I did not hear Senators from the thickly populated cities of the East endeavoring to attach amendments which would perhaps have the effect of destroying the purpose of the legislation. I did not notice that any amendments were offered providing that the relief appropriation in that case should be expended on the basis of population instead of being expended where the drought existed.

When bills were introduced asking for money for the control of grasshoppers which were so destructive in Colorado and Oklahoma, no Senators representing the thickly populated districts of the East came forward with amendments to hobble and hamstring and string-halt that appropriation. They supported the bill because they wanted the money to go where the evil existed. When bills were introduced asking for money to eradicate the fruitfly and the fever tick and the hoof-and-mouth disease, it was understood that the money should go to the places affected.

As I understand, the evil and the disease of the slums is even more dangerous than the disease brought on by the existence of the fever tick, so far as the Nation is concerned. The condition exists to a greater extent in the large cities and should be eliminated and eradicated, and I understand it is the purpose of the bill to do that.

I oppose the amendment because I believe population is no fair criterion or basis for the distribution of the fund. I believe the proposal for a 10-percent allotment is purely arbitrary. If all the slums are to be found in a few large cities, then all the money should go to those particular areas where the condition exists.

I am confident no one believes a good citizen can be produced under conditions which we have heard described as existing in the slum areas where several families are crowded together in the limits of a few small feet of space, where they exist under the most insanitary and immoral conditions. It may be the fiend who murdered the three little girls in California is the product of the slums of New York City. It may have been that he grew up without the benefit of any moral surroundings. Therefore this evil while local in its existence is national in its effects and should be eliminated.

I should like to see a slum-clearance bill passed that would permit the expenditure of money where the slums exist. For that reason I am going to oppose the amendment. I want to have the slum areas wiped out. There may be a few of the larger cities in my own State of Oklahoma which are affected in this respect. If so, as I understand, the bill provides that a proportionate fair share of money shall be used to eliminate the slum conditions which exist there. I want to have a bill passed without all these hindrances which would prevent the constituted authorities from carrying out the purpose and intent of the bill.

The slums are a seedbed for radical propaganda. The slum population are the people most subject to the subversive doctrines brought to this country from abroad, which would destroy our Nation and our form of government. These are the places where radicals can best plant the seeds of anarchy. They constitute spawning grounds for communism. For that reason, among others, I hope to see them wiped out. It is my purpose to oppose all amendments to the bill that tend to interfere with carrying out the purposes of the bill.

I have listened carefully to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. He has been most generous in accepting all amendments or suggestions that would improve the bill. But these two amendments, in my opinion, would greatly limit the effectiveness of the bill. Therefore I am opposed to these and all other amendments which seem to restrict the free operation of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the amendment which was offered by me, and which the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] substituted for his amendment which was offered yesterday, has for its purpose the equitable distribution of the benefits accruing under the bill to all of the States in the United States.

In that connection I want to perfect my amendment by modifying it, if I may do so at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I ask to modify my amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "States", by inserting the words "and the District of Columbia"; and in the same line, after the word "State", "or the District of Columbia"; in line 6, after the word "States", by inserting the words "and the District of Columbia"; on page 2, line 9, after the word "State", by inserting the words "or the District of Columbia"; in line 11, after the word "State", by inserting the words "or the District of Columbia"; and in line 14, after the word "States", by inserting the words "and the District of Columbia."

I think there is some misunderstanding of just what my amendment proposes to do. It would not tie up the funds, and it would not freeze the funds. It would simply give each State an opportunity to accept the benefit of the funds. It does not permanently tie them up.

I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to what I am about to say with reference to a part of my amendment which I think has been overlooked entirely by Senators.

The amendment proposes to earmark the funds provided in this bill, and to give the various States and the District of Columbia an equal opportunity to come here and apply for them. If their applications are accepted, the money, of course, goes to them. If their applications are rejected, the money goes back into the fund and is redistributed in accordance with the first distribution.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; gladly.

Mr. WAGNER. For how long does the Senator intend that the funds shall remain earmarked? By what procedure would he bring this about?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. They are to be earmarked 30 days after the taking effect of the act in the first year, and the States will have until the next year to make the funds available in their States, to get their applications in and have them perfected; and then at the end of that time the funds are to be redistributed as though they had never been earmarked.

It seems to me that is absolutely fair. I heard the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] yesterday say that as soon as this measure is passed we shall have a regular deluge of mayors from all over the country coming into Washington, applying for these funds.

Mr. WAGNER. If my recollection is correct, I think the Senator from Maryland said that New York would at once get 50 percent of the fund. I think the Senator from Colorado will agree that there was no basis for that statement.

As a matter of principle, Mr. President, I do not believe in amendments of this nature. I agree with what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has stated; but I am not going to stand here and make a controversial matter out of the amendment. If the Senator from Colorado feels that the funds ought to be frozen and allocated to the different States, I am tired of quarreling about matters of that kind. I do not want anybody to get the impression that I am seeking to have New York get a disproportionately large part of these funds. I am sure New York will get no more than its share, and I should be opposed to its getting any more than its share. But, as the Senator will recall, when the appropriation of funds for agriculture was before the Senate, not only did I vote for the measure, but in addition I made no suggestion that the funds should be allocated among the different States. Out of I do not know how many million dollars New York State got altogether only $700,000. I made no complaint about that, however, because under the act New York was not entitled to any more. I thought the agricultural States were entitled to the larger funds.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am glad to hear the Senator from New York say that, because there is no purpose on our part of freezing these funds. All we want to do is to give the States an equal opportunity to come here and get these funds.

This is not something new. I went back to the laws of 1916 for the precedents for it. That is the way the funds were allocated in the highway law, and I used not only the principle of the highway law but the exact language of that early law for this amendment. When the highway funds were not accepted by the States the law provided that they should go back and be redistributed, and that is the objective of this amendment.

Under the earmarking that we propose here 13 States of this Nation would have 6 percent of the funds earmarked to them. That is $42,000,000. Ten States would have 9 percent, or $63,000,000. A total of $105,000,000 would be earmarked for 23 States. Fifteen States would have earmarked for them 25 percent, or $175,000,000.

In other words, 38 States would have 40 percent of the benefits under this act earmarked to them, or $280,000,000, and 10 States would have 60 percent earmarked to them, or $420,000,000.

I cannot see anything unfair about this proposal. It will give all the States an equal opportunity. If the mayors do come to Washington, as the Senator from Maryland has indicated, I do not want my mayor from Denver to come here and be told, "We have no funds. We cannot do anything for you. The funds are all gone. A rush has been on, and the first to come in has received the money, and you will just have to go home empty-handed." I do not want that sort of thing. If we are going to have that kind of a rush, we ought to have some sort of an orderly formula worked out to receive that kind of a rush, and that is the objective of the amendment.

Referring to what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has said, What is this question? Is this a national question, or is it a local question? I should like to have Senators turn to page 33 of the bill and find out. This is what it says, under the head of "Findings and Policy", right at the beginning of the bill:

> There exist in urban and rural communities throughout the United States slums, blighted areas, or unsafe, insanitary, or overcrowded dwellings, or a combination of these conditions, accompanied and aggravated by an acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings within the financial reach of families of low income.

The bill says "throughout the United States." It does not say anything about the slums being in New York or in New England or in Pennsylvania. It says "throughout the United States." So I take it from the bill itself that it is not a bill to correct some local difficulty but it is a bill to correct a general difficulty that exists throughout the whole country.

Let us find out what a slum is according to the bill itself. Under the heading of "Definitions", on page 35, the bill says:

> The term "slum" means any area where dwellings predominate which, by reason of dilapidation, overcrowding, faulty arrangement or design, lack of ventilation, light or sanitation facilities, or any combination of these factors, are detrimental to safety, health, or morals.

That is what a slum is under the bill. That is the thing we are attempting to correct. I hold that there are slums throughout this whole Nation. There is not a village, however small it may be, in the whole country, from one end of it to the other, which under this definition does not have slums.

All of us have heard about one-third of the Nation being ill-housed, ill-clothed, and ill-nourished. If that be the case, I have not heard anything about the one-third of ill-housing all being in one section of the United States. We are starting in on a new problem. We are beginning at the very bottom of a big problem, and a new problem, so far as the Federal Government is concerned; and if the bill is passed, all of the country should be entitled to come under it for such benefits as it has to offer.

There is one thing that I fear the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has overlooked. In speaking here yesterday he said that there were no slums in Seattle, in his home city. Under the definition—and I have visited Seattle—I beg to differ with him. But there is one thing that the junior Senator from Washington has overlooked.

One of the first objectives of the bill is to promote economic recovery. Turn to the report, and what does the report say? On page 2 of the report submitted by the committee it says:

> The first objective of the bill is to provide opportunities for reemployment in a preeminently useful type of enterprise.

That is the first objective. Turn to page 33 of the bill as amended by the committee, and what do we find? It says there:

> The failure to remedy this acute dwelling shortage has also produced stagnation of business activity in the construction, durable goods, and allied industries, thus impeding business activity throughout the Nation and resulting in widespread, prolonged, and recurring unemployment with its injurious effects upon the general welfare of the Nation.

That is an economic question. In Denver, when we cure our slum districts, we will go to the State of Washington to buy lumber; and when we buy lumber in the State of Washington it will relieve unemployment, which we have repeatedly heard the Senator from Washington say on the floor of the Senate was one of the great difficulties in his State. This is an economic question, and the Senator from Washington has entirely overlooked it. When the States around Wyoming start clearing away their slums, they will go to the State of Wyoming to buy cement and other material. We hope they will come to Colorado to buy such structural iron as they need.

On page 34 the bill says:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to promote the general welfare of the Nation by employing its funds and credit, as provided in this act, to assist the several States and their political subdivisions—

To do what?—

> to alleviate present and recurring unemployment.

According to the report of the committee, that is the first objective of the bill. According to the bill itself, it is not a local problem that we are attacking; it is a national problem.

For our own protection, I sincerely hope that when we turn this money over to this Bureau we shall safeguard our States and give all of our States an opportunity to come here and get part of this fund. It is not making the bill a "pork barrel" measure to handle the fund in that way. What do the States have to do when they do come here? Do they come and say, "Give us so many million dollars"? No; they do not. They come here with their applications, and they prove their own situations. They have to satisfy the board that they have slum areas that should be eradicated. The board passes upon the value of their proposed projects under the bill. The board has to decide the whole matter. States are not going to get away with anything. If we have slums in Colorado, under this amendment Colorado will have an opportunity to wipe out those slums with the funds provided in the bill, if her authorities can comply with the requirements laid down by the board for them to meet.

I sincerely hope the Senate will seriously consider the amendment and its provisions and give every State its day in court.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask the Chair whether there is any authority under the rules of the Senate for the machinery and employees of the Senate to be used in passing out on the floor of the Senate propaganda from private sources with regard to legislation pending at the moment before the Senate?

I ask that question in all good faith, Mr. President, because this morning since the meeting of the Senate the employees of the Senate have been engaged in passing out a letter with enclosure from a Mr. Langdon Post, president of the American Federation of Housing Authorities, with regard to an amendment adopted by the Senate on yesterday. He is engaged in propagandizing for its reconsideration.

If I may be permitted to say so in connection with the parliamentary inquiry, I have no desire whatever to reflect on Mr. Post, but it seems to me that this occurrence affords one of the most dangerous precedents that could possibly be had in connection with the business of the Senate. This is for the reason that if Mr. Post, a private citizen, has authority to pass out through Senate machinery propaganda with regard to pending legislation, we may expect to see the proponents and the opponents of the antilynching bill, the proponents and the opponents of the gasoline tax or any other particular tax measure which may be suggested, the proponents and the opponents of various provisions of the sugar bill and the various interests therein, the proponents and the opponents of almost any possible matter that may come before the Senate, employing the machinery of the Senate for the purpose of covering the desks of Senators with propaganda and literature seeking to influence the action of the United States Senate.

I should like to inquire from the Chair whether there is any authority under the rules of the Senate for such a practice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised of any rule regarding the subject or any precedent covering it. However, it is the opinion of the Chair that an employee of the Senate would be subject to reprimand or other action by the Senate if he committed such acts on behalf of anyone except a Senator. Of course, if a Senator should ask the pages or any other employees to distribute anything, it would be their duty to do so, and the responsibility then would be upon the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no desire to criticize the page boys who passed the letter around; indeed, I have no desire to criticize anyone in connection with the matter. I call attention to the fact, however, because I think the circulation of propaganda on pending legislation from private sources is an extremely dangerous practice to be initiated in this body, and one calculated to bring the Senate and its procedure into disrepute.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if that was improper, I take the full responsibility for it, and do not desire to have employees blamed. Perhaps I was wrong, but I thought that any kind of enlightenment on the subject we were considering was perfectly proper, and I suggested that the Senators be given this particular information. If the action has no precedent, if it is wrong, I am the person who must be subjected to criticism, and no one else.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the statement of the distinguished Senator from New York does not cover this case. This is the boldest attempt to influence legislation I have seen in 20 years in the Senate. Doubtless the responsibility lies with the organization that is opposing the limitation on the cost of housing. It is supposed to be a reputable institution, with headquarters in Washington. I assume they inspired this propaganda for purposes of profit, because that is the line of business in which they are engaged. I think it is an insult to every Member of the Senate that this federation should frame a letter in this form to influence legislation in the Senate, and particularly that it should advocate the method of procedure which it thinks we should follow, namely, a motion should be made to reconsider the vote by which the particular amendment with which it is displeased was carried yesterday.

I absolve the Senator from New York, because he has not had many years of experience in this body, from causing the propaganda to be distributed. The trouble with the whole thing, however, and that about which I complain, is the audacity of this organization in attempting to influence legislation in this fashion.

Mr. President, if there is no rule to cover this matter, then the Committee on Rules should see to it that an amendment is properly prepared that will bring about a penalty for an organization attempting to do a thing of this astounding nature.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I really wish to take a moment's time to express a degree of disappointment at the lack of appreciation of the Senator from New York of the efforts made yesterday to help him. I understood that he had become somewhat engaged in a difference of opinion with the Senator from Maryland, who had indicated that if the bill were enacted, the city of New York would receive not less than 50 percent of the funds to be appropriated and expended, and the Senator from New York assured the Senate that that could not be the case, that this was a national problem.

No doubt the Senator had in mind section 1 of the bill, which, as the preamble, recites that "There exist in urban and rural communities throughout the United States" these problems. So I thought the Senator from New York would be delighted to have incorporated in the bill the very assurances which he was giving, that New York had no intention, no expectation, of having more than a fair share of the moneys which were to be expended. I had no desire at all to seek to reach out and, as the Senator from Washington indicated, attempt to make a "pork barrel" measure of this bill. My object was merely to protect the Senator from New York from any charge that he was actuated by selfish or provincial motives. I thought he would, of course, accept the amendment. So I really am expressing my disappointment at the lack of appreciation of our earnest effort.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry the Senator is disappointed in my attitude toward his amendment. I said a moment ago that I would not make it a matter of controversy. I did express the thought, however, that in legislation of this character it is wrong in principle to freeze the funds and keep them inactive, waiting for applications which, perhaps, may never come. This work ought to be done where the evil exists, and I pointed out that when the leigslation involving the A. A. A. came before us I not only voted for it, but I would have considered myself unpatriotic in that case had I suggested that there should be a distribution according to population.

However, if it will assuage the apprehension of the Senator that New York might get a larger share than the Senator thinks it ought to get, I am quite willing that the limitation be imposed upon New York, for instance.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, I was not willing to assume the accuracy of what the Senator said had been stated, that the conditions which he sought to correct were productive of crime, and that they were being charged against New York. I took it for granted that in proportion to population there was no more crime being developed in New York City than elsewhere.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I know this controversy is always interesting and entertaining.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not having any controversy.

Mr. WAGNER. No; but I do not want to have my attitude misunderstood. If the Senator desires to limit these funds according to population, or in any other way, so as to be sure that New York does not get more than its share, I am willing.

Mr. ADAMS. Naturally, we think of the Senator from New York first, and we think of New York first. It is the Empire State, and we naturally think of New York first. The Senator should be complimented, rather than offended.

Mr. WAGNER. I am very much complimented. I was speaking in general terms. I think just the same rule should be applied that we have applied to every relief measure. I do not recall that we allocated according to population under the relief acts. We took the position that wherever relief was needed, wherever there was suffering or hunger, we should supply the funds.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I think if there is any piece of legislation in which there ought to be breadth of view exhibited it is in the handling of and the approach to a measure such as the one before us. I look on a slum district as a social evil—and I take it the Senator from Colorado agrees to the statement—that slums are breeders of crime and social immorality. If we were going to expend Government funds to control a physical disease, not naming any, but a disease that was ravaging the human family, I take it the Senator from Colorado and all other Members of the Senate would want to apply the money in attempting to cure the victims of the disease wherever they were, whether they were in New York, or in California, or in Colorado, or in the State of Washington. So the money employed to get rid of a social menace should be used to get rid of the menace where it exists. Obviously, if we were going to try to stamp out tuberculosis, we would not allocate money to a State where there was no tuberculosis. We would attempt to stamp out the disease by expending money on the victims of the disease, no matter where they were, if the disease itself constituted a social challenge.

I have not heard it suggested on the floor of this body that slums are not a menace to the social welfare, and probably the whole political welfare of the United States. It is because they are such a menace that I have felt impelled to follow the suggestions of the Senator from New York in attempting to apply the money for the eradication of a social disease wherever it may exist. If slums are a menace and a social disease, as has been suggested here a thousand times, it would seem obvious that we ought to apply the money to the eradication of that disease where it exists. Of course, that has been suggested here so many times that it probably is a work of supererogation to repeat it. What we are trying to get rid of is slums; and if there are more in New York City than anywhere else, then we lose sight of the real objective of this sort of legislation if we do not apply the remedy where it ought to be applied. It seems to me the logic of that statement is inescapable.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am not at all in disagreement with the Senator from Washington; but if slums exist in San Francisco which are the source of infection which spreads to the State of Washington, I should think the Senator from Washington would wish to have those slum conditions in his neighborhood cured.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. That is precisely the point I am making. If there is an arbitrary allocation upon a population basis——

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will say that I do not believe in that. I offered my amendment for the purpose of aiding the Senator from New York in maintaining his position against the charges that were made. I really thought I was coming to his support by offering my amendment.

Mr. President, I do not think the money to be made available under this bill should be allocated strictly upon a population basis. However, the bill in its preamble recites, as has been pointed out by my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON], that these conditions exist throughout the United States; and the preamble also recites that it is necessary to assist the several States inasmuch as the slums are widespread.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask one question?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Is there anything in the present language of the bill that suggests to the able Senator from Colorado that any State would be barred from making application for this money? Under the terms of the bill the fund is made available to and for the benefit of any State or any political subdivision of any State that wants to enter into a slum-clearance operation. That is the provision of the bill as I read it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will let me state some figures, I think he will see the basis for my apprehension.

The bill provides for the authorization of the expenditure, by appropriation, of $20,000,000 per year for 3 years. The bill authorizes the borrowing of $700,000,000. The Senator from New York and other Senators who agree with him have objected to a limitation which was put upon the bill of $4,000 per unit. It is suggested that a $6,000 expenditure per unit would be justified. If we take the $700,000,000, how many units at $6,000 apiece will that amount of money construct? It will construct 116,666 units. If the units are built on the $4,000 basis, only 175,000 units can be built. According to the statement made by the Senator from New York at least one-third of the population of the United States is in need of this assistance; at least, there are great numbers of our people, running up into the millions, who are in need of it. I venture to say there are several times the number of 175,000 who are in need of such assistance in the city of New York. There is need for such assistance also in other States. If we were to appropriate and provide money adequately to take care of slum clearance, we should then say that it should be appropriated in proportion to need.

Mr. President, I shall now go beyond that point. We are providing $20,000,000 a year as a contribution to make up the rent payments which the lowest economic group is unable to pay. If persons in that group are to get houses costing $4,000 each, exclusive of the land, it must fairly be assumed that the interest charge, at the low rate of interest, the allocation for taxes which is to be made, the repairs, the upkeep and the rent which the individual family can pay will be between $30 and $35 per month. If a $4,000 house is built a lower income than that should not be received from it. If a $6,000 house is built the income from the house must go beyond the figures of $30 to $35 per month. Then if we take the lower economic group and put them into houses built on the $4,000 basis we cannot figure upon a contribution of less than $15 per month on the part of the Federal Government. In other words the Federal Government out of these funds will contribute to each case on an average of $180 per year. That will take care of only 111,000 cases.

Mr. President, that is not all. These people are to be put into the houses not for 1 year. They are put in for a longer period.

So the first year we use the $20,000,000 in taking care of the 111,000 families, and the second year we take the $20,000,000 then appropriated to take care of the same 111,000 families. The work of slum clearance is not extended and spread because all the money provided by the bill to be appropriated will be consumed in taking care of those taken care of the first year. In other words, we are getting nowhere. All we are going to take care of under the provisions of this bill, even on the basis of the limitation which is complained of by the sponsors, will be a mere trifle in the great economic problem.

Mr. President, this morning's newspaper carries an item which is of interest to some of us, that the Treasury Department wound up the first month of the new fiscal year with a deficit of $249,384,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to continue speaking on the bill?

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to discuss the substitute offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has discussed the substitute.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I will discuss my own amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's amendment is not before the Senate. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I will speak on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado is now speaking on the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I have no desire to take up too much of the time of the Senator from Colorado, but I wish to direct his attention and that of the Senator from New York, in charge of the bill, to a problem which suggests itself to me. This bill as it is presently prepared will go into operation at once. I am thinking about the mechanics of it. The authority will lend money to municipalities and to States. I wish to know whether the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New York have made any investigation as to whether or not municipalities generally throughout the different States of the Union are authorized by enabling acts to enter upon slum-clearance projects or the elimination of blight areas, and whether or not enabling acts would be required to be enacted by various State legislatures before municipalities may be authorized to do so, and whether providing for enabling acts would not require amendment of State constitutions in order that the legislatures of the different States may go into the projects contemplated by this measure.

I think these remarks concern the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, because his amendment holds in reserve these sums that will be allocated to the different States for the first fiscal year, and they will be held in reserve for the next fiscal year. That will give an opportunity for the States that are now constitutionally unable to go into these projects to have constitutional amendments passed which will authorize them to do so, and when they are constitutionally authorized to enter into the projects their legislatures will be given the opportunity to pass enabling acts authorizing the different municipalities to enter into these projects.

I should like to know if the Senator from New York and the Senator from Colorado have made any investigation of these legal questions.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have only 10 minutes, and I should like to save a minute or two. I should like to have the Senator from New York answer that question, and leave me a minute or two.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I will answer in my time. Will the Senator from Colorado yield, and it may be counted in my time?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. About 30 States have enacted laws creating housing authorities, and have conferred upon them the power of eminent domain. This has been in accord with the constitutions of their States, and therefore no amendments to their constitutions would be necessary. I understand that progress has been made in other States as well, and that as soon as their legislatures meet they will enact similar legislation.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I was endeavoring to point out what seemed to me a problem which we must face, disagreeable though it may be. It does not matter how desirable a project may be, it does not matter how much needed something may be, if we are not financially able to accomplish it.

There is no doubt of the need of housing; there is no doubt of the evils that grow out of the slums of the great cities; but there is some doubt as to whether or not this problem is a national one. If the great cities and the States had properly performed their functions, probably the slums would not have come into existence. It has become a national problem by reason of the failures of the cities and the failures of the States. But we are entering upon a program involving the Government in tremendous expenditures. We may jeopardize our credit; we may wreck our credit; and then all the programs which we have already embarked upon, designed to help the home owners, to help the farmers, to provide for old age, to provide for unemployment, and now to provide for housing, may fall into a heap of wreckage if the credit of the Government fails. I do not know where the line is, but I know that there is a limit. I know that the bonded indebtedness of this Nation has been growing to the point where thoughtful men are becoming uneasy. The day may come when bond issues that are put out will not be absorbed as they have been. When that day comes, we may look back and wonder if we were as wise as we thought in seeking to meet with Federal funds every problem.

We are trying to pass on, Mr. President, the burden of these problems from today to tomorrow. We have in the past 4 or 5 years been endeavoring to make the depression comfortable and agreeable for those of us here today and passing the burden on to those who are coming after us. I am interested in that phase of the question. I have boys coming on the scene; and I feel that it is by just such bills as this, with their noble purposes, that we are putting upon the backs of those who are to follow me and who are to follow the Senator from New York burdens which may break down the very structure which means so much in the maintenance of the good things already accomplished. So I am uneasy when I see how little is to be accomplished by the vast sums contemplated by this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. The Senator from Maryland yesterday submitted an amendment providing that not more than 10 percent of the funds made available by the pending bill shall go to any one State and he discussed in considerable detail the arithmetic of the bill. I think the Senator's amendment is subject to what might be called arithmetical criticism.

Representation in the House of Representatives is a fairly close index of the population. There are 435 Members of the House, and the State of New York, on a population basis, has 45, which is more than 10 percent. The population of the State of New York is more than 10 percent of the population of the United States. The Senator knows that conditions are probably far worse in the city of New York than in any other city in the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I will yield in a moment. Overcrowding is probably worse there than in any other place. Is not the Senator a little unfair in seeking to place in the bill a limitation of 10 percent? That is a very real limitation so far as New York is concerned, but it is no limitation at all so far as Nevada, New Mexico, or even Maryland or Michigan are concerned.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator think that 15 percent would be fair to New York?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. No. I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland and the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, and I think the Senator will admit—in fact, I think he has admitted—that 10 percent is altogether too narrow a limitation and is unfair to those places where conditions are the worst.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator fails to mention the fact that housing primarily is a local and not a national problem.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. And I think when the Federal Treasury puts up $700,000,000 in the form of a loan to local authorities, unless the Congress spreads that money so as to conduct the campaign on a national scale, there may be no justification for the Federal act.

The Senator from Maryland, in order to make the program national in scope, made the sole qualification that not more than 10 percent would be used in any one State. If 30 or 40 percent of the money is to be used in New York State, then, in my judgment, there ought not to be any Federal legislation enacted on the subject

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I agree with that; and if the Senator would make the limitation somewhere around 20 percent, I think it would be reasonable, because I do not want New York to have more than 20 percent; but I certainly think it is unfair to limit it to a figure that is below its proportion of the population of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has just been conversing with me about that subject. I can conceive that 10 percent might be too narrow a limitation for any one State, particularly New York State. The Senator from Missouri suggested that 15 percent perhaps would be more equitable. The substitute amendment is before the Senate and open to amendment. If the Senator from Michigan will propose to amend the substitute by offering an amendment to make it 15 percent instead of 10 percent, I shall not oppose it; but to have no limitation, I think, would be equally bad.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I wish to say to the Senator that I am in favor of leaving that matter to the authority when it is created.

Mr. President, in regard to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], or by both Senators from Colorado, it seems to me that it likewise is unfair. It provides that the sums allotted to any one State shall be based on the proportion the population of such State bears to the entire population of the country. As the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] said, there is no question that the need is much greater in the larger States of the country. In connection with the project as to which the senior Senator from Colorado has been a leader, the matter of the reclamation, I have not found him proposing an amendment providing that not more than 10 percent of the funds should be expended in any one State. Certainly New York and Illinois and Pennsylvania and Michigan have not obtained money out of the reclamation funds. The same thing is true of the various farm measures that have been submitted.

I take it from the speech of the senior Senator from Colorado that he takes the view that unless we can clear up the entire situation at one fell swoop by the appropriation of sufficient money to take care of all slum clearance in every part of the country we ought not to do anything at all. It seems to me that is the logical conclusion which he reaches in his argument; but, of course, we cannot do that. We cannot clear up any such situation by an appropriation in any one year or any three years. We have got to go at the thing slowly. That is what we are trying to do in this bill.

Now, just one other observation with respect to both the amendments referred to. I have spent most of my time in the Congress in the House of Representatives, which has 45 Members from the great State of New York. I cannot recall, Senators, a single instance where those 45 votes from the State of New York and the votes of Representatives from other industrial areas, such as Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, and other States, have not supported reasonable farm legislation when it meant very, very little to their sections of the country; nor did I ever hear anyone propose, in the course of the consideration, tax bills, levying, we will say, income taxes upon the people of the country, to add a proviso that not more than 10 percent of the total of all taxes should be collected from any one State or that taxes should be based on population. The State of New York will pay a very large part of the expense of this bill. I do not wish to criticize the junior Senator from New York, but I think, as I stated to him on the floor the other day, that he would be in a little better position if he frankly admitted that this is a bill for the purpose of clearing slums in the great cities of the country; for that is what it primarily is. I think he could well plant his case upon that broad foundation. I think it is a city bill; and I think the Senator from New York can appeal to those who come from metropolitan areas and those of us who come from farm areas—and I represent, in part, a State that has a very diversified industry and diversified farming—to support his bill on the basis that it is a city bill. As I have said, it is primarily that.

So I hope that the representatives from the rural areas will join with the great junior Senator from New York in supporting this bill and in not defeating it by stifling amendments which will make it a measure which can do none of the things that its author seeks to accomplish.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, representatives from the rural sections of the country will have no difficulty, in my judgment, in following the Senator from Michigan in his suggestion if those who are responsible for the pending measure will put proper limitations in it so that we may not feel that the money made available will be expended in the great cities without any tangible result. We have many examples about us now of projects which have been undertaken and which are worse than failures and which have cost the taxpayers a tremendous sum.

So far as I am concerned, I am interested in this bill solely as a slum-clearing proposition; and I am prepared to support it whether or not a dollar of the money to be expended under it comes to my State if I can be convinced that proper safeguards are thrown about the expenditure so that a result will be effectuated in the clearing of slums. I cannot in the name of slum clearance vote for unlimited and unrestrained waste of public money. My vote on this measure will depend upon what restrictions are thrown around the expenditures.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Let me ask the Senator from Idaho if he does not believe that the fact that the provisions of the bill are primarily to be administered by local authorities is a step in the right direction. The Federal Government is not going to expend this money. It is going to be loaned to local agencies interested in the proper and economical construction of the buildings for the purposes intended by the bill and interested in making it a success.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I think one situation is overlooked in the debate. The bill is general in character. It covers not only cities such as mine but extends into the rural sections as well. If there were to be a limitation, it should be upon the number of persons accommodated by the new buildings. It costs two or three times as much to provide a room in New York City as it does to provide a room in some rural section. That fact must not be overlooked. In a great city like New York there are building standards which must be met. They increase the cost, because the element of fire protection must always be given consideration. Further than that, the prevailing wage in the cities is very much greater than in the country. If we were to give New York State 10 percent of the total, that would accommodate perhaps one-fourth as many as might be provided for by the same sum in some other part of the country. That should not be overlooked.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I think the Senator is entirely correct about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have been very much impressed by the Senator's remarks, because they show he has a clear comprehension of the task before us and the objectives of the bill. What we are seeking to do is not only to make the slum regions habitable but to raise the standards of living in those regions and among those people. Is it not true that in proportion as we are able to do that in the congested sections of the country, we automatically raise the average standard of citizenship throughout the United States?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I thank the majority leader. He is absolutely correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I am in accord with the views expressed by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE]. Slums are a menace to the health and happiness of millions of Americans and it is our duty to provide for their demolition wherever they exist. I realize that the pending bill is but a modest beginning in that direction, and I am more than willing to lend my aid to the proposal in the hope that eventually all those of low incomes may be afforded a decent place in which to live, commensurate with their earnings. I desire to submit a few remarks with reference to certain statements made on yesterday by the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. It is not my purpose to undertake to defend what has been done in the past with reference to the building program undertaken by the Resettlement Administration. I agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that there was some extravagance. All of us must realize that in 1933 when President Roosevelt took office something had to be done immediately by the Government in order to feed and clothe those in need. We had no set plans to guide us. We were at sea. Starving people could not wait for the charting of a course. We had to take conditions as they then existed and, of necessity, quite a few unnecessary ventures were undertaken.

When the original housing bill was first considered by the Committee on Education and Labor, of which committee I am privileged to be a member, there were a number of objections urged. Among them the outstanding one, to my way of thinking, was the provision in the bill that authorized the expenditure of $1,000,000,000, with a subsidy on the part of the Federal Government of something like $2,600,000,000 spread over a period of 60 years. It was thought by some of us on the committee that the subsidy was out of proportion to the initial amount to be expended and that limitations should be placed in the bill as to the amount the Government should expend for subsidy purposes. Hence we have in the substitute bill a yearly subsidy not in excess of $20,000,000. Another objection was that the bill did not provide for mandatory slum clearance. The Senate has seen fit to incorporate a provision in the substitute bill so as to take care of that situation. Yesterday the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] took the position that the Federal Government would not only subsidize the lessees of the proposed projects to the extent of $2 or $3 per room, but that the provisions of the bill would allow the local housing authorities enough money to retire the entire debt. He stated that under the subsidies provided in the bill the Government would pay to the extent of 75 percent of the amount of rent, so why not go the full limit and make it 100 percent?

A careful reading of the bill, I am sure, will not bear out the statement of the Senator from Virginia. We have in the bill a limit of not exceeding $20,000,000 annually for subsidy purposes. That figure was determined in this manner: The bill provides that the authority shall within the next 3 years raise $700,000,000, and that a subsidy will be given by the Federal Government equal to 3½ percent of the investment. It was thought that in some cases the entire limit of 3½ percent might be used, whereas in other cases it might require only 2 to 3 percent. It was believed the average would not exceed 3 percent. Hence the amount of $20,000,000, which is a fraction over 3 percent of $700,000,000, was fixed as the limit to which the Government may be called upon for subsidies. These subsidies are to be allowed only to insure low rents and are not to be applied to words liquidating the indebtedness of the local authorities.

On yesterday the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] took the position that a house costing $6,000 would require the man who rents it to pay on the basis of $50 a month. The figures he produced are those which are usually used by private capital in estimating the return on housing investments and the like. He contended that the bill defeats its purpose, since it is the object of the proponent of the bill to provide low rents for those whose income was from $50 to $75 per month.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. The figures I used were not inclusive of land or administration costs, but were simply the cost of the buildings.

Mr. ELLENDER. May I ask the Senator where did he obtain his figure? How did he arrive at the 10-percent basis that he mentioned during the course of the debate?

Mr. TYDINGS. If four rooms cost $1,000 apiece, four rooms would cost $4,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. That does not answer my question. May I again ask the Senator where he got his figure of 10 percent?

Mr. TYDINGS. From my own experience in having built some houses and sold them, and having built them as cheaply as I could, I find that I could not break even by making 10 percent on the capital outlay for building and ground.

Mr. ELLENDER. Very well. That is the point I am trying to make; that is, that the Senator from Maryland is using 10 percent as his basis, which is the figure usually used by private capital as a just return on such investments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me read to the Senator the entire break-down of the rent, if he would like to have it, so that he may know where I got my figures.

Four thousand dollars would be the cost of the building, just the rooms without the land or administration cost added. On a normal basis used by a private concern, 10-percent rent would be needed in order to carry the proposition; for instance, insurance, depreciation, and upkeep. That would be $400; but under the bill the renter is entitled to a subsidy as high as 3½ percent, which would make $140. One hundred and forty dollars subtracted from $400 would leave $260 which the renter would have to pay. In the event that he gets the proposed subsidy, then the Government would be lending the money without any interest at all because the amount of the subsidy is equivalent to the interest on the loan. Then the renter would have to pay in equal monthly installments $21.33 a month in order to pay his rent with the Government subsidy included, which means that if we gave the rooms to the low-income group, the man would take nearly half of his salary, assuming he was making $50 or $60 a month, to pay his rent, notwithstanding the Government contributed $140 of the $400 annual charge.

Now, if the Senator will yield just a moment further——

Mr. ELLENDER. No; I do not yield further at this time. The Senator made the same speech yesterday; and, besides, debate has been limited and I would like to make further observations of my own on the subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thought the Senator wanted an answer to his question.

Mr. ELLENDER. I asked the Senator where he obtained his figure of 10 percent, and he answered that question to my satisfaction.

As I understood, the figures were taken from the Senator's own experience as a builder of homes to rent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Where does the Senator get his information?

Mr. ELLENDER. From the recorded evidence taken before our committee. I will further inform the Senator in a minute.

The reason why it is necessary for the Federal Government to come to the rescue of these unfortunates, those who are unable to pay high rents, is that private capital cannot cope with the situation. It expects more in return than persons of low incomes can pay. The Government is able to obtain money much cheaper than can the average individual. It has almost unlimited credit. If the Senator from Maryland will refer to page 13 of the report which accompanies the bill under consideration, he will find answer to the question he propounded to me a few moments ago.

The bill provides that the rate of interest shall be the going Federal rate at the time the loan is made. The established rate of interest today, or at the time the statement to which I have referred was made, was 2½ percent; and the Authority proposes to borrow this money with the backing of the Government at that rate and loan it to the various local authorities at virtually the same rate. The local authorities will then grant mortgages for the repayment of the loans on the land and the buildings to be erected, and out of the revenues from those buildings the Authority is to be repaid. It must be remembered that the Federal Government is not appropriating one penny of the $700,000,000, but is only guaranteeing the repayment of said sum should the Authority fail to collect. Let us see how the plan will work. It will be noted, as I have just stated, that on page 13 of the report accompanying the bill, appears a table.

TABLE 9.—Computation of monthly rent per room, including heat, based on a capital cost of $1,000 per room

	Per room per month
Cost of capital, interest, and amortization on $1,000 at 2½ percent and 60 years	$2.70
Operating expenses	2.95
Local taxes, full ad valorem, at 2 percent	1.66
Economic rent, using Government credit but without annual contributions	7.31
Maximum annual contribution per room (3½ percent on $1,000 capital cost; e. g., $35)	2.92
Rent with maximum annual contribution but paying full local taxes	4.39
Deduct half taxes	.83
Rent with maximum annual contribution and half local tax exemption	3.56
Deduct half taxes	.83
Rent with maximum annual contribution and full local tax exemption	2.73

By multiplying the figures in the above table by 100 or 1,000, the 1-room example may easily be translated into 100- or 1,000-room low-rent housing projects.

The basis for calculation, as will be observed, is $1,000 per room. With that basis we can easily figure what $1,300 per room would cost, or $1,500, or $2,000, but let us take for the purpose of this illustration the cost of $1,000 per room—it will be noted that the cost of capital, interest, and amortization of a $1,000 room will amount, per month, per room, to $2.70. The amortization, of course, is spread over a period of 60 years, as is provided for in the bill. The operating expenses amount to $2.95. The local taxes—that is, the full amount of taxes for the municipalities and for the State—amount to $1.66; or a total per room of $7.31 per month. Should the Government pay the maximum subsidy that is provided for in the bill, namely, 3½ percent of the $1,000 cost, it would amount, per month, per room, to $2.92, thereby making the cost per room $4.39.

The local authority which will put up the building will no doubt make allowances for local taxes. From the fact that the Authority is of a quasi-public nature, it is to be assumed that the taxes will either be cut in half or probably remitted in full.

Assuming that half of the taxes are remitted, we deduct from the $4.39 to which I have just referred one-half the taxes, or 83 cents. That would mean a rental of $3.56 per month per room. Should all of the taxes be remitted, there would be a further deduction of 83 cents, or a minimum of $2.73 per room.

I desire to say to the Members of the Senate that these figures have been presented to our committee by experts, men who, I believe, know what they are talking about. The figures to determine amortizations were taken from Glover's actuarial tables which have been in use for many years.

Permit me to further break down the figures that I have mentioned above, so as to give you a more vivid picture of the plan.

The prevailing rate of interest at this time is 2½ percent. If 2½ percent, plus a fraction under three-fourths of 1 percent, is paid yearly on $1,000 for a period of 60 years, that will have the effect of amortizing the said sum of $1,000 at the end of said period. In other words, the figure of $2.70 per month is the equivalent of $32.35 per year, which is the cost of both interest and principal for amortizing $1,000 in 60 years.

The amount of $2.95 per month, per room, is equivalent to $35.40 per year per room. This figure represents the cost of heat and hot water, repairs, replacement of fixtures, and other items with a life of less than 60 years, the cost of operating the property, and allowances for vacancies and noncollections of rent. To be more exact and so that you can obtain more details, the sum of $35.40 per year per room is derived as follows:

Repairs, 1 percent of cost	$10.00
Replacement of fixtures and other items with life of less than 60 years, one-half of 1 percent of cost	5.00
Heat and hot water	10.00
Insurance, maintenance, and administrative costs	7.77
Allowance for vacancies and noncollections, 3 percent of the annual rent	2.63
Total	35.40

I may state to the Senate that the figure of $35.40 per $1,000 per room per year, is based on the expense of the 43 completed large-scale housing projects of the Federal Housing Administration.

As to the figure of $1.68 per month for taxes, that represents an annual tax of $20 per $1,000, or 2 percent ad valorem. The actual average assessment rate throughout the United States is about 2½ percent of an 80-percent valuation, which is equivalent to 2 percent on real valuation. The fact that these buildings will be erected by local public authorities, I assume that there will be a full remission of taxes, because of the worthy nature of the undertaking. If that should happen, I say to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that the maximum monthly rental per room costing $1,000 will be not in excess of $2.79. These figures, Senators, I believe to be correct, and in my opinion refute the arguments of the able Senators just mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Louisiana on the amendment has expired.

Mr. GLASS and Mr. McNARY suggested the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	King	Pittman
Andrews	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Davis	Lee	Reynolds
Austin	Dieterich	Lewis	Schwartz
Bailey	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Ellender	Logan	Sheppard

Byrd	Hitchcock	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Holt	Nye	Wheeler
Capper	Hughes	O'Mahoney	White
Chavez	Johnson, Calif.	Overton
Clark	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I announce the absence for the record of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who have gone abroad on Government business.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] is absent on official business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is absent on account of illness in his family.

I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] offered a substitute for an amendment offered by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]. The junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], seeking to perfect the amendment of the senior Senator from Colorado, offered an amendment to insert the words "District of Columbia" in several places. The question now is on the perfecting amendment of the junior Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the senior Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may we have the amendment reported?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I promised the Senator from Maryland that when his amendment was being considered I would get word to him so that he could be present. I do not want to have action taken on his amendment in his absence. I understand from Senators around me that he is on his way to the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho has asked that the amendment be reported. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], together with the perfecting amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not true that the senior Senator from Colorado in effect agreed to modify his amendment by accepting the language of the amendment of the junior Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not the parliamentary situation. The parliamentary situation is that the senior Senator from Colorado did accept the amendment of the junior Senator from Colorado as it was printed and lying on the table. Since that time the junior Senator from Colorado has added the words "the District of Columbia" to his amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the senior Senator from Colorado modified his amendment by accepting the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], to which the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] has offered an amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place the following:

SEC. —. (a) All amounts made available pursuant to this act for each fiscal year for loans, annual contributions, or capital grants by the Authority to public housing agencies shall be apportioned by the Authority among the several States in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States as shown by the latest available Federal census. The first such apportionment shall be made and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury within 30 days after the date of enactment of this act, and thereafter each such apportionment shall be made and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury at the beginning of each fiscal year.

(b) So much of the amounts so apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available for expenditure in that State until the close of the succeeding fiscal year. Any amount so apportioned to any State which is unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure as herein provided shall be reapportioned, within 60 days thereafter, to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury in the same way, as if it were being apportioned under this section for the first time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will now state the amendment to the amendment, suggested by the junior Senator from Colorado.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to modify the amendment by adding, on page 1, line 5, after the word "States", the words "and the District of Columbia"; on line 5, after the word "State", to insert the words "or the District of Columbia"; on line 6, after the word "States", insert the words "and the District of Columbia"; on page 2, line 7, after the word "State", to insert the words "or the District of Columbia"; on line 9, after the word "State", to insert the words "or the District of Columbia"; on line 11, after the word "State", to insert the words "or the District of Columbia"; on line 14, after the word "States", to insert the words "and the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly on my proposed substitute. In order that it may be absolutely fair, it has been suggested that 10 percent may be too restrictive, and I therefore wish to modify my amendment and make the figure 15 percent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment, and he modifies it by striking out "10" and inserting "15."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the bill before us is a housing bill and a slum-clearance bill, and that is all it is, and certainly, if it is a slum-clearance bill, where the slums are is the place to which we should address the expenditure of the money.

There is no doubt in the world that the largest city in the Union, New York, because of its great size, will be entitled to, and should receive, a large portion of any funds appropriated for slum clearance. On the other hand, it should not be forgotten that there are other large cities in the country where slums also exist, and where an equitable proportion of the money should be expended. It seems to me, therefore, that the proposition to divide up the money just by States on a basis of population overlooks the tremendous objective to which the proposed legislation is directed. On the other hand, a limitation of 15 percent as a maximum to any one State does put a limitation upon all the money being used as a local rather than a national activity.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the figures. I do not believe many Senators have had an opportunity of analyzing the bill. One reason why there should be a limitation on the money to be expended in any one State is the fact that the Government is going to lend $700,000,000, is going to lend it in 3 years, and then it will be gone, and there will stand an obligation against the Treasury of the United States.

We have provided in the bill that, in addition to lending the money, the Government shall pay its part of the rent of the houses when they are built and occupied for as long as 60 years. After the money is loaned, after the house is erected, after the Government has put up all of the money, $700,000,000, the obligation of the Government does not stop. Under the bill, for as long as 60 years the Government must then pay a monthly subsidy to the tenant equal to 3½ percent per annum of $700,000,000.

Now, let us break that down. It has been said that this money is only being loaned, that it is all to be returned to the Treasury. I say that is not true, and I can prove it, I think, beyond the peradventure of a doubt.

The bonds of the Government will be sold, and we will assume that they are sold on a basis of 2½ or 3 or 3½ percent. The Government immediately is charged with 2½ or 3 or 3½ percent annual interest on the loans. The only security for the loans is the houses which are built in the place of slums, and the rents that come therefrom.

How are the rents to be fixed? The Senator from New York yesterday said that a limit of cost of a thousand dollars per room was too small, that in New York City rooms could not be built for a thousand dollars a room.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not in every case, but in some cases.

Mr. WAGNER. I am going to refer to something else, also.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. WAGNER. In addition to the project itself being security for the loan, the Government may also require the bonds of the locality, as in the case of every other such loan the Government has made.

Mr. TYDINGS. It may.

Mr. WAGNER. But we have to trust that the authority is going to get all the security needed for the loans.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not want to be contentious, but I doubt very much whether many municipal bonds will be put up as security for these loans. Be that as it may, however, the Senator from New York and Mr. Post, in the pamphlet that was passed around among Senators, said that we ought to have a limitation, not of $1,000 a room but of $1,750 a room. Keep that figure in mind.

Let us build a house, and let us build it at a cost of $1,750 a room. How much would it cost? Four rooms, then, will cost $7,000, and the annual rent on a 10-percent basis, according to my calculation, would be $700. The Government subsidy paid to the tenant would be $245 a year. That would leave the tenant to pay $455 a year, or $38 a month. That $38 a month is after the Government contributes 3½ percent of the total cost of the house and the subsidy for 60 years.

Where does that bring us? First of all, the bill provides that the house must be occupied by a person earning $50 or $60 or $70 a month. Query: Can a man making $70 a month pay the Government $38 a month, which he will have to pay, even with the Government subsidy?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to conclude, but I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Has the Senator made a study of the table that I referred to a few minutes ago and that will be found on page 13 of the report accompanying the bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I have not.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is a pity the Senator has not done so.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have made some study, and it is a pity that some other Senators did not make one on their own initiative, instead of accepting the figures of people who have a personal interest in the enactment of the pending bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have checked the figures presented by me to the Senate, and I am convinced that they are accurate.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Government gives a 3½-percent subsidy to the tenant in these rooms, then the Government gives to the tenant the equivalent interest that it would receive from the borrower to pay the interest on a national obligation. We cannot get away from that.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is it not provided that the current or established rate of interest at the time the loan is made shall be paid by the borrower?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but if he pays you, and you give it back to him again, then you still must raise the money to pay the interest on the bonds that the public holds.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, this table shows——

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. TYDINGS. I decline to yield because my time is limited. If I had more than 15 minutes, I should be delighted to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

There can be no question that the Government cannot give to these tenants 3½ percent in a rent subsidy, which is equivalent to the interest which these bonds will earn, and have the money in the Treasury to pay the interest on the bonds at the same time. If one needs 3½ dollars to pay a debt, and he gets those 3½ dollars in his hand, and then he gives away the 3½ dollars to someone, he does not have the 3½ dollars. And that does not take into consideration the sinking-fund requirement. How long do these bonds run, I will ask the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ELLENDER. Sixty years.

Mr. TYDINGS. Sixty years. Very well. How much will we pay a year? Let us say that we shall probably pay 2 percent a year.

Mr. ELLENDER. I refer the Senator from Maryland to the table to which I previously referred, and I am sure he can get his answer from that table. I am sorry that the Senator was not in the Chamber the entire time that I presented my argument. I gave in detail the monthly rent, per room, costing $1,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. At any rate, the Senator will not contend that the Government is not authorized under this bill to contribute 3½ percent of the total cost of these projects in the form of a rent subsidy?

Mr. ELLENDER. The limit is $20,000,000 per annum.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is all right. Three percent of $700,000,000 is $21,000,000.

Mr. ELLENDER. Three percent. Correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is what I am talking about. Three percent of $700,000,000 is $21,000,000. So the reason there ought to be a limitation providing that no one State shall get all of this money is because, as this bill is drawn, it is not unreasonable to assume that sufficient revenue will not be received from these projects or from the municipalities that get them to pay off this obligation.

If the Federal Government wants to give away $700,000,000 for slum clearance that is one thing, but Senators ought to realize that under this bill as it is drawn the probabilities are that the Government will not receive from these houses either the interest or the sinking fund requirement, because, in the first place, we are providing that the tenants shall be persons who do not earn more than $60 or $70 a month, who cannot earn more than that, and, on the other hand, we are building a house which in many cases must rent for $38 a month even after the Government has given its subsidy. Here is a man making $60 or $70 a month—one of the poor, for whom we all cry and for whom all our hearts bleed, and we are going to put him in a house and ask him to pay a rent of at least $38 a month, after the Government has made a liberal contribution to his rent, if the property is going to be repaired, kept insured, and operated.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield; and I shall be delighted to yield, but I request Senators to ask me questions, and as briefly as possible, so that I may finish my argument.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator can take it from my time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot do that.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator keeps reiterating; and I do not think it is fair to the municipalities, that this particular money which is to be borrowed for the purpose of clearing slums is not going to be repaid by the municipalities; and I appeal to the Senator not to constantly indict the municipalities of our country and say that they are going to default on their loans.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand what the Senator wants. I will clear that up right now. The Senator is not asking me a question.

Mr. WAGNER. May I ask the Senator whether it is not true that the record of the R. F. C. on loans made to municipalities, and the record of the P. W. A. on loans made to municipalities, is 100-percent repayment of the loans, and that, as a matter of fact, in some cases the Government has made money?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. Why would it not be true in this case?

Mr. TYDINGS. The R. F. C. is not subsidizing those who borrow the money by giving them back the interest. The R. F. C. is demanding 115 cents of security to get a dollar, and then it is collecting the interest, and then it is putting in management. Under this bill we do not require any more security in the first instance than the buildings themselves, and then when we get the interest on the loan which we have guaranteed we turn around and pledge ourselves to give it to these tenants for 60 years as a subsidy. How in the name of common sense can we give the interest back to those who are living in these houses and pay the interest on the bonds at the same time? How are we going to have our sinking fund?

I do not want to throw cold water on the slum-clearance proposition, but if that is not the naked truth, as written into this bill, then I cannot read the English language.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator mean to say that the taxpayer will be taxed to pay 3½ percent on $700,000,000 for 60 years, and then also pay the retirement requirements and amortization?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me answer the Senator by saying that already we are contributing $21,000,000 under the terms of this very bill, in black and white, in plain English; to be used by the authority to give a subsidy to the tenants in the houses; so that with what they are able to pay, plus what the Government gives them, they can pay the rent. So that the whole $21,000,000 is given away by the Government this year, and that is the equivalent of 3 percent on $700,000,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And it will take $20,000,000 a year for 60 years at that rate?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; that is correct. We authorize the authority to make contracts up to 60 years in the future; and to contribute 3½ percent of the total cost of the building as a subsidy to reduce the rent. True, the authority can, in the first instance, make contracts for 20 years only, but the power is given in the bill to extend those contracts in 10-year periods, after the first 20 years, for a maximum of 60 years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator's argument seems to me to go against passing this bill at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is practically that as the bill is written, as I see it.

Mr. BORAH. How would limiting its terms, according to the Senator's argument, remedy the situation?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to answer that question. If the bill is going to be passed, anyway, in spite of the facts I have brought out, then all the more reason exists why no community should make a local project out of it, and the whole National Government should be out $700,000,000. If we are going to do it in this way, then all the more reason exists why it ought to be a national rather than a local problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] to the amendment of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I merely wish to have some further information from the Senator from Maryland. The Senator from Maryland has made a powerful indictment against this bill. I do not care for the State of Idaho to share in that kind of thing; but I do not see anything in his amendment except the fact that he is dividing up the figures so that all the States will have a part of the spoils and at the same time share a part of the obligations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. That was not my intention.

Mr. BORAH. I know that was not the intention, but is that not the effect of it? Let me say further that I want to support a bill if I can find it in proper terms, to help clear up slums in the city of New York and other cities. I know perfectly well it is not going to benefit the portion of the country from which I come. I do not expect that; I do not seek it, and I do not think the people out there are seeking it. But I do not want to go on a wild-goose chase with reference to slums, and in a few years have loaded on my portion of the country at least, by reason of my vote, a perfect failure. It seems to me the Senator's substitute does not cure that situation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator will notice that yesterday I voted with the Senator from Virginia in the hope that we could hold these prospective rentals down to a figure which would not make the analysis which I have just made possible, and I am doing everything I can to throw additional safeguards around the bill, and I may finally vote either for or against it, depending upon how it stands at the time of its completion. But what we are dealing with now is a certain provision of the bill, and as it stands all the money could be spent in one or two States. I do not say it would. To my way of thinking that is wrong.

Mr. BORAH. Is it wrong? New York City has its slum situation, and if we go into slum clearance a tremendous effort will be required and a tremendous amount of money will be required.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. Why go into it upon a basis which will not effectuate any real results?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will yield to allow me to answer that question, the Senator knows that, if we spend every single, solitary dollar of this money in New York, it would only provide for 175,000 families.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. I listened to that presentation very attentively because that, it seems to me, is the most powerful argument made against the measure. After we have done what we are proposing to do we have really gotten nowhere.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho upon what recognized theory of government it ever became the business of the National Government here in Washington to tax all the American people to clear up slums in certain specified parts of the country?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know just when that was initiated.

Mr. GLASS. Well, I know when it ought to be stopped.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rose to obtain from the Senator from Maryland an explanation of his amendment so as to determine for myself whether or not in voting for the amendment I would really minimize any of the evils which he has so graphically presented.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a brief comment there?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not claim that the amendment that is now pending would eliminate the evils, but I do claim that if the amendment should be adopted, and if the bill as now constituted and framed should be passed and put into operation, and what I think will happen should happen, at least the $700,000,000 will not have become a local project, and whatever benefit there may be from demonstration otherwise will afford a useful lesson all over the country; whereas if the amendment should not be adopted, it is perfectly possible that the whole lesson may be lost in one locality. I think it is too good a lesson to have one locality either know or not know.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit me to ask the Senator from Maryland a question?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will the Senator from Maryland break down the 10 percent that he is speaking about?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. ELLENDER. What part of that 10 percent goes toward interest and what part goes toward repairs, and so forth? I would be very much obliged to the Senator if he will consent to place that information in the RECORD.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not that information available, but, if the Senator would like to have it, I would be very glad to put the complete breakdown in the RECORD. Let me ask the Senator, however, is it intended that the Government shall heat and light these buildings?

Mr. ELLENDER. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it intended that the Government shall furnish water, and heat and light the buildings?

Mr. ELLENDER. It is intended that the local authority shall furnish hot water and heat and shall make a charge therefor.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much does the Senator estimate it will cost to heat one of these rooms? I want to see how the Senator has broken it down.

Mr. ELLENDER. The estimated cost is $10 per year per room. I have taken the figures given to the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. By whom?

Mr. ELLENDER. By Mr. Gray and Mr. Vinton.

Mr. TYDINGS. Who is Mr. Gray and who is Mr. Vinton?

Mr. ELLENDER. They are connected with the housing department here in Washington, I believe.

Mr. TYDINGS. What experience have they had?

Mr. ELLENDER. I have no personal knowledge, but——

Mr. TYDINGS. Then I do not think they are good witnesses.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will yield, let me say that Mr. Gray is the head of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration. That is what his connection is, and he has been in charge of all public works that have been carried out under that department. Mr. Vinton is Chief of Research, Division of Suburban Resettlement, Resettlement Administration.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for this information.

Mr. BORAH. Why bring that up?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland furnish the information that I requested of him?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Louisiana both have used up their time, as announced by the Chair. So I think that someone else is entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The floor was being occupied by the Senator from Idaho. The Senator from Idaho yielded both to the Senator from Maryland and to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I make a further point of order. I desire to know if a Senator can occupy the floor after the Senator who yielded to him has surrendered the floor? The Senator from Idaho took his seat, but the Senator from Louisiana was still insisting that the Senator from Maryland proceed, and the Senator from Maryland had risen, and the two Senators were starting at it again when I made the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Idaho. When that Senator took his seat and surrendered the floor the Chair recognized the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I earnestly hope——

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland a question, if I may have the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I will occupy the floor only for a few moments.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Very well; I will wait.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have a very brief statement to make. I hope the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland will not prevail for the reason that under his amendment seven States would use up all this fund.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to make another point of order. The Senator from Colorado has made one speech and under the unanimous-consent agreement, which is in force, I make the point of order that he cannot now make another one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Colorado has already spoken on the pending amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. On my amendment but not on the substitute amendment. I am now speaking on the substitute amendment. In any event, I did not use my time on the bill, and I will now take time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is speaking on the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado may proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, as I was saying, I hope the substitute amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland will not prevail for the reason that under it seven States could receive all the benefits. Under the original amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado all the 48 States—North Carolina, Florida, Colorado, New Mexico, and all the others—as well as the District of Columbia would have an opportunity to come under the bill and make their applications. There is no money allocated to them, but they may make their applications, and if they can comply with the requirements of the authority they can get the money. The use of the funds would not be confined to seven States, as would be the case if the substitute amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland were adopted. I hope therefore his amendment may be defeated.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to know if I understood the Senator from Maryland correctly a while ago. I believe he said that it had been stated during the debate that if all of the $700,000,000 were spent in the city of New York it would only take care of 175,000 families. Is that correct?

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will let me break that down, I will be glad to answer the question.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill proposes an expenditure of $700,000,000 for this purpose. At a cost of $1,000 a room that would provide 700,000 rooms. If there were two rooms to a family it would provide for 350,000 families; if there were three rooms to a family, it would provide for 233,333 families; if there were four rooms to a family—and heaven knows there will not be much slum clearance unless there are four rooms to a family—it would provide for only 175,000 families at only $1,000 a room, when the pamphlet we have here this morning says that we ought to allow $1,750 a room, in which event, instead of 175,000 families, we would only provide for 100,000 families with $700,000,000 without the subsidy. That is only the first cost. Then the subsidy runs along for 60 years in addition to that. No one will dispute that on the floor of the Senate, I think.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator give us any information as to how many families are living in the slums and are needing relief?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think anyone knows.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. No estimate has been made.

Mr. TYDINGS. No estimate has been made insofar as I have been able to find. No survey has been made at all. We just know that we have slums and are going to start to help the millions who live in the slums by taking care of 100,000 of them first.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. There are slums in Washington. Can anyone give us any information as to how many families live in the slums here and how much it would cost to eliminate the slums?

Mr. TYDINGS. One estimate is that of the President, who said that one-third of the people of the United States are underhoused, underfed, and underclothed. That means that there are, roughly, about 9,000,000 families in that condition, and the bill will take care of 100,000 of them.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. It appeared during the testimony of the present mayor of New York—not the next mayor of New York, the Senior Senator [Mr. COPELAND]—that the cost of the elimination of the slums in New York City ultimately might cost $1,000,000,000 and for the whole country as much as $15,000,000,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Did the Senator say "billion dollars?"

Mr. WALSH. Yes; in New York City alone.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, is the Senator from Minnesota frightened at the use of the term "billion?"

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am beginning to be afraid of it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] had the floor and the Chair understands surrendered the floor. Before recognizing the Senator from New York the Chair desires to state that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] withdraws the perfecting amendment he offered to the amendment of his colleague, and the question now is on the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. COPELAND. It is about that that I wish to say something. I think the Senator from Maryland was out of the Chamber a moment ago when I raised this point. The test should not be population; the test should be the number of persons who can be accommodated by the buildings erected to take the place of slums.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator will recall that my modified substitute does not deal with population. All it deals with is the provision that no State shall receive more than 15 percent of the $700,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator change that to 20 percent? The reason I ask it is because in New York City, undoubtedly, it will cost twice as much per room to meet the fire requirements and the building standards and the prevailing wage as it will in a small city or in a rural district.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Knowing the Senator's great interest in humanity, medically as well as from other standpoints, I may say that if the Senator should offer an amendment to increase the limit of 15 percent to 20 percent, in view of my own knowledge of what a great city New York is and the terrific problem that exists there beyond that which exists in all other parts of the country, I do not believe I would be inclined to oppose it.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator should be generous and accept it himself, because, frankly, I do not want any restriction placed at all. I want to leave it to the authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. If I accept 20 percent, will the Senator then help us to get the amendment in the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I am not going to promise that [laughter], but I hope the Senator will make it 20 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not know certainly, but I hardly think I could quote the junior Senator from New York. So, rather than to take additional time with this particular provision, if the sponsor of this bill, together with the senior Senator from New York, would be satisfied with a 20-percent limitation, I would not be inclined to quarrel over the 5-percent increase. I recognize the fact that New York City particularly needs this help more than does any other part of the country, but I still maintain that there ought to be a limitation somewhat in line with the one I have suggested.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not see my colleague in the Chamber.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will modify my amendment again and make it read 20 percent instead of 15 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland modifies his amendment by changing 15 percent to 20 percent. The question is on the modified amendment of the Senator from Maryland in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] made a pertinent inquiry recently with reference to the number of slums throughout the country. I invite attention to the report of the committee on the pending bill, in which the following statement will be found on page 6:

It is now a matter of general agreement that even before the depression commenced over 10,000,000 families in America, or more than 40,000,000 people, were subjected to housing conditions that did not adequately protect their health and safety. These unfortunate circumstances have been neither exclusively urban nor exclusively rural. The Department of Commerce Real Property Inventory of 1934, covering 2,400,000 family dwelling units in 64 representative cities, found that almost one-fifth of them were either definitely bad, though not beyond repair, or totally unfit for human occupation. In a governmental survey of rural housing, made last year, it was discovered that in over half of the American States four out of five of the rural homes had no running water and three out of four neither gas nor electricity.

Mr. Gray of the P. W. A. housing department testified before the committee as follows:

There is an urgent need for an immediate and extensive public program of slum clearance and housing for families of low income. It is generally recognized that there is a serious housing shortage in this country and that this condition is becoming more acute from month to month. In its report on the Wagner bill last year, your committee expressed approval of an estimate which placed the number of dwelling units needed in the next 10 years, to meet minimum physical standards and maintain family occupancy standards as of 1930, at approximately 13,000,000, or 1,300,000 units yearly. Of this number I believe at least one-third, of 435,000 units yearly, are needed for families of low income. A precise estimate is unnecessary, however, because the need is obviously much greater, on whatever basis estimated, than we can reasonably hope to meet within the next few years through the activities of both private and public agencies.

Other testimony was as follows:

Senator DAVIS. What I was trying to get through my mind was how much do you suppose it would cost the city of New York and the United States Government to clear up the whole housing program of New York City—that is, to enable us to have housing sufficient to house everybody that is now living in what we might term tenements or slums?

Mayor LAGUARDIA. To do a perfect job?

Senator DAVIS. Yes.

Mayor LAGUARDIA. A little over a billion dollars.

Senator DAVIS. Now, you said here just a moment ago that practically every city is in the same condition that New York is in.

Mayor LAGUARDIA. That is right.

Senator DAVIS. I agree with you, because in the last 25 years I have traveled in every city in the United States, and I have a very good impression as to what the situation is. What would you suppose would be the cost of doing this job all over the country?

Mayor LAGUARDIA. Why, an enormous cost; but I can tell you what the cost will be if we do not do anything. I think if we do nothing about it the cost will be tremendous in an increase in tuberculosis, in an increase in epidemic diseases, and so forth.

Senator DAVIS. I agree with you on that, but I was just trying to get into my own mind the cost. I know what the general cost would be.

Senator WALSH. I have an impression that last year the estimate was about $15,000,000,000.

Senator WAGNER. The entire cost. England started about as modestly as we are starting here, and it grew and grew; but if we do not do anything we are going to have a sad day.

Senator WALSH. Is that not the figure that appeared in the testimony last year, that it would cost about fifteen or twenty billion dollars?

Senator WAGNER. To do the whole thing, of course, which we are not attempting to do as yet. That is about what it was estimated.

Senator WALSH. Applying the same situation that exists in New York to all the cities in the country the amount would be in that vicinity.

Senator WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet I should like to call attention to another matter which has been under discussion here, namely, the question of the percentage of the income of persons of low income which they are obliged to pay for rent. As the Senate well knows I have been insisting upon provisions being incorporated in the bill which would require this particular group and the very lowest income class of our population to have the benefit of the housing facilities to be provided under the terms of the bill.

I have in my hand a table showing the average monthly expenditures for rent and the percentage of the income spent for rent for all family types in various cities at income levels from $500 to $750 per year and from $750 to $1,000 per year, sent to me by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which, in a moment, I shall ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

The table shows that the average rent per month of a family in Chicago, whose income is between $500 and $750 per annum, for whites, is $22.90. The rent, therefore, represents 43.9 percent of their total income. The bill provides housing facilities for families of low income whose income is equal to five times the amount of the rent to be charged and that such families, namely, those with incomes less than $750, shall be given preference in the occupation of the tenements. Criticism has been directed at efforts to fix the proportion 4, or even 3, to 1, namely, that the people who may get the tenements shall be those who have an income only four or three times the amount of what their rent will be. Here are figures which show that white families in Chicago pay 43 percent of their income in rent.

Let us see now about the Negro. In New York City the Negro with an income of $500 to $750 pays in rent $30.50, or 55 percent of his income in rent.

Let us consider the group of incomes between $750 and $1,000.

In Chicago white families with an income of $750 to $1,000 pay $22.70 in rent, or 31.2 percent of their total income in rent.

Taking one of the smaller cities of the West, Billings, Mont., families with an income of $500 to $750 average $21.40 per month for rent, or 41.2 percent of their total income. In Dubuque, Iowa, they pay $19.30 per month in rent, or 27.2 percent of their total income.

I ask that the table may be inserted in the RECORD at this point for the purpose of indicating the importance of having all persons of the very lowest incomes who now pay the highest percentage of their incomes for rent given the benefit of the provisions of the bill.

There being no objection the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WALSH. I ask also to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table which the able Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] had inserted in the RECORD a few days ago, but which should be repeated in connection with what I have said about the percentage of rent paid by those of low incomes. This table gives the average income of the lowest wage earners and producers in the United States. It shows that 10 percent of the population have incomes of less than $500, 39.8 percent have incomes of less than $1,000, and 80.7 percent of the people of the United States have incomes of less than $2,000.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Six hundred and fifty thousand farms covering 100,000,000 acres operated by over 500,000 farmers, where the farms are too poor to make possible the earning of a decent living.

Forty-two percent of the total farm population is tenants; over 10 percent rent land in addition to that that they own; 47 percent of the farmers own their own land.

From 1930 to 1935 there was over 200,000 increase in the number of tenant farmers in the United States.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to get some information, if I can. I suppose the only source of the information will be the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] or the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

A few moments ago a petition was presented to me, as it has been presented to other Senators. I do not remember the exact wording of the petition.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should be glad to send the petition to the desk and have it read, so that the Senator may comment on it. I ask to have it read at the desk, together with the names attached.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it would be wise to have it read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

We, the following Senators, believe that it would be unwise to wait until January 1 for Congress to begin to consider general farm legislation. In order to make preparations to carry out a farm plan, the farmers of the Nation should know of that plan before January 1.

A large proportion of the farmers of America make their plans and begin to prepare their soil during the autumn and winter months. Believing that it is imperative for farm legislation to be enacted, we further believe that congressional committees should make their studies and investigations and be able to report to this Congress by October 15, and that Congress should begin its consideration of such legislation at that time.

For these and other reasons we agree to use our best efforts to cause the reconvening of Congress by October 15 to enact farm legislation if such legislation is not enacted by that time.

Schwartz, Sherman Minton, E. C. Johnson, C. O. Andrews, Elbert D. Thomas, W. J. Bulow, H. T. Bone, M. M. Neely, Kenneth McKellar, Ernest Lundeen, Walter F. George, John H. Overton, Frederick Van Nuys, William H. Dieterich, Pat McCarran, Bennett Champ Clark, Key Pittman, Robert F. Wagner, Harry Truman, Robert M. La Follette, Henrik Shipstead, Arthur Capper.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, when the petition was presented to me I did not sign it, making the statement that I wanted to look into it. I have been led to believe from remarks made on the floor of the Senate the other day by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that that committee had adopted a resolution or passed an order to the effect that it was impossible, in view of the information before them, or the lack of information at hand, to report on proposed legislation at this session of Congress, and that they further agreed to go out among the farmers themselves and make a study of the problem and be able to report at the next session of Congress.

Personally, I should like to see a farm bill enacted at the present session of Congress if it were humanly possible to do so; but I see no reason for having the Senate or the Congress stay here if it is impossible to have the legislation enacted within a reasonable time. Not wishing to be placed in a false light, because of my name not being on the petition, some persons perhaps being led to believe that I am not in favor of farm legislation, I sought the floor in order to ascertain from the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] if I was correct in the interpretation I placed upon his remarks the other day. I want to know just what is the situation; whether or not it is possible to pass a farm bill at this time, and what is the view of those who are in charge of the program with reference to this matter, so that it may be cleared up today on the floor of the Senate.

Before the Senator speaks, I may say that I am one of the Senators who do not believe in the formation of groups in this body. I believe it is best to handle things right out in the open, and not by petitions such as this one. I think we ought to have an understanding here on the floor of the Senate; and, if our minds can meet, we ought to see whether or not we can get together with those at the other end of the Capitol. I think that is the best way to formulate legislation and make a program.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I was utterly astonished when I was apprised that there was being circulated a petition to the effect that either farm legislation should be passed at the present session, or Congress should be called back here on the 15th of October. It is hardly fair to the farmers of the country, who do not understand the situation, to do this thing.

The committee met and agreed that it was too late for any legislation at this session to affect the crop that is now coming on the market. In view of that fact, the members of the committee unanimously agreed that during the recess they would address themselves to an exhaustive study of the situation; that they would break away from the old custom of having hearings in Washington, and take the committee to the farmers themselves. explain what had been done and what was proposed to be done, and add to it whatever constructive suggestions were made by the farmers themselves.

I believe the idea of going to the farmers themselves was suggested by the Senator from Mississippi—I think I am correct in that statement—and that ample time should be given to study the problem; that we should stop the annual piecemeal attempt to solve it; that we should take our vacations, and then go to the fields themselves, and find out just what reaction we should get from the real farmers themselves.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of going to the farmers themselves is a very wise one; but the Senator did not have me in mind?

Mr. SMITH. Oh, I beg pardon. When I said "the Senator from Mississippi", I meant the Honorable Mr. BILBO.

Mr. President, let us review the situation in a commonsense way. In 1933 we started, at my instance, a measure of crop control on this premise: Cotton was then selling for 6 cents a pound, not as much as half the cost of production. We had a surplus of some 13,000,000 bales. I conceived the idea that if the Government would buy the cotton at 6 cents a pound and sell it to the farmers in lieu of a new crop, the price would rise, and would repay the Government, and certainly would repay the farmer, for he would already have a crop purchased at less than half what it would cost him to make one, the Government merely holding it in trust for him. That was done. The farmers kept the faith. The Government bought the cotton, and the farmers did not reproduce it.

Next year, under the A. A. A., the Government inaugurated a compulsory reduction. The farmers agreed to it. We did not make enough cotton in that year to meet the requirements of domestic and foreign commerce. The next year the Supreme Court decided that the A. A. A. was unconstitutional, and we passed the soil-conservation bill, giving benefit payments for the land that was not planted to cotton. The farmers responded to that; and for the 4 years the average production of American cotton has not been in excess of the domestic and foreign consumption. In fact, it has not been equal to it, because during those 4 years it was necessary to draw upon the 13,000,000-bale surplus to a point where that part of it now is only about 1,300,000 bales.

This year the Soil Conservation Act is in operation. There has been a slight increase, say, 10 percent, in the acreage devoted to cotton. Next week the Department of Agriculture will make an estimate of the production, and a little later on they will estimate the abandoned acreage. The bumper crops heretofore made were made on from 47,000,000 to 48,000,000 acres. The biggest crop ever made on that acreage was about seventeen and a half million bales. This year we have a total of a little less than 38,000,000 acres planted to cotton. No man can tell what the production will be. The season has been better than heretofore, but cotton is essentially a sun plant; and with an excess of rain, or an abundance of rain, it goes to weed at the expense of fruit.

I believe—and I hope everyone who hears me speak today will listen to this statement—that it is estimated that we shall have a 15,500,000-bale crop. I am of the opinion that whoever invests money upon this assumption will have a sad awakening.

But to come back to the situation as it now stands, we are asked to pass a general farm bill, the nature of which has already been presented to both committees, and has not met the approval of the committees. This is a tremendous problem; and it is to the everlasting shame of Congress that it has not devoted itself seriously as a body to studying the problem of agriculture as related to industry, and to try to formulate some law that would approximate the difference in compensation between the two.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. This session of Congress convened in January. It is now several days after the first of August. Why has there been this delay in taking up the farm question during all this time?

Mr. SMITH. Simply because, in the opinion of most persons, there was no necessity for any additional farm legislation until we could get to the farmers themselves. We had the soil-erosion act, which I challenge any man here to read and say is not practically the A. A. A. The Senator from Idaho knows that it is. We are giving the farmers benefit payments. We are asking the farmers to cooperate; but I do not believe, and other Members of this body do not believe that we have ever yet touched the real, fundamental principle upon which the agricultural problem is to be solved.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator knows that I was unable to be in attendance on the Senate when the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the Senator from South Carolina is the chairman, considered the farm legislation. Therefore, I am going to ask the Senator for some information.

I tried to follow the reports in the newspapers during the consideration of the farm bill. As I understand, the farmers who came here, or those who represented the farmers, could not agree upon any form of change in agricultural legislation. Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If no agricultural legislation is passed at this session, am I correct when I say I believe that the soil-conservation program, with its benefit payments, will continue?

Mr. SMITH. To be sure. The appropriation has already been made, the machinery is at work, and the threat of a surplus is the result of Nature.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am glad to have that information. I was under the impression that legislation for the benefit of the farmers was passed last year, was still in effect, and would continue in effect until other legislation had been passed to displace it.

Mr. SMITH. The soil erosion act is permanent legislation and $450,000,000 has been appropriated for the purpose of carrying it out.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is what I assumed. When this petition was presented to me, I hesitated to sign it, but I was told that it was necessary in order to have something to prepare for next year's crop.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in reply to that, let me tell the Senator that I think it is unfair to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to bring in a petition, when the committee have studied this problem, and are just as great friends of the farmer as are those who are circulating the petition. We are studying the problem, and doing the best we can to solve it. The farmer himself is only afraid of suffering because of the act of God. He has reduced his acreage, but he cannot control the seasons.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. When the committee considered legislation, did they consider the repeal of the existing legislation?

Mr. SMITH. No; they just considered not taking up the bill which was brought to us, hand-made, perfected, and with the statement, "This is what we have." The committee really and honestly did not think it met the situation, nor did the committee at the other end of the Capitol think so. But they never lost sight of the fact that we must settle this problem somewhere constructively and permanently. I have been a member of the Senate for 30 years, and every year there is the farm problem.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator states that the bill brought before the committee was hand-made. Would be mind telling the Senate who was behind the formation of the bill?

Mr. SMITH. I tried to find out. I think Mr. Edward O'Neill was one, and a gentleman who bore a splendid name, a Mr. Smith, from Illinois, was another. I think they were the chief ones. I think the Secretary of Agriculture, with his ever-normal granary, was also in it. But even the so-called leaders of the farm organizations were not agreed on it. The fact is, they knocked it out at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I know nothing about the petition which has been referred to, and which has been read; it certainly was not presented to me. I should like to ask my colleague whether the bill to which he refers provides for some control of the cotton crop other than that which is provided for under the existing law.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I think my colleagues will agree with me that there is no Member of the Senate of the United States who has had at heart the interest of the cotton farmer more than has the senior Senator from South Carolina, my colleague, and the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. The junior Senator from Alabama is the only Senator to whom I have talked with reference to this bill. He stated he believed that it was against the interest of the cotton farmer.

Mr. SMITH. He so stated to me.

Mr. BYRNES. Is it now proposed that in the closing days of the session, and without any consideration, we should pass a bill which the junior Senator from Alabama believes is against the interest of the cotton farmer?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly; let us pass something and fool "Rube" again; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think that if anything is to be done, certainly consideration should be given to the measure and no action should be taken until the junior Senator from Alabama, who has some very positive ideas on the subject, and who has studied it, is given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, how many men in this body who have served with me can charge me with being derelict in my efforts to help the farmer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. SMITH. I did not know there was a time limit. I have just started. [Laughter.] How much time have I on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes on the bill, if he desires to use it.

Mr. SMITH. Very well; I will use the 10 minutes.

Every Senator knows what this means. Some of the Members of the House and myself have just had a conference with the President. The idea of saying that it is necessary to prepare for planting and setting the crop in October. In my section we are not through picking cotton then. All of us understand what this means. What is the use trying to fool anyone? So long as I am in this body, what I believe I am going to say.

Mr. President, there is a law which empowers the Commodity Credit Corporation and the R. F. C. to meet this emergency, and to meet it fully. They wrote me a letter, which I put into the RECORD, to the effect that they had ample law and ample funds with which to meet the emergency when it arose. That is permanent legislation. Here is a crop coming on the market, being sold every day, and we are asked to meet here and pass a law—an ex-post-facto law—to control a crop that is already made and going on the market.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, where does the Senator get the idea that anyone suggested passing an ex-post-facto law?

Mr. SMITH. My legal terminology is about as limited as that of the average lawyer in this body. What I am driving at is that it is stated that we want a law that will control production. God has already controlled the production of this crop. It is already made. We propose to do everything we can to aid so that there will not be piled up disastrous surpluses. It may be we will have to work out in detail the Egyptian plan, Joseph's plan, the ever-normal granary. I do not know how that will work. But I want the Senate to understand that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, believing there was ample law to take care of any distress that might occur by virtue of this year's crop, pledged itself to try to frame legislation that would take care of the next year's crop. We did that in the Soil Erosion Act, and I still believe ample provision was made to take care of the crop. The proposals made in the bill to which my colleague has referred I believe would be repudiated by every cotton grower in the South. Cotton is distinct from grain. Fifty percent of it is exported. We have to take into consideration 50 percent of our output that has to be exported, while with grain practically the entire crop is domestically consumed, and lends itself more readily to legislation.

Mr. President, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has done its duty and is doing its duty, and I do not view with any degree of patience this attempt to create in the minds of the public the impression that we are not doing our duty, and not doing all we can to help the farmer. I want the farmer to judge who is his best friend, I myself, or those who are making this appearance. It is not fair to the committee, it is not fair to the farmer, it is not fair to anybody connected with farming.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate thoroughly understands that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is doing its best. My impression this morning was that the President would be thoroughly satisfied if assurance were given him, as I gave it to our leader, that when we meet in January a bill shall be considered and passed before the general seeding time in America. Why complicate the situation with this kind of procedure?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the reason why the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] did not have the petition presented to him was because he had not been reached at the time the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] rose to make inquiries about the petition. The Senator from Mississippi had seen the petition. It was our intention to present it to each individual Member of the Senate. I wish to make that statement now, in order that it may be understood.

The object of the petition was not to cast any reflection upon any committee, and it is not meant to cast any reflection upon any committee. As a matter of fact, the petition bears the names of eight members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have in my hand a telegram from my colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I will quote a part of what he said:

> I favor adjourning until November unless Congress is willing to remain in session an indefinite time while the two Houses are working out a new farm bill. I believe it would be well for you vigorously to fight the committee recess resolution. If it appears that Congress cannot be held there indefinitely to pass a farm bill, make a strong fight for recess to November, so as to get action on a farm bill by January. I will return there if needed.

We have the names of 40 Senators on the petition. I have just read my colleague's views with reference to the necessity for enacting legislation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, he has changed his mind since he left.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to make the position perfectly clear. I have watched the Senator from South Carolina since I came to this body. I recall with very great pleasure the suggestion he made and the excellent work he did in connection with the legislation he referred to a while ago when the question came up as to buying the cotton crop. I said then, and I repeat now, that it was a masterful suggestion, and one which resulted in great good to the farmers of the South. I accepted his leadership, and I was glad to accept his leadership in that fight. He did an excellent job, as he has done many other excellent jobs. Whatever the Senator may think about the presentation of this petition, I now wish to disclaim any intention of casting any reflection upon him, or of questioning the genuineness or sincerity of his desire to help not only the farmers of the South but those throughout America.

However, the question which is now presented is one which does not call for refraining from action merely because my view might disagree with his, or his view might disagree with mine. Down in the South today cotton has slumped to about 10 cents a pound. Whether or not it has stopped at that price I do not know. I do know that if it should go to 8 cents a pound, the conditions would be disastrous. The average small farmer—what we in Alabama call a 1-mule farmer—will perhaps do well if he raises as many as 4 or 5 bales of cotton. It can easily be figured up, at 500 pounds to the bale, what that would mean so far as his income from cotton is concerned.

The situation is a serious one to us, Mr. President. The Senator from South Carolina, like myself, is, I know, disturbed about it. It is natural that men who have the same objective should at times disagree as to the exact method of accomplishing the purpose; but because there is a disagreement as to methods, or because some one might have a mistaken idea that action of a certain kind would not be proper in view of what some members of the committee thought, I am not willing to forget that cotton in Alabama and elsewhere in the South has slumped to 10 cents a pound for the farmer. I cannot forget that it may go lower.

The Senator from South Carolina and I and others from the South on numerous occasions have joined in an effort to obtain loans in order to peg the price of cotton.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that at the present time the Commodity Credit Corporation has authority to make cotton loans?

Mr. BLACK. I am about to make a statement on that subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. And is it not true that it has the money and credit with which to do it?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Texas is correct; and I shall make a statement with respect to that matter right now.

Mr. CONNALLY. Congress has given that authority, and it is not the fault of Congress if the loans are not being made?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

As I stated, I have joined the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators from the South, and all of them have always cooperated in the effort to help the cotton farmer. There is no reason why all of them should not cooperate now in an effort to accomplish this purpose. There is no reason why there should be any disagreement between them as to methods which would prevent their going along together for objectives.

Mr. President, the law provides that the Commodity Credit Corporation may make loans. Under that law a loan might be made for 10 cents a pound or 12 cents a pound, or whatever amount was found to be wise. There is no question about that. However, those who are charged with responsibility for making the loans take the position—whether right or wrong is immaterial, so far as the cotton farmer is concerned—that they do not feel justified in making such loans now unless they have assurance from the Congress—not from 1 Member, not from 10 Members, not from 18 Members, not from 1 committee, but from Congress—that the proper legislation will be passed in order to protect the security which the Government receives when it makes the loans.

I will state what I mean by that. Various estimates, or "guesses", as my friend from South Carolina calls them, have been made that we may have fourteen and a half million or fifteen million or fifteen and a half million bales this year. Whatever the amount might be, if there should be a surplus and no steps should be taken to provide permanent legislation for succeeding years, those who have the authority to make the loans take the position that without assurance of the passage of a law their security would be so poor that they would not make the loans.

Let us concede that they are wrong in taking that position. At the same time, as the days pass by more cotton is picked and more farmers are compelled to sell their cotton at the price it brings on the market today.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. What is the law which those in authority to make the loans require Congress to pass? What are the provisions which they require to be incorporated into the law before they will make the loans?

Mr. BLACK. I cannot state definitely and positively the express terms which are required to be incorporated; but if the Senator read in the press, as he probably did, the interview with the President in reference to making the loans, he remembers the contention that heretofore when loans were made on cotton for the purpose of pegging the price, or when loans were made on corn for the purpose of pegging the price, there was in effect a law which controlled production. Therefore the position is taken that there was in effect at that time a law which would prevent such a large surplus coming on the market within the next year that the commodity as security would lose its value.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Alabama will recall that in the closing days of the session in 1934 I proposed legislation to direct that loans be made. The administration took the view that there should be no legislation. At a conference at which the Senator from Alabama was present, we agreed upon a plan whereby the Commodity Credit Corporation did not lend 12 cents per pound, but loaned 10 cents per pound, with the agreement thereafter to pay to the farmer who sold his cotton the difference between the price at which he sold and 12 cents per pound.

Mr. CONNALLY. That was in 1935, not 1934.

Mr. BYRNES. If the year 1935 is satisfactory to the Senator from Texas, it is satisfactory to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator wanted to be accurate.

Mr. BYRNES. I do. It is eminently satisfactory to the Senator from South Carolina.

I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Alabama. We now have a law the purpose of which is to control production. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], my colleague, said that because of the unusual season it has not successfully controlled the production this year. Does the Senator from Alabama, however, believe that the administration has in mind any other control for which we could legislate which would enable the administration again to put in operation the plan which was agreed upon between the President, the Senator from Alabama, and myself, and others in 1935? It seems to me it could be done at this time—not to lend 12 cents, but to lend 10 cents or 9 cents, pay the farmer the difference, and then some control could be put into operation which would be successful, although at this moment we may not be prepared to pass legislation providing for it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I do not know exactly what the plan is. I recall the long hours that all of us spent on it at that time.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was present.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Texas was present, and also the senior Senator from South Carolina and the senior Senator from Mississippi; we met, and finally went down to the White House.

I do not know exactly what plan can be adopted, but I may say to the Senator that, with all due deference to those who think differently—and they may be a hundred percent right and I may be a hundred percent wrong—it is my belief that the committee could have hearings adequate to enable them to consider the subject and to report a farm bill by October 15.

Mr. SMITH. Have hearings for what?

Mr. BLACK. To have hearings in order to determine what kind of farm legislation should be enacted; that is the usual purpose of hearings.

Mr. SMITH. Suppose that were done; in the meantime the cotton has all been sold.

Mr. BLACK. I certainly agree with the Senator, and it is for that reason that speedy action is desirable.

Mr. SMITH. And we have ample provision made as my colleague [Mr. BYRNES] has suggested to take care of the situation. Yet those who have the power will not trust the farmers while we propose to provide $700,000,000 and give it to people without any hope of return at all.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, so far as trusting the farmer is concerned, the numerous millions of farmers are not up here sitting with the committee; they are not up here in the Senate. It is not a question of trusting the farmers, but we know that, whether we trust them or not, if something is not done, the little cotton farmers of the South, in a very short time, will be selling their cotton for 10 cents a pound.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I will take 10 minutes on the bill, and I yield to the Senator from South Carolina for a question.

Mr. SMITH. Does not the Senator think, we having set up a body and given them money for this express purpose, in case of a surplus or the menace of a surplus, that they should take charge of the situation and see that the crop is marketed in an orderly way?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am not quarrelling with anybody over what is anybody's duty, but let us assume it is the duty of the Commodity Credit Corporation to lend 10 cents a pound on cotton; the fact remains that the Commodity Credit Corporation are not doing it; the fact remains that the statement is made that they will not do it unless some assurance of legislation is given. It was for that reason that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] and myself day before yesterday introduced a joint resolution which would attempt to commit both bodies and not merely committees. I take the Senator's word for any statement he makes as to what he will do; I know he will do it if he can do it, but if both bodies bind themselves to do a thing it certainly will show the Commodity Credit Corporation, who take the position that they will not act unless they have an assurance of legislation, where the Congress stands. It will place the two bodies squarely on record in favor of the enactment of legislation by a certain time.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him one other question?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. Then, this body that we have created and provided with ample capital allows the farmers of the South to be ruined unless we pass additional legislation that may or not save the Treasury a few dollars. Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am not willing to go with the Senator in stating that a board which is vested with certain powers which it is to exercise according to its best judgment intends to ruin somebody. It was intended by the Congress——

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I challenge the statement that I said they intended to do it. I said they are doing it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Chair please take that out of my time. I did not yield.

Mr. President, I am not interested in any controversy with any Senator, and particularly a Senator from the South who wants to raise the price of cotton. I am not only not interested in such a controversy but I do not intend to engage in it. I intend, however, as also a representative of the South, to express my views with reference to what I think is necessary for the protection of the farmers. If it had been intended to require by law that the Commodity Credit Corporation lend money on a certain basis per pound, the Congress could have done it. The Congress, however, did not do it; the Congress left the discretion in the Corporation as to when it should lend the money and in what amount.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator think that we could make the Corporation do it? He just said that we could.

Mr. BLACK. Yes, I think we could.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not the Corporation an executive agency and can we not direct it?

Mr. BLACK. I think we can, yes; and may I say that on yesterday the Senator from Mississippi and myself——

Mr. CONNALLY. I am anxious to do it.

Mr. BLACK. I know the Senator is.

Mr. CONNALLY. But I was just wondering if we would have any authority to make them do it.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is exactly in line with the ideas I have in trying to take care of the situation.

The Senator from Mississippi and I, day before yesterday, introduced a joint resolution requiring a loan of 12 cents a pound. That joint resolution is now pending before the Agricultural Committee. The Senator from Mississippi tells me that he has asked the chairman of the committee to have a hearing on the resolution. Of course, if both bodies should pass that joint resolution, and it should be signed by the President, then there would be a mandatory law which would require lending the money, but the situation that faces us now is that there is no mandatory law. I am not willing to say that the administrative officers are neglecting their duty when they exercise the discretion with which Congress vested them because they hold that under the present conditions the security is not adequate. Whether they hold that or not, I do not know, but I believe that those of us who think we ought to have a farm bill as soon as possible are absolutely justified in assuming that sufficient study could be made to enable a bill to be reported by October 15. That is adequate time in our judgment for the matter to be settled.

That does not imply any reflection upon the committee, rather it is a compliment to the committee. We believe that the eminent Senators who sit on the Agricultural Committee, can make the necessary studies and submit a report by that time. Of course, if there are those who oppose farm legislation it would be the most natural thing in the world for them to be against the meeting in October or any other time before January; but the difference between the Senator from South Carolina and myself and the Senator from Mississippi is not that we do not want farm legislation, for we all want farm legislation; the difference really is as to the time which should be taken to prepare and introduce and pass such legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would farm legislation embrace crops such as wheat?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly, it would.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, may I state to the Senator if the Congress should meet in November the wheat for next year would already have been seeded, so the bill would not take care of that situation.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct that it is impossible, unless we should act immediately, to take care of the situation as it relates to winter wheat; but there are cotton and other crops as to which plans begin to be made even before the soil is plowed. It may be that we should have no farm legislation. That is another question. There are those who honestly believe that the Federal Government should not pass farm legislation of any type, and they have ample argument and precedent to support their position. There are others who believe that we should enact such legislation. I believe that we should do so, and that we should do it at the earliest possible moment, in the interest of the American farmer. I do not believe that we should wait until January before beginning the consideration of such a bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wonder whether the Senator thinks the so-called soil conservation law, which gives the farmers $500,000,000, has been a failure insofar as it has brought to the farmer a fair price for his crops?

Mr. BLACK. I do not think it has been a failure; I think it has been helpful insofar as it could go. I believe that better legislation, improved legislation, may be enacted. I think the Agricultural Committee takes that view in the resolution they adopted, to the effect that they will present, as I undersand, a bill to the Senate in January. So I assume that they take the position that the law referred to by the Senator from Maryland should be improved. I do not think it has been a failure; I think it has been helpful; but I believe that we could have legislation which would be more helpful, and in that I am supported by the action of the committee in taking up the study of the proposal for a new farm bill.

My deep interest in this subject, as is the interest of those of us who come from the South, is that we see cotton slumping now down to 10 cents. We want the loans made in order to stop the downward trend. The Department takes the position that it will not grant the loans unless legislation is enacted or unless legislation is assured. It is for that reason that the Senator from Mississippi and I have asked other Senators, not privately, for there is nothing private about it, but openly, just as fast as we could reach them, to sign this petition. We would have asked them all if time had afforded. I am very happy that we took such action, and I shall be very happy if it shall result in bringing about action by the Congress on what I now consider to be the most vital question upon which we should act before adjournment.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the difficulty about the time in which the farm bill shall be passed seems to have arisen largely because the farm organization and the Department of Agriculture and the Committees on Agriculture of the respective Houses have not been able or were not able to agree upon the particular form of legislation which would receive the approval of the committee. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if that is true?

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I think it is true that the committee have not agreed on the form that the legislation should take; otherwise a bill would have been reported to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I ask the Senator if it is not also true that the farm organizations themselves were in disagreement? Was there not some clash between wheat and other crops as to how much money other crops were going to get out of the proposed bill?

Mr. McGILL. I do not think there was any clash between the producers of the different commodities. There may be, and I think there is, some difference of opinion among farm organization groups as to just what kind of bill should be passed. However, I am among those who signed the petition which the Senator from Alabama circulated.

If the Senator will allow me a moment further, I should like to say that it has been stated that the committee acted unanimously. However, upon the date of the committee meeting there was a very important meeting of the Judiciary Committee, and some members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had no part in its proceedings.

I do not think the Soil Conservation Act is controlling production, else this last year we would not have had the greatest acreage planted to wheat we have had in the history of the country. I think farm legislation is necessary and that by October 15 or November 1 we could be ready to proceed to the consideration of such legislation in some form.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, speaking for myself only, I am entirely agreeable to coming back in October if the Agricultural Committees of the two Houses are going to have a bill ready at that time.

Mr. SMITH. Which they will not.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from South Carolina interjects the information that the committees will not have it ready in October.

Mr. SMITH. We cannot do it. The subject is too big. It has too many conditions in it. If we are going to legislate with common sense——

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope we will.

Mr. SMITH. That would be very unusual in certain places.

Mr. CONNALLY. Nevertheless, I hope we will.

Mr. SMITH. If we are going to legislate with common sense, we must study the subject from the ground up, and that is what we are going to do.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment. I have no intention of criticizing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of either body. I am sure the committees are going to do the best they can regarding the proposed legislation.

I yield now to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. McGILL. There has been appointed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate a subcommittee to conduct hearings at whatever points may be thought appropriate throughout the country. I think also the Committee on Agriculture of the House has appointed a similar subcommittee. I cannot see why it will be necessary for the Senate committee to have more time than between now and the 15th of October or 1st of November to determine what kind of measure ought to be reported to this body.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. If the Congress were to adjourn by the middle of August and we went to work immediately, that would give us hardly 2 months to cover the entire United States and make a study worth the money involved. Everybody knows that along in September and October, when it gets somewhat cooler, we intend to cover the situation, make our investigations, and then honestly draft a bill and present it to Congress.

I know what is back of all this. Keep on and I will tell what it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not question that the Senator from South Carolina knows what is back of it all. I do not know what is back of it all.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator can guess.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator from South Carolina at some future time may reveal just what is back of it all, not because I am curious, but because I am always glad to have the Senator from South Carolina contribute any information he may have in his possession.

Mr. President, I do not know what is going to be in the proposed farm bill, but I assume that some form of production control is contemplated. I know that is the idea of the Department of Agriculture, and I think it is largely the general sentiment of the Agricultural Committees of the two Houses. I do not happen to have the honor of being a member of that committee in the Senate. I am tremendously interested that at the earliest possible moment the Congress shall enact such legislation as it may decide is wise. If the committees cannot be ready by October, of course there is no sense in Congress coming back at that time for that particular purpose.

In the meantime, in the case of cotton, there is a very critical situation by reason of cotton being dumped on the market during about 3 months of the year and the price always going down. Of course when the cotton goes into the hands of the spinners and speculators they hold it, and in the spring the price begins to go up again.

The theory back of the loans provided for has been to make the loans at such figure as would tend to stabilize or flatten out that price over the whole year rather than to force the farmer to take the very low price which he has to take when he sells his cotton, because at that time he is in debt and wants to meet his bank payments and pay the doctor, and perhaps the preacher, and settle his store account. He has to meet these payments, and the only way he has of meeting them is to sell his cotton, and sell it immediately.

But Congress has already authorized the Commodity Credit Corporation to make loans. It is not making them, and has not made any recently. I very much hope that somebody may be able to influence the Commodity Credit Corporation to make loans in fair amount. I do not expect the Government to make a loan on any farmer's property of more than it is worth. I do not want the Government to give him anything in the form of a loan. But we are lending money, and we are apparently about to appropriate $700,000,000—$700,000,000 mind you—to give some folks in some of the great cities of the country a little cheaper rent.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is probably familiar with the fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation has on hand and available $135,000,000, which it is authorized to lend for the very purpose the Senator has been outlining, but which it flatly refuses to lend simply as a matter of policy, and at a time when the prices of certain commodities, notably oats, due to temporary seasonal glut in the market, are being hammered down, while the Commodity Credit Corporation sits by with all that money in hand and refuses to take any steps for the relief of the owners of those commodities.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Missouri. It has already been pointed out in the debate that the Commodity Credit Corporation not only has the authority but has the money with which to make the loans. The loans ought to be made, not next year, but now; not in October, but now, because now is the time when there is need for them.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] referred to the arrangement which we made in 1935, on the 26th day of August. I have reason for remembering that date. The Commodity Credit Corporation had been making loans of 12 cents on cotton. Cotton had been accumulating because it could not be sold for more than 12 cents. Cotton was accumulating, accumulating, accumulating. We finally hit on the plan of letting the farmers go ahead and sell the cotton, and if it brought as much as 10 cents the Government would pay the differential. The result was a movement of all the cotton that was purchasable, and that relieved the situation, and the Government did not lose any more, if, indeed, as much, as if it had continued to make the 12-cent loans.

So, Mr. President, these loans ought to be made; and if the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] can get their resolution before this body, the Senator from Texas will be very glad to support it. In the meantime, I can understand the situation in some quarters in which it is said, "Unless Congress is going to pass some sort of farm bill, we do not want to make the loans." I can understand that; but it is unfortunate that those who take that position reached that conclusion just at this critical time in the cotton market, or in the oats market, as pointed out by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. To require that we must first pass the farm bill before the loans are made will simply amount to making no loans at all at this time, because we are confronted with the situation that the chairman of the Agricultural Committee says the committee will not be ready with a bill even in October. By that time the ruin will have occurred. The distress will have swept over my particular section.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator that the Commodity Credit Corporation should make these loans. I think the provision was put in the law for just such an occasion as that which now confronts us. On the other hand, it seems to me that at this session, and without any delay at all, we should pass a farm bill to regulate the industry and, in the case of our particular product, cotton, to regulate the production of cotton.

We know that under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration the price of cotton was raised enormously, and it was done by Government regulation. When that act was invalidated and ceased to operate, cotton did not fare so well. This year a larger crop is going to be raised, and that is why we are confronted with the situation of low prices. It seems to me that Congress at this session ought to pass a bill along the line of the A. A. A., bringing it within the Constitution, and making permanent provision so that we shall not have to deal with the problem every year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas on the amendment has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have some time on the bill, have I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall take 5 minutes of that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall take 5.

Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that, while the Agricultural Adjustment Act did some good toward raising the price of cotton, the reduction of the gold content of the dollar did more to raise the price of cotton than all the other legislation we had enacted, simply by reason of the fact that when the Frenchman was buying cotton for 6 cents a pound or the Britisher was buying it for 6 cents a pound in gold, and we devalued the dollar, the 6 cents immediately became 10 cents; and cotton being an export crop whose price is fixed in Liverpool and other foreign markets, the devaluation of the dollar had a tremendous effect in raising the price. If the Senator read the reports from day to day when the President was buying gold, he saw that cotton and gold went up hand in hand and together. The A. A. A., of course, did some good; and I agree with the Senator to the extent that if we are to have crop-control legislation at all, we should enact it at this session of Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think so.

Mr. CONNALLY. But how are we going to get it if the committees are not ready to report? How are we going to get it if the committees are not agreed? How are we going to get it if the Department of Agriculture wants one plan, and the committee wants another plan, and the farm organizations want still another plan?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say that it is possible that the devaluation of the dollar by this country had some effect on the price of cotton.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says it is possible. Does not the Senator know that it did? If the devalution of the dollar did not have any effect on the price, why did the Senator vote for it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that in my judgment the Agricultural Adjustment Act did more to stabilize the price of cotton, it did more to bring about a good condition among the cotton farmers and to aid the cotton farmers, than any other act of Congress that was ever passed in the history of the Republic.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for that interruption; but if he does not think the change in the value of the gold dollar did anything to the cotton market, if he will ask his Memphis cotton dealers, the big people who sell their cotton in Europe, they will tell him that it did.

I am not disposed, however, to argue the matter. I think the A. A. A. did some good, and I am not attacking the A. A. A. But, Mr. President, while we are waiting for the committees to make up their minds, while we are waiting for the Department of Agriculture to make up its mind and get into agreement with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] and other Senators, these loans ought to be made. What good would it do a farmer to tell him that next year we will pass a farm bill, whereas he is suffering now by reason of the very forces which a farm bill is supposed to arrest and hold in check?

Mr. President, so far as the Senator from Texas is concerned, he would much prefer to be home than to be here in October. He would much prefer, if he were able, to go to Europe, along with some of his opulent colleagues in the Senate. He would much prefer to tour the West with the Indian Affairs Committee, looking over the Indians and the buffalo and the deer. He would much prefer to go out into Nevada and view the public lands.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not overlook the Great Smoky Mountains National Park of western North Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the mountains are the only things that are smoky in North Carolina. The eminent Senator has none of the qualities that go along with the Smoky Mountains except charm and delightful personality. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator from North Carolina thanks his friend the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I go through North Carolina, however, if I go home, and so I shall go there in any event. If I go home, I shall visit North Carolina; but I was speaking of some of the hinterlands, some of the outlying territories which the Senator from Texas is not always privileged to visit.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Some of the less interesting places.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. We all agree that the Commodity Credit Corporation has the power to act. We are told that the Commodity Credit Corporation declines to act in the absence of further restrictive legislation. The question proposed thus far is whether or not it should lend 12 cents a pound upon cotton.

Does not the Senator think that if the gentlemen representing Southern States should propose to the Corporation not to lend 12 cents, but to follow the plan that was put in operation in 1935—to loan 10 cents, and then provide for the additional payment to the farmers if as a result of the loan cotton is held off the market and the price goes up—the Commodity Credit Corporation would be justified in lending 10 cents a pound on cotton?

I desire also to ask the Senator a further question. What legislation are we to enact? The Supreme Court held that we could not constitutionally enact legislation such as the Bankhead Act. We have enacted the soil-conservation law. We have done our best to restrict production; and in the absence of any suggestion as to how we can further reduce it, does not the Senator think the Commodity Credit Corporation should lend 10 cents a pound on cotton, and take the good business risk that in the next year this very law, with normal seasons, will curtail the crop sufficiently to make the loans safe?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that I thoroughly agree with him, and I thank him for the interruption. The loan was sound in 1935, when there was a larger surplus on hand than there is at this time, was there not?

Mr. SMITH. Twice as much.

Mr. CONNALLY. The surplus was much larger in 1935, and the board then found it sound to loan 10 cents a pound, giving the farmer the benefit of any accretions in the price that might come to it. While we are debating the farm bill and discussing it, I think the Commodity Credit Corporation ought to make these loans. I do not see by what authority it says to the Congress that the Congress itself must pass certain kinds of legislation before the Commodity Credit Corporation will do what the Congress has told it to do.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Congress passed the existing law for the purpose of curtailing production, and it is unsatisfactory, if we should hurriedly pass another law, what assurance would it give to the Commodity Credit Corporation that it would accomplish what the existing law has not accomplished?

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. In other words, suppose we pass the pending bill. The gentlemen in the Commodity Credit Corporation would first have to give it their visa. They would look it over and say, "Well, now, Mr. Congress, this law does not suit us. This is not the kind of law we want, and we will not make the loans." The Commodity Credit Corporation is a creature of the Congress, and when we authorize a bureau like that we mean to have it do what it is authorized to do. The Commodity Credit Corporation ought to make these loans without being prodded and punished and pushed by the Congress to do it.

So, Mr. President, I submit that cotton loans ought to be made at this time, and then the committees of Congress which deal with farm legislation ought to get together and prepare such a measure as soundly represents their views, and bring it back here and let us pass it at the earliest practicable moment. I do not know what that moment is. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has one idea. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL] may have another. I trust the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is the instrumentality of the Senate; it is the servant of this body; and it must work out that problem for the Senate.

Mr. BILBO obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope we can bring this discussion to a speedy conclusion and get back to the bill which is under consideration. In view of the fact that the subject has been brought up, however, I hope to make a very brief statement which may clarify the situation with regard to agricultural legislation so far as this session is concerned. I shall do that as soon as I can get the floor; but I do not want to interfere with the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, it is my purpose to occupy only a few moments.

Last week, on the floor of the Senate, I raised the question of doing something for the relief of the cotton farmer of the South. I have been working at the proposition ever since. On Tuesday I went to the White House and discussed the matter with the President. Upon my return to the Senate Chamber the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and I introduced two resolutions, believing that the resolutions would solve the troubles which the southern cotton farmer is now having.

As announced on the floor of the Senate, cotton is selling for 10 cents a pound. Like my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from South Carolina, I, myself, am a farmer, and I know that 10 cents does not represent cost of production of cotton because, in the making of the crop, everything bought by the farmer is at high prices, and if he does not realize 12 cents or more for his cotton, he will suffer a great loss.

I have no apology to make to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for my part in preparing the petition, in company with the Senator from Alabama. I helped to dictate the petition, and we meant just what we said in it. In order to make the preparation to carry out the farm plan, the farmers of the Nation should know that plan before January 1. Every intelligent farmer knows that the great majority of farmers map out their crops for the succeeding year in the autumn months. Many of them do the plowing for a particular kind of crop, and we meant that the farmer ought to know before January the plan of control the Government would insist upon for that year.

Believing that the proposed legislation is imperative to the success of agricultural life, especially of those engaged in producing the major crops of the Republic, we felt that no time should be lost in giving to the farmers a farm bill; and it can be done.

I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and to my certain knowledge there has not been introduced by any member of the committee, or any Member of Congress, any farm bill, except the bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Idaho. There may have been some features of that bill which did not appeal to me as representing the farmers of the South.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, has there been no crop regulation bill at all?

Mr. BILBO. None except as contained in the bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Idaho.

I think it is the fault of the Congress that we have not had such legislation; and, as I said last week, I am willing to stay here until Christmas Eve in order to give the farmers the legislation to which they are entitled, and which will insure their relief.

Senators are amply paid for their service to the people, $10,000 a year, and we are paid by the month, and our constituents are entitled to our time, if it be worth anything; and I mean all the time. I am willing to sacrifice my personal pleasure and comfort and business that I may do my best for my constituents by staying here all the summer and all the fall, although I may not be able to earn my compensation.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who has been a Member of the Senate for 30 years, boasts of the fact that he is the real dirt farmer in the Senate. He has been studying this problem for 30 years, and with the knowledge he has gathered and gleaned through the years, and with his understanding of the problems of the farmers, and with the cooperation of other distinguished members of the committee, I believe we can make whatever investigations may be necessary in the next 60 days and be ready to report out of the committee a bill which will meet with favorable consideration at the hands of the Congress.

Mr. President, I am afraid that Senators fail to see what is behind all this. As has been correctly stated, the Commodity Credit Corporation has the right and the power to make the loans, but it is a discretionary power, and when I left the White House the other day I was convinced of the fact—and I am not quoting the President—that there would be no loan, and that the farmers of the South would be robbed of hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars by the speculators unless the administration had the assurance that there would be a farm bill looking to the control of production in order to prevent the accumulation of surpluses in the future.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and I have introduced and have now before the committee Senate bill 2878, to provide for loans to farmers on certain crops during the year 1937. The bill takes cognizance of the fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation has on hand $135,000,000 which they are authorized by law to lend for the purposes which the Senator from Mississippi has just been discussing, and which Congress intended that they should lend, but which the Commodity Credit Corporation, for reasons of its own, not as a matter of law, not on account of lack of funds, but because they have deliberately themselves adopted a policy of not doing it, refuse to make. The bill to which I refer is directed to the purpose of making such lending mandatory so as to tide over this situation. Does not the Senator from Mississippi think such a bill should be passed, so that it would not rest in the discretion of the Commodity Credit Corporation to decide the matter?

Mr. BILBO. I do; and, in company with the Senator from Alabama, I have introduced such a measure, and all we want is to have it enacted, with a companion bill introduced.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that the joint resolution of the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Alabama applies only to cotton.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. I am also interested in cotton, as every other citizen of the United States, whether or not he comes from a cotton-growing section, ought to be; but there are other commodities, some of which are on the market at the present time, which should be provided for, and would be provided for under the bill of the Senator from Iowa and myself.

Mr. BILBO. I have no doubt that the Senator, with his usual zeal in behalf of his constituents, will press his bill, and I trust that he will support the measure which I have introduced.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. When was the Senator's bill introduced?

Mr. CLARK. On the calendar day July 31.

Mr. SMITH. It was referred to what committee?

Mr. CLARK. To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH. I shall certainly try to get my committee to take action on that bill.

Mr. CLARK. I hope the Senator will, and that there will be early action by the Congress.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, we are making progress.

Mr. SMITH. On the Senator's bill!

Mr. BILBO. I am sure that the Senator from South Carolina would not be willing to compel the lending of money on oats and not compel it on cotton.

Mr. President, the trouble with the whole business is the soil-conservation legislation under which the farmers are now operating. Personally I think that has been a great measure. It has resulted in great good to the farmer, and it is going to result in good to the farmer in years to come. But the result has been that the farmers in the South this year increased the acreage in cotton 6,000,000 acres, and that, as much as the season, accounts for the abnormal crop. It is not a question of charging it to nature; it has resulted because the farmers, with the lack of the idea of control in soil conservation, have increased their crops. As the Senator from Kansas says, there is the greatest acreage in wheat this year there has even been.

Mr. McGILL. The acreage planted for 1936 and the acreage planted also in the spring of 1937 are the largest we have had in the history of the country.

Mr. BILBO. After the Supreme Court had knocked out the A. A. A. So, after all, we can charge it all to the Supreme Court. We all have an excuse.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to just one more fact. It is not because of lack of interest on the part of the Commodity Credit Corporation that they do not make the loans. As businessmen, and as agents representing the Government, they want to know that if they lend the money they will not lose anything, and they want the assurance that Congress will pass legislation at the earliest possible moment, and October 15 is not too early. We are trying to give them assurance that we may get this relief for our people, and anyone who throws anything in the way of giving this assurance will be charged with the responsibility of denying the farmers relief in this instance.

The carry-over of cotton this year was 5,000,000 bales on the first day of July. During the month of July that was cut down to 4,400,000 bales. I am informed by those in a position to know that 20 percent of this carry-over, 880,000 bales, represents unmerchantable, unginnable, unusable, and unsalable cotton. So that today the real surplus is only three and a half million bales, which is the smallest carry-over we have had since 1930, and there is excuse for cotton being sold today at 10 cents a pound. I make the prophecy that if something is not done, as soon as the speculators can beat the price of cotton down, and get it out of the hands of the farmers of the South, we will see the market increase day by day, and the speculator will walk off with his golden sheckels. We are only asking the agents of the Government to come to our rescue, and protect us against those who are manipulating the cotton market when there is no excuse for cotton selling at 10 cents a pound.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have heard Senators on the floor of the Senate this afternoon speak with reference to the Commodity Credit Corporation, and during the discussion it has been stated that that Corporation has $135,000,000 in its possession at this time available for the benefit of the farmers of the United States. However, I have yet to hear any of the Senators who have enlightened us this afternoon say whether or not he has directed any inquiry toward those in charge of this Corporation to ascertain why they will not now come to the aid of the cotton farmer of the South at a time when he needs help. Can any Senator who has discussed this subject today say that he has directed any inquiry to any of those in charge of the Corporation as to why it will not make advances to the cotton farmers, or, in other words, why the Corporation will not buy cotton from the southern farmers today in order that they may be helped at a time when they need help?

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I have done my best to convince the Senate that all that is necessary to do and all that the Commodity Credit Corporation is waiting for is for Congress to assure them that it will enact such legislation as will prohibit the accumulation of a surplus in the future which will cause the Government to lose the money loaned to the farmer.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I regret that it is necessary to interrupt the business on the calendar of the Senate to indulge in this discussion, but probably if the situation can be cleared up the discussion will be worth while and valuable.

I think it may be truthfully said that when we met here in January we all hoped that permanent and comprehensive farm legislation would be enacted at the present session of Congress. There had been criticism because the Department of Agriculture framed legislation and sent it down here to be considered by Congress, and for that reason it was thought wise at the beginning to call in the representatives of all the farm organizations of the country and ask them to make an effort to frame legislation which they thought would deal with the situation. It was impossible for the Secretary of Agriculture to call a national convention of farmers or a town meeting in order to get the views of farmers. Therefore he had to rely, and probably did rely, upon the cooperation and the knowledge and the wisdom of those who had been selected by farmers to represent them in Washington.

The farm organizations began to deliberate on the framing of a farm bill, and they deliberated for a number of months. About 6 weeks ago the late Senator from Arkansas, our former leader, called a conference for the purpose of discussing the probability of enacting agricultural legislation at this session. I think that conference was called at the request or the suggestion of the Secretary of Agriculture. A large number of Senators who were interested in farm legislation were asked to be present. I happened to be one of them. The Secretary of Agriculture attended that conference. At that time the farm organizations had not agreed on a bill. No bill had been introduced; and, in view of the legislative situation then confronting Congress, it was generally understood and agreed at that time among all those present at the conference that legislation dealing with agriculture at this session would be impossible. So the conference broke up, the Secretary of Agriculture went about his business, and, so far as I know, it was agreed, subject to any change in conditions, that it would be almost practically impossible to frame legislation on a comprehensive basis dealing with agriculture at the present session.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. Was it not, however, the position of the Secretary of Agriculture at that time that legislation should be enacted at the very earliest date possible?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not only was that the position of the Secretary of Agriculture, but it was the position of all those who attended the conference. The Secretary of Agriculture shares the fear that all of us have shared, that, while nothing could be done about the 1937 crop, unless some efforts were made to control production for 1938, if nature should be as bounteous next year as she has been this year, and there should be produced another bumper crop of wheat and corn and tobacco and cotton and other basic products, necessarily a very drastic slump would occur in the price of agricultural products produced in 1938. Everyone agreed that that was the condition.

Likewise everyone agreed that no legislation could be enacted at that time that could control the situation so far as the 1937 crop was concerned.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. That would control the situation as regards the acreage that would be planted in the fall of 1937.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am talking about the crop harvested in 1937.

Mr. McGILL. Of course, that was out of the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that was perfectly obvious.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. And the agreement, as stated by the Senator from Kentucky, was that the committee should proceed with hearings and endeavor to have a bill ready to be taken up at the beginning of the next session?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. It was understood that the committee would go ahead with its preparation, have whatever hearings were necessary, and have a bill ready whenever Congress met again, whether it was in January or whether it was a called session at an earlier date. That I think was the general understanding. The Secretary of Agriculture agreed, if that were done, that no damage would occur by reason of the loss of time between then and January.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator did not understand, did he, that the farm organizations, certainly not the American Farm Bureau, accepted that idea? They insisted on and wanted legislation, and the Secretary of Agriculture wanted legislation, but, on the statement from some that it could not be obtained, they reluctantly said it might not be obtained, but they wanted it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The farm organizations did not agree to that because they were not in the conference. This was a conference of Senators and the Secretary of Agriculture interested in the farm legislation, and they were dealing with it in a practical and realistic way, and not undertaking to count on improbabilities.

I do not know when this bill was framed. I do not know when the farm organizations that participated in its framing got together on it. It is my understanding that the National Grange and the Farmer's Union did not agree to the terms of this bill, but, Mr. President, the bill itself, from whatever source it came, was introduced into the Senate on July 15. It could have been introduced earlier had not the legislative and parliamentary situation here prevented.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I quite agree with what has been said, if abundant crops are produced in 1938, as to what may happen to wheat, cotton, and other commodities. I call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky, however, to the fact that already it is probably too late to enact any legislation which will be beneficial to the wheat farmers for the year 1938.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true, so far as winter wheat is concerned. It is not true so far as spring wheat is concerned.

Mr. HATCH. It is not true so far as spring wheat is concerned; but if we do not start considering legislation until January, the spring-wheat planting may also be in the same condition as the winter wheat is at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. In line with what the Senator from New Mexico has just said, I should be inclined to the view that if we are to undertake to enact farm legislation, but do not act on it before the January session, it will be too late to deal not only with the spring-wheat farmer but too late to deal with the farmers who plant oats, barley, corn, and all other commodities planted in the early spring. We should have a bill enacted and in effect, I think, by January in order to deal with that situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should certainly desire that this be done.

Mr. President, the bill that was introduced, if it were passed today under the terms in which it is drawn, would provide no remedy for the crops of 1938. I hope the Senators from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] and New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and other Senators will give me their attention, because I just made the statement that even if the bill, as introduced, were enacted at once, it would not offer any relief so far as the crops of 1938 may be concerned in the way of crop curtailment, because the bill provides that the contracts which are to be submitted to the farmers must be submitted during the last 5 months of the calendar year, and those contracts pertain only to the production of crops for the succeeding year. So that, in order for any crop-reduction program under this bill to be effective for the crop of 1938, the contracts must be presented to the farmers during the last 5 months of 1937, which would have begun on the 1st day of August.

It is manifestly impossible to pass this bill or any legislation in time for that provision to take effect, so that if the contracts for the curtailment of the crop of 1938 cannot be presented to the farmers during the 5-month period of 1937, then it will be necessary to change that provision of the bill when it is enacted, so that the contracts may be presented to the farmers at an earlier date than the last 5 months of the previous year in order to affect the crop of the succeeding year.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. The Senator will agree, however, will he not, that a very simple amendment to the bill would relieve that situation?

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree that a very simple amendment would affect that situation. I am talking about the bill as it was presented, and I have no doubt that as it was drawn it was contemplated that it might be enacted in time for that provision to take effect in the last 5 months of 1937.

Mr. President, in an effort to ascertain what is the situation with respect to the probability of having legislation at this session, I have not only conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry but I have conferred with the other members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, including the authors of the only bill which has been presented, and all of them have told me that they are not now in possession of sufficient information to enable them now to draw a bill; that they do not have the necessary facts to enable them now, without further information and investigation, to draw a comprehensive, wise, and workable agricultural bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I beg leave to disagree with the Senator on the statement he has just made. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I think the only thing that committee need do is to determine a policy for the bill. There are plenty of facts available in the Agricultural Department, and if the committee would work out the policy which it believes should obtain, I believe a bill could be drawn rather quickly that would conform to whatever policy the committee should determine upon.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that, following the action of the committee in ordering hearings and providing for regional hearings, I undertook to ascertain—I have forgotten whether I conferred with the Senator from New Mexico or not—but I talked with many members of the committee, especially the authors of the bill——

Mr. HATCH. I did not mean to call attention to that fact.

Mr. BARKLEY. And I have made this statement as a result of those conferences.

Mr. HATCH. I was not present in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry when that action was taken. If I had been present, I should have opposed it. I did not talk with the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sorry I did not get around to the Senator from New Mexico, but I got the information I am now undertaking to give to the Senate after conferring with as many members of the committee as I could reach within the time I had.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The statement of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], for whose ability I have the greatest admiration, leads me to ask the question why he does not undertake to draw such legislation and submit it to the Senate? I think it is extraordinarily essential that legislation should be passed at the present session of Congress to take care of the situation. We know what happened several years ago when the limits were all off and the farmers raised what crops they pleased. We know what tremendous improvements were made when regulation took place. We ought to have regulation again, and I hope the Senator from New Mexico, who is a member of the committee, will undertake to prepare such legislation. I am sure it can be prepared and passed at this session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kentucky on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will take the remainder of the time on the bill, which is only 10 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I was about to ask the Senator to yield——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator for another question.

Mr. HATCH. No; I will not interrupt the Senator from Kentucky inasmuch as his time is limited.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that if the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is now in a position to write a bill, then it seems to me that they were not well advised when they ordered hearings and the postponement of the framing of such a bill until the regional hearings had taken place. If the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is in a position now to write a bill permanently dealing with this situation, certainly it ought to get to work and do it and not go around over the country holding hearings, if they are unnecessary. But if the committee, as I was told and am still told, unanimously decided to hold hearings, although several members of the committee were not present, I feel, in the position which I occupy, I had a right to expect that the committee was acting in good faith; that it was undertaking to ascertain information necessary to write the bill, and that it would immediately get to work and hold hearings necessary to enable it to obtain the information upon which it could write legislation.

I wish to say that I have shared all along, and I now share, the desire and anxiety to write a bill at the very earliest possible moment that will deal with the subject comprehensively and deal with it in a way that will do justice to all the farmers of the United States with whom it might deal. I am extremely anxious that such legislation shall be enacted in time to deal not only with production but the probable price of the crops produced in 1938. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is the only agency through which the Senate can act in a matter of this kind. We cannot take up legislation here except as it comes from a committee, unless the Senate should decide to discharge the committee, and I am sure that, under the circumstances that now exist, the Senate would not feel justified in discharging the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from the further consideration of this bill in order that the Senate might take it up and try to write it here on the floor of the Senate.

For these reasons, I see no way by which we can proceed except to await the action of the committee in the framing of a bill. I hope that the committee will frame a bill in time for the Senate to deal with it by the middle of October or the first of November; but I think the Senate ought to know and the country ought to know that it is not now contemplated that Congress shall remain in session while the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is attempting to frame a bill dealing with the general agricultural situation.

I think it also should be stated that it is not contemplated that the Congress shall recess until the 15th of October or any other date and come back here and await the action of the Agricultural Committee in the framing of a bill. When we conclude our duties here it is contemplated we shall adjourn. Then, if, in the meantime, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry shall advise the President that they have framed a bill, and are ready for its consideration by the Senate, in his judgment, the President will undoubtedly exercise his right, under the Constitution, to call Congress into extraordinary session. But it seems to me that it would be unwise for Congress to recess until the 15th of October or the 1st of November without knowing whether the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would be ready to report a bill at that time; come back here and wait 6 weeks more with nothing to do while we were still waiting on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That is my view of this situation, and it is a view I have reached after giving consideration to all the statements made by members of the committee and realizing that we cannot act until some action has been taken by the committee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senate has the right, does it not, if it desires to do so, with reference to any committee to instruct them to report a bill by a certain time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly the Senate has a right to control absolutely the procedure of its committees. It has the right to instruct them to report on a certain date or within a certain length of time. The committee, of course, is the agent of the Senate, it is the servant of the Senate's will, and the Senate may instruct the committee to report at any time it sees fit.

Mr. BLACK. If 40 Senators have agreed that such action should be taken by October 15—and there are other Senators who have not been approached who would constitute a majority—then, whatever the Senate decided, it would be the duty of the committee to carry out?

Mr. BARKLEY. The only official action the Senate can take with respect to its committees is not by petition, I will state to the Senator, but by formal action, by motion or resolution adopted by the Senate instructing its committees to report by a certain date.

Of course, I know nothing about this petition. I had not seen it until I heard it read from the desk. The Senator from Alabama advised me that it was being circulated, and I advised him that I would not sign the petition under the circumstances that exist here; I did not think I ought to sign it in the position that I happen to occupy at this time, because I felt that, in view of the action of the committee, we ought at least, to assume that a majority of the committee can control its actions.

If any member of the committee is obstreperous or is trying to pull back upon the backing strap instead of pulling forward on the collar, a majority of the committee have the power to control its action at any time. That is the way I feel; and if the committee could not do that, I did not wish to assume the responsibility of telling the committee what it ought to do, although I express the earnest hope that it will bring back a bill in time for the President to call the Congress into extraordinary session by the 1st of November or the middle of October, if it then has a bill ready for us to consider.

Mr. BLACK. The question I asked was that, irrespective of what plans had been made for hearings, if a majority of the Senate wishes to pass a farm bill, and wishes to have it reported by October 15, the majority has a right, does it not, to instruct the committee to make a report and to decline to adjourn until it does?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, a majority cannot only instruct the committee to report by that date but it can decline either to adjourn or recess and can stay here. A majority of the Senate can do any of those things. But I simply wanted to say, insofar as I am concerned, holding some position of responsibility here by reason of the favor of my colleagues, that I felt it was in frankness due the Senate to say that it is not contemplated now, unless the Senate decides itself to take such action, to take a recess instead of taking an adjournment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in reply to some questions directed to me by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] concerning the drafting of farm legislation, I may say that I think the proposed farm legislation is in good hands. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] have both worked on the problem and have drawn a bill which may or may not meet the situation. I myself have not as yet studied it, but I know that under their leadership and the careful thought which will be given the bill by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, there is no reason why that committee may not report a satisfactory bill at such time as I hope will not be too late for action this year.

I do not object to the statements made by our leader the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] regarding the holding of hearings which have already been ordered. As I said a moment ago, a grave question of policy concerning farm legislation is involved. Many Senators have one view, and many have another. The all-important question to determine is the type and character of farm legislation to be enacted. When the question of policy is determined, then I believe the details can be worked out. If it would enable the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to determine that policy by conducting reasonable hearings, so that the committee could be back here in October with a well-rounded-out bill, that would meet my approval, and I would have no objection to that procedure.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I may state to the Senator that he knows it is impossible in that length of time to cover the ground sufficiently and bring back a bill which would justify the respect and support of this body. He knows that; so what is the use, under whip and spur, to do a thing that requires ample time, when a bill can be brought back to apply to the entire crop of 1938? It is said that some wheat will be planted. The Soil Erosion Act offered a bonus for the land that was left unplanted. The wheat growers chose to risk the price of wheat rather than the Government subsidy, and that settled the big wheat crop. We can take care of that situation for what may be unseeded in 1938.

As to anybody pulling back or "gee-hawing", I want the farmers to be treated without the dirty hand of politics being involved. That is what I want. I want the farmers to get the benefits which shall come to them from mature thought and a statesmanlike solution of the farm problem, and not from what we can do to fool somebody to vote for it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I may merely observe that I sincerely hope the matter of farm legislation may receive mature and statesmanlike consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not know, when I interrupted the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] a while ago to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question, that a subcommittee had already been appointed. As I understand, a subcommittee, composed of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], has been appointed and is now at work on a bill. If that is the case, I feel encouraged, knowing those Senators as I do. I hope they will make progress and that we may soon have a measure before us, because I think this is probably more important than is any other matter that has been before the Congress during the present session.

Mr. HATCH. I understand that such a subcommittee has been appointed. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], is chairman of the subcommittee. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. McGILL] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] are members of the subcommittee. They plan to work with a like committee from the House of Representatives. That is merely what I rose to say—that, in my opinion, the contemplated legislation is in good hands and can be worked out satisfactorily.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am one of the Senators who signed the petition presented by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. I desire to cooperate with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] in returning to consideration of the pending housing bill, but I want first to make a brief statement of the reasons why I signed the petition.

It seems perfectly clear to me that unless the Congress takes up the consideration of legislation embodying a program for the control of agricultural surpluses in time to be effective for the 1938 crops, we shall be responsible for having brought about disaster not only to the agricultural producers of the country, but also to the rest of the people as well. Therefore, I signed the petition because I wanted to join with other Senators in giving expression to my apprehension as to the situation that might be created if agricultural legislation should be postponed for consideration until the regular session of Congress, which will convene in January next.

Every Senator is aware that important legislation of that kind cannot be passed in the twinkling of an eye after Congress convenes. It will take a considerable period of time, no matter how well prepared the committee may be to present its bill, before it can pass the House of Representatives and the Senate and become a law. To postpone enactment of farm legislation until the January session is, in my opinion, to court a debacle in agricultural commodity prices in 1938. Believing as I do that the recovery of agricultural commodity prices and the increased buying power of the farmer has had a major and important bearing upon the partial economic recovery which has occurred, I wanted to express my conviction, as an individual Senator, that action should be had upon this important piece of legislation before the regular session of Congress in January.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think any criticism is to be attached to Senators who signed the petition. For reasons which I thought were applicable to myself, I did not feel disposed to sign it. I imagine that Senators signed it more as an expression of a hope than anything else, and with the expectation that it might be helpful to the committee in undertaking to understand the feeling in the Senate as to the necessity for prompt action. I have no doubt that no Senator signed it with the intention of undertaking to build a fire under the committee for the purpose of hastening legislation or doing anything prematurely, but that it would be valuable as an expression of the views of the Members of the Senate on that subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not understand from any remarks made by the Senator from Kentucky that he intended to criticize any Senator who signed the petition, but I wanted to place myself upon record as being in favor of action upon this important proposed legislation before the next regular session of Congress, for I am as certain as that I am standing here speaking to the Senate at this moment that if it is postponed to the regular session it will be ineffective in relation to the great part of the 1938 crop. If that eventuality occurs there will be, in my judgment, a disastrous situation created for the farmers and for the rest of the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this petition was presented to me, and I did not sign it. I felt that those who make the program here would formulate the program in any event, regardless of the views of those who might indicate their views in this petition.

I understand, however, that the basic principle upon which farm legislation is to rest is that of limiting and controlling production. Aside from the general question as to whether or not we should do that, I desire to ask those who have formulated this petition whether they propose, by limiting the production of the American farmer and decreasing his acreage, to continue to import into this country on a continuously enlarged scale the farm products of the cheap-labor countries.

To me it seems to be perfectly suicidal to be driving two teams in opposite directions upon the same road. A collision is inevitable. Senators are now talking about limiting production and decreasing acreage, and yet they are extending as rapidly as possible the reciprocal trade agreements, which have for their purpose and objective importing into this country the cheap agricultural products of other nations.

If we are going to work out a program of reduction, let us not import the products of other countries where labor is paid about one-third or one-fourth of the amount the American farmer has to pay for labor. There is only one reason for reducing acreage, and that is because the market will not take the large production. Is there, then, either reason or justice or economic wisdom in turning over a part of that market to foreign production? With reduction certainly should go the doctrine that the American market belongs to the American producer to the full extent of his ability to supply it.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the so-called Tydings substitute for the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] as amended, to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 38, line 7, after the word "created", it is proposed to insert a comma and the following words:

In the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it will be observed that the amendment which I offer does not change a single word or line of the bill as it now stands. It simply places the Housing Authority under the Department of the Interior.

There has been very much talk of late about the consolidation of independent offices and boards. If we are going to pursue that policy, the Housing Authority should be placed under one of the departments. The Department of the Interior has control of the Public Works Administration, and has a Public Works Division. The Public Works Division has a Housing Division which has been functioning for 4 years. It is made up of trained men. They have been engaged in slum-clearance projects; and I cannot see any reason for the creation of another independent agency.

Let me say that the only effect of the amendment I offer would be, first, to make the administrator and the directors responsible to the Secretary of the Interior; that is, they would report to the Secretary of the Interior rather than to the President, which is certainly in line with the President's recommendations for the reorganization of the executive departments. Second, the administrator and the directors would be made subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior; that is, the Secretary would have general oversight of the affairs of the Authority, and would have power to approve its major policies, and to coordinate its functions with those of the executive departments.

In my judgment, the amendment ought to be accepted by those who favor the bill. I favor the bill. I expect to vote for it. Heretofore I have offered no amendments to it. I have voted against every amendment, I believe, that has been submitted, because I thought they would weaken the bill; but I must insist as earnestly as I can that we should not at this time create another independent establishment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am inclined to agree with the Senator; but I desire to ask for information, in case the amendment is adopted, whether additional amendments may not be required in order properly to integrate it and connect it with the rest of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think so. At least, that is not my advice. None has been called to my attention. The adoption of the amendment would not interfere with the appointment of the board by the President; it would not interfere with the proper functioning of the board; but it would make it a board under the Department of the Interior rather than an independent establishment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true also that the adoption of the amendment probably would save the Government a great deal of money, for this reason: Already in the Department of the Interior there is a housing set-up, and already slum-clearance projects have been set up in many of the cities. Those set-ups are already in existence; and it seems to me a great deal of money might be saved to the Government by utilizing the organizations which are already set up rather than setting up additional organizations.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Tennessee is absolutely correct. A housing organization has been set up in every State of the Union. Perhaps there is more than one in some of the States. There is now a housing administration in the Department of the Interior; and it seems to me only logical to conclude that what is proposed in the amendment is the sensible thing to do. Of course it will save money. It seems to be a matter of very little consequence in these days whether we save money or not; but the time may come when we shall wish to save money, and this amendment will save money. It will bring about a more efficient administration of the law. It will start out at once with an experienced organization; and I can see no reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. In line with the query of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], if the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky were adopted, would it not be necessary to make a change, for instance, on page 39, in subsection (d), which now reads:

The board shall determine all matters of policy—

And so forth. Is not the effect of the Senator's amendment really to make the board we are setting up merely a bureau in the Department of the Interior, and certainly not a policy-determining board at all?

Mr. LOGAN. As I understand, the administrator would have general supervision. That is, the Secretary of the Interior would have general supervision over the policies of the board. I suppose the board might determine its policies as provided in the section to which the Senator has referred, but it would be under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior.

It is possible that there are some places in the bill that would have to be changed, but I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that I discussed this matter with some persons from the Interior Department, and I was advised that it would not be necessary to make other changes in the bill at the present time.

Mr. BURKE. If I may say one further thing, it would seem to me that there are two very different ideas, one relating to a bureau under the Department of the Interior, working under the supervision of the Department, with the heads of this special housing authority, who probably would not be entitled to receive the salaries authorized under the act; and the other idea that embodied in the bill as it was introduced, with a somewhat independent board, a policy-making board. I feel we are going to have great difficulty if we try to mix these two ideas into one.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator given any thought to combining the activity provided here with the Federal Housing activity? I make this suggestion because the Federal Housing Authority has operated in every State in the Union. They have had to meet every kind of a condition. They have come directly in contact with private building, and it strikes me that their experience would be of more value in carrying out the proposed law than the P. W. A., which was virtually an employment activity. I believe the Senator would be well advised if he would look into the Federal housing set-up.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me say to the Senator that he is explaining exactly what I have in mind, and what was said, perhaps, before the Senator came into the Chamber by the Senator from Tennessee. It would be my hope and my expectation that when the proposed board, constituting the Housing Authority, should be appointed, it would be a part of the Department of the Interior, and that it would move in and take charge of the Federal Housing Administration as it now exists, and as it exists in the different States, and that it would profit from the experience and the efficiency of the organization which now exists.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Federal Housing Authority, I understand, is under the Department of the Interior.

Mr. LOGAN. The slum-clearance part of the Public Works Administration is under the Department of the Interior, and that is the Federal Housing Administration.

Mr. TYDINGS. But in the work of the P. W. A., which is a branch of the Interior Department, to which the Senator refers——

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. They have been concerned primarily with making grants, and with supervision.

Mr. LOGAN. In slum-clearance projects?

Mr. TYDINGS. In all projects dealing with housing.

Mr. LOGAN. The Federal Housing Administration, the one about which the Senator from Maryland is speaking, of course is separate; but the slum-clearance activity, undertaking to rehabilitate the slums in the cities, is under the Department of the Interior at this time. We may keep on creating bureaus until none of us will know where the jurisdiction is.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator's objective, and he has thought more about it than I have, no doubt; but it strikes me that the Federal Housing Authority could very well have this board as a subordinate part of its activity, rather than the Department of the Interior.

Mr. LOGAN. The Federal Housing Authority, of course, ought to be placed under this board, or some division of it, at some time; but it does not fit in just now. This is a slum-clearance project; it is a low-cost housing project. The Department of the Interior, through its housing division and the Public Works Administration, has been carrying on this work, and has many projects in this country. We are now asked to throw that aside and create a new agency, when we could appoint a Federal Housing Authority, as is provided in the bill, and let it go right on as a bureau of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator perhaps has missed my object.

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wanted to get the board created under the pending bill under the director of the Federal Housing Administration, have all the housing in one place.

Mr. LOGAN. We would then create another independent agency. We try to do too much.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has not followed me.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator means that this board ought to be placed under the Federal Housing Administration, which is an independent agency.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; in other words, have all the housing in one branch.

Mr. LOGAN. That would require still another act, because the Public Works has its housing division. If the Senate at this time should adopt this amendment and place the Federal Housing Authority, or whatever the name may be in the bill, under the Department of the Interior as the responsible head, then I am quite sure that when the reorganization bill was passed the Federal Housing would go to the same place, and we would have it all under one head.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is not the Senator in error in his assumption that the Public Works Administration as a whole, including the housing branch of the Public Works Administration, is now part of the Interior Department? It has nothing whatever to do with the Interior Department except for the fact that Mr. Ickes happens to exercise the dual capacity of being Secretary of the Interior and head of the Interior Department, and at the same time being Administrator of the Public Works Administration.

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Technically there is no connection on earth between the Interior Department and the Public Works Administration. It seems to me that what the Senator is doing now is to take advantage of the dual occupation of Secretary Ickes, and undertaking to put into the Interior Department something that has never been there.

Mr. LOGAN. The Public Works Administration is under the Secretary of the Interior. I am not splitting hairs; I try to be rather realistic about things. This proposal simply places this organization likewise under the Department of the Interior, with the Secretary of the Interior having general supervisory powers over the board that is to be appointed. That is all it does.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to the fact that the Federal Housing is a different kind of institution from what is proposed here, because the Federal Housing depends for its funds to build houses entirely upon the public. It is a private institution.

Mr. LOGAN. It has no appropriation from the Federal Government at all. The only thing the Federal Housing Administration does is to advise, and its notes are discounted through banks; but it makes no grants; it does not have any appropriation. It is supposed to be self-sustaining, and I believe that, with the recent reduction in its force, it is self-sustaining. That is an entirely different organization. It may be that it should be under the same general control, but it is a separate organization all the time. So we have the slum-clearance project under the Public Works Administration.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. A while ago I signed a petition having for its purpose, I believe, a representation to the President that those signing it would favor a special session of the Congress. I have requested the Senators circulating the petition please to strike my name from the petition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Kentucky on the amendment has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. I will take time on the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sorry to be taking the Senator's time.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. The Senator may go right ahead.

Mr. PITTMAN. I feel I made a mistake in signing the petition. I may say that I have expressed to the President personally heretofore my belief that, agricultural legislation not being prepared at this time, it would be better if it were not taken up at this session of the Congress, and that if the President felt like calling a special session of the Congress, I should, of course, be very happy to be here.

I feel now that, it being a constitutional privilege of the President to call a special session of the Congress at such time as he sees fit to do so, it might not be entirely in accord with the proprieties to suggest to him when he should call a special session of the Congress.

Mr. KING. If any.

Mr. PITTMAN. If any. Having stated my view in regard to a special session for farm legislation, I am certain that what I should add by this petition would be little, if anything.

For the reason that I believe that it may be considered as interfering with the constitutional privilege of the President with regard to calling special sessions, I have asked that my name be stricken from the petition.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to interrogate the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator from Kentucky in his last observations indicate that he understands that the authority of the present Secretary of the Interior, as controlling all housing generally being pursued through the country, is to be at an end, and a new body being created under the pending bill will supersede the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LOGAN. As the bill stands, without this amendment, that is exactly what happens—that a new body is created, and I assume it will supersede the body already in existence, and its work will supersede the work that has already been done by the other body.

Mr. LEWIS. Then two bodies would not exist.

Mr. LOGAN. There would be only one body; and I assume that the Housing Division, which has been engaged in slum-clearance projects, would fold up.

Mr. WAGNER. Under the bill there is a provision authorizing the President to bring into this board or any other board all the present housing activities of the Government; so a consolidation may be made by this legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator. That may be done; but the fact still remains that the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, which has been functioning for 4 years, will be completely superseded, its experience need not be considered at all, and the new board is set up as an independent establishment. Under the amendment this board would be placed under one of the departments; and, as I understand it, it has been the policy of the present administration recently to attempt to increase the executive heads, say, to 12, and then to place every agency of government under one of the heads except the quasi-judicial agencies, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission.

If this amendment shall be adopted, it will serve to put the Federal Housing Authority under the Department of the Interior, where it properly belongs.

Mr. LEWIS. If I may be pardoned, I should like to say that my purpose in rising was to protest against a measure which would take out of the hands and out of the control of the Secretary of the Interior this Housing Administration, while at the same time he would be held responsible. If, however, this amendment serves to supersede him completely, and he is therefore released from authority or responsibility, that becomes a different subject. So long as he is held responsible, I must respectfully insist that he ought to be continued in his authority.

Mr. LOGAN. I think he ought to be held responsible; and under the statement made by the Senator from New York perhaps the President might take the Housing Authority out of the Department of the Interior and place it under the supervision of this new board. If that is done by the President, we shall have another independent establishement added to the 100 or more whose number we are trying to reduce. So my point is that this activity ought to be placed in the Department of the Interior, where it can be carried forward as it has been, under men of experience who have been previously trained in this work.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is it true that at the present time we have 35 Federal agencies dealing in some degree with housing?

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot answer the question. If the Senator says that is true I shall not try to deny it, because I do not know.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that I can see no occasion to take up very much time. Those who have any suggestions or arguments to make, of course, should make them. I have said all I know on this particular subject. I wish to say that when we are ready to take a vote I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, it seems to me that the argument of the able and distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] proceeds upon a fundamentally fallacious assumption of fact. He assumes that the present housing division of the Public Works Administration is a bureau in the Department of the Interior. That is not the fact. The Public Works Administration itself is at present and always has been an independent agency; and the only connection it has or ever has had with the Department of the Interior is that the Honorable Harold L. Ickes as an individual happens to be the Secretary of the Interior in the President's Cabinet, and at the same time happens to be the Public Works Administrator, and also the fact that the Public Works Administration has been housed in the building of the Department of the Interior. So it is not a question of consolidating this new agency which is being set up with an agency already existing in the Department of the Interior. It is a question of putting an agency set up for a definite purpose, under a definite act, into the Department of the Interior, where no housing activity ever has been heretofore. In other words, it is extending the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior to a degree which has never as yet been contemplated by law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Missouri is absolutely correct so far as the status of the Public Works Administration is concerned. It is a fact, however, that by reason of that combination of duties imposed on the Secretary of the Interior there has been accumulated a very large experience in housing projects and in constructing buildings of the very type contemplated by the bill, and there has been built up a very efficient corps of personnel familiar therewith, which I suppose could be utilized by the Secretary in immediately inaugurating the work under this bill, whereas an independent agency would have to start from the ground up and build up its personnel.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, let me say that my experience with the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration has been that their activities and their conception of the whole housing problem has been completely at variance with, not to say in bitter opposition to, the theory of this bill. I have never talked to an official of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration who did not speak directly or indirectly in opposition to the general theory of this bill. While I am on my feet, Mr. President, let me say further that some localities and some sections have had an extremely unfortunate experience with the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, which makes some of us reluctant to turn this new machinery over to that agency.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] yesterday said that there are no slums in the State of Washington. My own observation when I was last in Washington did not lead me to believe that that was entirely a correct statement. But, be that as it may, as representing in part the State of Missouri, I am not able to make that boast. Unfortunately, we have some slums in some of our cities in Missouri, and I am sorry to say we are as much in need of relief as is the State of New York, the State of Pennsylvania, or the State of Illinois. I should like to see the same slum-clearance relief applied to those sections; but under the policy of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration some sections of the country were excluded from that relief.

We had a slum-clearance project in St. Louis, as meritorious and needy a one, I assume, as there was in the United States of America; at least, so the officials connected with it told me. The slum-clearance project was worked out, without the slightest suggestion of political influence or any mercenary motives, by a committee that had been in existence for a number of years, headed by Bishop Scarlett, the Episcopal Bishop of the State of Missouri, and on which committee were some of the best technical experts of the Middle West.

Under encouragement from the Public Works Administration that project was proceeding, and options had been secured on 98 percent of the land and buildings involved, without any suggestion by the Public Works Administration or anyone else of any improper profit being involved in the matter. Then, without notice to the persons who had been working on the project for months, an arbitrary deadline was set up of which they were not apprised until afterward, and they and persons who had been working on other projects in other parts of the country were suddenly informed that they were out.

I personally took up the matter with the highest quarters. I was told that the project was a most meritorious one, but that it had been necessary to set up an arbitrary deadline without informing the persons who were working on the project that it had been set up. I was also informed that if the case which had been appealed from the Louisville project to the Supreme Court of the United States were decided adversely to the Government, money would be available for such meritorious projects as the St. Louis project.

When the Government dismissed the appeal, without taking the trouble to pursue it in the Supreme Court of the United States, I hastened down to see what the prospects of the St. Louis project were, and was informed that the Missouri administrator had diverted the money to other purposes without informing me and others interested.

I am for this bill. I hope the Authority set up in this bill under the terms of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], which has been adopted, will be such as to give us a more fortunate experience in the distribution of these benefits than a good many sections of the country have enjoyed under the Public Works Administration.

Mr. President, I do not reflect upon the honest efforts made by the officials of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration; but, from my experience with them and my observation of how they operate, I repeat that I am convinced that they have been proceeding on an entirely different line and on an entirely different theory of slum clearance than that set up in the bill now before us.

To take the authority and put it in a bureau in the Interior Department to my mind would be to destroy the bill. It may well be, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], that, as I personally believe, the housing activities in the various departments and governmental bureaus should be consolidated under a single head; but it seems to me, inasmuch as this is the first really independent bill directed to the establishment of a housing policy in the United States, that the authority set up in this bill should be the head under which other housing activities should be consolidated. To take this authority and make it a mere bureau like any other bureau in a department would be, it seems to me, to destroy the whole effect of the bill. If there is to be a general regrouping of governmental activities through the Government reorganization bill, that is the time to decide where this activity should go, and not now.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator believe there should be a secretary of housing under whom should be coordinated all the housing activities of the Government?

Mr. CLARK. No; I do not know that I would go so far as that. That is a question on which I would have an open mind entirely. While I have deplored the recurring creation of new commissions, I am not one who believes that all the temporary independent activities of the Government should be made permanent by being consolidated in a permanent department.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does not the argument of the Senator lead to the conclusion that each new agency should be independent unto itself?

Mr. CLARK. Not necessarily; certainly not to the extent of making a Cabinet officer out of the head of each activity. For instance, I think the various purchasing agencies of the Government should be consolidated in one agency, but I would not necessarily say that the head of that agency should be made a Cabinet officer.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What agency or department would be more appropriate to have general supervision of housing than the Department of the Interior, supposedly devoted to the consideration of matters which affect the interior of the United States?

Mr. CLARK. As I understand, all these departments and bureaus are to be taken up, put in a hat, shaken up, and then separated and given new form. I cannot see any particular reason at this time for an effort on the part of one of the departments to reach out and take possession of this proposed activity.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is not the Senator aware that the plan to put them all in a hat and shake them up is a plan which conveys to the President the authority to do the shaking up?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; and I am not in favor of that plan.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator probably, then, would be in favor of a plan by which the Congress in creating an agency should designate the department under which that agency would be supervised?

Mr. CLARK. That would be true if I were necessarily convinced that every governmental agency should be subordinated to the head of a permanent department.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does not the Senator agree that it would promote efficiency to have all the independent agencies correlated under departments having to do with the general subject matters with which the respective agencies deal?

Mr. CLARK. That is another and separate and very large subject for discussion which will undoubtedly be debated at length in the next session of Congress, and which I do not feel either called on or able to discuss in the short time at my disposal today. The theory of the bill is to set up a housing authority to be head of the laboratory on the subject of housing, and to make it a subordinate bureau in the Department of the Interior, to my mind, would destroy the purpose of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is a subject which was given a great deal of thought and consideration by the committee which conducted the hearings and had charge of the preparation and reporting of the bill. The conclusion which the members of the committee reached, and it was a unanimous conclusion, was that the activities proposed to be carried on under the terms of the bill should be carried on by an independent bureau and agency. Furthermore, every sincere advocate of the objectives of the bill that I have contacted in the Senate or outside of the Senate has been opposed to the suggestion contained in the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN.]

Nearly every person who has made a study of Federal activities in the housing field is in general accord with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. For some reason or other, and I am not going to debate it, a great deal of dissatisfaction has been developed over the operations in the housing division of the P. W. A. A great deal of it is due to the fact that they have not entered into the field of slum clearance in the manner desired by those who are most anxious to have the Federal Government make some move in that direction rather than a mere gesture in the field of better housing for families of low incomes. They make a defense of this criticism. There was no Federal law permitting the Federal Government to enter into the realm of Government housing. The P. W. A. had no legislative authority to do what they did. They assumed the power under Executive order, largely based upon the principle that there should be set aside from the emergency funds appropriated by the Congress a certain definite fund for the promotion of employment among the unemployed in the building crafts and this was accomplished by setting up, throughout the country, housing projects.

Furthermore, there was no constitutional authority vested in the P. W. A. or any other Government agency to condemn property and to undertake the removal of slums or obtain land for building houses except by outright purchase. The record which they have made—and I want to be fair about it, because there is some defense to be made—is unfortunately not one that has met with popular approval. So strong is the feeling against this proposed activity being given to the Housing Division of the P. W. A. that really all local housing authorities are opposed to granting the powers set forth in this bill to the P. W. A. They believe it would result in the general disapproval of and disappointment on the part of all existing local housing authorities.

I desire to read here—and this has some bearing upon the amendment offered yesterday by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. May I finish this statement? Then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thought the Senator had come to the end of one statement.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to yield at this point, if the Senator desires.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My attention was directed to the statement which the Senator has just made. Was this matter of coordination with any other bureau or department discussed before the committee?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and practically every witness who appeared before the committee opposed it. I cannot recall a single witness, unless it was a representative of the P. W. A., who did not oppose the transfer of this activity to the W. P. A.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Was the representation which the Senator has just quoted, that practically all of the local authorities would resent placing supervision under the Secretary of the Interior, brought out before the committee?

Mr. WALSH. It was not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator take the position that this new Federal housing authority should be absolutely independent of all other branches of the Government?

Mr. WALSH. I do, at least at the outset; and I particularly agree that it should be done in view of the very excellent amendment offered by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] giving the President complete personal control over the expenditure of the money and the making of contracts and loans by the United States Housing Authority. I think it is very essential that at the outset the President shall take a strong directing hand in this new Federal activity.

I do not wish to divulge any confidences, but I think if all the facts were known—and I have not any authority to quote anyone directly—it would be found that the President himself has been completely satisfied with the housing program of the Federal Government. I cannot vouch for that statement, but I do know that he is deeply and sincerely interested in the slum-clearance aspect of this housing question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think most of us are interested in the slum-clearance phase of the problem and desire to see slum-clearance carried on; but the subject now under discussion under the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] does not go to the merits of the question at all. It goes merely to the question of administrative functioning, and whether or not we should continue to create new administrative bureaus.

Mr. WALSH. I know how the Senator from Wyoming feels about that matter, and I agree with him that as a general principle he is right. The committee would have much preferred to give this authority to some existing agency of the Government; but if adopted the effect of the amendment would be that we shall have the United States housing authority conducting hearings and making decisions and determining policies. Then we shall have the Interior Department passing judgment upon their activities and their agreements and their contracts. Then we shall have the President passing on the same decisions. We shall have three different officials dealing with the subject before anything of a final policy can be settled.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. In the statement just made by the Senator he has outlined exactly the procedure that has been followed by the Public Works Administration. I ask the Senator if he knows of any emergency agency of the Government which has functioned better, and in the case of which the people receive more value from the money expended, than the Public Works Administration in its operation during the past 4 years?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am sorry that I cannot agree with the Senator in that respect. First of all, I am not fully informed. My distinct impression is, however, that there has been a general feeling of disappointment about the housing program of the Housing Division of the P. W. A.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I regret to have to say that, and I admit that I am not fully informed on the facts. Perhaps I ought not to make the statement; but I have the impression that the activities in that direction have been disappointing because their efforts have been in the general housing field. Indeed, if time permitted I could give some evidence of very high prices paid for some of the property on which houses have been built.

The answer the P. W. A. authorities make is, "We had no power to condemn. Therefore, in order to do anything at all, we had to go out and make the best bargains we could and pay these high prices for private property in order to do any building."

Mr. LOGAN. That is true; but the Senator is speaking of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration.

Mr. WALSH. I am.

Mr. LOGAN. I am speaking of the other work, which, after it is originated, goes to the board, then goes to the Secretary of the Interior, and then goes to the President, which is exactly the same course which will be pursued if the amendment I have offered shall be adopted.

Let me say to the Senator, and then I shall have concluded, that I do not know how people elsewhere feel about the Public Works Administration; but in my State, during the 4 years in which it has operated, there has never been a single complaint of any kind against the operations of the Public Works Administration.

Mr. WALSH. My comments were directed entirely to the Housing Division. I agree with the Senator that so far as I have been able to obtain the facts, in the operations between the local authorities and the Public Works Administration, in the allotment of funds, in the development of local projects, the work has been satisfactorily done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Also I desire to suggest that when bonds and other securities were taken from the local authorities by the P. W. A. and then sold to the R. F. C., not only have those bonds and other securities been so carefully taken by the P. W. A. as to bring the Government out whole but the Government really has made a profit of about $10,000,000 on that phase of the transactions.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator for that information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the P. W. A. has done a wonderful work in this country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, perhaps the statement I am now about to make has only an indirect bearing upon the issue here, and has a more direct bearing upon the amendment offered yesterday by the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], but it is illuminating.

The figures I now present represent the cost per room of buildings actually constructed by the P. W. A. in comparison with houses built by private owners in cases in which mortgages have been taken by the R. F. C. or private banks and these mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

In the city of Boston the P. W. A. has spent $1,566 per room on the building projects it has undertaken. In the city of Chicago it has spent $1,746 per room in one project, $1,520 in another, and $1,628 in another. In Binghamton, N. Y., it has spent $1,318 per room; in Omaha, $1,530; in Detroit, $1,623.

Now, mark you, where private capital has built houses for low-income groups, where limited-dividend housing corporations have done the work and the mortgages thereon have been insured by the Federal Housing Administration, the average on 22 projects built or estimated for the past 2 years is $1,147 per room against $1,566 by the P. W. A. in the city of Boston, and $1,746 in the city of Chicago. This represents an increased cost of almost 33⅓ percent for housing through Government funds.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is that exclusive of the land?

Mr. WALSH. No; including the land.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is the difference. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] excluded the value of the land.

Mr. WALSH. But my purpose in presenting these figures at this time was to call attention to the fact that there is some reasonable ground for the criticism that the housing projects in the Housing Division of the P. W. A. have not been as economically conducted and managed as they ought to have been.

Mr. President, I think I have said all I desire to say upon this subject, but I feel very strongly, and I desire to repeat that the sentiment of the earnest friends of this measure, the unanimous sentiment of the members of the committee, the almost unanimous testimony before the committee, all the public sentiment I have been able to get, except in the case of Senators who are interested in not establishing any more units of governmental activity, has been to the effect that this activity could best be done by persons who would make it a real slum-clearance job.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator whether the Public Works Administration has not striven with the rehousing problem primarily—that is, obviously, from its efforts and from its accomplishments—has striven to provide housing at low cost, but having no necessary connection with the removal of slums whatsoever?

Mr. WALSH. That has been the general result of their activities.

Mr. GEORGE. Slum clearance was largely incidental?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and they admit it, and they asserted that because they did not have legal authority they could not do it. They make that defense of their position, which I think is entitled to consideration.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not offering my observation as a criticism; but I have understood that the Public Works Administration was driving at housing at a reasonable cost, or even a low cost, but not necessarily for slum dwellers or people who had previously occupied slums; that that seemed to have been the purpose back of their activities.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts fully that the defense that anyone can make of this program seems to me to rest exclusively upon the basis of slum clearance, and the alleviation and elimination of that type of habitation in our great metropolitan areas, largely, because the Senator may recall that the first day of the debate something was said between the Senator from New York and myself about how slums could exist in rural areas. Strictly speaking, a slum cannot exist in a really rural section, unless we mean within a village or city surrounded by farms. But a slum, in the strict sense, cannot exist on farms, or what we know as rural areas, and I do not believe it does exist.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator. I ask that the table which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Cost per room of buildings actually constructed

	Number of rooms	Building cost	Price per room (building only)	Price per unit (of 4 rooms)
Boston (Public Works Administration in depression years)	3,912	$6,124,751	$1,566	$6,264

Mr. WAGNER. I concur in the conclusion reached by the Senator from Massachusetts. I have had charge of this proposed legislation, and, of course, have been much interested in it. I think every witness who appeared before the committee, except the representative from the housing authority of the Interior Department, testified in favor of an independent board. I was one of the few who drafted the legislation, and we proceeded on the theory of an independent board, because we felt the work could be more effectively done under an independent board. In addition, there is a provision in the bill which authorizes the President to transfer the very bureau about which we are talking to the housing board. So that the authority would exist for the consolidation of all of the housing authorities by the President.

I have not had a chance to reflect upon this proposal because it is presented at the last moment in the consideration of the measure, and frankly I do not think it is fair to me. We are suddenly asked, instead of making this an independent board, to make it a mere bureau under the Secretary of the Interior, so that he would have complete control over all of the activities of the board.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Did the Senator state that in the bill there is a provision authorizing the President to transfer the activities?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. What section?

Mr. WAGNER. On page 40, section (c), it is provided:

> The President may at any time in his discretion transfer to the Authority any right, interest, or title held by any department or agency of the Federal Government in any housing or slum-clearance projects, any assets, contracts, records, libraries, research materials and other property held in connection with any housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, any unexpended balance of funds allocated to such department or agency for the development, administration, or assistance of any housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, and any employees who have been engaged in work connected with housing or slum clearance. The Authority may continue any or all activities undertaken in connection with projects so transferred, subject to the provisions of this act.

That gives the President the authority.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator construe that as giving the President authority to transfer the authority to some existing executive department if he so desires?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it does.

Mr. WAGNER. No. But the employees who are now working in the Department of the Interior, conducting housing activities, may be transferred to the authority set up under the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. I thought this language gave to the President the authority to transfer, under the language on line 20, "any right, interest, or title held by any department * * * in any housing project", the title to the land.

Mr. WAGNER. That is not the provision. I refer to page 41, line 3, "and any employees who have been engaged in work connected with housing or slum clearance."

Mr. BYRNES. It gives him the authority to transfer the title, or any employees?

Mr. WAGNER. He may transfer any employees. I have no criticism to make of the Secretary of the Interior, of course. But we have been discussing this bill since early winter, when I first introduced it, until the present time. Hearings were held before the committee, and no suggestion was presented to me until late yesterday that there was to be any supervision by the Interior Department.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. On page 63, section 20, subsection (b), I note this provision:

> That any unallocated funds—

Mr. WAGNER. That is to be stricken out.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator will have it stricken out.

Mr. WAGNER. I made the statement on the floor a day or so ago I would move to strike it out, and I have the amendment on my desk.

Mr. CONNALLY. I congratulate the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. Would the Senator say that the construction of the language on page 40 to which he called attention would give the President the power to transfer from any existing department the title to any lands in any projects held by any existing department to the authority created by the pending bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and, in addition, the employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. And unexpended balances.

Mr. WAGNER. In connection with the project, that means, of course.

Mr. BYRNES. Any projects, title to which is held by the Department of the Interior or any other department, can be transferred to the authority?

Mr. WAGNER. If the President deems it wise.

Mr. BYRNES. No project authorized under this bill could be transferred to the Department of the Interior, however.

Mr. WAGNER. No; but in connection with this whole subject matter, as to what department the board ought to be under, the Senator from Maryland thought it ought to be under the Federal Housing Administration. I am sure that the whole matter is going to be considered when the reorganization bill comes before us. Of course the board will then be put under some department of the Government. I do not know what the Senate will decide to be the proper department under which the board should act. But that will be the time to act upon that question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] were altered so as to provide that this general supervision by the Secretary of the Interior should be confined to what has been known as the housekeeping functions, would there be any serious objection to that?

Mr. WAGNER. Just what does the Senator from Wyoming mean by that?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator will recall that when this matter was under discussion a few days ago I drew attention to the fact that the bill which is now under consideration by the Special Committee on Reorganization carries a provision authorizing the President to consolidate, under the various departments and agencies, these executive functions, such as the preparation of estimates of appropriation, the maintenance of personnel, records of procurement of material, supplies and equipment, the accounting for public funds, the rental of quarters, and related matters.

Mr. WAGNER. Matters related to what?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Matters related to the specific matters recited before—the so-called administrative housekeeping functions.

Mr. WAGNER. I suppose there is a great deal in what the Senator says, but let me ask the Senator from Wyoming, who is so much interested in the whole reorganization program and who knows a good deal about it, whether the logical time to do that is not when the committee comes forward with its reorganization bill, and in that bill the committee will either designate the department or give the power to the President to put this particular board into any department that the committee at the time shall deem advisable?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am disposed to go along with the Senator from New York on this matter as much as possible, but I do have the feeling that when Congress is studying the problem of coordinating the various activities of the Government it is an illogical thing at the same time to be creating independent agencies, when necessarily the creation of these independent agencies carries with it the appointment of additional personnel and the duplication of effort.

Mr. WAGNER. There will not be any additional personnel, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There could not help but be additional personnel.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not see that at all, because the employees engaged in housing activities and slum-clearance activities may be transferred. I do not want to be obstinate about this at all, except to say that it may be that later on the Reorganization Committee or the President may decide that this board ought to go into another department. Are we in a position now to determine what department this particular board ought to go to under the reorganization program?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think that the Department of the Interior is very well situated for that work.

Mr. WAGNER. Probably it would be chosen.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Without regard to the personality of the one who happens to be directing it.

Mr. WAGNER. I have the highest regard for the ability and integrity of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to trespass upon the Senator's time.

Mr. WAGNER. I have concluded.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In order that the matter may be clearly before the Senate, the suggestion which I have made, and upon which I asked an expression of the Senator's opinion, would be as follows. Taking paragraph (d) on page 39 as it now stands, together with the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, and the modification which I have suggested, the three together would read as follows:

(d) The board shall determine all matters of policy, and shall exercise the powers hereinafter granted to the Authority. The Administrator shall be in charge of the management and routine administration of the Authority in the Department of the Interior, and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof, with regard to the executive functions of the Authority, such as the preparation of estimates of appropriation, the maintenance of personnel, records of procurement of material, supplies and equipment, the accounting for public funds, the rental of quarters, and related matters.

I now ask the Senator whether that amendment would be objectionable to him.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask our leader whether he intends to go on with the housing bill tonight?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had hoped today, as I had hoped yesterday, that we might conclude the consideration of the bill before the end of the day, but probably we cannot do so.

In that connection I wish to say that I propose to move for a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow; and I also wish to say that unless we can make more progress in the next week or two than we have made in the last week or so, we shall not be able to adjourn this session of Congress by the 25th of this month or the 1st day of September, and we may look forward to the possibility of night sessions in order that we may get through in the near future. I hope Members of the Senate will cooperate to avoid that; but we have not gone as fast on this bill as we should have gone.

I had contemplated moving at 5:30 today a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow; but I did hope we might pass on the amendment now pending.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask my leader a question. I am under compulsion to leave Washington tonight for a couple of days; and I should very much like to have action on two bills, the omnibus rivers and harbors bill and the omnibus flood-control bill. I think action on them will take only a very few minutes. Every project in the bills has been approved by the Army engineers and passed upon by the Commerce Committee. Various surveys are contained in the bills, which we always permit to be included as a matter of courtesy. If it is not disagreeable to my leader, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, I want to say that it is not disagreeable; but I should like to inquire whether, without further debate, we might vote upon the pending amendment and clear that up, and then take up the two matters referred to by the Senator from New York.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is to be further debate on the amendment, perhaps we cannot have a vote on it tonight.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York what was his request in regard to the bills?

Mr. COPELAND. I first ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 939, being House bill 7051, which is the omnibus rivers and harbors bill, together with the surveys which have been requested by almost every Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am advised that we cannot vote on the pending amendment now. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senator from New York may present his request.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before that is done, Mr. President, I should like to have a copy of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. It is House bill 7051.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Request has been made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] for unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senate may proceed to consider House bill 7051. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just one moment. Before unanimous consent is granted I desire to ask the Senator from New York if an item concerning Memphis and Cairo is included in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Is that for a survey?

Mr. McKELLAR. No. Does the bill apply only to surveys?

Mr. COPELAND. It applies to surveys and to projects which have been approved. It does not apply to any others.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall, the projects at Memphis and Cairo have been approved. They do not appear to be in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. That, Mr. President, is a flood-control matter and is contained in the other bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate consider House bill 7051?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce, on page 3, line 23, after the word "numbered", to strike out "244;" and insert "244," so as to read:

Irvington Harbor, N. Y.; House Document No. 244, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 4, after line 3, to insert the following:

Sandy Hook Bay off Atlantic Highlands, N. J.; House Document No. 292, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 16, to insert:

Indian River Inlet and Bay, Del.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 41, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 19, to insert:

Susquehanna River at Havre de Grace, Md.; House Document No. 322, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from New York what is the total sum authorized by this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Each project is one which is approved by the Army engineers. These are merely authorizations. The total of the authorizations is $48,715,000.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. How many States are affected by the authorizations?

Mr. COPELAND. Forty States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What has been the attitude of the Bureau of the Budget with respect to them?

Mr. COPELAND. These are authorizations. They are not appropriations.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand that, but has the Bureau of the Budget expressed any opinion whatsoever with respect to whether or not the authorizations should be granted?

Mr. COPELAND. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the bill authorize appropriations which will be asked for in the coming deficiency bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Not this year. The Bureau of the Budget has expressed no objection to these projects. We will ask for no money this year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was on page 8, after line 22, to insert:

Clearwater Harbor, Fla.: Experimental dredging to determine if a channel may be maintained by dredging alone, at a cost to the Federal Government not to exceed $15,000, subject to local interests furnishing all necessary rights-of-way and spoil-disposal areas free of cost to the United States and contributing to the cost of the improvement an amount equal to the funds provided by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 6, to insert:

Intracoastal Waterway from Apalachicola Bay to St. Marks River, Fla.; House Document No. 291, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, after the word "Committee", to strike out "Document" and insert "Documents"; and in line 20, after the words "Seventy-fourth", to strike out "Congress;" and insert "Congress, and 44, Seventy-fifth Congress", so as to read:

Mobile Harbor, Ala.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Documents Nos. 69, Seventy-fourth Congress, and 44, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 20, to insert:

Bayous La Loutre, St. Malo, and Yscloskey, La.; House Document No. 275, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 22, to insert:

Bayou Dupre, La.; House Document No. 321, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 2, to insert:

Calcasieu River and Pass, La.; House Document No. 299, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 14, to insert:

Texas City Channel, Tex.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 47, Seventy-fifth Congress;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 5, to insert:

Mississippi River, Minneapolis, Minn.: Extension of the 9-foot channel above St. Anthony's Falls, in accordance with the plan contained in House Document No. 137, Seventy-second Congress, first session, subject to such changes therein as may be found advisable by the Chief of Engineers and the final approval of the plan by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, as necessary to provide adequate terminal facilities for Minneapolis.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 21, to insert:

Racine Harbor, Wis.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 46, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 8, to insert:

Monroe Harbor, Mich.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 45, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 7, to insert:

Sacramento River flood control, California; Senate Commerce Committee Document, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 22, to insert:

Sitka Harbor, Alaska; House Document No. 268, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 7, to insert:

San Juan Harbor, P. R.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 42, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 9, to insert:

Arecibo Harbor, P. R.; Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 43, Seventy-fifth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 15, after the words "Seventy-fifth", to strike out "Congress;" and insert "Congress.", so as to read:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments. If there are no further amendments to be offered, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar 940, the bill H. R. 7646, known as the flood-control bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, pending the request and reserving the right to object——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he let us proceed with the other amendments, and meantime he can look up his amendment, and before we take final action on the bill he will be ready to proceed with it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill as requested by the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 7, to strike out lines 18 to 24, inclusive, all of pages 5 and 6, and lines 1 to 24, inclusive, on page 7, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Chief of Engineers may, in his discretion, modify the project for the control of floods on the Yazoo River, as authorized by Public Act No. 678, approved June 15, 1936 to substitute therefor a combined reservoir floodway and levee plan: Provided, That the total cost thereof does not exceed the present authorization as estimated in House Committee on Flood Control Document No. 1, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session: Provided further, That the modified project shall be subject to the following conditions of local cooperation:

No work shall be undertaken until the States or other qualified agencies have furnished satisfactory assurances that they will—

(a) undertake, without cost to the United States, all alterations of highways made necessary because of the construction of reservoirs and meet all damages because of such highway alterations; and

(b) furnish, without cost to the United States, all lands and easements necessary to the construction of levees and drainage ditches.

SEC. 7. That section 5 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding the words "and tributaries," after the words "Willamette River", in the paragraph entitled "Willamette River."

SEC. 8. That the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, as amended by act of Congress approved April 27, 1937, is hereby further amended to provide that if, in the execution of the project for a reservoir system for the protection of Pittsburgh, it is found that geological and engineering conditions make it impracticable to construct a reservoir to provide protection for the city of Johnstown, Pa., flood protection shall be provided for said city by channel enlargement or other works: Provided, That the total estimated construction cost of the entire project shall not be increased.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just one moment. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to, for the purpose of offering a small amendment on page 10, line 5.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now move to strike out, on page 10, line 5, the words "vicinity of", so as to read:

Mississippi River and tributaries in Memphis and Shelby County, Tenn.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, one moment. What does that amendment do?

Mr. McKELLAR. The tributaries are in Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from New York a question. I think we will all agree that this is an unsatisfactory way to pass an important bill of this sort, and we can do it under the circumstances only because the Senator from New York is compelled to leave the city.

Does this bill carry the provision which was carried in the act of 1936, that in the Ohio River Basin, before cities can obtain any relief in the way of building flood walls or other protective devices, they must make local contributions to the extent of providing the rights-of-way and other things that were provided in that act?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there has been some modification in that respect. I may say to the Senator that we have every assurance from high authority that the matters referred to by the Senator from Kentucky will be taken care of from another fund.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes, I am sure—I have heretofore called his attention to the fact—that there are many cities and towns along the Ohio River which cannot furnish the money with which to buy rights-of-way. In the case of my own home city of Paducah—a city of 40,000 people, which was completely under water for nearly a month, and where the damage was over $25,000,000—neither by increasing taxation nor by increasing their bonded indebtedness can they provide more than $2,000,000, the estimated amount necessary for obtaining the rights-of-way and the property over which a device would be built for their protection. The same situation exists in many other towns along the Ohio Valley which I need not mention.

If that requirement is to be adhered to, it means a denial of protection to those cities in this legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Kentucky I will say that on the first page of House bill 7646, beginning on line 5, under the heading "Ohio River Basin", we find the following:

Levees, floodwalls, and drainage structures: Construction of levees, floodwalls, and drainage structures for the protection of cities and towns in the Ohio River Basin, the projects to be selected by the Chief of Engineers with the approval of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers in House Committee on Flood Control Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, at a cost not to exceed $24,877,000 for construction where is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose: Provided, That the protection for Pittsburgh, Pa., is to be interpreted as applying to the metropolitan district of Pittsburgh: Provided further, That the local corporation required by section 3 is complied with: Provided further, That any funds appropriated for the fiscal year 1938 to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, may be used for plant, material, supervisory, and skilled services necessary in the execution of the projects authorized herein, with relief labor furnished under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937.

Mr. BARKLEY. That still does not take care of the requirement for the donation of the rights-of-way over which these flood walls and other devices are to be constructed.

I appreciate what the Senator has said about securing funds for that purpose from another appropriation; but I am somewhat in the dark about that matter, and I had hoped this bill would not be brought up under conditions which would make it difficult to amend it so as to give some discretion to the President and to the Army engineers in relaxing the requirement in the act of 1936 when they find that localities are unable to comply with the requirement for that contribution.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, that was exactly the reason for the inclusion in the bill by the House of the language I have read; and the amount of $24,877,000 is specified for this particular purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; but there is also a provision reading as follows:

Provided further, That the local cooperation required by section 3 is complied with.

That refers to the act of 1936, which requires local contributions, which in many cases will amount to a prohibitive sum.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as this particular bill is concerned I have no objection, if the Senator from Kentucky desires, to having it lie over for a couple of days until we can satisfy him on this particular item, because really the more urgent bill was House bill 7051, Calendar No. 939, in which no controversial question was involved. I therefore ask unanimous consent that House bill 7646, having been perfected as it has been today, may remain upon the calendar until a full answer can be given to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for another question on that very item in the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill confines these improvements to the Ohio River Basin. At Cairo, Ill., and at Memphis, Tenn., exactly the same situation existed in the late flood that existed in the Ohio River Basin. Why were Cairo and Memphis left out of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. For the reason that the Army engineers had not yet completed their survey and were not as yet prepared to give an estimate.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Army engineers had completed their survey and had made a recommendation favorable as to Memphis, I know, and I believe also as to Cairo. I wonder if the Senator would be willing to accept an amendment about that matter?

Mr. COPELAND. I am willing to have the bill as perfected go back to the calendar, and then on Monday I shall ask to have it taken up.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well; I shall be glad to have the Senator do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from New York is agreed to, and the bill will be restored to the calendar.

PAULINE M'KINNEY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1219) for the relief of Pauline McKinney, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended by sundry acts, including the act of February 15, 1934 (48 Stat. 351), the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to extend the provisions of said acts to Pauline M. Warden (nee Pauline McKinney), of Tulsa, Okla., for personal injuries sustained by her on August 17, 1934, on United States Highway No. 77, near Wayne, Okla., while in the performance of her duties as a nonrelief administrative employee of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration for the State of Oklahoma: Provided, That claim hereunder shall be filed within 6 months after the approval of this act.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An Act for the relief of Pauline M. Warden, nee Pauline McKinney."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before I make a motion for an executive session I should like to say, for the benefit of those present and of the RECORD, that upon the completion of the bill now under consideration it is the program to move to make the court bill the unfinished business, but to lay it aside for the calling of the calendar, which has become quite heavy. I hope Members will cooperate in order that we may dispatch this business as rapidly as possible. Otherwise, we shall be compelled to hold a session on Saturday, and we may have to do so in any event; but certainly it is necessary that we make progress in order to get through.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Oscar Ross Lang to be postmaster at Montgomery, La., in place of L. L. Thompson.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Assistant Surgeon James C. Archer to be passed assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from July 12, 1937.

He also, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably Executive B (75th Cong., 1st sess.), being a convention between the United States of America and Canada on the subject of income taxation, signed at Washington, December 30, 1936, and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 19) thereon.

Mr. GERRY, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of George Edmund Bigge, of Rhode Island, to be a member of the Social Security Board for the remainder of the term expiring August 13, 1941, vice John G. Winant, resigned.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

REGULATION OF WHALING

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive U (75th Cong., 1st sess.), an international agreement for the regulation of whaling signed at London on June 8, 1937, between the Governments of the United States of America, the Union of South Africa, the Argentine Republic, the Commonwealth of Australia, Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State, New Zealand, and Norway, which was read the second time, as follows:

AGREEMENT FOR THE REGULATION OF WHALING

THE Governments of the Union of South Africa, the United States of America, the Argentine Republic, the Commonwealth of Australia, Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State, New Zealand and Norway, desiring to secure the prosperity of the whaling industry and, for that purpose, to maintain the stock of whales, have agreed as follows:—

ARTICLE 1

The contracting Governments will take appropriate measures to ensure the application of the provisions of the present Agreement and the punishment of infractions against the said provisions, and, in particular, will maintain at least one inspector of whaling on each factory ship under their jurisdiction. The inspectors shall be appointed and paid by Governments.

ARTICLE 2

The present Agreement applies to factory ships and whale catchers and to land stations as defined in Article 18 under the jurisdiction of the contracting Governments, and to all waters in which whaling is prosecuted by such factory ships and/or whale catchers.

ARTICLE 3

Prosecutions for infractions against or contraventions of the present Agreement and the regulations made thereunder shall be instituted by the Government or a Department of the Government.

ARTICLE 4

It is forbidden to take or kill Grey Whales and/or Right Whales.

ARTICLE 5

It is forbidden to take or kill any Blue, Fin, Humpback or Sperm whales below the following lengths, viz.:

	Feet
(a) Blue whales	70
(b) Fin whales	55
(c) Humpback whales	35
(d) Sperm whales	35

ARTICLE 6

It is forbidden to take or kill calves, or suckling whales or female whales which are accompanied by calves or suckling whales.

ARTICLE 7

It is forbidden to use a factory ship or a whale catcher attached thereto for the purpose of taking or treating baleen whales in any waters south of 40° South Latitude, except during the period from the 8th day of December to the 7th day of March following, both days inclusive, provided that in the whaling season 1937–38 the period shall extend to the 15th day of March, 1938, inclusive.

ARTICLE 8

It is forbidden to use a land station or a whale catcher attached thereto for the purpose of taking or treating whales in any area or in any waters for more than six months in any period of twelve months, such period of six months to be continuous.

ARTICLE 9

It is forbidden to use a factory ship or a whale catcher attached thereto for the purpose of taking or treating baleen whales in any of the following areas, viz.:

(a) in the Atlantic Ocean north of 40° South Latitude and in the Davis Strait, Baffin Bay and Greenland Sea;

(b) in the Pacific Ocean east of 150° West Longitude between 40° South Latitude and 35° North Latitude;

(c) in the Pacific Ocean west of 150° West Longitude between 40° South Latitude and 20° North Latitude;

(d) in the Indian Ocean north of 40° South Latitude.

ARTICLE 10

Notwithstanding anything contained in this Agreement, any contracting Government may grant to any of its nationals a special permit authorising that national to kill, take and treat whales for purposes of scientific research subject to such restrictions as to number and subject to such other conditions as the contracting Government thinks fit, and the killing, taking and treating of whales in accordance with the terms in force under this article shall be exempt from the operation of this Agreement.

Any contracting Government may at any time revoke a permit granted by it under this article.

ARTICLE 11

The fullest possible use shall be made of all whales taken. Except in the case of whales or parts of whales intended for human food or for feeding animals, the oil shall be extracted by boiling or otherwise from all blubber, meat (except the meat of sperm whales) and bones other than the internal organs, whale bone and flippers, of all whales delivered to the factory ship or land station.

ARTICLE 12

There shall not at any time be taken for delivery to any factory ship or land station a greater number of whales than can be treated efficiently and in accordance with article 11 of the present Agreement by the plant and personnel therein within a period of thirty-six hours from the time of the killing of each whale.

ARTICLE 13

Gunners and crews of factory ships, land stations and whale catchers shall be engaged on terms such that their remuneration shall depend to a considerable extent upon such factors as the species, size and yield of whales taken, and not merely upon the number of the whales taken, and no bonus or other remuneration, calculated by reference to the results of their work, shall be paid to the gunners and crews of whale catchers in respect of any whales the taking of which is forbidden by this Agreement.

ARTICLE 14

With a view to the enforcement of the preceding article, each contracting Government shall obtain, in respect of every whale catcher under its jurisdiction, an account showing the total emolument of each gunner and member of the crew and the manner in which the emolument of each of them is calculated.

ARTICLE 15

Articles 5, 9, 13 and 14 of the present Agreement, in so far as they impose obligations not already in force, shall not until the 1st day of December, 1937, apply to factory ships, land stations or catchers attached thereto which are at present operating or which have already taken practical measures with a view to whaling operations during the period before the said date. In respect of such factory ships, land stations and whale catchers, the Agreement shall in any event come into force on the said date.

ARTICLE 16

The contracting Governments shall obtain with regard to all factory ships and land stations under their jurisdiction records of the number of whales of each species treated at each factory ship or land station and as to the aggregate amounts of oil of each grade and quantities of meal, guano and other products derived from them, together with particulars with respect to each whale treated in the factory ship or land station as to the date and place of taking, the species and sex of the whale, its length and, if it contains a fœtus, the length and sex, if ascertainable, of the fœtus.

ARTICLE 17

The contracting Governments shall, with regard to all whaling operations under their jurisdiction, communicate to the International Bureau for Whaling Statistics at Sandefjord in Norway the statistical information specified in Article 16 of the present Agreement together with any information which may be collected or obtained by them in regard to the calving grounds and migration routes of whales.

In communicating this information the Governments shall specify:—

(a) the name and tonnage of each factory ship;

(b) the number and aggregate tonnage of the whale catchers;

(c) a list of the land stations which were in operation during the period concerned.

ARTICLE 18

In the present Agreement the following expressions have the meanings respectively assigned to them, that is to say:

"factory ship" means a ship in which or on which whales are treated whether wholly or in part;

"whale catcher" means a ship used for the purpose of hunting, taking, towing, holding on to, or scouting for whales;

"land station" means a factory on the land, or in the territorial waters adjacent thereto, in which or at which whales are treated whether wholly or in part;

"baleen whale" means any whale other than a toothed whale;

"blue whale" means any whale known by the name of blue whale, Sibbald's rorqual or sulphur bottom;

"fin whale" means any whale known by the name of common finback, common finner, common rorqual, finback, fin whale, herring whale, razorback, or true fin whale;

"grey whale" means any whale known by the name of grey whale, California grey, devil fish, hard head, mussel digger, grey back, rip sacks;

"humpback whale" means any whale known by the name of bunch, humpback, humpback whale, humpbacked whale, hump whale or hunchbacked whale;

"right whale" means any whale known by the name of Atlantic right whale, Arctic right whale, Biscayan right whale, bowhead, great polar whale, Greenland right whale, Greenland whale, Nordkaper, North Atlantic right whale, North Cape whale, Pacific right whale, pigmy right whale, Southern pigmy right whale or Southern right whale;

"sperm whale" means any whale known by the name of sperm whale, spermacet whale, cachalot or pot whale;

"length" in relation to any whale means the distance measured on the level in a straight line between the tip of the upper jaw and the notch between the flukes of the tail.

ARTICLE 19

The present Agreement shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland as soon as possible. It shall come into force upon the deposit of instruments of ratification by a majority of the signatory Governments, which shall include the Governments of the United Kingdom, Germany and Norway; and for any other Government not included in such majority on the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification.

The Government of the United Kingdom will inform the other Governments of the date on which the Agreement thus comes into force and the date of any ratification received subsequently.

ARTICLE 20

The present Agreement shall come into force provisionally on the 1st day of July, 1937, to the extent to which the signatory Governments are respectively able to enforce it; provided that if any Government within two months of the signature of the Agreement informs the Government of the United Kingdom that it is unwilling to ratify it the provisional application of the Agreement in respect of that Government shall thereupon cease.

The Government of the United Kingdom will communicate the name of any Government which has signified that it is unwilling to ratify the Agreement to the other Governments, any of whom may within one month of such communication withdraw its ratification or accession or signify its unwillingness to ratify as the case may be, and the provisional application of the Agreement in respect of that Government shall thereupon cease. Any such withdrawal or communication shall be notified to the Government of the United Kingdom, by whom it will be transmitted to the other Governments.

ARTICLE 21

The present Agreement shall, subject to the preceding article, remain in force until the 30th day of June, 1938, and thereafter if, before that date, a majority of the contracting Governments, which shall include the Governments of the United Kingdom, Germany and Norway, shall have agreed to extend its duration. In the event of such extension it shall remain in force until the contracting Governments agree to modify it, provided that any contracting Government may, at any time after the 30th day of June, 1938, by giving notice on or before the 1st day of January in any year to the Government of the United Kingdom (who on receipt of such notice shall at once communicate it to the other contracting Governments) withdraw from the Agreement, so that it shall cease to be in force in respect of that Government after the 30th day of June following, and that any other contracting Government may, by giving notice in the like manner within one month of the receipt of such communication, withdraw also from the Agreement, so that it shall cease to be in force respecting it after the same date.

ARTICLE 22

Any Government which has not signed the present Agreement may accede thereto at any time after it has come into force. Accession shall be effected by means of a notification in writing addressed to the Government of the United Kingdom and shall take effect immediately after the date of its receipt.

The Government of the United Kingdom will inform all the Governments which have signed or acceded to the present Agreement of all accessions received and the date of their receipt.

In faith whereof the Undersigned, being duly authorised, have signed the present Agreement.

Done in London the 8th day of June, 1937, in a single copy, which shall remain deposited in the archives of the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, by whom certified copies will be transmitted to all the other contracting Governments.

FINAL ACT

The Conference, having this day signed an Agreement for the Regulation of Whaling, to take immediate effect, desires to add, for the consideration of the Governments represented at the Conference, the following observations:—

2. The Agreement is valid for one year and will, it is hoped, continue in force for future years, unless the Governments, or any of them, decide to the contrary. It is likely, in the opinion of the Conference, to go far towards maintaining the stock of whales, upon which the prosperity of the whaling industry depends.

3. Experience may prove, however, that further measures of conservation are necessary or desirable. The Conference desires, therefore, to suggest that certain further methods of conservation and of preventing wastage of whales should be examined by the Governments concerned without delay, and that the Governments should take the necessary measures by legislation to place themselves in a position to impose such further regulations of whaling as experience may dictate.

4. The Agreement prescribes regulations mainly of general application to whaling from factory ships and land stations alike. The most important of these regulations are those requiring the observance of close seasons, prohibiting the taking of whales of certain species already threatened with extinction, prohibiting the taking of female whales with calves or suckling whales and of whales of different species below size limits prescribed for each species, requiring full commercial use to be made of every part of every whale taken, and limiting the time within which, from the time of catching, whales must be treated in a factory ship or land station as the case may be. The purpose of these regulations is to limit the number of whales killed and to prevent the waste of whale material.

5. Certain provisions of the Agreement, however, affect only pelagic whaling, in particular those provisions which absolutely prohibit pelagic whaling for baleen whales in certain large areas of the sea. This differentiation between whaling prosecuted by means of factory ships and by means of land stations needs explanation. It has been urged that whaling as hitherto prosecuted from some land stations, especially near the equatorial zone, has been wasteful and harmful because the physiological condition of the whales taken was such that their oil yield was low and because whales were taken at these stations when they were about to throw their calves. Against this it may be argued that the raising of the size limits for various species under the Agreement will greatly restrict the catch brought to the land stations, that the land stations, not enjoying the mobility of the factory ships, are already handicapped in the pursuit of whales, and that whatever catch they take is a comparatively insignificant fraction of the total catch. The Conference recommends that the catch of the land stations should be carefully studied and that the Governments should consider, in the light of such study, what further regulations, if any, should be attached to whaling from land stations, either generally or in particular geographical areas. In the view of the Conference, there is a certain risk that the restrictions imposed on pelagic whaling may lead to a development of whaling from land stations, and the Governments should accordingly place themselves in a position to check or regulate such development should it occur.

6. The Conference further recommends that the Governments should put themselves in a position to limit, if it is thought fit, the number of whale catchers that may be employed in connection with any factory ship or land station with a view to further limitation of the destruction of whales.

7. The Governments are also recommended to take powers, if they do not already possess them, to prohibit whaling entirely in any area of the sea either permanently or for a limited period. It is felt that it may be desirable, in the light of experience gained, to close permanently areas which may be proved to be calving areas, or to close from year to year selected areas of the Antarctic Ocean or elsewhere for the purpose of giving to the whales a sanctuary in which they may escape molestation.

8. The Conference also recommends that the Governments should place themselves in a position to regulate the methods of killing whales. Under existing methods of whaling, whales may be fatally injured, but lost owing to defects in the guns or harpoons in use, including the propelling and bursting charges. This involves waste of whales. It is suggested that it may prove desirable so to regulate the methods of taking whales as to ensure that, by the use of suitable explosive charges, or by the use of a harpoon electrically charged, the whale when hit may be speedily killed and wastage thus avoided. Moreover, a regulation of this character may be expected to abate something of the undoubted cruelty of present methods of whaling.

9. The Conference further recommends that the contracting Governments should take steps to prevent this Agreement and any regulations made thereunder from being defeated by the transfer of ships registered in their territories to the Flag of another Government not a party to this Agreement, and suggests that for this purpose it might be provided that the transfer of a factory ship or whale catcher from its national Flag to the Flag of any other country should be permitted only under licence of the Government.

10. The Conference believes that the regulations upon which it has agreed will certainly contribute to the maintenance of the stock of whales and to the prosperity of the whaling industry. Not all the representatives of Governments present at the Conference have been able to sign the Agreement, some of them not being authorised by their Governments in that behalf. It is hoped that all Governments represented will eventually accede to the Agreement. The Conference desires to urge upon the contracting Governments that they should use their utmost endeavours to secure the adhesion of such Powers as are interested in the whaling industry but were not represented at the present Conference. The Conference recognises that the purpose of the present Agreement may be defeated by the development of unregulated whaling by other countries, in which case it would be a matter for consideration whether the present Agreement should be continued in force, or whether the contracting Governments should not agree to modify their regulations to meet the situation thus created, or even to permit their nationals to pursue whaling without regulation, so that they may derive from its pursuit such benefit as may be had before the stock of whales has been reduced to a level at which whaling ceases to be remunerative. For the Conference is convinced that, unless whaling is now strictly regulated, that eventuality cannot be regarded as remote.

11. In conclusion, the Conference desires to urge that a further Conference should be held at a convenient time next year, at which the results of the forthcoming season may be studied and the question of the modification or extension of the present Agreement be considered.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of this treaty.

Back in 1931 there was an international agreement entered into for the conservation and for the restoration of the whale stock in the oceans of the world. That treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States, and proclaimed by the President in 1935. In 1936 Congress passed legislation implementing the treaty.

In June of this year another international conference was held at London for the purpose of modernizing the provisions of the treaty. It is essentially a conservation treaty, and it seeks to conserve and restore the whale stock by various means. It prohibits the killing of certain species of whales in any waters. It provides that the killing of other whales may be engaged in only at particular times and in particular areas of the ocean.

The treaty contains a provision seeking to make certain the utilization to the fullest possible degree of the killed whales. In the old days those engaged in this industry simply extracted the oil, and all the other parts of the whale were wasted. The treaty seeks to prevent excessive killings. So far as the committee is advised, there is no opposition on the part of anyone to the ratification of the treaty, and I think material considerations and sentimental considerations dictate that the Senate should act promptly and favorably on the treaty.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the treaty apply to all whales? I read a magazine article only a few days ago in which it was asserted that a new practice had grown up on the Massachusetts coast of going out to sea and more or less driving in herds of whales onto the beaches, and the only product was a slight oil content of about a pound and a half found in the whale's head.

Mr. WHITE. I think those were blackfish, so-called. Speaking generally, this treaty applies to all species of whales, and, as I said, it prohibits entirely the killing of some species which are specified in the treaty, and limits the size of whales of other species which may be killed.

Mr. CLARK. How many nations have ratified the treaty?

Mr. WHITE. Some 26 nations either signed or adhered to the original treaty. A conference was held only in June of this year. I cannot advise the Senator what nations have ratified, but the expectation of the State Department is that all of the nations which were adherents to the previous convention will give their approval to this one.

Mr. CLARK. That will be sufficient to control the world situation?

Mr. WHITE. To a very large extent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendments, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive U, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, an international agreement for the regulation of whaling, signed at London on June 8, 1937, between the Governments of the United States of America, the Union of South Africa, the Argentine Republic, the Commonwealth of Australia, Germany, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Irish Free State, New Zealand, and Norway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

The clerk will state in order the nominations on the calendar.

ENVOYS EXTRAORDINARY AND MINISTERS PLENIPOTENTIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert Frazer, of Pennsylvania, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to El Salvador.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frederick A. Sterling, of Texas, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Estonia and Latvia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frank P. Corrigan, of Ohio, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Panama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Arthur Bliss Lane, of New York, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Yugoslavia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George D. Hopper, of Kentucky, to be consul general of the United States of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, August 6, 1937, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate August 5 (legislative day of July 22), 1937

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Claude McColloch, of Oregon, to be United States district judge, district of Oregon, vice Hon. John H. McNary, deceased.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

William McClanahan, of Tennessee, to be United States attorney for the western district of Tennessee. (Mr. McClanahan is now serving in this office under an appointment which expired June 13, 1937.)

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Charles W. Miles to be United States marshal for the western district of Tennessee, vice Hon. Bert Money Bates, whose term has expired.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following-named surgeons to be senior surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the dates set opposite their names:

Harry E. Trimble, July 16, 1937.
Mark V. Ziegler, August 2, 1937.
James E. Faris, August 1, 1937.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

The following-named commanders to be captains in the Navy, to rank from the date stated opposite their names:

Monroe Kelly, June 30, 1937.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Bow down Thine ear and hear us, O Lord. Thou art good and ready to forgive and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon Thee. Turn unto us and impart Thy wisdom unto Thy servants; pardon our sins and give grace and tranquillity born of trust. Heavenly Father, life is so real and so full of purpose that we pray Thee to root and ground us in the precious realities of faith and character. Let us be reminded of the divine sovereignty and not forget that eternity has been set in our hearts. O come, Almighty God, speak peace to the nations and dominate the stormy waters; O sit on the water floods and overrule them, we pray Thee. Preserve the health and strength of our President, our Speaker, the Members, and all others associated with this historic Chamber. Through Christ, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1640) entitled "An act for the relief of Harry Bryan and Alda Duffield Mullins, and others", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 191. An act for the relief of Orson Thomas;

S. 449. An act for the relief of the estate of Charles Pratt;

S. 792. An act for the relief of Margaret Larson, a minor;

S. 893. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of Jack Wade, Perry Shilton, Louie Hess, Owen Busch, and William W. McGregor;

S. 972. An act for the relief of Ethel Smith McDaniel;

S. 1401. An act for the relief of Willard Collins;

S. 1453. An act for the relief of Maude P. Gresham and Agnes M. Driscoll; and

S. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution relating to the employment of personnel and expenditures made by the Charles Carroll of Carrollton Bicentenary Commission.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1637) entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. Charles T. Warner", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. LOGAN, Mr. BLACK, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSERVATOR IN BANKRUPTCY

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report (Rept. No. 1442) to accompany House Resolution 300, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

House Resolution 300

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 6963, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

REVISION OF NATIONAL BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. GREENWOOD, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report (No. 1444) to accompany House Resolution 301, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 301

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8046, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; and to repeal section 76 thereof and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

INVESTIGATION OF VARIOUS PRACTICES IN THE INFERIOR COURTS

Mr. DRIVER, by direction of the Committee on Rules, presented the following report (No. 1443) to accompany House Resolution 287, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 287

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to investigate the organization and operation of, and the administration of justice in, the courts of the United States inferior to the Supreme Court; the jurisdiction, both as to territory and subject matter; the procedure; rules of practice; and costs.

The committee shall report to the House during the present Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it may deem advisable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized (1) to sit and act during the present Congress, at such times and places within the United States as it may deem necessary, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned; (2) to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it may deem necessary; (3) to issue subpenas under the signature of the chairman of the committee, or any member designated by him which shall be served by any person designated by such chairman or member; and (4) to administer oaths to the witnesses, respectively, by the chairman or any member of any committee acting hereunder.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—DIPLOMATIC PROPERTY

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a minority report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs on House Joint Resolution 473, to regulate the use of public streets and sidewalks within the District of Columbia adjacent to property owned or occupied by foreign governments for diplomatic purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LARRABEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement from Mr. Patterson, of Baltimore, Md., on the status of correctional education in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

SUGAR BILL OF 1937

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 297.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 297

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 7667, a bill to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House for the remainder of this session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House during the remainder of the session. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to permit the gentleman from New York to submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, when permission is given to a committee to sit during the sessions of the House, does that give any rights to any of the members of that committee on roll calls?

The SPEAKER. Absolutely none.

Mr. FISH. Not even on quorum roll calls?

The SPEAKER. It does not. On all quorum roll calls all Members who desire to be recorded must appear and vote on the roll call.

SUGAR BILL OF 1937

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, No. 297, from the Committee on Rules, will make in order the consideration of the so-called sugar bill. It is an open rule providing for 4 hours of general debate, for amendment and discussion under the 5-minute rule. I am presenting this rule this morning, Mr. Speaker, because of the illness of my colleague, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], whose throat is seriously affected.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to discuss the legislation which has been so ably considered by the Committee on Agriculture. Those who desire information about the bill should direct their questions to the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. I think this is important legislation and is necessary, because the legislation dealing with sugar production and refining expires this year. In order to reach an adjustment between the various interests in this field, continental and insular interests, the committee has worked diligently. I feel sure that the rule will be adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I shall take just enough of the time assigned to this side to say that I am in favor of this rule and of the legislation which it makes in order. The sugar-beet industry of Michigan is supporting this legislation. There is one sugar-beet factory in the district which I represent, and a considerable number of farmers in the district raise sugar beets. I believe this legislation is in their interest as well as in the interest of the public generally and I am, therefore, glad to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to support both the rule and the bill which the rule makes in order. I am particularly pleased to find that finally we have reached the stage where we seem to be doing what we can on behalf of an industry in our own country.

I have objected in times past to quotas being allotted to various countries for sundry kinds of property or goods coming into this country, and I believe I have spoken previously in regard to the treatment of the sugar industry in the United States and the manner in which it has been oppressed to a very large extent by the administration in favor of Cuba. As I understand the measure before us today, and I have not studied it in detail, it will permit a better chance for the sugar refineries being able to take the raw sugar and refining it here.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has referred to the growing of sugar beets in his State. We in Massachusetts and New England, of course, do not raise either the cane or the sugar beet, but we have a refinery in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, not in my district, which employs several hundred hands. I have never understood why other countries should be favored by a quota that would prevent the refining of that sugar in our home section; therefore I want to congratulate the Committee on Agriculture for what they have endeavored to do on behalf of an industry within our own boundaries.

There are a number of refineries scattered throughout the country and I am sure I am voicing the sentiment of the employees of those factories when I say we are heartily in favor of the opportunity this bill will give to show some slight favor for the sugar-refining industry of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA].

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to bill H. R. 7667 because it discriminates against American citizens who reside in Puerto Rico. This bill, which is agricultural in scope, tends to legislate on a purely industrial problem, and in doing so sets up trade barriers against the American Territory of Puerto Rico.

During the second session of the Seventy-third Congress chaos reigned in the sugar-producing industry. Because of this condition which was bringing wreck and ruin to many American producers, emergency legislation was proposed which would control production and thus stabilize the industry. When this legislation was first considered, it was the intention of its sponsors to apply it exclusively to the production of sugar beets and sugarcane, and in no way to include the manufacturing phase of the industry. However, when the bill was finally reported by the Committee on Agriculture it not only discriminated against Puerto Rico and Hawaii insofar as raw cane sugar was concerned but it also set a limitation on the amount of refined sugar which these areas could manufacture.

Mr. Speaker, I opposed that bill for the same reason that I am now opposing bill H. R. 7667. I contended at that time, as I do now, that no legislation should be passed by Congress which discriminates against any American citizen. While my opposition to that bill was unrelenting, I received in defeat some degree of satisfaction by the assurance that that bill (Jones-Costigan Act) was only a temporary measure and that upon the enactment of permanent legislation the discriminations which I complained of would be removed.

We are now considering permanent sugar legislation, and I find that it still has some of the objectionable features which I complained of in the Jones-Costigan measure. I shall oppose this legislation just as strenuously because I cannot and will not sit idly by and see American citizens who reside in Puerto Rico discriminated against as they are in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, on March 2, 1917, the Congress of the United States gave to the people of Puerto Rico American citizenship without any qualification or restriction whatsoever. They were told at that time that they were 100-percent American citizens as long as they upheld the Constitution of the United States, obeyed the laws of our land, and discharged all the duties of American citizenship. Notwithstanding the fact that they have lived up to all the requirements of citizenship, Congress is being asked today, 20 years later, to enact into law a bill which debases the very American citizenship which was given to them so cheerfully and ungrudgingly.

There are two phases to this bill—one agricultural, wherein raw sugar quotas are allotted to the various producing areas in the United States and some foreign countries, and the other industrial, wherein limitations are put upon Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands as to the amount of direct consumption or refined sugar which they can produce.

Puerto Rico has no quarrel whatsoever with the quota which it is given under this bill insofar as raw cane sugar is concerned. As American citizens they are more than willing to assume the same burdens which are being imposed on every other American citizen. It is with respect to direct consumption or refined sugar that the American citizens of Puerto Rico complain. They feel, and justly so, that in being limited as to the amount of direct consumption or refined sugar which they can produce that they are being discriminated against inasmuch as no such restriction is placed upon the American citizens who reside in continental United States. They contend that if no limitation is placed in this bill on the direct consumption or refined sugar manufactured in continental United States, that there should be no restriction placed on the manufacture of direct consumption or refined sugar in Puerto Rico. There can be no doubt but what this unwarranted limitation on the American citizens of Puerto Rico is purely and simply a discrimination against American citizens who reside in that island.

While on this point I wish to quote from a letter sent by the Honorable James Roosevelt to the leaders of the House of Representatives on July 10, 1937, wherein he stated:

> None of the most nationalistic Republican administrations ever acceded to the demands of any group for the erection of trade barriers against the Territories of the United States. It is also important to note that the demand of the cane refiners for a trade barrier against refining operations in the domestic insular areas might prove to be the entering wedge for other groups to seek similar trade barriers against Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, the discriminations in this bill against the American citizens who reside in Puerto Rico are only the beginning of what may follow. There have been strong rumors on Capitol Hill that at the beginning of the next session of Congress the distillers of continental United States will come here to ask for legislation restricting the production of rum, not only in Puerto Rico, but also in Hawaii and the Virgin Islands. Rum, as we all know, is a by-product of raw sugar. If we now restrict the manufacture of direct consumption or refined sugar, the distillers may well feel that they too are entitled to a restriction upon the manufacture of rum. Again, if we set this dangerous precedent, is it not possible that tomorrow a bill controlling the production of tobacco might contain a similar provision restricting Puerto Rico as to the amount of cigars, cigarettes, and smoking tobacco it may manufacture and send to the United States? What if a cattle-control bill were to be introduced in Congress? Would it not be possible, in the face of this dangerous precedent, to again restrict Puerto Rico as to the amount of cheese and other dairy products it may manufacture and ship to the United States?

Mr. Speaker, there can be no question but what this sort of discrimination against American citizens in offshore areas may go on ad infinitum. It is for these reasons that this bill should not pass unless the limitations as to the amount of direct consumption or refined sugar which Puerto Rico may ship into the United States are removed. There is no question about the American citizens of Puerto Rico having discharged all of the duties of citizenship. That being so, why should they be discriminated against?

As far as I know, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States which says that there are two kinds of citizenship—one for continental United States and one for those who reside in the offshore areas. Since there is no distinction in American citizenship, why should the citizens who reside in Puerto Rico be asked to bear greater burdens than the citizens who reside in continental United States?

There can be but one standard of citizenship in this great democracy of ours. If today you debase the American citizenship of those citizens who reside in Puerto Rico you will be setting up a double standard of citizenship, which in the future may again be invoked not only against the American citizens who reside in the island, but also against the American citizens of Puerto Rican extraction who reside in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, there can be no reason whatsoever either economically, politically, or otherwise for discriminating against American citizens who reside in Puerto Rico, and unless I am given assurances that the discriminations which I am complaining of will be removed from the bill I shall oppose not only the bill but also the rule. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this short time in order to call your attention to what I conceive to be a complete misconception in the mind of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA] who has just preceded me in regard to the actual facts and actual results of this piece of legislation.

First of all, the gentleman attempts, due to his conception of this bill, to consider the bill not as an agricultural bill alone, but as having a second part to it, separate from the agricultural phase, to which he referred as the industrial part. May I call attention to the fact that instead of there being discrimination in this bill, the Members of the House, if they will read the objectives and purposes set out at the beginning of the bill, will find that it proposes to promote the welfare of the domestic sugar industry. The producers in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the other States in the Union inhabited by American citizens are all classed as American producers. The American market for sugar is not to be found here in continental United States alone, but is to be found in the refining areas in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

If we are to effect anything in promotion of the general welfare of this great industry vital to our Nation, we must first of all recognize that the market for the sugar producer is the sugar refiner. Do not forget this, because we humans do not consume raw sugar, we consume sugar after it is processed and refined. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I have no sugar producers in my district and I have no refiners in my district, but I yield to no man in my determination not to depart from the fundamental principles which rise in the first instance from the first law of nature—self-preservation.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I cannot yield, my time is too short.

The situation which presents itself to this House is one which involves the adoption of a rule that has for its purpose the protection of a great market to which the producers of raw sugar in the various States and the insular possessions send their products. Under the terms of this bill, which has received most deliberate consideration by a legislative committee of the House, all of the States and insular possessions come in for certain concessions having to do with reductions in their raw-sugar production. We then come to the phase which the gentleman seeks to describe as not being in the interest of the agricultural producer. The gentleman states that we are discriminating against Hawaii because we are merely putting back into the bill the original principle subscribed to by this administration and the legislative branch of the Government in the Jones-Costigan Act, the purpose being not only to provide a continuing good market for the producers but to provide a fair market to which American consumers may go to obtain their supplies. I think that without question under the operation of the Jones-Costigan Act and under this bill American consumers will continue to have a fair market and a low price for that inestimably important household and food commodity known as sugar.

The attempt to bring sectionalism into this bill and the suggestions made by my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York, smack more strongly of discrimination. I grant that our approach to this question is one which is based upon a desperate effort following the great depression to keep the American sugar industry intact in its inseverable present status. To permit other than that would require going back into past conditions which brought the continental American refiners down to below 65 percent of their potential capacity to melt and refine sugar which they now enjoy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FULLER). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 135]

Binderup	Drewry, Va.	Kloeb	Rabaut
Boyer	Eaton	Lambeth	Schneider, Wis.
Buckley, N. Y.	Ellenbogen	Lamneck	Scrugham

Douglas	Johnson, Okla.	Plumley
Doxey	Kennedy, Md.	Quinn

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FULLER). Three hundred and fifty-four Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. GREENWOOD, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, this resolution brings before the House the long-awaited sugar legislation, which has been under consideration by the Committee on Agriculture in one form or another since March 15 of this year.

I am sorry that the controversy over different features of the proposed legislation has engendered so much heat as to lead several proponents of the special interests involved to attack Hawaii on matters not germane to the legislation itself, and even on occasion to attack me personally. I have not attacked any other interest or community, nor do I propose to do so, but I shall later reply to the unjust attacks on Hawaii.

I am sure the Members of the House realize that I have the same responsibility to the district I represent here in Congress and the people living in that district that they themselves have to their respective districts. There would be no justification for my being here unless I were prepared to fight for the rights of my people. Perhaps every Member owes a primary obligation to the Nation as a whole and a secondary one to his own district; or some may feel it is vice versa. But certainly the Members understand that as a Delegate from a Territory, a voteless voice in this great body, I am primarily the spokesman for Hawaii and its people; and I am dependent upon the sense of national obligation of the membership of this House to secure justice for Hawaii.

I have consistently fought for the principle of equal treatment for Hawaii, as an integral and inseparable part of the United States. No other issue is involved. This bill does not provide for that equality of treatment in one of its provisions, that places upon Hawaii a special restriction as to refined sugar, which is not put upon the sugar-producing areas of the mainland. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will propose an amendment that will remove this feature of the bill, and I hope this amendment will be accepted by the House.

The issue transcends the pending legislation. If a constituent part of the United States, over which the American flag flies, in which American industry has its being and American citizens live and earn their livelihood, can be legislated against in favor of another section, simply because it happens to be a Territory and geographically separated from the North American Continent, then indeed are the guaranties of the Constitution denied, the promises of American democracy repudiated, the monopoly of industrial processes maintained, and a policy of colonial exploitation substituted for that of equal justice under law that has been America's proud boast.

No such legislation was proposed to prevent the South from manufacturing its own cotton, nor to restrict the refining of oil in Texas in favor of other long-established oil refineries; nor would this Congress tolerate the proposed legislation if Hawaii were carved out of the mainland instead of being some 2,000 miles offshore. Every American should be thankful that Hawaii does stand in the Pacific, the western outpost of this great Nation, and find in that insularity an occasion for gratitude that Hawaii is under the American flag, and not an excuse to consider its people as something less than Americans, to be treated differently from those who, by choice or accident, live on the mainland.

I have addressed the House before on the historical background of the annexation of Hawaii to the United States; how the people of Hawaii, after a hundred years as an independent nation, gave themselves and their country, a free and a priceless gift, to this Nation; of the implications of the negotiations leading up to annexation; and of the language of the joint resolution which consummated annexation. These implications were in part carried out by the incorporation of Hawaii as a Territory at a time when there were several other Territories on the mainland.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. I would like to have some information on a point about which there has been considerable controversy. What is the scale of wages paid in the sugar refineries of Hawaii as compared with similar plants in the United States proper?

Mr. KING. May I say to the gentleman from California that the details of that subject I expect to take up in the discussion of the bill itself. I am addressing myself in this limited time to the general principles of my stand with respect to Hawaii as a part of the United States.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. KING. For a question; yes.

Mr. HEALEY. The provisions of the wage and hour bill do not apply to Hawaii?

Mr. KING. They do apply to Hawaii, I beg to correct the gentleman. I saw to that; and when the original bill was introduced, leaving out Hawaii, I wrote to the chairman of the committee and had Hawaii included, and the new draft of the bill includes Hawaii in all its provisions. I may also say to the gentleman that the National Labor Relations Act also applies to Hawaii. We have had recently an investigation of a stevedore strike made by an agent of the N. L. R. B.

I will now continue with the general argument I am trying to make.

Since annexation we have shared in all the burdens and responsibilities of American institutions, accepted the obligations of our proud estate as a part of the United States, and enjoyed the benefits that this great country confers upon its people. We have lived up to the letter and the spirit of our contract of annexation. We pay all the taxes and tariffs that Congress levies. The immigration laws, the labor laws, and the coastwise-navigation laws apply with equal effect in Hawaii as on the mainland. We have in the past and continue in the present to take not our part but a disproportionate part in the military service of the United States. In other words, we are a loyal and a patriotic community under the flag.

We have prospered as a part of the United States. We have sold our commodities in the American market as rightfully as do the citizens of Colorado or of Louisiana. We buy in the American market to the same extent as our fellow citizens of all the States. From the profits of our industry we maintain our local governments virtually without subsidy from the Federal Government, and pay into the Federal Treasury sums greatly in excess of those paid by many States. All this I have said before, and only repeat these pertinent facts so the matter may be fresh in the minds of the Members when the amendment that will grant us the right, to which we are entitled, to be treated exactly as any other part of the United States is treated comes up for their action.

We are as a territory governed by Congress to a greater degree than a State. If there be anything in local conditions that do not meet with the approval of Congress, then this body has both the responsibility and the authority to correct such conditions. First-hand testimony of authoritative character from both executive and legislative sources exists that refutes the propaganda of selfish interests and the vague statements and untrue charges of persons who have never been to Hawaii that there are such conditions. But whatever change may be considered to be required cannot serve as a justification for adopting toward Hawaii and its citizens a different, a special law for the control of its economic development.

Existing sugar legislation is an extension of an emergency measure. Its provisions should not be used as a precedent for permanent long-range legislation. Yet it is so used; and in the effort to rationalize a discrimination against Hawaii great stress is laid on the fact that such discrimination does in fact now exist. How much greater is there the need for me to protest, as my predecessor protested the present law, the establishment of another precedent, to be again used to the detriment of Hawaii at some later date, and perhaps against another of our industries.

I ask this body to remember the fundamentals of our democracy, to think back to the time when this very type of colonial exploitation was practiced against America by Great Britain, and to accord Hawaii and the American citizens of that Territory, in equity and fairness, the right that should be open to every American to pursue their economic development within the allotted quota without a restriction that legalizes an existing industrial monopoly. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON].

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in addressing the House at this time is to make a few observations on two speeches delivered here Tuesday.

One was by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] in support of a bill providing for the establishment of five subsidiary national libraries and the other was by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] with reference to the maintenance of American armed forces in China.

The gentleman from Mississippi made a splendid speech, in the course of which he referred to the destruction of great libraries in the past by hostile invasion, civil war, and other causes. He mentioned specifically the damage suffered by the Library of Congress during the War of 1812. But he failed to say anything about who was responsible for that act of vandalism.

Lest we forget, George III sat on the throne of England during the War of 1812. English supremacy over the waters of the world was the issue then. And England, a mere dot on the earth's surface, controls the seas today. George I was the ruler of England from 1714 to 1727; George II from 1727 to 1760; George III from 1760 to 1820, covering the periods of both the American Revolution and the War of 1812; George IV from 1820 to 1830; George V from 1910 to 1936; and now there is sitting on the English throne another George, the Sixth.

The gentleman from New York urged the withdrawal of our armed forces in China, lest it lead us into war. Why restrict ourselves to China? I say we should also withdraw from other countries. Many of our ancestors came to America to get away from warfare, turmoil, and bloodshed. Their descendants should not be catapulted into the very maelstrom of hell they abandoned.

It is reported in the press that Mr. Bernard Baruch is unofficially representing the United States in negotiations for the settlement of the British World War debt, and we are informed that already Lord "Kiljoy" and many others of the titled gentry have dined and wined Mr. Baruch. That is an ancient practice of old Albion, namely, to fill the belly and dull the head, and it is used on all softy representatives of visiting nations, ranging from Ambassadors Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary clear down to unofficial representatives such as was Col. E. M. House.

Mr. Baruch should realize that this country does not want her pound of flesh. England and other countries got theirs from the nations defeated in the World War. America got nothing, unless it was the honor of trying to "make the world safe for democracy."

What America wants is the return of the billions of gold dollars, belonging to her citizens, that she let England have to put her on her feet when she was in dire distress. America needs the money. America should have the money. And by all the rules of decency, the entire debt should be paid.

The merest novice in American political history knows that President Wilson made a disastrous mistake when he went to Europe in the winter and spring of 1918–19 and fell into the hands of European diplomats. He would have been far more powerful had he negotiated from Washington instead of from Versailles. No special representative of this country, official or unofficial, should be sent abroad to deal with defaulting foreign nations. All dealings should be had from here, and every American citizen should know in advance exactly what is going on.

Now, as an old-time bill collector, I believe I am qualified to make a few suggestions that might be of service to our friend Barney. In the first place, I see no great need for so much politeness and diplomacy in trying to collect a bad debt. When it comes to the art of diplomacy, England produces diplomats par excellence.

If England had engaged in a game of African golf and had thrown a snake eye or a boxcar and then refused to settle up, she would have been forever barred from all other respectable crap games. Or, even in the great American game of poker, if England had welshed, she would not have been admitted to future games.

Just a few days ago a member of the New York Stock Exchange was expelled, charged with stock manipulation. Yet England, who has been manipulating and conniving all these years to defraud America of a just debt, is still accepted in polite governmental society.

I say that Barney should have taken along with him as an aide a hard-boiled constable, to seize any loose property in England, such as the royal jewels. Or, better yet, let him call upon Sheriff Peter McGuinness, of Kings County, N. Y., and have him summon a posse comitatus to seize the Queen Mary the next time she docks at Brooklyn. That ship was built with money rightfully belonging to the American people, and although she is now being used as a public carrier, she is designed and intended to be used for war purposes whenever the exigency arises. And the same thing should be done as to the Normandie of France, and the ships of all other dead-beat nations who have run out on their honor debts to America.

Let us not be led astray by English cunning. The dole to be offered us at this time is merely to quiet America's hostility due to England's welshing. America should be paid in full; but she should accept no terms that might possibly lead to a European alliance of any kind. Even should we lose every cent of the money owed us, if by so doing this country will be kept out of the conflicts in Europe, it will have been a splendid investment.

America's slogan should be, "Not one American boy for foreign war trenches." And this notwithstanding the sentiments of the Anglo-aping, knee-breeches, gold-garter, and monocle-wearing American jackasses who flit back and forth between dear old London and uncultured America. All dealings with foreign nations should be brought out into the open. There must be no passing of air between the sheets. Let the American people see and hear all that is transpiring behind the governmental scenes and, as Thomas Jefferson so truly said, "They may safely be trusted to hear everything true and false, and to form a correct judgment between them." [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, it is rather unfortunate that the situation should arise when charges of discrimination are made against any Territory or any State. It is my contention, and I believe the contention of those who are interested in this sugar legislation, that there is no discrimination against Hawaii or Puerto Rico. If there is any discrimination, it is discrimination against the industry in the United States. We produce only about 25 percent of our consumption, and the islanders are trading in the American market. If Hawaii and Puerto Rico were to sell their sugar on the world market, they would receive about $100,000,000 less than they get from the American market. Is that discrimination? Let me give you an illustration of discrimination against American citizens in Hawaii—discrimination on the part of Hawaii, if you please, against American citizens. I refer, gentlemen, to H. R. 1995, introduced, I believe, by the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] where they want a national park in Hawaii. Let me read to you what discrimination really is.

This bill introduced by the Delegate from Hawaii provides in part as follows:

> Provided further, That occupants of homesites in this national park shall reside on the land not less than 6 months in any one year: Provided further, That in construction projects within the area preference shall be given in employment of labor, first, to native Hawaiians.

It does not say citizens of the United States but restricts it to native Hawaiians.

Then further:

> Fishing shall be permitted in such area only by native Hawaiian residents.

Not open to all American citizens but restricts it to native Hawaiians.

And there are other discriminations in that bill. Here they introduce a bill right in the Congress of the United States and they ask for discrimination against American citizens, and then they come here and raise the wail of their voice and say they are discriminated against and then say that they are American citizens. I recognize that, but I do not believe that after all the good things that Uncle Sam has done for Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Cuba that they should come in now asking that we discriminate against ourselves in favor of the islands.

I want at this time to pay tribute to the great chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. [Applause.] I want to pay tribute to the great chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture [Mr. CUMMINGS], on which committee I have the honor to sit. Those two gentlemen used diplomacy and tact in face of one of the fiercest onslaughts on legislation that has been made in the history of this Congress. It is about time that we legislate and that we do not take the dictates of the departments. I think it is about time the Members of this House legislated as they see fit. The thing that happened in bringing out this rule is a disgrace to the American Congress. Those departments practically said, "You will either amend this bill, or you do not get a bill", but, due to the courage and fighting spirit of those two gentlemen I just mentioned, thank God the Rules Committee saw fit to bring this rule to the floor of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] has expired

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, just to get the RECORD clear, in the first place, there are no sugar refineries and probably no sugar beets grown in my district. I am here speaking to you as the representative of Mr. John Q. Public. [Applause.]

I am in favor of this rule because it is a question we have to decide, but, as I have stated before this body on different occasions, and as I desire to make my policy in this legislative body logical, I am here to oppose, when the time comes, our treatment of Hawaii. Our entire foreign trade policy has been one to promote trade and to encourage industry in the most economical way. In the pending bill we have turned around, completely reversed ourselves on our foreign-trade policy. We have started to treat Hawaii worse than foreign nations. We have started a new policy in government, and that is the policy of industrial quotas, something that we have never attempted in the United States. Agricultural quotas, yes, but never before in any bill that I have heard of have we attempted industrial quotas.

In my own State of Ohio, for example, the Frigidaire Corporation a few years ago manufactured more electric refrigerators than all the rest of them put together. Now, suppose we had then established an industrial quota and said, "We are going to freeze the industry here"; it would have almost raised a rebellion in this country. It would have been a throttle on the throat of progress. That is what we are doing here.

They talk about the difference in labor costs in Hawaii and in this country. That will be taken up later, I understand, but if it is true, there is not half the difference between the cost of labor on sugar in the United States and Hawaii as there is between the cost of mining coal in my State and the State of Alabama, yet we do not put industrial quotas on that business. We have not yet, at least. Because of a difference in labor costs, Southern States have taken the textile industry from New England, yet we never tried the vicious experiment of industrial quotas.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot. I am sorry.

There are two manners in which governments have always operated colonies. One is the Roman system of exploitation, making the colonies serve to the profit of the mother country. The other is the policy generally adopted following our American Revolution, of building up the prosperity of colonies along with the prosperity of the mother country. There was some justification for England and Rome and the other ancient exploiting countries to adopt their policy of exploitation, because they conquered their colonies. They were subjected alien enemy races, but in this case of Hawaii we have a people over there who voluntarily came under our flag, just as the people of Ohio came and asked for admission into this Union. Now, we, this great United States, come and treat them far worse than we do the people in any other foreign country except Cuba.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I am sorry. I cannot. In my own State of Ohio there are some sugar refineries—not in my district. In those refineries today they are using Mexican labor. Now, any fool knows that that Mexican labor is not coming in here from the Mexican border unless there is some contract. They are coming here with an arrangement to work in Ohio, take jobs away from our Ohio workers, and we are permitting the refineries to take bread out of the mouths of our fellow citizen in Ohio. Then in their hypocrisy they appeal to us to "protect American labor." It is American dividends that have hired this lobby.

The gentleman a moment ago talked about the steps that we had taken to protect native Hawaiians in their parks. We have done the same thing for the Indians. We have done the same thing for the Eskimos. We have done the same thing in all similar cases.

If we adopt this bill we will reverse our entire history of colonial policy, our conception of justice from our pre-Revolutionary days; we will make our foreign-trade agreement policy a mockery; we will give the Sugar Trust one more opportunity to exploit our people; and we will repay the patriotic support given us by the people of Hawaii with base ingratitude.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

All time has expired.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LANZETTA) there were—ayes 115 and noes 9.

So the resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next after the disposition of the legislative program for the day I may be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject of wage and hour legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

(Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. PHILLIPS, and Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

SUGAR BILL OF 1937

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7667, the sugar bill of 1937, with Mr. BLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, in view of the great interest and demand on the part of those who are directly interested in this matter, I shall make but a brief opening statement and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, when this subject was first broached to me a little more than 2 years ago I was very reluctant to go into it. I have no sugar, either raw or refined, nor the product from which it is made, in the district I represent, nor is there any within hundreds of miles of my home. There are, however, a great many sugar-producing areas stretching halfway around the world that feed their product into the American market. Chaotic conditions came at times in such a way that there would be a runaway market, a glutted market with low prices, to be followed by a shortage and tremendously high prices. At one time in the early twenties sugar reached nearly 25 cents a pound retail.

In fashioning the first bill we undertook to protect the consumer. It worked so well that the price of retail sugar to the consumer during the 2½ or 3 years of its operation has been less than during any 4-year period within a score of years. We required as conditions to the entrance of sugar from the sugar-producing areas offshore that they should maintain a 6 months' reserve supply. We required other conditions as to contracts between the refiners and the growers as to conditions in the areas that have produced a stabilized market. I do not think any Member has heard any complaint on the part of any of the American people within the last 2½ years over the retail price of sugar, because they had had a better deal than during any like period within 25 years at least, and I do not believe that they ever had comparable prices. At the same time in the operation of the law the Secretary has been able to levy such conditions that the growers have gotten a better price for the beets and cane they produce.

To try to be umpire in all of these areas whose interests conflict and who naturally want all they can get of the market has been a most difficult task. I have spent a good deal of time and some of the other members of my committee have spent a good deal more time trying to work out the provisions of what they conceived to be a fair measure.

The bill under consideration establishes practically the quotas that were established under the original act with somewhat similar provisions refined by the lessons which experience always teach us. My primary purpose in helping to shape this legislation has been to see that the consumer was protected as well as to secure better treatment for the producers. I believe the same can be said of the entire committee. We have tried to see that the producer received treatment that would be in his interest and yet not be against the interest of the consumer.

I believe that with all of the differences of opinion that have existed among the various groups as well as to some extent in our committee, we worked out a fair bill, one on which there was almost unity of opinion, after hearing a good deal of evidence, after the subcommittee had done a tremendous amount of work, and after the full committee had gone thoroughly over it—a bill in which there is practically no division of opinion except on one issue, the details of which I hope to discuss at a little later time under the 5-minute rule; and that is a provision having to do with restriction on direct-consumption sugar coming in from Hawaii and Puerto Rico within their quota. There is no appreciable complaint as to the amount of raw sugar which they bring in. Under the terms of the bill we have stipulated that there shall be a limit on the amount of refined sugar which may be brought in from those islands within their quota. That limit has been the highest amount of refined sugar which those islands brought in during any one year prior to the time of the passage of the original act. On this proposition there is much difference of opinion, as you all know, but we shall have a full discussion of that. At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to strike out paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 207. I believe those who are interested in securing actual legislation, if they are wise, will adopt the amendment.

The departments and the administration are very much opposed to any limitation, taking the position that there should be like treatment among all groups of American citizens, and that there should be no discrimination against any group of citizens anywhere under the American flag.

We did make this particular change in the quotas: We increased the quota for the cane-sugar areas. I think they made out a case and are entitled to an increase, and I think the committee has arranged probably a fair basis for that provision.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. How do the quotas compare with existing law, the Jones-Costigan Act?

Mr. JONES. There has been very little change in the quotas, except an increased quota for the cane-sugar areas and a slight adjustment in area to make provision for it, and I think that will be more than cared for by the increased consumption; so there is not any appreciable change in quotas outside of the one I have mentioned.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman has just stated that there was an increase in quotas allowed to the cane-producing areas of the continental United States. It, of course, applies to the States of Louisiana and Florida. There are not separate quotas for each of those States, as I understand it.

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. WILCOX. The two are combined under one quota.

Mr. JONES. That is correct. May I say to the gentleman we have sugar that comes into this country from the Philippines, Hawaii, Guam, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, Cuba, and some South American and other countries. The eastern and western sugar growers, Florida and Louisiana cane growers also produce sugar, and it has been a very difficult task to apportion it by regions. It has seemed very difficult to go into the question of adjusting this legislation as between States, and we did not regard that as practicable. I do state, however, that we made additional provision for the cane areas, because we thought, after going over it, that there was reason for this distinction. I may say to the gentleman I think his State is entitled to an increase.

Mr. WILCOX. I thank the gentleman very much for that statement. The bill makes no effort to establish a formula by which the cane-area quota may be allocated as between the two States?

Mr. JONES. That is correct. The present law makes no effort to do that. It is left to the administrative authorities.

Mr. WILCOX. Can the gentleman inform the House as to what formula will be used in making the allocation?

Mr. JONES. The formula set out in the bill. They take the historic production and consider that in connection with the ability to fill their quotas. They take into consideration the market facilities and several things, which are set out in the bill. All of these we will go into later.

Mr. WILCOX. I do not want to consume too much of the gentleman's time, but may I call attention to the fact that using a historic basis for an allocation would completely prevent the development of an efficient and profitable industry.

Mr. JONES. My time is so taken up that I hope the gentleman will discuss that in his time. I may say, in my judgment, the gentleman's area is entitled to more than the historical basis. Florida should have probably a minimum of, say, 75,000 tons if that much is needed. That is my judgment, but the gentleman will have to convince the administrative authorities. You see Louisiana is also to be considered, and the Department has the delicate task of adjusting all of these matters—a most difficult assignment.

Mr. WILCOX. I wonder if the gentleman would feel like saying at this time he would support Florida in offering an amendment which would obtain a minimum of 75,000 tons?

Mr. JONES. I shall be glad to say as much to the Department. I do not think those things should be put into the bill, though.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that the cane-sugar quota from Puerto Rico has been reduced 34,000 tons?

Mr. JONES. It was not reduced in the quota. It was reduced that much below what they actually used. You understand the excess consumption gave them more than their quota before. There was some slight reduction, however.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not try to go into details, so far as this bill is concerned, but will refer to some of the more important provisions in it.

As has been pointed out by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, there are many sugar-producing countries in the world; but, as I conceive the picture, after 18 years of actual experience in the industry agriculturally, and in the financing, building, and operating plants, and in marketing sugar, there are three primary producing areas in the world, so far as I am concerned. One is the sugar-beet area of Europe. Another is the far eastern sugarcane area, which covers Formosa, Java, Philippine Islands, the Indies along in here [indicating on map], and a small amount in Australia. Another producing area is Cuba, Puerto Rico, the United States continental beet- and cane-sugar districts, and a small amount in South America.

There also enters into the conflict the sugar produced in the Philippine Islands, which moves six or seven thousand miles in order to reach the Pacific coast. Twenty-two hundred miles off the Pacific coast lies Hawaii, an organized Territory, as I understand, and subject to statehood.

This bill provides that there may be imported into this country from Cuba in the form of refined sugar to the United States, according to page 6 of the committee report, 375,000 tons of refined sugar; from Puerto Rico, 126,000 tons; from Hawaii, 29,616 tons; and from the Philippine Islands, which is involved in the Philippine Independence Act, 80,214 tons.

There is one point that may not be covered here which I want to touch on lightly and very briefly. That is the question of marketing. Let us suppose you were sales agent of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association California refinery and there comes into that west coast territory refined sugar produced in Cuba under a non-bone-char process, which means bargain-counter sugar. You have no bargain-counter sugar to hold your trade on the Pacific coast. You can rest assured that insofar as the bargain-counter sugar that flows into that area from Cuba is concerned, you will be driven out of the Pacific coast market. The gallery is full of sugar men who are experienced in the marketing of sugar, and I defy them to pass the word along to you to refute that statement before this debate expires.

I speak as one who has sat there at the telephone day in and day out, month in and month out, and year in and year out, handling the long-distance telephone calls just as fast as they could come in in a fast-moving commodity market, slow markets, and what we call a runaway market. I know what it means to have competitive goods to offer in a competitive market. That question is involved in this bill and I cannot cover it in detail in 10 minutes. Other people have just as much right to talk on the bill as I have. It is something you will have to figure out as best you can as the debate progresses.

Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this bill. If the President vetoes the bill by reason of our not eliminating subsections (a) and (b) of section 207, page 14 of the bill, then I will have to go home and say to the sugar-beet growers of my district: "Well, I stood for the bill, but you have not any legislation." So as a Representative from my district I am on the spot.

I think my district grows beets for more sugar-beet mills than any other district in the United States, so far as I have been able to learn—not more beets, not more sugar, but for more sugar-beet mills. So I am interested in this bill. If we pass the bill and the President does veto it and the question comes back to the House and Senate in time to override the veto, if we override the veto before adjournment, then we will have legislation. Otherwise, the beet grower loses by reason of our poor judgment and legislative folly. So those things enter into it.

At the meeting that was held this morning I addressed a question to Senator ADAMS, who has been in very close touch with the President on this matter. He informed me the President specifically objects to subsections (a) and (b) of section 207 on page 14 of the bill. So, in a way, that is the situation. I cannot figure out to save my life how the Committee on Agriculture has had enough patience to deal with this question as it has during the months the bill has been under consideration and bring to the floor a bill as good as this.

I wish all parties were harmonized on the situation, but they are not, and that is the situation which we face. There is one redeeming feature, as I see it, and I wish my friend the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] could see it this way. So far as I know, for the first time in American sugar history the refiners of the United States are down here asking for protection for the sugar industry. To my certain knowledge for 18 years I have battled with them across the table in an attempt to provide protection for the beet-sugar and the cane-sugar industry of continental United States, including Puerto Rico and Hawaii, and they were always standing for free trade on sugar. If you were a refiner you would very well understand why they do this, because as a refiner you want raw sugar, sugar in process, sugar in the bag, sugar in transit, and sugar in the warehouses at as low a cost as you can get it.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Is not the reason the refiners are down here in agreement with the producers of sugar that they want to hitchhike on the producers' bill? They are trying to get a free ride out of a bill which was originally designed to protect the producer.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The answer to the gentleman's question is that you have in this bill a refined-sugar question, not a question that has to do with imported raw sugars. You are dealing with a refined-sugar question in subsections (a) and (b) of section 207, which have to do with refined sugar. These paragraphs have to do with 29,616 tons of refined sugar from Hawaii and 126,000 tons from Puerto Rico. Naturally, the refiners are interested in that. The refiners employ American labor, and so do the beet people. Therefore, I hope we will get out of this situation a marriage forever and eternally between the seacoast refiners, the beet industry of this country, and the other producers under the American flag to the end that hereafter when a sugar bill comes up here and there is a real tariff fight on the floor, the cane refiners will come here and plead for the protection of the raw product as they now plead for the protection of refined sugar.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me finish this thought, and then I will yield.

If I could convince my friend the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] that this would be the result of this measure, namely, that the refiners and the producers of Puerto Rico and Hawaii, and the beet growers, will forever after be tied up together in fighting for the protection of domestic sugar, he might see that this kind of a combination would be worth more to him than what he is asking here. However, there is no way I can guarantee that the refiners would do that, and neither can you.

I now yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. In reference to subsections (a) and (b) of section 207, to which the gentleman has referred, I understand an amendment is to be offered striking these subsections from the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is my understanding that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], will offer such an amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Would the gentleman care to express his attitude toward an amendment of this kind?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Here is the situation: Suppose the refiners' friends on the floor kill the bill in the event these sections are stricken out. Who can answer on that? I certainly could not. My beet people want sugar legislation. I think there are some people in the western territory who want sugar legislation.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield for a question.

Mr. DONDERO. How do the amounts set forth in subsections (a) and (b) of section 207 compare with previous quotas from Hawaii and Puerto Rico? Are they more or less?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The difference is so small that I do not think I should take the time to answer the question. The question will be answered in debate, anyway.

Mr. DONDERO. Are the amounts larger or smaller than previous quotas?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think a little bit less.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is the gentleman for the Jones amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may vote for the Jones amendment, but I am not sure I shall. Let us hear the debate and decide on presentations made. I may vote against the Jones amendment. This is a complicated situation, as the Members of this committee will testify. It is my understanding from beet growers they are not particularly concerned whether these sections go out of the bill or remain in. If by leaving them in the President will veto, why should we leave them there if the beet people are indifferent about the matter.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. If the Jones amendment carries, there are still a great many other benefits in the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. A great many benefits, in my opinion. I expect to support the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I wish, first, to make my position perfectly clear regarding this controversy over refined sugar. I speak for the beet growers. I think possibly I am not misstating when I say I come as near speaking for them as any man in the West. I have lived there, owned farms there, and grown beets there for 30 years.

This controversy does not make one penny's difference to the growers of beets. We shall receive the same price for our beets during the life of this law whether the refining quotas of Hawaii and Puerto Rico are increased or not. The only brief I have for the refiners is not for the refiners as such but I think that any good American citizen has a brief for every man who has a job in the United States.

What is the real issue? Hawaii and Puerto Rico are allowed to produce just as much sugar under the refining quota in this bill as they were under the Jones-Costigan Act, and that is as much as they ever produced before. In 1933 we had a stabilization agreement. For 3 months after Congress adjourned I sat with our committee. We agreed on a stabilization agreement, because the sugar industry of the world was absolutely ruined. Raw sugar sold in New York for 60 cents. For the year 1933 it sold at an average of 80 cents, which meant absolute ruin for everybody in the industry.

Some of the people who are representing Hawaii and Puerto Rico tell you they do not want a sugar bill. Do you know what I think about that? I think it is a good thing the Lord is not enforcing one particular commandment today as he did in the days of Ananias. Do you get the point? Without sugar legislation the sugar industry of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the United States is absolutely ruined, because we go on the world market with a 90-percent protection tariff, and we had $2 against Cuba and $2.50 against the world in 1933.

Now, we just cannot grow sugar in competition with cheap colored labor in the Tropics, and any man who knows anything about sugar knows it, any more than you people in the East can produce shoes and steel and other manufactured products without tariff protection.

As I have said, it does not make a particle of difference to the beet growers, and it will not hurt any industry in Hawaii, and the question arises, Why do they want to refine this sugar? This is just as plain as the nose on your face. If you will examine the Government report which I have here and refer to the tables in that report, you will find that the average wages for labor in the sugar industry of Hawaii is $10.80 a week. There is not any getting around that, because this is a Government report and I will give you the number of it. They want to refine the sugar there in order to make more money.

Now, what is the condition of the sugar industry in the United States and in Hawaii? In Hawaii, under the Jones-Costigan Act, there were 39 contracts. In the United States there 75,000 contracts.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I cannot yield now.

Those 39 contracts in Hawaii received payments of $13,332,862. The lowest payment in all of Hawaii was $39,104, while the largest was $1,022,038. There are five companies in Hawaii with the same secretary and the same treasurer, one man is president of four and vice president of the fifth, and these five companies received $3,534,917 of benefits under that provision.

The industry in the two countries is absolutely different. I am going to offer for introduction in the RECORD a graph that shows that six families own and control every industry in the Island of Hawaii. They own the railroads, they own the banks, they own the sugar plantations, and when the bill was passed granting provisional independence to the Philippine Islands a provision was inserted whereby Hawaii was allowed to bring in all the labor they wanted from the Philippine Islands. The Delegate from Hawaii has introduced a bill to repeal this provision, but they did not repeal it until they had obtained all the advantages under it. There was a strike there last spring, but it did not particularly interfere with them, because they bring their labor from the Philippine Islands, and if they work 3 years they get their fare back, but they must work 1 year for the first man and then they can work where they please the next 2 years if the lords of Hawaii say they can do so.

As I have said, the conditions are absolutely different. They have told us about the labor conditions in Colorado. They say we employ labor from old Mexico.

On May 4 I sent a wire to the chairman of the Colorado Beet Growers Association, who is also a director of the national association, and I am going to read it to you so you will know I asked for the facts:

A. L. LITTLE,
Capitol Building, Denver, Colo.:
How many citizens of Old Mexico or any other foreign country are employed in our beet fields? Ask Governor Ammons to sign wire with you. Answer immediately.

FRED CUMMINGS, M. C.

Here is the reply under date of the 7th:

There are no exact data of citizenship of beet-field workers in our territories available. Best estimate of those most familiar is that 700 contracts will be worked in Colorado district, Great Western territory, by families of Mexican citizenship. This is one-eighth of total contracts. These family heads are all of long and legal residence in United States and many have children born to citizenship here. There are no nationals of other foreign countries engaged here. Estimate 2,100 contracts worked by United States citizens Spanish speaking and 2,800 by United States citizens of white race.

GOV. TELLER AMMONS,
Senator A. L. LITTEL,
President of Beet Growers' Association.

Now, please remember, there were only 39 contracts in all of Hawaii. The average farm growing beets in the United States is around 16 acres, while the average in Utah is about 6 acres. So that in the United States it is completely an American institution.

I do not want to work a hardship against anyone in the United States or anyone in the sugar business, but when you talk about people being discriminated against you must remember that Hawaii and Puerto Rico are allowed to produce all the sugar they can consume, and they are allowed to produce and sell on the world market as much as they please, but the amount they can ship to the United States is limited and the amount they can ship of refined sugar is limited, and it should be limited.

The beet growers, the last year before this limitation, produced 1,770,000 tons of sugar, and we submitted to a quota of 1,500,000 tons of sugar. Our sugar is a completed transaction when it leaves the factory. The growers haul the beets to the factory, and it comes out as refined sugar, and if there is anybody discriminated against, I would call your attention to the situation of Florida and Louisiana. Florida is not allowed to produce as much sugar as they consume, while Louisiana is allowed to produce a little more.

The entire beet-sugar industry of the United States is restricted. We could produce hundreds of thousands of tons more of sugar; but what would be the result if you threw down the bars and everybody produced all the sugar they could? You would have a ruined sugar market, and I tell my people this. While you may say it is un-American to put a restriction on continental production, yet you cannot get all that you want, and under this administration I am in favor of getting what you can, and I tell my people that if a man is growing 20 acres of beets and is restricted to 15 or 18 acres he is better off growing 15 or 18 acres at a profit than 20 acres and losing money.

These other people do not want to ruin the sugar industry. They are just talking through their hats.

I do not want to see the beet-sugar industry ruined, and, as I said in opening my remarks, it does not make a penny of difference to the growers of beets. We will get the same price for our beets.

I do say that the people that are operating the refining industry of the United States and have been for 150 years are entitled to the same protection that the beet growers are, and they are entitled to the same protection that we grant Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and we should say to them that they can produce just as many pounds of refined sugar as they have ever produced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes more to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. Is there not a limitation on continental United States insofar as the sale of refined sugar is concerned? That is, continental United States cannot sell its refined sugar to Hawaii or Puerto Rico, and there is a natural restriction there, although there is no restriction in the bill, because of the difference in the cost, the cost of production being so much less in Puerto Rico.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And whenever you restrict the production of beets, which this quota does, it logically follows that you restrict the production of refined sugar, so that we are restricted in refining just as are Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Mr. MAVERICK. And, if the so-called Jones amendments carry, would not there still be very many provisions in this bill that are desirable?

Mr. CUMMINGS. If these two provisions were cut out, it would not make a penny's difference to the beet growers of the United States; and I tell you that my only object is in protecting all the sugar industry of the United States and the 14,000 people who have jobs in connection with it.

Mr. MAVERICK. It will still be a good bill if they were cut out.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It would not be a good bill for the refiners. It would ruin the refiners, but it would take care of the beet growers.

Mr. KENNEY. If the refiners were ruined and the refining had to be done in the island Territories eventually——

Mr. CUMMINGS. And they would come back here and defend this law and say that there is nobody interested in sugar but the beet growers, and that they will take the tariff off that.

The cost of sugar is sometimes spoken of. It is cheaper in the United States than in any other country in the world. In Italy they pay over 15 cents. There is not a civilized country on earth that has as cheap sugar as we have in the United States. I say frankly that I do not want a high price for sugar, because I believe that the people who eat sugar are entitled to the same protection as the man that grows it. Let me give you the figures on the cost of sugar. In Germany it is $13.66 a hundred; in Italy, $21.80; in Poland, $8.40; in Norway, $7.19; in France, $9.54; in the Netherlands, $14.24; in Czechoslovakia, $11.25; in the Irish Free State, $7.72; and you can buy it in the United States today, right here in Washington, for $4.80 a hundred—10 pounds for 48 cents. I shall later, perhaps under the 5-minute rule, call attention to the cost of sugar as compared with other food products.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. In answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], if those two paragraphs were eliminated from the bill, it would in effect transfer the industry from continental United States to the insular possessions.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It would absolutely ruin the refining industry of the United States.

Mr. MAVERICK. It would not transfer all of it.

Mr. HEALEY. Practically all of it. It would take away jobs from American workmen.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask one or two questions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who is the author of one of the important amendments now a part of this bill as it comes to the floor. I wish to inquire about the proposed excise tax imposed on waste inedible molasses when used in the manufacture of industrial alcohol, a vital chemical raw material. May I ask how this tax would work out? Is it the same tax practically as on sugar itself?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. In other words, blackstrap molasses is coming in from the tropical countries without any importation tax, and it is also being manufactured without a manufacturers' tax for the distillation of alcohol.

Mr. ANDREWS. Would it not result in an increased cost to both direct and indirect consumers of products in which industrial alcohol is used? I urge that you look into the statistics and check the actual facts in the matter.

Mr. LUCAS. There is no doubt but what there will be an increased cost to the consumers, but at the same time we in Illinois and in the Corn Belt districts of this country believe it is a beneficial movement toward aiding the basic industry of America, and that is the true reason for the placing of this amendment into the bill.

Mr. ANDREWS. Does not the gentleman believe that this will dislocate a very vital American industry, and result in the loss of a valuable market for waste blackstrap molasses which would react against the very sugar producers the Jones bill seeks to aid?

Mr. LUCAS. No. We always hear about a dislocation of industry in every bill that is brought to the House where industry is involved, but I find that industry gets along about as well as the farmers in my section of the country, in fact, a little bit better. These industries will not stop but they may be compelled to become more interested in the use of corn in place of a foreign product.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that the grain producers do not stand to benefit one iota from the tax on blackstrap molasses and that the only ones to benefit will be the producers of synthetic alcohol?

Mr. LUCAS. No. The gentleman is mistaken. True, it will come into competition with the producers of synthetic alcohol, but synthetic alcohol can never take the place of grain alcohol made from corn. This amendment will place the American corn producer upon a near parity with the blackstrap producer who lives beyond the confines of continental United States. Who in this legislative hall can honestly challenge that premise?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order on another agricultural matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, during generations the great State of Iowa has been recognized as the greatest corn-producing area on this earth. Strangely, in a rash moment last week, the State of Wisconsin challenged Iowa's supremacy. Wisconsin's Governor, Philip La Follette, with pomp and ceremony, went to our State capital to measure corn with Iowa. He carried with him the tallest cornstalk in the Badger State. Iowa's great Governor, Nelson G. Kraschel, neighborly and good-naturedly, condescended to the contest. He hurriedly sent out a messenger to fetch the first cornstalk he came to, remarking to Governor La Follette that if the Iowa cornstalk was not 2 feet taller than Wisconsin's best he would consider Wisconsin the winner. The Wisconsin cornstalk measured 13 feet 1⅜ inches. The messenger arrived with a stalk from one of the poorer Iowa fields. It measured 16 feet 5⅛ inches. Like a good sportsman, Governor La Follette said, "You have us backed off the map when it comes to raising corn."

I wish to enter this story in the RECORD so that henceforth no such States as Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, or Minnesota will ever challenge the agricultural supremacy of Iowa, the State "where the tall corn grows."

In order that Iowa's supremacy may be known to all other States' Representatives, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a statement of a small part of the many fields in which my great State excels.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

Although Iowa ranks sixteenth in population and twenty-third in area of land, she ranks—

In value of corn, oats, horses, hogs, poultry	First
In value of farm lands and buildings	First
In combined value of livestock	First
In total value of farm property	First
In farm land improved (95.6 percent)	First
In value of farm machinery	First

Twenty-five percent of all grade 1 farm land of the United States is within the State of Iowa. Seventy-five percent of all grade 1 farm land of the United States is within 250 miles of the center of Iowa.

The farms of five Iowa counties (Sioux, Crawford, Shelby, Kossuth, and Plymouth) exceed in value the farms of either Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Wyoming, New Mexico, or Utah.

The farms of 10 Iowa counties (Cedar, Clinton, Crawford, Jasper, Kossuth, Marshall, Polk, Plymouth, Shelby, and Sioux) exceed in value the farms in any one of the States of South Carolina, Maryland, Florida, Idaho, Maine, New Hampshire, Delaware, New Mexico, or Utah.

One-tenth of all the food products in the United States comes from the State of Iowa.

Iowa's grain products for 1935 totaled 617,500,000 bushels. This amount divided by Iowa's number of square miles—55,586—gives an average of 11,100 bushels per square mile. No other State begins to equal these figures.

The per-capita wealth for Iowa is $4,322. The per-capita wealth for the remainder of the United States is $2,685.

The value of the farm products produced in Iowa in 1 year is greater than all the gold that has been produced in Alaska in the 58 years since the United States purchased Alaska.

(Authority U. S. Census and National Industrial Conference Board.)

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. MASON. I do not believe the State of Illinois will ever challenge Iowa on the stories they put out, but we can easily challenge Iowa on the tallness of our corn. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to know if the Governor of Wisconsin carefully examined the structure of that cornstalk to see what made it that way?

Mr. BIERMANN. I have no idea.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Would the gentleman be interested in going into a contest with reference to cheese instead of corn?

Mr. BIERMANN. I will have to think that over.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Did that cornstalk have any corn on it?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think it had three or four ears.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak for a moment for the consumers of the country. We have heard the farmer and the processor taken care of, but in this legislation we are going to add half a cent a pound to the cost of sugar, and that half a cent a pound must come out of the consumer. I think the consumer should be considered just for a moment at this time. In the United States we cut down on the amount of sugar we can produce. We cannot produce enough sugar in the United States for our needs. I maintain that we should be allowed to produce the sugar that we want to, so long as we cannot produce enough for our consumption.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. I am asking for information. This bill is simply a continuance, from a taxing viewpoint, of the Jones-Costigan present bill, is it not? That is, the one-half cent the gentleman speaks of is in the present law.

Mr. LORD. Yes; but that will expire soon.

Mr. HARLAN. Under the present law we have cheaper sugar now than we have had for years with that half cent added, have we not?

Mr. LORD. It would be that much cheaper if we did not have that tax.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That statement will not hold water, because in 1932 we had refined sugar selling around $3.25 to $3.40 as against today's prices. If the gentleman will permit, I might point out that was under a $2 duty on sugar coming from Cuba as against a 90-cent duty today.

Mr. LORD. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. Chairman, we have cut down somewhat the allowance from Hawaii. We have cut down somewhat the allowance from Puerto Rico. In addition to that we are providing that they can only ship into the country sugar in its raw form. They are a part of the United States, and, as others have contended here today, they should be allowed to ship refined if they please. If we should say that California must ship all of their sugar to New York City to have it refined, we would think that was rather drastic legislation. If we would say that Florida must ship all their sugar to Michigan to have it refined, we would think that was drastic legislation. That is exactly what we are doing with Hawaii and Puerto Rico. On that account I cannot agree with the legislation. I hope it will be stricken from the bill when it comes up for passage.

As we go on with sugar we will probably have some more amendments offered. We have heard it stated that we should have this refining in the United States so we would make that labor. What about the labor we would have if we raised all the sugar we can here? I was speaking with a Representative from Florida recently, and he tells me they could employ 30,000 more people in Florida if they could produce as much cane as they would like to produce. This would give labor to the American people. Of course, it would take it away from Cuba, but what about Cuba? We gave Cuba a greater quota of sugar than they can produce with their own labor. We cut down the amount of sugar that Puerto Rico can produce and then Cuba has to send to Puerto Rico to get labor to raise their sugar. This is the way this all works out. We are working against ourselves. The sugar factories in Michigan are not running because they do not get their quota of beets.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I am rather in accord with the gentleman's remarks. I cannot understand how the Congress of the United States can go on record as depriving American farmers of producing a product where we only produce 25 or 30 percent of what is consumed in our own country. When we allot that to Cuba as against Florida, then we are giving Cuba a preference over Florida.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. I yield the gentleman from New York 2 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LORD. Then we are giving preference to Cuba, a foreign country, and not to our own Florida unemployed American citizens. It is bad government and unusually dangerous, because in case of war our sugar-beet producers in the United States will be operating under a greatly reduced capacity, and we will find ourselves the victims of foreign sugar producers.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true, I ask the gentleman from Florida, that the Government paid individuals in the United States for not producing last year and the year before, at the very time when we were allowing foreign sugar to come into this country?

Mr. GREEN. Yes. We do not want any subsidy in Florida if they will let us increase our cane production.

Mr. DOWELL. Why should we restrict production in the United States when we do not produce one-third of the amount consumed in the United States?

Mr. GREEN. It is obviously an unwise policy to restrict production in our country when we make so much less than we actually consume, even in peacetime.

Mr. DOWELL. Why should we not adopt the policy that would permit increased production in the United States in order that our domestic producers may supply the needs of the United States?

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I cannot yield further. Much has been said about this quota for Cuba. It is, of course, a subject I should hardly speak of, I suppose, but a few years ago some gentlemen from my own State, when sugar was 20 or 28 cents a pound—they might be classed as economic royalists by some—got mixed up in the Cuban sugar industry and they seemed to get a little advantage in the quota, a little more than some believed they should have. I want to help the gentlemen from Florida and Louisiana, and the beet men, to get a greater quota of the United States market. I believe that we should really employ American labor, that we should raise all the sugar beets we need, buying only what is necessary to make up the difference between our needs and our consumption from Cuba, or others having them to sell, and not assess the American housewife one-half cent a pound to help out the Cuban investors from New York City.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, this bill is just a fair sample of what we are going to have presented to us in the regulation of agriculture when the bill comes in next winter from the Committee on Agriculture to establish the ever-normal granary policy and the other things that will probably be tied in. You can expect an enlarged edition of the sugar-control bill.

The world has changed materially and entirely since I went to the West a little more than half a century ago. The independent farmer who could plant his field to sugar beets, corn, wheat, or grass is a man of the past. We are in a day of regulation. I speak particularly for the beet-sugar growers, as well as the consumers. We are interested in a reasonable price for sugar beets, as well as in the price of sugar. Clearly, as explained by our colleague the gentleman from Colorado, this regulation has given us a comparatively cheap sugar, and it has given us a good price for sugar beets. I grew sugar beets once in quantity and sold them for around $4 a ton. They are worth almost double that now to the grower.

The sugar-beet business is just returning to Oregon. Our sugar factory at La Grande, Oreg., was dismantled long years ago. A new sugar factory is soon to be built on the Owyhee irrigation project. Many acres are now planted to sugar beets in Malheur County with more contemplated for next year.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we must take care of our own people in the continental United States. I am going to vote for this bill, preferably with sections (a) and (b), on page 14, retained in the bill, just as the bill came from the committee. That is my idea of what the bill should be. The only effect on Puerto Rico and Hawaii is in the amount of refined sugar that these islands can ship into the continental United States. These sections, on page 14, (a) and (b) are in the interests of the sugar refiners of the United States. I prefer to leave those sections in the bill, because they affect men working in factories. These are our own people; they are spending their own hard-earned money, buying our own farm products, articles of food that we have to sell. I believe in protecting them.

If these sections go out of the bill, I am told that the ultimate effect will be that refining will go to the islands, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, where it can be done cheaper than in the United States.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that this will be a great discrimination against labor in this country?

Mr. PIERCE. I think so. At the present moment we should be thinking about our own factories. I think these sections should remain in the bill. I deeply regret that our President saw fit to make the statement he did to the chairman of our committee yesterday. I wish that he could be brought to see the light. I have nothing against the Hawaiian Islands, but I do know that the sugar business of the islands is practically run by a monopoly. I think there are really only five firms over there.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. There are five firms with interlocking directorates which practically control Hawaii. There is an economic oligarchy over there that ought to be investigated.

Mr. PIERCE. It seems to me if our President could realize that and could be shown the truth, he would sign the bill, as I hope we may pass it. I am going to vote for it either way. I think our new sugar-beet industry in the Malheur country of Oregon will fare equally well with it out or with it in; but I think the whole country will be better off if we leave those two sections in.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman does not feel any worse against an organization of five families in Hawaii than he does against the United States Sugar Trust that has been controlling the whole business in this country for a good many years, which trust will be the primary beneficiary under this bill?

Mr. PIERCE. I do not think it will be the primary beneficiary. I think the whole country will be much better off. There is no question but what we should extend the growing of sugar beets in this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Bearing upon the question of labor, I know that the refineries in Massachusetts—and there are two—pay their help from 65 cents an hour to $1.05 an hour. They were paying them 58 cents an hour until recently.

The women are getting 45 cents an hour. Until recently they were getting 40 cents an hour. Then they get a bonus in addition to that. They have to compete against labor that is paid from 60 cents to $2 a day.

Mr. PIERCE. That is what we have to face in this House. We cannot yield to the old free-trade ideas that my friend from Ohio has deeply set in his mind.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman is a little mistaken with reference to my free-trade ideas. I have never advocated that, although I have been in favor of our trade agreements. However, production costs are not exclusively labor costs. The Hawaiian producer has to import his fuel; he has to constantly use fertilizer. In fact, I think it is the most heavily fertilized sugar field so far as I know in the world. They have other costs. They buy material in this country which they ship out to Hawaii. That promotes industry in this country. It is exactly the same proposition that we have in promoting trade through our trade treaties. The things that we offer to Hawaii, the opportunity to manufacture simply comes back to us in the United States if we can sell to Hawaii fuel, fertilizer, all kinds of machinery, equipment, and everything else.

Mr. PIERCE. That is a beautiful dream, but it does not work out in practice.

Mr. HARLAN. It is the fact.

Mr. PIERCE. We have to take care of our own people. We have to look after our own labor. We have to look after our own men in Boston and other places who want to work. It is just a beautiful theory.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. A good many people claim these island possessions are our people and therefore entitled to the same consideration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Some of the people who are interested in this bill claim that the people of these island possessions are our people, and, therefore, should have the same consideration as our domestic growers. But I do not agree with that theory, and I want to ask the gentleman if it is true this difference is brought about by the wage and hour bill in that the provisions of that bill will not apply to those island laborers?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. There seems to be a difference of opinion as to whether or not that bill will apply to Puerto Rico and Hawaii. I heard that discussed this morning. There are numerous exemptions in the Senate bill, and I have not had an opportunity yet to read the bill with the amendments made in the House Committee on Labor. However, the point to remember is that this sugar legislation is an attempt to do something to stabilize the domestic sugar industry, and no group or area has been favored. All have had to accept some restrictions or limitations.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. It has been necessary to provide quota restrictions to prevent the destruction of the domestic industry on account of the competition from offshore, low-cost areas. Our continental sugar growers were going bankrupt because of the low prices of 1931, 1932, 1933, before the Jones-Costigan Act went into effect. Had that act not been passed by Congress you, perhaps, would not have any sugar beets or sugar cane growing in the United States today, and that industry would be lost to the continental United States. However, in legislating for the primary benefit of the people on the continent you have provided a stabilized market for the off-shore island possessions and Territories that has made it possible for Hawaii and Puerto Rico to obtain $100,000,000 a year more for their product than they otherwise would have been able to obtain on the world market. The bill before you, in effect, continues the general principles of the Jones-Costigan Act with its limitation on refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

The main controversy is with respect to lifting the refined restriction on these imports from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Frankly, the committee has had this legislation under consideration for a good many months and has tried as best it could, motivated only by a desire to be fair and just to all concerned, to arrive at the best and most satisfactory measure that could be presented to the House.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The committee heard from people in the island possessions?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. We heard representatives from all of them. We heard from the departments, and we tried to exercise our legislative function as an independent branch of this Government and bring in satisfactory legislation.

May I say that the demands of Florida and Louisiana were given sympathetic consideration? We tried as best we could to relieve the situation. We increased the quota to the Louisiana and Florida sugarcane areas from 260,000 tons to 420,000 tons. In doing so the other areas had to sacrifice some of their quotas.

Hawaii and Puerto Rico sacrificed some. You must remember that under the Tydings-McDuffie Act the Philippines are guaranteed a quota of 970,000 tons. You must also remember that under the recoprical-trade agreement with Cuba concessions were made which we had to respect in this legislation. As a consequence, it was impossible to satisfy the legitimate demands for additional quotas.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Does the gentleman believe the reciprocal-trade treaty with Cuba acts to the detriment of our domestic sugar producers?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I would not say so as long as quotas are maintained. When the Jones-Costigan Act went into effect the tariff was reduced 50 cents per hundredweight, which was replaced with a processing tax. Since the processing tax was declared unconstitutional we have been making a donation to Cuba of approximately 50 cents per 100 pounds on the imports of sugar from that country. This is one reason for passing the pending measure, for here we again put the 50-cent tax back and will collect the tax on the imports.

Let me at this point discuss an item which has not been covered up to this time. The estimated tax collections under this proposed legislation will be $66,820,000 per year. The estimated payments to growers under title III of the bill, after deducting estimated reductions in payments to large growers provided for in section 304, will amount to approximately $40,000,000.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Do not the payments go to the Puerto Rican and Hawaiian growers as well as to the domestic growers?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. They do on a graduated scale. The payments are reduced in cases of large producers on a graduated scale as provided in the bill. This applies to mainland producers also.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Can the gentleman tell us about how much will go to Hawaii, in round numbers? Would it not be approximately $12,000,000?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I have not the figures. The amount would be hard to estimate because of the graduated scale of payments.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is from $9,000,000 to $12,000,000?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Approximately, I should say.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And about the same to Puerto Rico?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. A little less. With respect to the Philippine tax, it is provided in the bill that this money will be returned to the Philippines. You, perhaps, wonder why this is provided in the bill. This payment will amount to some $9,700,000. Under the Tydings-McDuffie Act we are precluded from raising a tariff against any product from the Philippine Commonwealth. However, it is a close question whether or not this could be considered as a tariff. The committee made that concession to the State Department and War Department and included in the bill a provision to return the tax, the same as was done with the excise tax on copra and coconut oil a few years ago.

I may say that I fear the future of the domestic-sugar industry will be seriously threatened unless this sugar legislation is enacted. To safeguard this industry it is necessary for all the people interested, whether from the growers' standpoint or from the standpoint of beet labor or sugar-cane labor, or from the standpoint of the refiners or those working in the refineries, to stand shoulder to shoulder in trying to pass legislation which will safeguard the industry as a whole. If you cripple the refining industry in this country, we know that sooner or later the continental growers will find themselves in a like position. Unless we can have a combination of quotas and a tariff on sugar, the sugar growers of this country cannot feel very safe from the threat of competition from cheap tropical labor.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The gentleman has stated he is fearful that unless this measure is passed the sugar industry of this country will be destroyed. Is the gentleman's theory based on the fact there would be an increase in imports of sugar from Cuba?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Our quota provisions would fall. Unless we can maintain quotas on the imports of sugar, naturally the market will be flooded and the price will drop to a figure where it will be unprofitable for beet-sugar growers or cane-sugar growers to produce beets or cane on the continent.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. This country would not be flooded with sugar from Puerto Rico or Hawaii but the sugar would come from Cuba.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. The additional sugar would be from Cuba principally.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. That is, because of the low duty of 90 cents, they would have an advantage and would ship sugar to this country?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Yes; Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines would suffer with the continental producers, because this sugar would come in in unlimited quantities and would help to demoralize the stabilized market in the United States they all enjoy. I urge the passage of this bill to safeguard the domestic sugar industry.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, sometimes things are concealed in a legislative bill which are not always apparent to the naked eye, and it becomes necessary to take out the slide rule and resort to a little arithmetic to see what that provision is. In this instance I refer to a subject matter I have discussed no end of times on this floor, namely, the subject of blackstrap molasses.

My colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], who is a member of the Committee on Agriculture, was successful in having written into this bill an amendment which very carefully defines liquid sugars, which would include blackstrap, and brings them within the purview of the taxing provisions of the bill. This amendment appears on page 26, and reads:

> Notwithstanding the foregoing exceptions, sugar in liquid form (regardless of its nonsugar solid content) which is to be used in the distillation of alcohol, shall be considered manufactured sugar.

Section 402 of the bill imposes a tax on manufactured sugar manufactured in this country. Section 403 imposes an import compensation tax on manufactured sugar which comes into the country from the outside. The result is, therefore, that blackstrap molasses, which is an aggregate byproduct of some 300 pounds per ton of refined sugar, and a very dark, sirupy substance, is included as manufactured sugar in the bill, and therefore is amenable to a compensating tax of a little more than one-half cent per pound of sugars.

I think the corn farmers of Illinois will be everlastingly grateful to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] for his diligent work in having this put into the bill, and therefore I want to supplement the things he has already done and the position he has taken by insisting that this bill should go a little bit further and increase the tax on blackstrap molasses that goes into the distillation of alcohol. Here is the arithmetic of the thing, implemented and corroborated by all that I have been able to pick up in the Department of Agriculture, the Alcohol Tax Unit, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the Federal Alcohol Administration, and all other agencies.

Blackstrap molasses will run about 6 percent of sugar content. This is item no. 1. The Department of Agriculture tells me that it takes 6 gallons of blackstrap to produce the same amount of alcohol as a bushel of corn. This is item no. 2. It takes 12 pounds of blackstrap to make a gallon of blackstrap, and 6 times 12 pounds equals 72 pounds. So 72 pounds of molasses will displace 1 bushel of corn in the production of alcohol. If the sugar content is 6 percent, then 6 percent of 72 pounds is 4½ pounds. So for taxable purposes 4½ pounds of sugar content, taxed on the basis that is recited in this bill, will raise a tax of approximately 2¼ cents. So a tax is to be imposed of 2¼ cents on an equivalent quantity of molasses that displaces a bushel of corn in the commercial outlets of the country.

To show you what nonsense there is about all this, you cannot bring in a single bushel of corn from the Argentine unless you pay a duty of 25 cents under the Tariff Act of 1930. You can bring in 72 pounds of molasses and pay only 2¼ cents, and you can displace 1 bushel of corn grown out in the great Corn Belt. Is there any rhyme, reason, or sense about that kind of a set-up or arithmetic? And if we are going to give the corn farmer of this country a square deal it becomes necessary to raise the compensating import tax upon molasses that will be used in the distillation of alcohol.

How serious is this thing? In 1910, 24,000,000 gallons of blackstrap molasses came in from the outside. In 1936, 235,000,000 gallons came in from the outside; 149,000,000 gallons of alcohol was produced in this country from molasses in the fiscal year 1936. This is nearly 76 percent of all alcohol produced in 1936, and only 7.04 percent of all the alcohol made in this country in 1936 was produced from grain that is grown in the United States.

You people who talk about nationalism, who talk about defending the continental interests of the country, what about all this blackstrap molasses, fabricated into alcohol, that is today usurping approximately 30,000,000 bushels of corn, in the industrial market, and I will defy anybody to refute this statement.

How serious is this insofar as the farmer is concerned? Here is a clipping from The Pekin Daily Times, my hometown paper, that came to my office this morning. It shows that the corn crop for this year is estimated at around 2,600,000,000 bushels. Where does it go? Most of it stays on the farm and is fed in the form of pork and beans. Ten percent, or approximately 300,000,000 bushels, goes into the manufacture of starch and alcohol and all the other products that are processed from corn. Thirty million bushels of corn displaced today by blackstrap molasses represents 10 percent of the corn farmers' industrial outlet for his crop.

I wonder what the automobile people would say if you took away 10 percent of their domestic market. They would squeal like a stuck pig, and so would anyone else.

Now, are you going to stand by and have 72 pounds of blackstrap come in from the outside and pay a compensating tax of 2¼ cents and displace a bushel of corn which, if it came in in the form of corn, would have to pay 25 cents under the tariff act of 1930.

What happens to all this blackstrap? It is made into ethyl alcohol and into neutral spirits and then some of it goes into the gin you drink and it goes into whisky that you drink. I sneaked over to the corner the other day and got a bottle of gin, I think for 89 cents. I just soaked the labels off and here they are. I hate to mention names, but I do not see how we are going to fight this blackstrap lobby that has been operating in Washington for the last 7 or 8 years unless we drag the stark truth into the open:

Cavalier distilled dry gin, distilled by Continental Distilling Corporation, Philadelphia, Pa.

Here is the label on the back:

Distilled dry gin. Eighty-five proof. One pint. Distilled from 100-percent cane products.

That is the euphemistic way in which the Federal Alcohol Administration permits them to say that this gin was manufactured entirely from blackstrap that came from Cuba and the offshore places. They used two and a half million gallons of blackstrap on the seaboard last year for gin. One hundred and forty-nine million gallons of alcohol was made from blackstrap molasses. Twenty-four million gallons was tax paid, 18,000,000 gallons was dumped for rectification purposes, and, if you take out the small amount made from grain, the inevitable conclusion is that another 5,000,000 gallons of this blackstrap spirits were used in blended whisky or gin in the country. We have a very felicitous regulation down here under the tutelage of the Federal Alcohol Administration. It says that you can produce and label and sell whisky that is only 20-percent straight whisky made from corn and 80 percent of neutral spirits made from blackstrap molasses. When you buy a bottle of blended whisky at the liquor store, look at the bottle before you buy it and see what the legend is on the label, whether it is 20 percent of whisky made from domestic corn and perhaps 80 percent distilled from the stuff that comes from the islands in such great quantities. Are we going to stand by and see our corn farmers impaled as they have been with this kind of nonsense? Did we not go out in 1932 and 1933 and say, "O Mr. Farmer, if you will get busy and support repeal of the eighteenth amendment we will take you up on the mountain and show you all the kingdoms of the earth; if you will just support repeal, we will expand the agricultural market for you." Yes; and have we done it? After repeal we permitted blackstrap to come in, with a tax of one-fifth of 1 cent per gallon to usurp 30,000,000 bushels of industrial outlet of the corn farmers of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Just a moment. One other thing, to show you how serious this is. This is not a selfish matter, because they are processing blackstrap molasses in the very heart of the Corn Belt—in Peoria. Here is a decision that came from the Interstate Commerce Commission. Relief was asked from this Commission under the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act so that they could get a fair rate on blackstrap molasses from Gulf ports to Peoria and Pekin, Ill., and in the findings, as a substantial part of that relief, the Solvents Corporation, in Peoria, Ill., stated in this application before the Interstate Commerce Commission that their average shipment of molasses into the very heart of the Corn Belt was 30,000,000 gallons a year. Are you going to stand for that sort of thing? Do you know what corn is doing today? Thirty days ago December futures of corn were 94 cents a bushel. Look at the newspaper tomorrow morning and you will see that December futures have gone down to 64 cents. Corn has dropped 30 cents a bushel in the last 30 days. That is the reason the American Farm Bureau Federation and those interested in the corn farmer have been here before the committee and have been asking for farm legislation, because they saw this thing coming on. Are we going to stand by and talk about regimentation and control? Are we going to take some of the most fertile acres God ever put on this footstool out of cultivation and pay cash out of the Federal Treasury for doing it and then let blackstrap, 78½ percent of the total imports coming from Cuba, usurp the market of the American farmer to the extent of 30,000,000 bushels of corn?

Can you not see the sheer poppycock of such a thing that will let 72 pounds of blackstrap come in and pay a duty of 2¼ cents and then charge 25 cents a bushel before they can bring in a bushel of corn? I have distilleries operating in my town that are processing Argentine corn because of the short crop last year. For every bushel that goes through the still column they have to pay 25 cents a bushel in tariffs, yet in Philadelphia and along the Atlantic seaboard they can process blackstrap into beverage alcohol that you pour down your throat or into industrial alcohol of the kind that you rub on your ankle when you bump yourself against a rocking chair at night, or the kind that you put in your radiator to keep it from freezing in the wintertime, at only 2¼ cents for the equivalent amount. I say to you, is that fair to the corn farmer of the country? Is it not time we stripped the thing of all this hypocrisy and brought it into line. The thing to do is to change that compensating tax insofar as it applies to blackstrap, when used for distillation purposes and lay a charge of about 5½ cents per pound of sugars. That is the equivalent of 25 cents a bushel on corn. Is that not fair? Is that not fair to the corn farmer of the country? I am going to offer that amendment when the time comes, and it seems to me that everybody in the Corn Belt ought to support an amendment of that kind, because the farmers out there are going to have a surplus problem on their hands just as soon as they get to husking and strip the husks off the corn.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that this blackstrap that comes in is a byproduct of foreign refineries?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right. There is no question about that.

I just want to make this clear. We are not concerned about molasses that comes from Louisiana, from Colorado, and elsewhere. Our feed manufacturers will use from seventy to one hundred million gallons a year to mix with chopped alfalfa and dry feed. Our domestic production of blackstrap is probably around 10,000,000 gallons. It is not enough. I am not kicking about it coming in for feeding purposes, because it is not a substitute for but rather a supplement to the cattle feed that we produce.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Members of the House should distinctly know that this amendment affecting blackstrap molasses does not affect the blackstrap that comes in for feeding purposes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; it does not. It does not apply to blackstrap that comes in for feeding purposes whatsoever.

Now, somebody said, "You will raise the price of commercial alcohol." Is it not fair if we put all distillers of the country on an even footing and make them start from scratch? Is that asking too much?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentleman inform the House about how much per gallon it will raise the price of commercial alcohol that goes into the manufacture of medicine and other commodities?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In my judgment, it will be infinitesimal. I do not know exactly, but it would not amount to a great deal. There was a time before 1910 when there was not a gallon of alcohol made from blackstrap molasses. If we are going to have regimentation, if we are going to have control, if we are going to take 40,000,000 acres out of production and pay cash out of the Federal Treasury, does not consistency and common sense dictate that we utilize every portion of the American market before we venture too far afield in that direction? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gntleman has again expired.

Mr. NELSON. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DONDERO. The manufacturers in my district are complaining bitterly over this Lucas amendment, claiming that the tax on alcohol will be raised from 3 to 7 cents a gallon. Can the gentleman inform the House whether or not he thinks that is correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let us admit it does raise it that much. It simply puts everybody on the same level. The beverage distiller in the Corn Belt, the distiller on the seaboard, the distiller at New Orleans, the distiller in California, and the manufacturer of industrial alcohol will all use corn, all bought on the American market, so they start from scratch, without preferential treatment in favor of anybody. Is not that fair? Would it not be a good thing to give the American farmer a little encouragement, even though it will raise the price of industrial alcohol an infinitesimal amount? That is my answer to the gentleman.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that if the amendment in question is adopted it will practically eliminate all importation of blackstrap molasses from foreign countries?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it would and I think it should. Finally, it is fair. They sent in 33,000,000 bushels of corn from the Argentine in 1935, some of which was unloaded from the boat at Baltimore, and they paid 25 cents a bushel tariff. Are you going to allow this molasses to come in for 2¼ cents, or approximately one-eleventh of what they charge on corn at the present time? That is the question. That is behind the amendment that I intend to offer.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. A man engaged in the feed business told me the other day he could buy corn from the Argentine and shipped in here, 15 cents a bushel cheaper than he can get it in America.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It has been consistently quoted in Gulf ports and as far north as Buffalo, 15 cents a bushel cheaper than the American price. Are we going to run out on the American farmer with a 2,600,000,000-bushel crop in the offing, or will we say to him, "We will give you a break. We will put a quietus upon this tremendous importation of competitive blackstrap which robs you of your outlet for 30,000,000 bushels of corn"? [Applause.]

One word more, Mr. Chairman, about raising prices of alcohol to help the farmer. Some years back we clipped 41 cents off of each gold dollar under the Warren theory in order to raise prices. We passed a Silver Purchase Act, under which we are buying silver today and against which we are issuing silver certificates in order to raise prices. We passed the National Industrial Recovery Act, which raised prices. We passed the Agricultural Adjustment Act to raise prices. We passed the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act to raise prices. In the light of this studied legislative effort to raise prices is it asking too much to demand this relief in the face of a perpendicular drop of 30 cents a bushel in the price of corn because it may raise prices a few cents on alcohol? Whatever rise in prices there might be it will uniformly apply to every industrial and beverage distiller in the land and gives preferential treatment to no one. To the farmer it gives a 30,000,000-bushel industrial outlet that equals 10 percent of his entire industrial outlet now.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM].

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, we should not enact any legislation which deals unjustly with any part of our country. If we leave in this bill the provision which prohibits Hawaii and Puerto Rico from refining the sugar they grow, we will have established as a permanent part of our legislative policy the principle that we can by law favor one part of our country at the expense of another.

I know a similar provision was contained in the Jones-Costigan Act. But it was put there largely as the result of the political influence of the eastern refiners. That was emergency legislation. This statute is in the nature of permanent legislation, and we should not commit this grave injustice to our Territories.

Great Britain long had the colonial policy of forcing her colonies to send their products to the mother country to be manufactured. That colonial policy was one of the causes of the American Revolution, and we adopted our Constitution principally because of our desire to eliminate for all time trade barriers between different parts of our country.

Questions as to labor and corporations have nothing to do with this legislation, and their introduction only serves to confuse the issues. Those questions can be handled on their own merits. But nothing justifies treating any part of our country as a foreign nation and discriminating against it for the benefit of another part.

We know it is cheaper to manufacture cotton in Alabama than it is in New England, but no one would suggest that we prohibit Alabama by law from spinning the cotton it grows in order that New England manufacturers might have a monopoly.

The Secretary of the Interior, who has charge of Territories, has taken a very clear and firm stand against such discrimination. I support his views heartily, and believe that it would be unjust and un-American to prevent sugar growers in our Territories from refining their own sugar.

I stand with the Secretary of the Interior and the Territories in this matter, and I think every Member who believes in fair play should do the same.

These questions should be handled solely on their own merits. Nothing justifies treating any part of the country as a foreign nation and discriminating against it for another part. We know it is cheaper to manufacture cotton in Alabama than it is in New England, but no one would suggest that we prohibit Alabama by law from spinning cotton that she grows, in order that the New England manufacturers could manufacture it. The Secretary of the Interior, who has charge of the Territories, has taken a very clear and firm stand against this discrimination. I support his views heartily and believe it would be unjust and un-American to prevent sugar growers in the Territories from manufacturing in the Territories.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a letter received today together with my reply thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, under the terms of this bill, for which I expect to vote because I can get no better, a farmer gives his boy 40 acres of land. The boy wants to grow beets; he cannot do it unless someone in the Government or some department of the Government gives him permission by assigning to the father a quota. There is nothing to be gained by kicking about that now. We can take it and like it, and that is what I am doing, except I do not like it.

But there is something that goes a little farther than that. I am wondering whether or not, if the old man happened to have assigned to him a quota so that the boy could work on the home farm and grow beets, whether or not the boy is going to be permitted to work? Assuming that the boy is 25 or 30 years of age, married, and has a kid or two, will the boy be permitted to work? He probably will want to know, especially if he is married and has those children.

Why do I doubt it? Why do I ask that question? I will tell you why. I doubt it because of items such as appeared in this morning's Post. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] had some pictures here one day of the Chicago riot. He had a part out of a series. Strange as it may seem, he showed us only a few. He did not show us the pictures which were taken by the photographer at Chicago which showed the inception of the riot, which showed the crowd surging down on the police, assaulting them with meathooks, stones, and clubs; no doubt he did not have them in his possession.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. VOORHIS. But the gentleman from Texas showed all the pictures that he could obtain that were submitted to the La Follette committee.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman says all that were submitted to the La Follette committee? Why did not the La Follette committee produce the whole record? Why just a part? Why only that part which it thought would reflect on the police? I will lend the gentleman, because I have it in my possession, a part of the testimony taken at the coroner's inquest of a photographer and his helper where they gave testimony under oath as to taking those pictures and what they had. One of them was subpenaed as a witness before the La Follette committee. I am not accusing the gentleman from Texas of any bad faith at all, or of any lack of diligence. No doubt he was engaged in writing another book or preparing an historical lecture, or something of that kind, so I am not charging bad faith or anything of the kind.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. It was my understanding that the rule provided that debate must be confined to the sugar bill. I would like to have some time to talk about the sugar bill, but I am unable to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule does provide that debate shall be confined to the bill. The gentleman from Michigan will proceed in order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And that is exactly what I am talking about, because I want to know whether the C. I. O. is going to compel the farmer's boy to pay a $2 initiation fee and $1 a month before he can go out into his own field or his dad's field and work. That is what I am trying to find out, and that is all I am trying to find out.

Getting down now to pictures, in this morning's Washington Post is the picture of a worker, Frank Dillon, who was beaten up by the C. I. O. The men in this factory wanted to work; they had their own union, but the C. I. O. fellows went into the room where they had barricaded themselves, beat them up, and sent this fellow to the hospital. Coercion? Intimidation? Violence? You join the C. I. O., the organization of the President's friend, Lewis, or you take a beating. Regimentation. Well, something more than that. That was in a Plymouth factory; that was in a factory where there was one of those signed Wagner contracts under collective bargaining, a contract with U. A. W. A. forced upon Chrysler by Governor Murphy.

That is one of the methods used by C. I. O. to obtain members.

How long are we going to stand it? I asked the majority leader the other day when I got the floor: How long are the gentlemen from the South going to stand this kind of conduct? Since that time the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] on this floor told in part what happened to one of the factories in his community; how, by the C. I. O., it was driven into bankruptcy. It is coming, this lawlessness, this intimidation, this coercion, this tribute collecting, to all of us; there is no question about it. I do not live in a great industrial district, just a little farming community, but we have a factory or two.

Here is a letter I received today. It appears that H. W. Kleeb was down there. He is one of the investigators for the National Labor Relations Board. Where did he go? He went there and stayed with the C. I. O. fellows, who dine him; he has his meals there with them; he is entertained by them; he is sympathetic with their views; he gets his information from C. I. O. leaders, and then he goes to the attorney for the independent union and tells him that the union is a company union and that all the fellows connected with it are biased and prejudiced—after he has been wined—wait! They do not drink down there—after he has been dined and entertained by the C. I. O. boys. Then he finds fault with the other fellows because they have organized that kind of union, about which he doubtless knows little and cares less.

Now, I say it is coming home to the farmer; it is coming to farm industry.

This factory in Detroit, the Plymouth branch of Chrysler, employs 11,000 men. Doubtless, tomorrow there will be more.

They have a contract in this factory and there have been thrown out of employment 11,000 men. Why? Because C. I. O. organizers beat workers, members of an independent union who will not desert the union of their choice and pay tribute to Lewis.

Yet we sit here and submit. How long, O Lord, how long will we refuse to protect the man who wishes to work?

Mr. Chairman, I have introduced two bills which would tend to remedy this disgraceful condition. Why can we not have a vote on those bills? One calls for the incorporation of unions, the placing of responsibility upon them; the other seeks to prohibit interstate transportation of strikers who would drive workers from their jobs. Why can we not give protection not only to the man who works in the factory but to the boy who works on the farm and the fellow who wants to grow beets, and to the men in the factories who want to make sugar?

I wish my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK], who believes as I do on this matter of the sit-down strike, would some day gather his fellow Democrats around him and put through a measure which will guarantee protection to those men who want to work, as those men want to work.

We hear a lot about these fellows going out from the National Labor Relations Board. Read their proceedings and note the questions they ask. They see only the things they want to see and hear only the things they want to hear. Then they come in and an attorney sent out by the N. L. R. B. asks leading and suggestive questions and he gets the evidence he wants.

I see my friend the distinguished lawyer from Illinois, the former judge advocate of the American Legion, the sometime, I hope, Senator from that State, smile. I do not blame him.

They intimate that these hearings are judicial hearings. Some refer to the investigating board as a court. God save the mark.

The gentlemen who go out are inquisitors; they are partisans; they have preconceived opinions and the so-called hearings which they hold would be ludicrous were it not for the tragic results. Their activities have put factories out of business, have driven industries from one place to another. Their actions indicate that they know little, if anything, about the subjects with which they are called upon to deal.

One of these investigating boards is what? I will tell you what it is. It is one of these judicial vending machines.

No, it is not a vending machine; it is a gambling machine. No, it is not a gambling machine, because there is no element of chance about it; because we know what is coming out, and about that there is little, if any, uncertainty. It is an automatic vending machine, peddling opinions, not judicial.

They send an investigator who gets the evidence. The attorney asks the questions and the examiner sits there and out pops a conviction against the man who is giving work to the men who have been employed in years gone by.

The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL] told you what a "scab" was (RECORD of July 8, p. 6957). He said these fellows who went back to the plant were "scabs." Let me tell you there were 34,619 of them at Republic Steel and every one had worked months previously, some of them for years, in those factories, yet they were "scabs" according to the definition of the gentleman from Montana. In my judgment, they were honest, law-abiding American citizens, who wished to exercise their right to work.

May I finish with this thought that I stressed a moment ago: Can we not sometime before this Congress is over consider legislation which prohibits men coming in from outside the States and paralyzing the industries of our communities? Is it not possible to consider such legislation? Is it not possible to require those who are drawing their millions from the pay checks of the workers to account for the money which they have received? Is it not possible to impose upon them some degree of responsibility for the havoc which they bring to the worker and the community, to the public at large?

That is all I ask, and I say God grant that we can get some legislation of that kind before it is too late.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the Delegate from Puerto Rico.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this great Nation should not consider treating citizens of one part of the United States differently from the citizens of other parts of the United States. This great Congress should not permit Puerto Rico to receive different treatment from any other State or section of the Union, especially when the legislation pertains entirely to business and nothing else. The human side of the problem concerning sugar has not been entirely incorporated in the bill. It does not involve actually the question of labor, the treatment of labor, and the conditions under which people work in the various areas in which sugar is produced.

May I say to my brothers in the great American Federation of Labor that this bill, it seems to me, has nothing to do with the relations between capital and labor. Labor had to organize to fight the barons and the exploiters of labor everywhere—in Puerto Rico, in Hawaii, as well as in every part of this great Union.

Much has been said about the commercial aspect of this bill and the benefits obtained from buying goods. May I say to the Members of the House that Puerto Rico spends over two-thirds of the money it receives from this industry in the United States. We buy from the farmers and from the industries in the United States goods to the extent of $110,000,000 every year. So far as the Pan American nations are concerned, Puerto Rico ranks first in purchasing goods from the United States. There is only one exception and that is Canada. Puerto Rico, as I stated, is the largest buyer. Let us take rice, for instance. We buy more rice from Louisiana than any other country in the world. We also buy cotton, we buy meats, and we buy everything that is needed for the sustenance of the people of Puerto Rico.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot discuss this great question at length on behalf of the people of Puerto Rico. I understand well the position of the big sugar people and the big cane-sugar producers of Louisiana and Florida. I also understand perfectly what is the intention of the big refinery corporations. As a matter of fact the provisions in this bill protecting the corporations so far as the refining of sugar is concerned are a very nice thing for them, but I do not believe the wage earners and workers in the industry will benefit unless they fight against the exploiters, and may I say the exploiters in the United States, in Puerto Rico, and in Hawaii all fall in the same class. As a matter of fact, it is a fight between groups of capitalists.

There are located in Puerto Rico 35 sugar factories and 3 or 4 of them, the biggest ones, belong to people in New York, Massachusetts, and other places in this country. The same is true perhaps of Hawaii. The result of this fight, I am afraid, will be the crushing of the masses of the people of Puerto Rico.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Congress to be fair with Puerto Rico and treat us as a part of this Nation. We ask you to treat us as a part of this great family, without discrimination. Puerto Rico is willing to pay all of its obligations and we are anxious to enter into the family.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. IGLESIAS. As a part of my remarks, I would like to incorporate two letters, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1937.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. IGLESIAS: I will be pleased to speak to Marvin Jones and put in a good word for Puerto Rico relating to the importation of refined sugar into the United States from Puerto Rico, as you suggested in your letter dated June 25.

It has ever been our purpose and desire to help and assist Puerto Rico and the Puerto Rican people. I can clearly distinguish the difference between the treatment which should be accorded the people of Puerto Rico and favor of them and against Cuba and other countries not a part of the United States Government.

Be assured that I will do all I can to be helpful.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

SAN JUAN, P. R., August 1, 1937.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner, Puerto Rico,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: The American Legion, Department of Puerto Rico, representing 18,000 World War veterans, are definitely opposed to the discriminations contained in H. R. 7667, which so materially affects the economic condition of 1,800,000 American citizens in Puerto Rico.

This discrimination is in complete violation of all American policies toward the people of Puerto Rico and is against all basic American principles.

We sincerely hope such discriminations as this will be eliminated from all legislation affecting the people of Puerto Rico.

Very truly yours,

JUAN LASTRA CHARRIEZ,
Department Commander, the American Legion.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration carries in its title the words "to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry." This is one of the purposes of the bill. The main fight will come on the question of whether or not paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 207, appearing on page 14 of the bill, will be eliminated therefrom. Section (a) confines the refined sugar production of Hawaii to not more than 29,616 short tons, and of Puerto Rico to not more than 126,033 short tons.

We are not confronted here with a theoretical question; we are confronted with a very practical problem. If we were considering purely an academic question the arguments of the Delegate from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS] and the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] would be worthy of some consideration, but when we look at this from the angle which presents itself to us, we cannot escape drawing the conclusion that we have been very, very fair to both Puerto Rico and Hawaii. It must be remembered that they are selling sugar on the American market at nearly double the price they could get on the world market. The only reason they are able to sell their sugar on the American market at nearly double the price they could get for sugar on the world market is that we passed a quota law necessary because our domestic beet- and cane-sugar producers needed quota protection in order to obtain for them a fair return on the money they have invested.

Our producers cannot compete with the producers of Cuba, Puerto Rico, or Hawaii, for the costs of production of our producers are higher than the costs of production in these islands. True, the islands are a component part of the United States, but we must look at many problems from a practical angle as we have on many occasions. When we do, we must apply the rule of justice in a practical way, and we have done so in this case. The farmers of the United States must spend more money for their help than do the producers in Puerto Rico and Hawaii. They also have to pay more for their help than the producers of Cuba. The employees of our refineries receive substantially higher wages than the employees of the refineries of Cuba, and what few refineries there are in Hawaii and in Puerto Rico.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understood the gentleman to state that Hawaii is a component part of the United States, but nevertheless continental United States must look after itself, or words to that effect.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; not look after itself. I said there are certain times when we must be practical and apply the rule of practical justice to the circumstances which confront us.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Am I stretching the gentleman's theory a little too far if I suggest that upon his theory the gentleman might be called upon some day to support a measure which would place a quota upon the production of cotton goods in South Carolina?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not see the relationship of the gentleman's question to the matter under consideration today. The gentleman is entering the realm of pure speculation, which is a realm the gentleman from New York very, very seldom enters.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a very practical question I have posed to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not see the relationship. The question is academic and speculative. I respect the fact the gentleman believes the question is practical if he asks it, but on this occasion I disagree with the gentleman.

Returning briefly to the bill, we must keep in mind that the commerce of the islands is in raw sugar, not refined sugar. We must keep in mind the fact that the American consumers pay a substantial sum in order that the quota law may be carried into operation.

It must also be kept in mind that we are dealing with a purely continental question. The consumers of sugar live in the United States. The people in Hawaii and Puerto Rico produce far more sugar than they consume. They consume very little—small in proportion to their production. It must be borne in mind that as a result of the quota law the people of Puerto Rico and Hawaii receive many millions of dollars—from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year—more than they would receive if they were selling their sugar at the world market price.

Looking at it from a practical angle, realizing that this bill is necessary for the protection of our cane- and beet-sugar producers, it is only fair, reasonable, and proper that the refining activities of the sugar business and the interest of thousands of employees should be also protected.

We must also realize that the employees of the refineries of continental United States receive much higher wages than are paid in these islands, and by "islands" I also include Cuba. In Boston men are paid, so I am informed, from 65 cents per hour to $1.05 per hour, with time and one-half for overtime, and double time for Sundays and holidays. I understand women are paid about 45 cents an hour. Compare this with wages of from 60 cents to $2 a day on the islands. Hours of labor are different than in the islands, employees in the islands being employed longer hours than here. To pass a bill without protecting the interests of the American refineries and their workers would be destructive and disastrous. I am fighting for the employees of the refineries of continental United States. I am fighting to preserve for them the happiness that they now possess. I am fighting for their rights. It must be borne in mind that the refined limits placed upon Puerto Rico and Hawaii constitutes the limit that these islands have ever refined. Under the bill each island is permitted to bring into the United States about 900,000 tons of sugar, of which, in the case of Hawaii, 29,616 tons is refined, and in the case of Puerto Rico, 126,033 tons is refined. We are giving to these islands the limit of production in raw sugar, the largest amount they ever produced, and the same in the case of refined sugar. Being confronted with a practical problem, we have treated them as fairly as they could possibly expect. We are freezing the production of raw sugar here and abroad, and we are justified, in order that the refineries of America and their workers might be protected, in freezing the amount of refined sugar of these islands. The producers of these islands are receiving millions of dollars more on the sale of their sugar here than they would receive if they were subjected to the world market price. They want that, but they do not want our continental refiners to be given practical consideration and protection.

They talk practical considerations in applying a quota on the production and sale of sugar, but when it comes to the refining of sugar they talk theory. They want everything. In this respect their position is not only weak but unfair. They charge discrimination. If the Jones amendment is adopted, the refiners and their workers will be the ones that will be discriminated against. Business and capital investment will be ultimately destroyed, and thousands of persons employed at the present time will be thrown out of work.

If the House accepts the proposed amendment, it will mean the ultimate destruction of this great industry which gives employment to about 16,000 persons at the present time in continental United States, and indirectly to many thousands of others. In my city, Boston, it will mean the destruction of a century-old industry with a pay roll well over $2,000,000 a year and which spends $2,000,000 annually for materials and supplies and pays local taxes of nearly $500,000 a year. The sum total of wages, supplies, freight, advertising, and other expenses adds about $38,000,000 per year to New England's purchasing power. The same applies to other sections of the country where refineries exist.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that when the amendment to strike out paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 207 is offered it will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is, of course, a continuation of the type of sugar legislation which was initiated when we passed the Jones-Costigan Act 3 years ago. There may be some differences of opinion regarding whether the quota system or the tariff system is the best method of protecting the American producer of sugar, but today we have no choice in that regard. We have before us only the question of accepting a bill which puts into effect the quota system.

The committee has worked for many months over this measure, and I am sure everyone here who is interested in the domestic-sugar industry is grateful to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture for his patience and his efforts to help work out what is a very controversial question. Without his efforts, I feel sure we would not be considering this measure today. I am not in entire agreement with all its provisions. I expect to support some amendments which will be offered, but in general this bill does afford protection to the producer of sugar in the United States and at the same time, I believe, adequately protects the consumer.

Theoretically, I am opposed to any restriction upon the production of sugar in the United States. For that reason I would prefer to approach this question from the standpoint of a tariff rather than of a quota system. As I see it, you cannot have a quota system without imposing domestic as well as foreign quotas. Under a tariff adequately protecting the industry, however, it would not be necessary to put any restrictions on domestic production.

However, as I said a few moments ago, we do not have that question before us today. It is a question of taking this bill or getting nothing.

Now, there are some controversial questions which the House must decide in the course of the consideration of this legislation, and as has been indicated by previous speakers, the most controversial of these matters is that of whether or not there shall be a limitation upon the quota of direct-consumption sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico. I have heard all the arguments on both sides of this question. I have learned them all by heart and can repeat them forwards or backwards and there is, of course, something to be said on both sides of the matter.

The able gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] is undoubtedly the best informed Member of this House on the question of beet sugar. We all accord him that honor. He is entitled to the thanks of every producer of sugar beets in the United States for his effective and untiring work on this legislation. He said a while ago in the course of his remarks that it did not make a bit of difference to the producer of beets what position the House took on this question of removing quota restrictions upon direct-consumption sugar from these two areas, and I agree with him on that proposition.

May I say further what he did not say, that there is no community of interest today between the producers of sugar in this country, either cane or beet, and the refiners along the Atlantic coast. There is no community of interest today and there has never been any community of interest. As a matter of fact, up until the time of the original Jones-Costigan Act, the domestic refiners did everything they could to destroy the domestic beet industry. For 40 years they tried their best to put the beet producers of this country out of business. Not only did they oppose every effort to protect beet sugar by tariffs and other beneficial legislation but by the most unfair and misleading propaganda they built up a prejudice against beet sugar which exists to this day. As a result of that prejudice beet sugar sells on the market at a discount of 15 to 20 cents per hundred less than cane although its qualities and composition are identical. Yet in spite of that record they have the colossal nerve to ask the producers of beet sugar to assist them in getting legislation to which they are not entitled and which they could never get on its merits or rather lack of merits. They are today asking beet producers to support a provision in the bill which we all know will result in a veto and no legislation. In other words they are playing the beet producers for a bunch of suckers.

They are asking for what amounts to an embargo on refined sugar from one part of our Nation on the claim of unfair competition, when as a matter of fact they have never been able to even make out a case for tariff protection against foreign tropical countries.

Now, what are the facts in this connection? A great deal has been said here today about the difference in cost of refining between the tropical countries and the United States. A great deal has been said about the item of labor, as if that were involved in this question. Let us look at the facts insofar as labor is concerned. There are less than 14,000 men employed in the refining of cane sugar in this country and the average annual wage is a little over $1,000 per year, according to the Bureau of the Census. If Hawaii and Puerto Rico were permitted to import into this country in a refined state all the quota they are given under this bill, they would bring in 1,736,000 tons of refined sugar. At present they can bring in 155,000 tons so the net increase if all the quota were refined would be 1,581,000 tons. That is a decrease of approximately a third so in terms of labor this could not possibly mean the displacement of more than three or four thousand of the employees who are engaged in this industry today. This is the size of the labor problem involved.

There is no industry in this country in which a smaller proportion of the volume of business goes to labor than the business of sugar refining. In the hearings on this bill, at page 308, there was submitted a table compiled by Messrs. Weingarten & Co., of New York, a brokerage house in that city, compiled for the purpose of showing the varying impact of social-security taxes which would fall upon different classes of business and, of course, the class of business whose labor costs were the smallest would have the smallest burden to carry in that respect. In this table it is shown that only 3.8 percent of the volume of sugar goes to labor, while the percentage in other industries is much larger, for instance, in meat packing it is 6.8 percent, automobile manufacturing 10 percent, department stores 17.8 percent, and railroads 50.2 percent. So there is no industry in this country where the item of labor is of any less consequence than it is in the matter of sugar refining.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Not at this time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes. Now, let us proceed to a discussion of the question as to whether tropical refining is cheaper than refining on the mainland. The facts that have been brought out at various hearings before the Tariff Commission very clearly show that the cost of refining in the Tropics is just as high as it is in this country.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. In just a moment.

When the Tariff Act of 1930 was under consideration, the very, very terrible Smoot-Hawley Act, as I have heard it called so many times on the other side of the aisle, the sugar refiners in this country were unable to make out a case before a Republican-controlled Ways and Means Committee of the House or a Republican-controlled Finance Committee of the Senate. They were unable to make out a case and show that the importation of refined sugar should have any greater protection than raw sugar.

In other words, the Commission found that the cost of refining in the Tropics, particularly in Cuba—and it is substantially the same in Hawaii and Puerto Rico—is practically the same as in this country. The refiners were not satisfied with that. In 1931 they went before the Republican-controlled Tariff Commission, a bipartisan commission it is true, under a Republican administration, and asked for an increase in the duty on refined sugar upon the ground that it costs more to refine sugar in this country than in the Tropics, and here is what the Tariff Commission found, as announced on July 11, 1932:

> That the difference between domestic and foreign costs of refining is not such as to justify the Commission in specifying either an increase or a decrease in the rate of duty on refined sugar, or at least until after the Commission has finished the complete sugar investigation. Any change in the rate of duty which might result from the present refined sugar investigation would not be sufficient either to increase or decrease materially the imports of refined sugar from Cuba or the amount of labor employed in the domestic refineries.

The refiners were not satisfied with that decision, and in 1934 they again brought the matter up before the Tariff Commission operating under this administration, and asked for an increase in the rate on refined sugar. The Tariff Commission at that time held and reported to the President on January 22, 1934, that no change was warranted in the tariff differential as between raw and refined sugar.

Nothing appeared in the hearings, as I recall it, that in any way contradicted those findings of a great fact-finding body whose word is accepted as final on matters affecting the tariff. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, insofar as tariff protection is concerned, is it not a fact that Hawaii and Puerto Rico share in tariff benefits, if any, to the same extent as the continental producer?

Mr. HOPE. They do. They share in these tariff benefits because they are a part of the United States, and for that reason they are entitled to have the same consideration in this bill to which every other part of the United States is entitled. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, because my time is limited to 5 minutes, I ask that I be not called upon to yield. I have listened with a great deal of interest to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], in his remarks on the floor this afternoon, and to his statement that under this bill Hawaii and Puerto Rico are discriminated against, they are not treated as citizens of the United States, under the same flag. The interesting feature that occurs to me is that apparently my colleague, despite his long attendance at the hearings before this committee, has overshot the mark, as have those others of the committee who may agree with him, in the statement that this bill constitutes unfair discriminatory restrictions against the two insular possessions.

The quotas provided in this bill lie with equal force on all continental United States and on the entire domestic area producing sugar. Efforts were made by the committee to listen to every side, and to bring about the fairest adjustment under a quota system possible, as the only efficient means of stabilizing and retaining a market strong enough to permit both the continental and the insular sugar producer to enjoy remunerative prices above the world market price for sugar.

It is an interesting commentary that the great States of New York and Texas were producing beets at one time, and Texas both beets and sugarcane, and it is interesting also to now find that under this bill they are not permitted to resume that activity, and then hear the claim that the bill discriminates against Hawaii and Puerto Rico to a greater extent than it does against the great States of this Union.

I shall not have time in the brief period assigned to me to go into a discussion of this bill, but I do ask the members of the committee who have shown enough interest to sit here throughout this debate to at least read the extension of my remarks in the RECORD tomorrow. There are two very pertinent questions to be considered by the House when it comes finally to vote on the proposed amendments to be offered to the bill which came out of the committee. As a member of a great legislative committee of the House, and on which I am proud to serve, I am fully cognizant of the deliberate, painstaking care with which the committee went into all of the questions raised with reference to the legislation, which, in my opinion, at least so far as my 10 years' experience goes, is the most controversial of any this body has been called upon to consider.

I find it passing strange that here at this late hour in the session, after the bill has been reported from the committee following literally months of hearings, during which time every possible angle was given consideration, that the departments of the administrative branch, who have raised this question now in opposition to the deliberate result of that committee's best efforts, have brought about a situation where now at the close of Congress, in a comparatively few moments, they put the issue squarely before us, only after a hard fight to even get the sugar bill before the Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KLEBERG. I stand before you now not only as a member of the legislative committee but a Member of the body to which all of you belong and a part of the Government of the United States in its three great branches. We represent the legislative branch of this Government. All of the departments are coordinate and they have the united purpose of serving the people of the United States. But there is nothing I can find in the general picture which entitles us to have at least the feeling of having received proper consideration when, added to the fact that we had to bring this bill out after a fight, we now find ourselves faced with the fact that the Chief Executive proposes to veto this measure. Everyone here knows that the President has the veto power. It was, therefore, not necessary for that to be announced, but it seems strange that we should have presented to us premature notice of his action in connection with this piece of legislation.

It is true he has had departmental advice, but it is not true that the departments who advised him or those who conferred with those departments gave the painstaking care to a study of this question and this particular legislation which the Committee on Agriculture has given. As a Member of this House, out of respect for preserving its integrity, it is my purpose, having voted in the committee to report this bill out as it is now presented, to support the well-considered determination to which I arrived and the conclusion reached by the committee, with the exception of one member, who did not vote on the bill at that time. I speak with no ire and no choler. I speak, however, with a great solemnity of purpose that makes it seem to me of transcendent importance that if in the future the representative branch of this Government is going to function effectively for the interest of those they represent, we on this occasion should take our position firmly and squarely, as we would under less troublesome circumstances, and come to our own conclusion and stand by our guns.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with full respect for the President of the United States and for the great responsibilities which rest upon his shoulders, may I state that I firmly believe that good government under our form of government entails a proper coordination between the three branches—executive, legislative, and judicial. Nothing in my remarks should be construed as a break between the President of the United States and myself, a servant and representative of the people whom I represent in my congressional district in the State of Texas and my fellow citizens at large in the United States of America, including Puerto Rico and the Territory of Hawaii; but, Mr. Chairman and fellow members of the committee, I do not want to be understood in any other than the true light of my earnest conviction which finds me involved in an utter disagreement with the President of the United States and the departments which oppose the House Committee on Agriculture's final conclusions as represented in this bill with the restrictions on the importation of refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii as set out in the bill under consideration.

I have every desire as a Democrat and as a citizen of the United States to see a successful administration of our Government in its executive branch by our Democratic President. I have an equally high desire to see the legislative function successfully performed by a Democratic Congress, and because of that, and for no other reason, I find myself in complete disagreement with the departments and the President with reference both to their desire to strike out of the bill the restrictions on direct-consumption sugar applicable to Puerto Rico and Hawaii and the means used to accomplish that end on Representatives in the Congress. At best, Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to go along with the continuation of the rigid application of quotas to domestic producing areas.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say at this juncture that the most difficult situation in which I find myself is that of being in opposition to an amendment which will be offered by my admired, dear, and long-time friend, MARVIN JONES, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. I deeply esteem him and hope he will be tolerant with me in that. I am sure he knows that divergent viewpoints between us, however vehement we might become in debate, will in no wise abrogate or mar either the friendship or admiration I have for him. The statement made by the distinguished gentleman, my good friend from Kansas, CLIFFORD HOPE, that no damage would be done by removal of the restrictive provisions of the bill under controversy leads me to believe that he has made little study of the real facts with reference to the United States cane-sugar-refining industry.

This industry is now operating at less than 65 percent capacity. The average melt of the 3 years under the Sugar Control Act, 1934–36, was 63 percent—4,402,000 tons. The year 1936 was 64 percent—4,515,000 tons.

This is much less than the refiners' production of earlier years. In 1925 the melt was 5,748,000 tons, and in no year until after 1930 did it fall below 5,000,000 tons. The gentleman from Kansas suggested that if the restrictions were removed from Puerto Rico and Hawaii it would merely mean the importation of a small amount in excess of 1,800,000 tons of cane sugar for direct consumption. I hope my friend will take his pencil and subtract that sum from the 4,515,000 tons refined in 1936. No industry operating at as high costs and under such burden of fixed charges can withstand such a terrific competitive loss.

The chief factors bringing about the reduction which has occurred in continental refiners' production have been increased imports of refined sugar from insular areas, such as Cuba, together with American insular areas. In addition, but minor in effect, were the rise and effect of tariff-protected sugar and the vanishing of export demand for refined sugar.

The reasons behind these factors include lower labor charges and fixed charges in the insular areas; after 1930, the tariff differential between refined and raw sugar, which tended to promote offshore refining. Added to these, the general decline in farm prices and demand for farm produce, tending to turn farmers from other production to sugar beets, increasing economic nationalism, rising trade barriers, and the depression reduced incomes, which seriously affected consumption. The large capacity of the seaboard refiner was developed by the exigencies of the World War. The successive reduction in output left a smaller number of units over which the tremendous overhead could be spread. This has successively tended to increase the refining cost per unit and thereby lessens the ability of the continental industry to meet competition of its rival in the American refined-sugar market.

I hold, Mr. Chairman, that the destruction of the continental market for cane sugar is the only objective to be obtained by voting up the amendment to be offered by my distinguished and highly esteemed friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. Cane-sugar producers in the continental United States have their only market for the raw product in the refining industry, inasmuch as we do not consume raw sugar.

The main argument advanced by those who insist upon the removal of refined-sugar quotas for Hawaii and Puerto Rico is that they demand equality of treatment under the flag. They argue that, inasmuch as there are no trade barriers between individual States on the processing of their respective products for marketing elsewhere, that there should be none for the refining of sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico for marketing in continental United States. I resist the theoretical phase of such an argument which wholly ignores the objective of the quota system or what, in fact, the quota system is.

This quota legislation does not seek the establishment of a political status, nor does it raise racial or citizenship questions, but deals wholly and solely with an economical problem in an effort to solve it on an economically fair basis. Its very essence is the stabilization of the industry, together with those markets through limitations of both production and processing. It makes allocations by production limitation to each area which supplies the continental market. As a starting point, it must inevitably take the entire industry as it existed in 1934 as a basis for a beginning. So the establishment of the quota system and perforce limitation of expansion of groups or elements therein would conform to economic law and fair dealing.

The limitation of expansion is applied in the case of Puerto Rico and Hawaii on the fairest possible basis, that of taking the highest peak of the refined sugar processed in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, both prior to the enactment of the law of 1934 as the limit set up in this bill.

Regarding conditions extant in 1934, the restrictions on Hawaii and Puerto Rico will bear honest comparison with those levied on the States of the Union; and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that they are far less severe. I again call attention, by example, to my State, Texas, which formerly produced both sugar beets and sugarcane, not now allowed under the quota to reenter that field of produce. Massachusetts and New York once grew beets to make sugar, and they are likewise barred to reenter that industry. The quota system merely pegs the industry with a few minor readjustments to its status of 1934. This is done on the equitable plan which permits no area or factor in the industry to use the profits and benefits under the quota system to destroy or injure the business of any other area or group. The question does not resolve itself, Mr. Chairman, as to whether all areas or groups under the bill are treated by identical formulas but rather taking into consideration the objective of obtaining for each area an equitable and economical result after consideration of all of the circumstances in the composite picture.

If the restrictions are removed on Hawaii and Puerto Rico as to direct consumption sugar, the underlying and essential principle of the entire quota system will be disrupted and violated. If that is done these two islands will be given a tremendously preferential right over the continental refining industry, which, in my opinion, will finally destroy it, and with it the market to which continental producers must go with their product. This because the quota system denies continental refiners from obtaining their material elsewhere. The quota plan permits these insular American citizens to ship to the continental market the maximum amount they have ever shipped prior to 1934, but, on the other hand, it restricts the volume of continental refining to a figure tantamount to 60 percent of their capacity and far below their performance over a long period of years.

The applied principle is identical. The discrimination or inequality, if any, when final results are reviewed, is against continental refining and not in its favor and is far more fair and reasonable to Hawaii and Puerto Rico. They at least are not required to cut down nor are they caused to do so from their previous performance. They were merely precluded from expansion of their shipments to the continent.

In exchange for this restrictive provision, if there should be involved a sacrifice on the part of Puerto Rico and Hawaii because of the limitation on the quantity of raw sugar which they produce to a reasonable figure based on past performance, these islands are receiving subsidies from the people of the continent amounting to around $1,000,000 annually.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, no State in the Union in continental United States receives comparable benefits under the operation of the Sugar Act. No other sector of the entire sugar industry enjoys greater prosperity than do Puerto Rico and Hawaii. It seems unreasonable to cry discrimination when the measure before us simply provides that they are not to use that prosperity, paid for by American consumers under the quota system, to destroy the old-established continental refining industry which constitutes the only market which the continental producers of cane sugar have. This, Mr. Chairman, would be more than discrimination. It would be grossest inequity tantamount to malpractice. I do not propose to go into recriminations or the criticisms which inevitably rear the ugly head of sectionalism. On the contrary, I have attempted with great solemnity of purpose to present the picture developed in my mind after long and exhaustive hearings before the House Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member.

Mr. Chairman, these are my conclusions, and upon them I will cast my vote and because of them I make this plea. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I approach a discussion of the merits of this bill this afternoon with a little hesitation because of the limited time at my disposal. You Members who have served for any number of years realize that I have arisen in my place in this House on many occasions to defend the American sugar industry and to do whatever I could to bring about its ever-increasing development.

Something has been said by the previous speakers about the discrimination that is supposed to exist in this bill against certain producers in our island possessions. I would like to discuss that particular phase of the question for a moment. The gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. KING], a gentleman of great ability for whom I have the greatest respect and no little affection, made the plea that the people whom he represents were being discriminated against in the committee bill. Now, let us see about that. The gentleman bases his opinion upon the fact that certain restrictions upon the development of the sugar industry in Hawaii are carried in this bill. The gentleman entirely overlooks the fact that every element of the sugar industry, either in continental United States or in our island possessions, regardless of what that element is, is also restricted in this bill and has been restricted in its development and in operations, since this administration put upon the statute books the first sugar-control bill.

Mr. Chairman, when the present administration took over the management of the governmental affairs of this country there existed in my home city three large beet-sugar refining plants. The beets which those plants refined were grown by the farmers of my district within a radius of 20 miles of those plants. The first sugar-control bill, Mr. Chairman, resulted in the closing and dismantling of one of those plants. More recent legislation and the announcement of policy upon the part of the administration this year resulted in the closing of another one of those plants, and today in my city there is but one refining plant still in operation. I should say if there has been discrimination against any element of the sugar industry anywhere under the American flag it has been directed against the industry of the mainland.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Hawaii to the fact that this bill does not in any way provide for a reduction of any of the sugar activities in those islands. It still permits Hawaii to refine 29,000 tons of sugar each year, and they are still permitted the same quota of raw sugar production which they had last year. There is no discrimination in the bill as it is now written against either Hawaii or Puerto Rico. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there is discrimination in anything proposed in the bill or proposed by others which is not now in the bill, it will be found in the amendment to be offered to the bill by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], a gentleman for whom I have more than a great respect, a gentleman who has always dealt fairly with the domestic sugar industry so far as he could, and who will in the years to come be known as one of the great chairmen of this great committee. He will—I assume upon request—offer an amendment which does provide for a discrimination, but it is not a discrimination against the sugar activities or sugar industries of either Puerto Rico or Hawaii.

Mr. Chairman, we have something more than 14,000 American citizens working in the great cane-sugar refining plants located in continental United States, in which many thousands of our American people have invested their savings. The employees in these factories live in this country; they hold jobs in this country. The amendment which will be offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] would, in the final analysis if adopted and enacted into law, result in the ultimate destruction of that investment and throw out of employment those 14,000 men of whom I speak.

Today Hawaii is authorized to refine 29,000 tons of sugar. This is all the refining capacity of the Hawaiian factories. In order to increase that amount, this possession of ours would find it necessary to build other refining plants. A similar situation exists in Puerto Rico. If we increase the quota for direct-consumption sugar coming from that possession it means that they must necessarily build in those islands additional refining plants.

What will we be asked to do when that amendment is offered? We will be asked through legislation to declare a death sentence upon the investments made in this country; we will be asked to destroy plants which already exist in this country; we will be asked to throw out of employment American citizens living here who now have jobs. We will be asked to do these things in order that people living in our possessions may have the authority and the opportunity to build in the place of the things we would destroy in this country other institutions of like character that their people may have opportunities for investment and that their citizens may have opportunities for more jobs.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there is any discrimination to be found anywhere in this bill or which will be proposed by any amendment, that it is a discrimination against American citizens living in continental United States and not in the possessions of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, there is another phase of the situation that ought to be discussed at this time, it seems to me, and I want to carry the minds of the members of this committee back to the days when Secretary of Agriculture Wallace appeared before the committees of Congress and testified to his belief that the sugar industry of this country was an inefficient industry, that it ought never to have been started in this country, that it ought to be destroyed. He also made the statement at the time, Mr. Chairman, "that it does not seem to be politically possible to destroy this industry at the moment."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think there has never been so much harmony, so much cooperation between the various elements of the sugar industry of this country as there is at this time. I grant the truth of the things said by my friend the gentleman from Kansas awhile ago relative to the refiners; and I am perfectly aware of the fact that in days gone by they have not played fair with the sugar-beet industry.

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I may add, however, that these refiners have finally come to the realization that if they are to be permitted to live industrially they must cast their lot and their political support with representatives in the House and in the Senate from the great beet- and cane-sugar areas of this country. They realize that if they are going to continue to live they must necessarily have the support of those who represent these sections and States. In the past I have resented their activities, their actions, their whole attitude toward the domestic productive industry, but that is water over the wheel. We are faced with a situation which in the last analysis means the destruction of one part of the sugar industry in this country. I refer, of course, to the refining end of the industry. So far as I know I have never even met a man who owned a share of stock in this industry, but I am concerned in preserving the investments in the refining industry in this country. I am concerned in preserving the jobs of these 14,000 American citizens who work and spend their wages in this country. If this industry is destroyed, those men who today are actively supporting this measure and who are voicing their approval of this bill, men who come from sections of the country where refining industries exist, will then no longer be interested in maintaining the great sugar-beet and cane-growing activities of this country which mean so much to the American farmers. When that time comes, when our forces are reduced to only those States which now produce beet and cane sugar, if Mr. Wallace is still Secretary of Agriculture, he will then find it politically possible to eliminate the sugar industry of this country entirely.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes; very gladly.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does not the gentleman believe that if the domestic refiners are put out of business that that will leave a monopoly in the hands of foreign refiners and that the price of sugar will be increased correspondingly?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I wish I had time to go into that. It would have a great effect upon the price of sugar, as history has taught us. I refer any doubting Member to the year 1920, during a part of which when American beet sugar was off the market and when the importers of offshore refined sugar had an opportunity to fix, without competition, the price of sugar to the American consumers. The American housewife at that time had to pay as high as 32 cents a pound for the sugar she bought. Compare that with the 5 or 5½ cents per pound she pays when the domestic industry is flourishing. I commend that statement to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], who this afternoon expressed an interest in the consuming public. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, it is rather difficult to cover all the points in this bill in the short time allotted to me. I listened with interest to the well-informed gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] when he said that the refined cost in the United States was less than the refined cost in Cuba. In other words, it cost more to refine sugar in Cuba or at least as much as it does in the United States.

The details of the cost per hundred pounds of refining sugar in the United States and Cuba were reported in the United States Tariff Commission Table 56, Report 73, for the period 1929 to 1931, which is the latest information we have available. That shows the average refining cost in the United States to be 0.6591 and in Cuba 0.581. So that argument falls by the wayside.

Then we get down to the question of prices to the consumer. When the Jones-Costigan Act went into effect in 1925 the price to the consumer was 5.448 per pound refined, and retail 7.2. In 1933 to 1936 the average price to the consumer of refined sugar was 5.4 to 5.6. So that under the provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act, which this bill will continue, the price of sugar was stabilized and the cost to the consumer is less than under provisions existing previous to the enactment of those provisions.

Let us get down to the proposition in which I am interested and that is the labor provision. I hold in my hand a letter I received this afternoon from the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Green, in which he says:

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am taking the liberty of sending you this short note, because the American Federation of Labor is deeply interested in the protection of the economic welfare of the workers employed in sugar refineries in the United States. I understand the Agriculture Committee has reported a measure for consideration and action by the House of Representatives. I sincerely hope this bill may provide such adequate restrictions upon the importation of refined sugar from Cuba as may be necessary in order to protect wage standards and provide employment in the sugar-refining industry in the United States. It would seem but fair and just that such reasonable limitations against the importation of refined sugar from our insular possessions as circumstances may require ought to be incorporated in the measure.

I will appreciate it very much if these recommendations in behalf of labor may be given favorable consideration.

Sincerely yours,

WM. GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. LORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that it was no small task to bring this bill out from the Committee on Agriculture. I want to go back to the beginning of the hearings and call attention to page 364 thereof, at which time Mr. Robins, of the Department of Agriculture, refused to testify before the Committee on Agriculture. The gentleman from Kansas and myself insisted that a member of the Department testify. He did not want to testify for the record. Now, that very Department and those men want to impose a restriction upon the continental United States. They want you to take out section 207. They want you to allow refined sugar to come into the United States unrestricted, yet they did not have the nerve to testify before the committee until we forced them to do so. When they get control of the refined-sugar factories and drop the price of sugar—run our industry out—up will go the price as was done during and after the World War 27 cents per pound. Please do not allow this to happen.

Then what happened? When we did report a bill, they even went to the Rules Committee and to the leaders of the House and said, "We do not want a bill to be reported until it has been amended as we want it."

Mr. Chairman, I say it is about time that we as Representatives of the people of the United States legislate as we see fit and not let other people hand bills to us to be passed. If this bill had been refused a rule because it was not in the form as demanded by the departments, we might just as well have said, "Let the departments write all legislation and when drafted hand it to the Rules Committee." You do not need us Congressmen or any committee work, so we will be more than pleased to go home. If we are not going to be allowed our constitutional prerogatives, please do not make us suffer. Let us go home. Is not that ridiculous? But, after all, that is just what they tried and are still trying here.

They say the President will veto this bill if subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 207 are not stricken out. I do not believe this because he stated in his message to Congress:

The Jones-Costigan Act has been useful and effective and it is my belief that its principles should again be made effective. I therefore recommend to the Congress the enactment of the sugar quota system and its necessary complements, which will restore the operations of the principles on which the Jones-Costigan Act was based.

In a message to Congress dated February 8, 1934, President Roosevelt recommended the passage of sugar legislation. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, in a press release at that time, stated:

The administration recognized that domestic beet and cane producers will suffer the disastrous effect of further price declines unless the impact of insular production on the domestic market is modified through a definite restriction of shipments.

The result was the Jones-Costigan Act. This law has proven to be a lifesaver to all. It restricted the shipment of refined sugar from all offshore areas, including Cuba and Hawaii, and rightly so, for the protection of both labor and the consumer.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture which was appointed to consider the sugar question agrees with the President of the United States. We believe that the principles of the Jones-Costigan Act should be continued. We held hearings and heard this problem discussed from every possible angle. Representatives of all sides were heard. After this discussion and a careful consideration of the testimony in executive session the subcommittee reported a sugar bill. The full committee considered the subcommittee's finding, and, with a few changes, reported the bill, which is now before this House.

The Democratic platform in one part states:

We will continue, as in the past, to give adequate protection to our farmers and manufacturers against unfair competition or dumping on our shores commodities and goods produced abroad by cheap labor or subsidized by foreign governments.

We in the Agricultural Committee reported out this bill, which does exactly as the President requested in his message. It extends the principles of the Jones-Costigan Act. It follows out the promises of the Democratic platform of 1936. And I am certain that cloaked undercover news claiming a Presidential veto have no foundation any more than many other bluffs that have been attempted by some of the "brain trusters" who are on the pay roll of the insular and foreign sugar monopolists. Do not be frightened by such rumors. Stand up like men and pass the legislation that a unanimous committee reported after months and months of serious study.

If you do this the beet and sugar growers will be thankful, the consumers will be thankful, but most of all union labor—the men and women in continental America who labor for their daily bread in the sugar industry, some 75,000 of them—will be everlastingly grateful. I thank the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. William Green, for his kind letter to me in behalf of labor, and assure him I will continue to fight for organized labor as I have always done in the past.

I have heard the Delegate from Hawaii talk about labor conditions in the island of Hawaii. Let me quote what the Department of Labor has to say about that. I quote from a bulletin of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics on labor conditions in the Territory of Hawaii—Bulletin No. 534, pages 14 and 15. The source of labor for the sugarcane industry in the Territory of Hawaii has shifted many times, being originally the Hawaiian Islands, and subsequently China, Japan, Portugal, Spain, Puerto Rico, and Korea. The present tendency is to depend almost exclusively on the Philippine Islands as the source of supply.

There is much discussion and a considerable feeling as to the advisability of the continuance of this immigration. The rapid development of the pineapple industry makes it no longer solely a sugarcane question. Formerly the sugar growers engaged the Filipino on his native heath and paid for his transportation to Hawaii, but this practice has been abandoned. The Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association now has its agents in the Philippines engaging labor, but these workers must pay their own way to Hawaii. Upon arrival, they are given a contract or agreement that if they will work on the sugar plantations for a period of 3 years, their return expense to the Philippines, should they wish to return, will be paid by the sugar planters' association.

From the plantation managers' point of view, Filipino labor is reasonably satisfactory, although there is not complete unanimity of opinion among such managers. For instance, a manager of a plantation on the island of Hawaii said to his board of directors:

"We were well supplied with labor all through the season and work was kept well in hand. Our Filipinos are a restless lot, changing around from place to place. We trust that the suggested change in the contracts, whereby it is required of them to stay at least 1 year continuously at the place they are assigned to, will work out to the benefit of all concerned."

The following statement from an official of the association is interesting as bearing upon this question:

"With the Filipino labor there is a continuous and from the standpoint of employers undesirable amount of shifting from one plantation to another. Due to the fact that Filipinos have relatives in great numbers and to remote degrees of consanguinity, we find men shifting from one plantation to another, giving as their excuse that they want to be with a cousin, uncle, or brother, or some other connection on a second plantation. In our agreements with the laborer which we make after the arrival of Filipinos in Hawaii, we promise to return them to the Philippines after 3 years' work on plantations, providing they have complied with the terms of the work agreement. These terms require that they must have worked 1 year on one plantation and do not prohibit their moving between plantations. We send back as having completed the contract hundreds and even thousands of men whose work record must be secured from two, three, four, and maybe more plantations during the period of employment here. Within the last year we have caused our work agreement to be slightly changed, requiring the man to work the first year on the plantation to which first assigned, but even then a transfer is permitted, providing the man applies for it and it is approved, so that if he has good reason to move he may do so without forfeiting his rights. If he doesn't desire to apply for the transfer, he may move anyhow, but of course under those conditions he wouldn't have the benefits of his work agreement."

A study of length of service in Hawaii of Filipinos who returned to the Philippines for various reasons during the labor year October 1, 1928, to September 30, 1929, discloses the following:

Of 132 cases of sick men reported to the sugar planters' association as being discharged from hospitals but unable to go back to work, and desirous of returning to their homes in the Philippines, the length of service on sugar plantations averaged 51 months; their average stay on the islands was 65 months, and they had worked on an average of 1.7 different plantations.

Of the contract Filipinos who had fulfilled their contracts, 1,922 desired to be returned during the year. The average sojourn of these men on the islands was 54 months, their average service on sugar plantations was 53½ months, and they had worked on an average of 1.4 plantations. The required service to secure the right to free return is 36 months of 20 days, or 720 days' work on plantations.

The labor conditions in Hawaii are so bad that even the cheap coolie contract labor could not stand it, and they had to change from county to county in order to bring about the labor conditions they wished. Will we be a party to such discrimination against United States laboring men?

So much for Hawaii. I could go on and on and show how they are not fair to labor. That the United States continental laborer is being gouged by this group of scheming monopolistic manipulators of human flesh for their own selfish gains.

How about Puerto Rico? The Puerto Ricans pay no income tax; they are not subject to the Social Security Act; they are exempt, so I am informed, from the provisions of the new wage and hour law. Still we poured $20,000,000 of relief money in those islands. Now they want to wreck the American market and destroy our refining industry, throw thousands of our laboring men on the continent out of work so that they may use their cheap tropical labor in the islands, and then sell their sugar on our market at a high price. I know you representatives of democracy, who want fair play, will not allow this to be done. Vote against the amendment that is to be offered to take subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 207 out of this bill, and give our own continental labor a break.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been given very careful thought and consideration, not only by the members of the subcommittee but by the members of the full Committee on Agriculture. The bill as reported to the House is the result of months of careful and thoughtful consideration and after the views of all interested parties were placed before the committee.

This is not a perfect bill. No particular group in the sugar industry is entirely satisfied with it. It is a compromise among the various groups, but it is a bill which the committee feels deals fairly with all the groups.

A good deal has been said about discrimination against Hawaii and Puerto Rico under the terms of this bill. I do not believe those Territories are discriminated against, because they are permitted to import direct-consumption sugar into this country in volume as great as they ever sent into continental United States at any time in the history of the country. They are not having their refining of sugar reduced or curtailed. They are permitted to bring into continental United States as much refined or direct-consumption sugar as they have ever brought in here. They say they are being discriminated against because they are not permitted to increase the importation of direct-consumption sugar into this country.

Mr. Chairman, if that is discrimination, may I say that the beet-sugar industry in this country is being discriminated against far more than is either Hawaii or Puerto Rico. In my own State of Wisconsin there are refineries that have been closed for several years. These refineries have not opened even under the Jones-Costigan law and probably will not be opened on account of the quota system that will be in effect after this bill is enacted into law. Those refineries have the capacity to refine beet sugar, but under the operation of this bill they will be prevented from operating because we limit the supply of beets, and when you limit the supply of beets in a beet area we are to that extent limiting the operation of the beet-sugar refineries. The beet-sugar refineries are all forced to curtail their production. Our refineries cannot import beets from some other country. That is ridiculous because the cost is prohibitive.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. The refineries in the gentleman's district which are closed are, of course, beet-sugar refineries?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is right.

Mr. HOPE. Were they closed as a result of the Jones-Costigan Act or were they closed before that time?

Mr. BOILEAU. I think I made that clear. They were closed before the Jones-Costigan Act went into operation, but they have not opened since and they probably will not open. The reason they will not open is because we reduce the available supply of beets. If there were no quota provisions in effect and if they could produce beets around the beet-sugar refineries, they would be in operation.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that the beet areas have never produced the quotas allotted to them under the Jones-Costigan law?

Mr. BOILEAU. I believe that is true because of the fact they were so demoralized a few years ago they just started to build up.

Mr. LANZETTA. They did not produce the quota allotted to them under the Jones-Costigan law.

Mr. BOILEAU. I have just finished answering the gentleman on that question.

Mr. HOPE. Have the factories of which the gentleman speaks made any effort to get a quota under the Jones-Costigan Act?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not know. I cannot speak with certainty in that regard. I may say, however, if you want to talk about discrimination, that you are telling the beet refineries of this country "You cannot produce beet sugar" because you are limiting the supply. You are saying they cannot produce an abundance of beets. You are restricting the amount of beets that can be produced, and to the same extent you are thereby restricting the amount of sugar that can be refined.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is not the gentleman's argument fallacious?

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman may think it is.

Mr. LANZETTA. In one breath the gentleman states that the beet areas have been unable to produce their quotas, and in the next breath he says that his State is being restricted in the production of sugar beets under this bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Oh, I did not say they had been unable to do so.

Mr. LANZETTA. It is a fact that they did not produce their quotas.

Mr. BOILEAU. I say they have been unable to produce their quotas because of the demoralized price of a few years ago. They went down in their production and are just starting to build up. The gentleman should know, if he does not know, that the beet areas in this country are capable of producing a whole lot more sugar than they are producing. My own State has reduced its production tremendously in recent years.

Mr. LANZETTA. I do know that the refineries which the gentleman complains of are not placed under any restriction in this bill. They may operate if they wish to.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am not complaining about any refineries. I am saying that in those areas where you restrict production, by the same law which restricts the production you restrict the amount of sugar which can be refined. This is just like two and two are four; it makes sense. You are restricting production, and I am not saying it is unwise, and I am not complaining of it. I think it is necessary for the stabilization of the industry that we have this bill, but we are restricting the production of beet sugar.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. A few minutes ago the gentleman made the statement that the beet-sugar manufacturers were not filling their quotas. I have a beet-sugar refiner up in the Red River Valley in my country. A farmer up there cannot get a quota unless some other farmer drops out. We could use two quotas up in our country if we had a chance to sell the beets.

Mr. BOILEAU. Absolutely. There are thousands of acres right around the gentleman's own territory which have not been planted to beets but which could be planted to beets if the growers were given a quota. If we increased the number of beets available, we would thereby be increasing the amount of sugar which could be refined in these refineries. We are restricting the operations of our local refineries not by putting into the law that the refineries are deprived of the right to refine so much sugar but because the effect of the legislation is that we deprive the refineries of the sugar beets. They cannot make beet sugar out of apples or potatoes, they must have sugar beets. When we restrict the production of sugar beets we restrict the production of beet sugar.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. May I supplement the statement of the gentleman by saying that in this bill we are also restricting the production of cane sugar in continental United States.

Mr. BOILEAU. Absolutely. It all comes down to this, that the sugar industry as a whole was suffering. Then we passed the Jones-Costigan Act, which worked out so well that they want more of it, they want a better bill, they want this type of legislation. If we are going to help the sugar industry, we must stabilize the entire industry. If we are going to make sugar production profitable in Hawaii and Puerto Rico and all the other producing areas, we should at the same time not try to do all we can to disrupt the existing refining business but should try to stabilize the industry to the point where it was before we put the Jones-Costigan Act into operation. We should try to stabilize the industry, and we can stabilize it by using the same type of legislation to affect the refining industry as we are putting into effect with reference to production, that is, this bill.

This is a fair proposition. Puerto Rico and Hawaii are getting refined-sugar quotas as large as any amounts that have ever been produced in the history of the islands. Why should they have more at the expense of the industry on the mainland? We are not treating them differently than we are treating other American citizens. We are restricting the operations of all classes of producers of sugar, and we are also by restricting production thereby restricting the operations and the production of the refineries.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does not the gentleman think that we should give larger quotas to the beet- and cane-sugar producers of the United States, so as to keep the refineries both in the gentleman's district and other districts in operation?

Mr. BOILEAU. No. I may say that this bill is an attempt to compromise differences of opinion, as I stated in the beginning of my remarks. I believe this bill is about as good a bill as it is humanly possible to draw, considering all the conflicting interests involved. I think every group is given fair consideration, but no group has received as much as it wants. I think this is a good compromise and is a bill we can get behind and support. [Applause.]

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX].

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, on a number of occasions I have expressed my opinion concerning various pieces of legislation which have been adopted by the Congress in the past 4 years regulating and restricting production of various commodities in the United States. I may repeat at this time my own personal position and the position of my State, not only with reference to the regulation of the sugar business but all regulatory and restrictive legislation.

My position and the position of my State is that the American market belongs first to the American producer. [Applause.] Our position is that the American farmer, the American manufacturer, and the American producer should be permitted to produce to their full capacity, and then, if the consumption requirements of this country exceed the production ability of the country, the excess should be allocated to other countries which in turn trade with this Nation.

My objection to the present bill, Mr. Chairman, is that it begins the allocation of quotas at the wrong end. Some gentleman during the course of this debate has pointed out that it is necessary to restrict and quota the production of sugar in the United States because of a reciprocal-trade agreement with the Republic of Cuba. I concur in that view as to why this course has been adopted, and I call your attention to the fact that continental United States produces less than one-third of its own consumption requirements of sugar; and yet in this bill American producers are restricted and limited as to the amount of sugar which they may produce, in order that the Republic of Cuba may have some 2,000,000 tons of sugar to ship into this country.

I want to call your attention to an incongruous fact that occurred in my district and in my State about a year and a half ago as the result of the restrictions on the production of sugar. Bearing in mind the fact that this country produces less than one-third of its own requirements, the sugar producers of my State and of my district in 1936 were forced to pour 1,000,000 gallons of molasses into the Everglades and waste it, when the requirements of this country were three times its production capacity.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. In just a moment.

Now, a great deal has been said during the course of this debate about discrimination for and against Hawaii and Puerto Rico. A great deal has been said about the necessity of treating these Territories and possessions as American citizens. So far as my State is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I want to reverse that position. My State asks to be treated as a Territory. If you will give us the same treatment that you have given Hawaii and Puerto Rico, we will be more than pleased. Puerto Rico and Hawaii are both permitted, under this bill, to produce all of the sugar they require for themselves, and then they are given an allotment of sugar that can be shipped into continental United States. On the other hand, my State is restricted to 40 percent of its own consumption. This bill says to the sugar producers of Florida, "You cannot produce the amount of sugar which you yourselves consume, although you have demonstrated the fact that you can produce it both efficiently and profitably. You do not want, you do not need, and you do not ask for a Federal subsidy; you do not need and you do not ask for Federal assistance; nevertheless, you will not be permitted to produce even the amount which you yourselves consume", and, to make sure that we do not, the bill provides upon its face that we not only may not ship in interstate commerce but that we may not market within our own State the sugar that is produced within our own area.

Now, I can understand a program like the A. A. A., where, because of overproduction and consequent decline in price of certain basic commodities, a restriction of production is invoked. But I cannot understand a plan which restricts my State in the production of a necessary element of food when continental United States produces less than one-third of its own requirements of that food element.

I could understand a program which limited unprofitable production in one section of the country, where a subsidy is necessary, so as to permit profitable production in another section where no subsidy is required. Such a program would be in the interest of the consumer. But I fail to see the justice of a plan which limits production and development in that section where the commodity can be produced profitably without a subsidy, just in order that larger quotas may be given to those sections which cannot produce it without a subsidy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. The able gentleman from Florida has been making a very convincing statement, and I am wondering if the gentleman can inform the Members of the House how much money was spent or doled out in benefits to the sugar growers of his own State under the A. A. A.

Mr. WILCOX. I can answer that question as to one company, and that is exactly the reason we are objecting to any further subsidy of that character. One company in my State was paid a check of $1,260,000 as benefit payments. That company does not want benefit payments, and we do not want benefit payments, but what we want is the privilege of producing sugar. We want the privilege of developing the industry in our State. Now, I want to pursue that further for just a moment——

Mr. SHORT. But it is a fact that the Government paid one corporation in the gentleman's State over $1,000,000 for not producing sugar, when you were allowed to produce only 40 percent of the consumption in the State of Florida and when the growers poured over 1,000,000 gallons of molasses into the swamps?

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. SHORT. A very wise policy. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILCOX. Let me call your attention to this fact, Mr. Chairman. Some years ago the Federal Government conveyed to the State of Florida some 5,000,000 acres of what is called the Everglades, a swampy and overflowed section of our State. It was regarded as worthless and of no value for agricultural purposes. Soon after it was conveyed, however, it was discovered that this soil is the most fertile on the face of the globe. Not even the valley of the Nile can compare with it in fertility. It was necessary, however, that it be drained, that it be irrigated, and be made available for cultivation. Federal, State, local, and private funds to the extent of more than $100,000,000 have been spent in bringing this great area into production. Recently tests were carried on in that area to determine its availability for the production of sugar. It was discovered that by a peculiar and particular combination of the right amount of sunshine, the right amount of rainfall, and the right contents in the soil, it is the best adapted area on the North American Continent for the production of sugarcane.

I am told that the average production of sugar throughout the United States is about 3,600 pounds per acre. In the Everglades area, one breed of sugarcane has been developed which, in a limited area, has produced as much as 9 tons to the acre; and this is true not only as to productivity but I would call your attention to the fact that sugarcane planted in the Everglades area has been known to grow as many as eight crops from one planting. So that the industry is both efficient and profitable.

I do not believe that this Government has any constitutional, legal, or moral right to say to the citizens of one of the sovereign States of this Union that they shall not engage in a perfectly legitimate business so long as they are willing to do so without Government assistance. I do not believe that the Federal Government has any constitutional, legal, or moral right to prohibit the production of a necessary food product, particularly when the entire industry of the whole country produces less than one-third of the amount of that food element which it consumes.

Now, a great deal also has been said about wage conditions in the various sections of the country. I call attention to the fact that those who are engaged in the sugar business in my State pay probably the highest common-labor rates of any commercial section in the United States. The common Negro laborer working in the cane fields in my State is furnished a home in which to live, and a nice home it is. He is given free electric light, free plumbing, free water, free fuel, free medical service. He is permitted to buy his supplies and groceries at wholesale rates. When a member of his family becomes sick, he is given free hospitalization. His children are given free schools and free school books and free transportation to school, and in addition to that he is paid a minimum of $2.70 a day. That is the minimum wage. It fluctuates from $2.70 at the bottom to $11.50 per day for the higher paid and more skilled laborers in the sugar mills. Those are the conditions in my district. We want the power, we want the right, we want the privilege of developing that industry in that great State.

We have no quarrel with the beet-sugar producers of the West nor with the cane-sugar producers of Louisiana, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, or the Philippines. We are not trying to cut down their production nor take away the benefit payments they seek. We are not trying to hamper or restrict the growth or development of the sugar business anywhere else in either continental United States or its Territories. But we think it is unfair to tie us up with Louisiana and restrict our development. All we ask—all we seek, all we want—is to be let alone. Take off the restrictions, and the sugar industry in Florida will take care of itself.

Florida's position on the sugar legislation is the same as Florida's position on all other regulatory legislation. We believe that the American market belongs first to the American producer. The American market should be preserved for the American producer, and he should be protected in supplying that market as far as his capacity extends. If there is a surplus demand in America beyond the capacity of American producers to supply, then the surplus can be and should be allotted to those countries and those nations which in turn purchase American goods. But I submit in all fairness and in all justice to all parties concerned that to limit and restrict American production of an essential food product in an area where it can be efficiently and profitably produced is unreasonable, unfair, inequitable, and un-American. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a good deal said this afternoon to the effect that Hawaii and Puerto Rico have been discriminated against and virtually treated as stepchildren of the United States. My observation and experience lead me to exactly the opposite conclusion, and to bear that out I call attention to some legislation dealing with these island possessions with which I have been closely connected. Every river and harbor bill enacted within the last 20 years has been through a committee of which I have been a member and in which I have taken quite an active part. We now have on the island of Hawaii six major ports, every one of them with a depth of 35 feet. We have expended upon those ports $11,511,000. The tonnage of Hawaii in 1935 was 3,222,000 tons. By far the major portion of that was sugar, coming into this country in competition with sugar produced in the United States. We have very few ports of the depth of 35 feet in this country. We have only two that exceed it, and they are New York and Hampton Roads. In the State in which I live, which handled last year 80 million tons of high-class freight with a valuation of more than 1 billion dollars, we have not a port on the shores of Texas 35 feet deep. The deepest port in Texas was 32 feet up to the beginning of last year. Is that discrimination?

Take Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Some 3 or 4 years ago at the request of the Governor of the Virgin Islands I introduced a bill extending our river and harbor laws to those islands. They have quite a small tonnage, and by far the largest commodity handled in the Virgin Islands is coal for fueling merchant ships. They ship a little rum and a little sugar, but not a great deal.

In Puerto Rico we have expended large sums of money. I have visited and inspected all of the harbors of that island. I am a friend of Puerto Rico. I have been in favor of giving them everything they have ever asked for, and I can assure you that they have asked for everything that their trade warranted. We have created a number of ports over there, notably San Juan, and Ponce, Mayaguez, and Arecibo, and we have been requiring the local contribution there that we have been requiring of my State of Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Take Ponce harbor in Puerto Rico which is the second largest town and port in Puerto Rico. We put through a bill in 1930 requiring Ponce to contribute $508,000 as a local contribution on that port. In the last river and harbor bill we remitted that and actually refunded to that port $158,000 which they had expended under that former act of Congress. I do not know of any such instance where we have done that in continental United States. Down at Lake Charles, La., within 22 miles of my State, the people have issued bonds to the extent of about $3,000,000 and actually dredged a 30-foot channel which they have been maintaining for about 20 years or perhaps longer, all at their own expense, and they handled more than 6,000,000 tons of freight last year. If there has been any discrimination, Mr. Chairman, it has been in favor of the island possessions, and against continental United States, and I believe this is true as to sugar and practically everything else. They certainly get the benefit of the tariff on sugar the same as our home producers.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

HAWAII AND PUERTO RICO INTEGRAL PARTS OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal this afternoon about the American farmer and the American producer. The truth of the matter is that, according to the Constitution of the United States, the man who produces sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico is an American producer, because those islands are each an integral part of the United States of America.

Hawaii and Puerto Rico, my friends—and we all agree to this—are under the Constitution of the United States. Their position is precisely that of the State of Texas. The State of Texas was annexed by the United States of America and became a part of the Nation; so were Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

What does this bill do in reference to section 207 (a) and (b)? It sets up a trade barrier against certain portions of the United States of America—Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The distinguished and lovable gentleman from Texas talks about the ports that we built in Hawaii for the benefit of Hawaii. Why is there any difference in one part of the United States of America when it is separated by water and when it is separated by land?

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Is it not because they have there the same standards of labor that they have in China and Japan?

Mr. MAVERICK. I respectfully submit to my friend that is not the point. The answer to the gentleman is that that has not anything to do with the Constitution whatever. However, I will answer that the standards of agricultural common labor in Hawaii are as high as they are in Colorado and certain other portions of the continent of the United States——

Mr. CUMMINGS. Oh, hold on. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAVERICK. In a moment I will read it out of this book. It is called the Interdepartmental Rio Grande Committee. It is from six departments of the United States Government.

But let me finish my statement about the Constitution. When we do this—irrespective of labor standards, whether low or high—we are treating the island of Hawaii, which is a part of the United States, like a colony. Our high-court decisions are unanimous that we have no colonies.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, we are denying that portion of the United States the equal protection of the laws and are actually discriminating against them. Now, suppose we would pass a law making a quota against the State of Texas on the subject of oil, sugar, cattle, or anything else. Suppose we put a separate quota against the State of Michigan. We know every man would get up and say that is unconstitutional and would vote against it.

But, getting down to the practical situation, I heard the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] discuss the matter of a veto by the President of the United States if the discriminatory provisions against Hawaii and Puerto Rico are not removed. I do not know whether there is going to be a veto or not; but I did ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] if these two special-quota sections, which many regard as unfair and unconstitutional, were stricken from the bill, would it still be a good bill, and the gentleman said it would destroy the processors of sugar, but it would still benefit the sugar people of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I said the beet people of the United States.

Mr. MAVERICK. I accept the correction from my friend from Colorado. But I maintain it will still be a good bill, even to interested parties a fairly good bill, if those sections are stricken out. But, gentlemen, if this bill is vetoed, as I have heard it said by Members today on this floor, and we leave here and do not have any bill at all, it would certainly be safer and better that we would amend these certain portions of the bill.

AGRICULTURE, INTERIOR, STATE, ALL OPPOSE BILL—FOR GOOD REASONS

Besides this, we all know that three members of the Cabinet oppose those portions of the bill which set up the special quotas against Hawaii and Puerto Rico. They are the Secretaries of Agriculture, State, and Interior.

A committee of the Department of the Interior says the restrictions are like—

> The colonialism against which the Colonies rebelled when they declared their independence.

And—

> The essence of Old World colonialism * * * was the right of the mother country to exploit those colonies, to consider their citizens as occupying a secondary and inferior status, and to place economic obstacles in their path in favor of commercial interests in the mother country.

The Interior Department also states that the bill—

> Establishes discriminations against parts of America inhabited by American citizens, in favor of a few mainland companies already highly privileged by this legislation.

VETO—NO LEGISLATION. IS THE PRESIDENT RIGHT?

In addition to this, as I have said, it is currently reported in the press, and has been so stated on this floor, that the President will veto the bill in its present form. Some have expressed some dissatisfaction with this.

But let us analyze the situation. Are these three members of the Cabinet and the President right or not? Are the expressions of the members of the committee factually correct? Is it true, as one says, that we rebelled against England for the same kind of restrictions? Is it true that discriminations are established against a part of America inhabited by American citizens?

It seems to me the answer is yes; that the statements are true. And if so, is it not reasonable that the President veto the bill? I do not say any Member of Congress should change his vote because of a possible veto. I have voted to override the veto of the President myself. But if the President and three members of the Cabinet are right, why should we not consider their views?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Would the gentleman be willing to stay here until we could either override the President's veto or vote on the veto?

Mr. MAVERICK. I am one of those who is willing to stay here the rest of the year on any subject.

Mr. HOOK. I hope the gentleman does that in case that happens.

Mr. MAVERICK. I will be glad to do it, and stay right here with the gentleman to get all our job done.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman said if we put a quota on Michigan everyone would be "hollering" about it being unconstitutional.

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is that not exactly what we are doing in this bill?

Mr. MAVERICK. Not as to refined sugar. We are not saying that the State of Michigan or the State of Texas have different quotas as to refined sugar as against other parts of the Nation. We are applying this bill in general to the United States of America, but are setting up a separate quota in reference to refined sugar, only doing so in reference to Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Do we not have a quota on Texas oil?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes; but it is on an entirely different theory of government. That is under the "hot oil" bill, where Texas and all States either make quotas on oil or do not—but Federal laws prohibit them from shipping "hot" oil, or oil illegally produced within a State, by virtue of the laws of that State. I submit to my distinguished friend and able colleague from Texas that that is different.

HAWAII AND PUERTO RICO COMPONENT PARTS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MAVERICK. But let me proceed to sum up in reference to the position of Hawaii and Puerto Rico from a constitutional viewpoint. They are unquestionably and admittedly component parts of the United States of America.

I have made three points: First, that the quotas of refined sugar set up trade barriers, as against another part of the country, and which we cannot do within the United States of America; second, to do so is to relegate these parts of the United States to the rank of colonies and put a discriminating tax, burden, duty, or tariff upon them; third, to deny them the equal protection of the laws.

All of this certainly is in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

AMOUNT PAID LABOR IS NOT RELEVANT TO QUESTION

And as to labor, which I will now discuss. I do not believe that the matter of how much labor is paid in the continental United States of America, or in Hawaii or Puerto Rico, is relevant because this is all one Nation. Each section of our country claims that wages are either lower or higher than somewhere else, and the wage structure does not mean that a certain section of the country cannot sell its products. If the wage structure is to be considered, it should, of course, be considered upon an equal basis. All should get the equal protection of the laws or have the imposition of equal restrictions.

In the same way quotas should be equally applicable. A separate, distinct, discriminatory quota is set up against Hawaii and Puerto Rico in reference to refined sugar which is not imposed upon continental United States. This discrimination is upon Puerto Rican and Hawaiian business and industry. That Hawaii has residents who are Chinese or Japanese laborers does not affect the constitutional question nor make the discrimination just.

Much has been said about the American standard of living and in indirect praise of the sugar refiners. So let us discuss them, and then the labor situation. Their business has been a long trail of slime, and they have a reputation much worse than almost any industry in the United States of America.

At the present time the average wage of the worker in the sugar refinery is about $1,005. What this law does is to make a subsidy on a basis of workers of something like $1,600 each per worker. Of course, the workers do not get this subsidy themselves.

Reference has been made to the fact that a small group of people own everything in Hawaii—but in this country one refinery owns 26 percent of the stock of the Michigan Beet Sugar Co. and 50 percent of the Spreckels Sugar Co. One sugar company produces about 45 percent of the sugar in the Colorado, Wyoming, and Montana area. This particular company has had as high as 47 percent dividends in 1 year, and on a basis of its original investment over the past 20 years, 50 percent returns per year. In this general locality, land tenancy back a few years ago was fifty-odd percent, and it has now risen to 72 to 75 percent. No, gentlemen; the farmers are not independent and the agricultural workers are not of the high-earning capacity.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL REPORT ON SUGAR INDUSTRY

Where do I get this information? I get it from the Interdepartmental Rio Grande Committee, composed of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Division of Grazing, General Land Office, Resettlement Administration, Soil Conservation Service, and Forest Service, which means, of course, that in addition the Department of Interior and Department of Agriculture, of which some of these bureaus are a part.

What else does this report show?

It shows that the average earnings per family—some of them extremely large families in certain portions of Colorado—amount to something like $289. Mind you, this is per family, and not for an individual.

The report also says in that connection:

The need for supplementation of beet-field earnings is made clear by these figures—

And continues that because of the lower earning capacity of the Spanish-American and Mexican wage earners that—consequently, for many of the beet wokers, relief has been the only resort during the winter.

This report also shows that labor agents are sent to parts of New Mexico, Texas, and even Mexico to obtain laborers. In the report advertisements are shown indicating the cheapest type of labor is obtained to be shipped into Colorado, Nebraska, Wyoming, and Montana.

HAWAII STILL PART OF UNITED STATES, THOUGH SEPARATED BY WATER

Now, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, Hawaii and Puerto Rico are parts of the United States of America. I repeat that if someone should suggest a special or additional quota against Texas, Michigan, or any other State, that we would unanimously agree that was unconstitutional. That there is water instead of land between here and Hawaii and Puerto Rico does not make those parts of the United States less a part than Texas and Massachusetts, although these latter are separated by land instead of water.

Also I appeal to the gentlemen to look with some sympathy on the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], chairman of the Agriculture Committee. The bill will still be an excellent bill for the sugar farmers and workers of the United States of America. It will be fair to the sugar companies and sugar refineries, too. In other words, I believe that we can agree that certainly the bill will not be destroyed by the elimination of the special requirements and restrictions now imposed upon Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

I hope that we will pass the bill, but will eliminate unreasonable discrimination against Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to compliment the committee and its members on their patience and hard work. They have had all types of problems. The question of beet-sugar quotas, cane-sugar quotas, offshore quotas, and then the question of refiners and the question of Florida and Louisiana in their disputes with reference to their particular quotas. They have worked hard and they have been courteous in the hearings. They have had a large undertaking.

I take this opportunity to commend the chairman of the committee, our colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], and the chairman of the subcommittee, our colleague the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], for the untiring effort they have devoted to this particular bill. [Applause.]

I want at this time to bring to the committee our peculiar problem in Florida. Florida cannot get justice upon a historical basis or a quota based upon that, so I am not finding fault with the committee, but I am voicing fear of the way we may be treated by the Department of Agriculture. For a long period of time, as my colleague the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX] told you, the Everglades of Florida were not productive. By reason, however, of funds expended by local interests and the Federal Government, it is now known to be one of the most productive areas in the world. We can produce cane as cheaply as many of the offshore areas. We can produce it as cheaply as it is produced in Puerto Rico, we can produce it as cheaply as Hawaii produces it, and nearly as cheaply as Cuba. At the same time, however, we pay a better wage, a minimum wage of around $2.70 a day, plus housing and other benefits. This great producing area has rapidly come to the front in the last few years and could produce a great portion of our sugar needs if allowed to.

We are merely asking—and at the proper time an amendment will be proposed—we are merely asking that we be allowed to sweeten our own coffee, so to speak. The quota allotted to us is only about 40 percent of the consumption of the State of Florida. It seems only fair that we should be allowed to expand. I am opposed in principle, of course, to quotas in continental United States. I think that we should be allowed to produce at least as much as we can consume in this country. Let us at least feed our own people.

I realize in the case of Cuba that the reason concessions were made under the reciprocal-trade agreement was because it was hoped that they in turn might trade with us. Let me call to the attention of the committee, however, the fact that Florida trades with a great portion of the United States, that a great number of the things we use in Florida are shipped in there from other sections of the United States. I have assembled a few figures which may be of interest to you as showing that we are entitled to consideration, figures which show that we spend more money in a single year in other sections of the United States than some foreign countries.

In 1935 Florida consumed in foods not produced in Florida, canned goods, poultry products, confectioneries, meats, grain, and apples and bananas to the value of $97,391,000. She used general merchandise manufactured elsewhere and shipped to Florida worth $45,323,000. Men's and women's apparel, ready-to-wear clothing, shoes, furs, yard goods and cloth cost Floridians another $29,178,000. Its automobiles flattened Florida's purses to the extent of $69,818,000, and the gasolines and oils to run them another $35,549,000.

Household supplies and furniture took $22,522,000 out of Florida for that year. Building supplies, hardware, farm implements, paints, glass, electrical appliances, radios, and heating and plumbing fixtures $19,188,000 flying to the four winds, while Coca Cola, delicacies, drugs, medicines, prescriptions, books, bicycles, beer, liquors, tobaccos, sporting goods, jewelry, and luggage, none of which is made or processed in the State of Florida, cost the people of Florida a sum of $72,431,000.

All in all, people other than residents of Florida were enriched in this one year to the tune of $391,282,000. We are pretty good customers. How about a little good-neighbor policy for our peninsula?

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. And when we spend the money for domestic products we have both the products and the money.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is right. I may say that there is a great sugar-producing company in my State. In turn, people from Michigan, New York, and many other States of the Union are interested in this company. This company employs labor in my district; and in the section of the county where this plant is located there were only 12 people on relief rolls at one time.

I am asking that the Congress give us a chance to raise the cane and produce the sugar that we use ourselves, a chance to let us employ American labor at decent living wages. We talk about American standards of living and make comparison with offshore areas, but we are forced to admit in our hearts that laborers in the offshore areas do not live under the same conditions that our laborers do, nor do they receive the same wages that ours receive.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I understand that more than 16,000 workers are employed in these sugar refineries in the continental United States and that 85 percent of them are organized.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I do not have the percentages as to organized labor.

Mr. SHORT. And some 26,000 more men and women are employed in auxiliary businesses that cooperate with the sugar producers.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is correct.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman referred to the fact his State was not permitted to raise the sugar it consumed. I may say, and I regret the conditions are such I can say it, there are not more than one or two sugar-producing States in the Union that are permitted to grow the amount of sugar consumed, which is a very unfortunate situation.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. It ought to be corrected.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It should be the business of Congress to develop that American industry to the point where we can raise a very substantial amount more than we do raise.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I may say it would be interesting to show the comparative cost of production. The average cost is Hawaii 3.005, the Philippines 2.466, Cuba 1.857, and Florida 2.556.

The question may be asked, Why can we not go on the historic basis? As I told you before, we started planting down there. The land had been drained, the dikes built, the company organized, but it ran into financial difficulty. It was reorganized, then the quota system came along. Over 5,000 acres had to be plowed under, more than $1,250,000 was paid not to produce. Our people do not want benefit payments. They want the right to plant, to market. The American market belongs to the American farmer, the American laborer, and the American manufacturer. Give us a chance. We will develop a great industry. We will be a safeguard against a lack of sugar in time of war. We are the greatest consumer of sugar per capita in time of war. The Federal Government by assisting in flood control has enabled the cultivation of land more fertile than the Valley of the Nile. American initiative has developed a cane that will withstand cane borer and mosaic disease. Shall all this be for nought? It shall not be. It must not be. Give Florida the right to sweeten its own coffee. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that is desired by the various States and Territories and offshore areas, and, so far as I can see, there is no discrimination whatever in it. It is just a fair bill, fair to all concerned, and, if there is any discrimination, that discrimination is against the States of the United States.

The consumer will benefit, the producers will benefit, and the refining industry will reap benefit.

When the committee undertook to hand out quotas it gave Cuba more than it was entitled to, a reason being that Cuba had built up its capacity and, in order to stabilize the Cuban condition, a generous quota was given to it, far more generous than should be allowed, but our generosity will make for stabilization there. Besides, this liberal quota allotted Cuba gave our approval, which should not be given, to the policy of American capital going down into Cuba, the island possessions, and abroad into foreign countries and there establishing manufacturing plants to take advantage of cheap and low-cost labor at the expense of the labor of the United States. So, the Philippines got better treatment than they deserve. Puerto Rico got all it was entitled to, and so did Hawaii. They got everything any just men could give them. Hawaii got a quota of raw sugar of which it does not complain, and under the bill will have the right to refine and send to the States all the sugar that it can now refine, this bill permitting them to send here all the refined sugar it now has the capacity to produce. Puerto Rico raises no objection to its raw-sugar quota, and has the right to refine 126,033 short tons of its 798,000 short-ton quota. There is in the bill no discrimination against Hawaii and there is no discrimination against Puerto Rico. If Hawaii and Puerto Rico want to refine sugar in the States of this Union they may do so. They can build their factories here and pay the same wages that our refineries have to pay for labor. There is no discrimination in that respect. They can refine in any State without limitation. They have only to adopt the same standards, but they do not have the same standards, and cannot justly complain. I might favor the refining of sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico if by doing so a fair competition would result. But that would be impossible. There could be only one effect—to kill off the refining industry in the States, with the loss of employment to their citizens. We do not have the world market for refined sugar because of our high cost of production. We cannot lower our standards to meet the cheap labor of the Tropics. We cannot let Puerto Rico or Hawaii any more than anyone else lower our standards of living or put us residing in the States out of business.

If there is any discrimination in this bill it operates against the States and not in their favor. There is discrimination against Florida and Louisiana. There is discrimination against the refining industry; but whatever discrimination there is tends to stabilize the whole industry.

Perhaps the refining industry of the States has suffered most from the discrimination. The refineries of the States have been operating at 60 percent of capacity and have even now been reduced to 55 percent of capacity. Why did we allow Hawaii to refine to the extent of 100 percent of its capacity and leave the refineries of the States to 55 to 60 percent of capacity? Certainly the committee did not intend to, nor did it, discriminate against Hawaii in making such provision.

If the Jones amendment, which permits refining of the entire quota of Hawaii and Puerto Rico, is adopted you are going to drag down the labor standards of this country and in a short space of time transfer the refining industry of the country to Puerto Rico and Hawaii. What is happening in these islands today? Our manufacturers are making dresses and sending them to Puerto Rico to be embroidered there at a cost of 10 cents a day for labor. Who suffers? Our labor here. Gloves, white and black and all kinds, are sent down to Puerto Rico and over to Hawaii to be sewed and embroidered at low labor cost and then brought back into this country to compete with the product of manufacturers who pay the higher wages for labor in the United States. Shall we allow the islands to destroy our standards of living? Shall they take away our living entirely? Shall we surrender our refineries and injure other industries that furnish the supplies necessary for the manufacturing of the refiners?

Our refineries buy cotton bags. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] would have his State deprived of that benefit. Cuba, Hawaii, and the rest of them buy jute bags from Japan at half the cost. Our refineries burn coal from Pennsylvania and other States, and oil, which comes from the State of Texas. The islands have no need for coal and oil for heating purposes. They buy little coal or oil and would not buy very much more, if any, if given the right of unlimited production of refined sugar.

Mr. Chairman, there are involved not only 1,200 men who are engaged in the sugar-refining business in my district but the thousands of others in the industry over the country and not only the men and women in the sugar business but the men and women who make paper boxes and paper cartons, not jute boxes or jute cartons and paper not Japanese jute bags; also, the truckmen and railroad men who handle and transport our sugar.

If you pass the Jones amendment it will mean the beginning of the end of the refining industry of this country. Without the amendment we will get from Cuba 375,000 short tons of refined sugar and from Puerto Rico and Hawaii we will get over 150,000 short tons of refined sugar. If the amendment is agreed to we will get from Puerto Rico and Hawaii something like 1,700,000 or 1,800,000 short tons of refined sugar, which will wreck our refining industry.

I stand here as the defender of my people who labor. I want them to succeed. I do not want to have to repeat the W. P. A. and be forced to other measures like the wage and hour bill that is about to come up for consideration. These 1,200 constituents of mine, to whom I referred, are on strike right now, wanting more money, and a fair wage has been paid up home in the refinery. Something like $5 a day minimum. But due to the increase in prices my people want more money, and I think they are justified in asking for it. If you pass the bill as it is they will get a raise. I have been in contact with the men and their employer and the Labor Department in their interest. If the Jones amendment is agreed to the refinery up there will not be able to meet the increase for the men as I would like and is justified, and there will be 1,200 men up in my district without jobs. There will be allied industries that will be hurt in the same proportion. Gradually you will find the sugar refining industry, which has been in the States for over 200 years, especially that part of it located along the eastern seaboard, totally destroyed.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, first let me express my appreciation to the ranking minority Member for giving me this time. I may say, in apologizing to the other Members who have been restricted to a shorter time, that after all Hawaii's proportion of the industry is about one-sixth or one-seventh of the total, while each of you individually may represent a much smaller proportion than that. I want to express my very great appreciation to the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture for the consideration he has given me in committee. This matter has been fought out very thoroughly and the committee has reported a bill that does not concede the point for which I contended. However, I believe there is no impropriety in informing the members of this committee that there was a substantial vote in the committee in favor of the amendment I proposed, to remove subsections (a) and (b) of section 207, the restrictive sections against the refining of sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

I have already outlined as briefly as possible and with a minimum of repetition the general principles for which I have contended with reference to this bill, in its application to Hawaii. The elimination of one subsection will remove the basis of my objection to the bill as it is now offered for the consideration of this body. I understand there will be an opportunity to vote for or against the provision that as at present written places a legislative ban upon the industrial development of parts of the United States in favor of an existing monopoly in that particular process. We are, in effect, told that we can produce the raw materials of our major industry but must not complete the job and produce the finished article in its marketable form.

Now, the justification for this restriction rests on a few well-worn arguments. At the time of the first passage of the present law, we were producing refined sugar in the amount prescribed in the bill—about 30,000 tons—being about 3 percent of the total quota allotted us. In other words, the situation as it existed at the depth of the depression was frozen as emergency legislation, and has now become a precedent for permanent legislation. Had no emergency legislation been passed, whatever else might have happened to our sugar industry, we might now be processing a much larger portion of our total production. I grant freely that the emergency legislation was of great benefit to the sugar industry as a whole, which includes Hawaii's share of it. But I wish to call attention to the fact that the restriction on refined sugar placed in the original bill was not a part of the President's program for the salvation of the American sugar industry, but was an industrial anomaly in an agricultural measure. May I also note that this little joker in the bill to stabilize primarily prices to the original producers of sugar, beets, or cane, froze Hawaii at 3 percent, Puerto Rico at 15 percent, Philippine Islands at 8 percent, and Cuba at 22 percent. In other words, the freezing bore heaviest on an incorporated tax-paying Territory of the United States.

A second argument is that treating Hawaii as you would any other part of the United States will displace a certain number of American working men; that the refining industry on the Atlantic seaboard is functioning at less than its full capacity and a further reduction in the source of supply will require further reduction in the number of its employees or the number of hours they shall work. As to this I want to call attention to a statement made by an official of the Department of Agriculture that the refining of sugar is a highly mechanized process employing a comparatively small number of people in proportion to the total value involved. Another point to remember is that Hawaii has only recently sold a portion of its raw sugar to the refineries located on the Atlantic seaboard. No such sugar was sold prior to 1929 and since then a total of approximately 300,000 tons annually has been distributed over 14 refineries. I have here a table showing the amount of Hawaiian sugars which the eastern refineries have processed for the American market from the years 1922–36, segregated as to ports of delivery. No eastern refinery worker ever learned his trade nor was any eastern refinery ever built because of Hawaiian sugar.

The trade of the eastern refineries was with the Cuban raw-sugar producers, and the gradual restriction of the Cuban raw-sugar importations and the displacement of this sugar by beet sugar and by sugars from other sources, but not from Hawaii, have been the occasion of the gradual reduction in the maximum functioning of the east coast refineries.

It is now proposed to secure them in their employment by continuing a marketing practice of recent origin and of comparatively small volume. It should also be noted that the processing of Hawaiian sugar in Hawaii would give employment, perhaps, in equal numbers to other American citizens and that the handling of the Hawaiian product delivered to marketing ports will continue to employ many thousands. I have read a resolution adopted by a labor council in the Northwest, urging the removal of this restriction because it means to the American workers of that area an increase in employment. It is difficult to justify an economic trade barrier even to obtain for workers security in their employment. I have every sympathy with the concern over the situation shown by the workers employed by the Atlantic refineries, but I ask them if it is fair to deny to any part of the United States its right to develop because of the dislocation of employment in some other section. Did the Amoskeag Mills of New Hampshire try to keep their thousands employed by denying employment to fellow Americans in another part of the United States? In this particular case, the maximum who may lose their work because of Hawaii would be approximately 350 persons scattered in 14 or 15 different localities. Surely the refiners could find means to overcome this small displacement. I have here a statement from the Department of Interior which shows that the refiners have, under the protection of the Jones-Costigan bill, increased the amount of sugar they are processing by over 386,000 tons, an increase greatly in excess of the amount of Hawaiian sugars they handle. They have received substantial benefits under the existing law, none of which will be taken away from them by the removal of the restrictions against Hawaii processing its own agricultural commodities.

Curiously, this bill in its present form, while prohibiting Hawaii from refining its own sugar, does not—and I can hardly conceive how it possibly could—require Hawaii to sell its sugar to the Atlantic refineries. In other words, the proposed effort to maintain an industrial monopoly is ineffective, since Hawaii could refine all of its sugar in San Francisco, where our industry now owns a cooperative refinery and where it now processes about two-thirds of its quota, and where it will continue to process the greater amount of its quota. So that the displacement of labor which is made a great argument in favor of restricting Hawaii from refining sugar may even take place under this ban insofar as the Atlantic seaboard is concerned. One of the statements issued by the American Cane Sugar Refining Association admits this, but states that they are satisfied, provided Hawaii is forced to process its crop on the mainland, and that the association will be perfectly satisfied if we do refine all of our sugar in our own cooperative refinery in Crockett, even at their expense, provided we are barred from doing so in Hawaii. Their championship of their employees does not seem very real by this statement.

Mr. Chairman, one of the other arguments which is advanced against Hawaii is with reference to labor. Those who have been to Hawaii know that there is no basis for the criticism and the statements which have been made against Hawaii on the question of labor. We supply to the people in the Territory of Hawaii who are employed in the sugar industry year-round employment. When I say "we" I speak as a citizen of Hawaii, for, as a matter of fact, I am not directly interested in the sugar industry and own neither stock nor land in connection with it, nor do I have any direct revenue from that industry. There is no seasonal layoff. Their rates of pay are based on the fact they may work every working day in the year. We pay them on a basis sometimes of piecework, sometimes of cultivation contracts, and sometimes a straight day wage. The average of the field labor runs around $10.92 a week, plus perquisites, which the Department of Labor has evaluated as being worth $28 a month.

The Department of Labor in 1929 made a survey of labor conditions in the Territory of Hawaii. I have had this book quoted against me, but when you read the book and verify the statements that are quoted you find that they have been distorted or taken away from the text to give a different version of the facts. This book states that the average full-time earnings per week were $10.92, and there is a little note in connection with that figure which states that this is "per day for adults at basic rates and with bonus, but not including perquisites—rental value of houses, value of fuel, water, medical and hospital service for sickness or accidental injury of any kind—furnished to employees by plantations without any charge to employees. The value was estimated at $28 per month, or $1 per day."

This is the average of the agricultural field labor.

On the other hand, the skilled labor and the artisan labor that might be employed in a refinery, if one were erected, would get the scale of wages as listed on page 31 of the report:

Machinists (a day)	$6–$6.25
Blacksmiths (a day)	4.50
$185 a month being the average monthly salary of these classes.
Welders (a day)	$10
Carpenters (a day)	$2.50–4
Locomotive engineers	110–125
Nurses	125–135
Steam-plow engineers	75
Sugarboiler	200
Policeman	140
Timekeepers	175
Electricians	175–270
Chemist	200
Head chemist	200
Pump engineer and electrician	600
Head carpenter	400
Assistant carpenter	190

All of this being in addition to the perquisites of a home and all of this comprising year-round employment.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. For a question; yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman contend that skilled labor is employed in a refinery?

Mr. KING. I, frankly, do not know enough about the personnel employed in a refinery to answer, but I am giving you the scale of wages and, certainly, the type of labor that would be employed in a refinery would not be the agricultural labor that gets a lower scale of wages.

Mr. HEALEY. Most of the persons employed in a refinery we term common labor in my State and they are paid 65 cents an hour as a minimum.

Mr. KING. Common labor in Hawaii would probably start with $4 as a base pay, including bonus and value of perquisites.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman think a man could work as a sugar boiler who was not a skilled man?

Mr. KING. I had thought not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do you think he could run an evaporator if he were not skilled?

Mr. KING. I would not think so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman think he could run the centrifugal machines or conduct any of the other technical operations in a refinery if he were not a skilled man?

Mr. KING. I would not think so.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KING. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I do not want to get into a controversy here. Everybody else has had a whack at Hawaii, and I just want a chance to come back [laughter] and I hope the gentleman will forgive me if I do not yield further. After all, the argument is not germane. If the law is right, the question of whether we pay or do not pay our labor a just rate of wages is something that comes under another law. That would come under the National Labor Relations Board or under the new wage law we are considering, and I will digress from the subject at this point to show the history of that law, because the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] was evidently under the impression we did not come under that law. The bill was introduced by our late colleague, Congressman Connery, of Massachusetts, on May 24, and on May 26, to show you how determined I am that in all respects, benefits, and burdens alike, Hawaii should share equally with the States, I addressed a letter to him shortly before he died, calling attention to the fact that by definition the bill was restricted to the 48 States of the Union and the District of Columbia. I asked him to change it because Hawaii expected to accept whatever wages and hours were prescribed for the mainland. Unfortunately, he died before he could answer my letter, but the letter was taken up by the joint committee and the bill as introduced in the Senate by Senator BLACK had the correction made. I wrote to the present chairman of the Committee on Labor, and Chairman NORTON verified the statement that the Committee on Labor had accepted the Senate bill as a substitute for the House bill and the language of the bill included the States, Territories, and possessions.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes; I am glad to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman will recall that when the original sugar bill was introduced in the House, it had some very drastic provisions with reference to field labor, and particularly against child labor, and the gentleman will recall that the domestic beet producers offered considerable objection to those provisions. I would like to ask the gentleman whether those representing Hawaii offered any objection to those provisions at that time.

Mr. KING. I appreciate the gentleman's asking me the question because he is familiar with the situation. The representatives of the Hawaiian sugar interests came before the committee and stated that they accepted the provisions in toto, as they had those incorporated in the present act, and stated that they would cooperate with the Department of Agriculture in the enforcement of any labor restrictions as to hours, wages, employment of women or children that the Department of Agriculture might wish to prescribe. It was at the instance of representatives of the beet industry that the restrictions in H. R. 7667 have been ameliorated for the benefit of the beet industry with respect to labor conditions.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that Puerto Rico took the same stand with respect to such labor restrictions?

Mr. KING. Absolutely, and that is another thing that destroys this argument as to the un-American conditions with respect to labor, because under this bill you give the Secretary of Agriculture authority and power to enforce fair labor standards in the sugar industry of the United States.

Now, another point has been raised with respect to flooding the American market. I am really astonished at the Members of the Congress who will refer to this subsidy to Hawaii, to this great gift granted the Territory of Hawaii. Even the very distinguished gentleman, whom we all respect and admire immensely, the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, made that point. Hawaii consists of eight islands and you cannot do any business in Hawaii unless you have harbors. Our harbors have been improved under the National River and Harbor Act. Following appropriations by successive sessions of the Legislature, the Federal Government has spent millions of dollars on our harbors, but in the case of Hawaii we have never been exempted from the 50–50 quota. Out of those harbors comes a tremendous amount of freight which is carried in American bottoms, and, in fact, it is the principal business that keeps the American flag afloat on the American merchant marine in the Pacific.

The United States Treasury collects in the port of Honolulu $1,000,000 a year in tariff customs. So it is one of the major seaports under the American flag. You do not subsidize Hawaii when you allow it to raise sugar to enter into interstate commerce beyond its own needs. Where is my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU]? His State raises an excess of milk and butter products, and it sells these products to the citizens of Alabama, where they raise an excess of cotton and sell it to the citizens of Wisconsin. That is not a subsidy, and it is not a subsidy when we raise an excess of sugar and sell it in the American market. We are doing what we are entitled to as American citizens, and what every other American citizen is entitled to do and is doing.

Otherwise we would go back to Bret Harte's busted mining camp, and make a living out of taking in each other's washing. Take the matter of automobiles, from the State of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], and cotton from the South, and foodstuffs, all of which we buy from other parts of the United States. Take the matter of rice. Our people eat, among other foodstuffs, a good deal of rice, and we consume practically two-thirds of the rice crop of California. We buy it in Hawaii with the money that we make out of the sale of sugar in the American market, and the merchandise we buy from the mainland of the United States exceeds that which is bought in the course of foreign commerce by any except six of the major nations of the world.

As to flooding the market, I obtained authority to insert in the hearings on sugar before the special subcommittee a chart showing the production of sugar by areas for the past 30-odd years. It is a very illuminating table, on pages 78 and 79 of the hearings, because if you go down the line of years you will see that Hawaii raises from 12 to 15 percent of the total consumption of sugar in the United States. We have never gone away up and never gone away down. Beets started practically at zero, and is now 22 percent. I have no objection to that. It is an American industry and I am perfectly satisfied if they could go as far as 50 percent.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I recognize the fact quite as fully as does the Delegate from Hawaii that the citizens of those islands are just as much citizens of the United States as are the citizens of the State of Michigan, and they are entitled to all of the rights and privileges granted to any citizen of the United States, regardless of where he may find himself.

Mr. KING. Before answering the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Chairman, it is very obvious from this table that it is not Hawaii that has been flooding the American market. We have increased in production in proportion to the increase in consumption.

In answer to the gentleman from Michigan, I realize his point clearly. He feels that a restriction on a quota which would prevent the three factories in his district from functioning is a restriction on refined sugar. I leave it to you that there is a fundamental difference between laying a quota restriction on an industry and in saying that of the quota you produce you may process only a small percent, in this case only 3 percent. No mainland producing area is barred from refining its entire quota allotment. I do believe there is a fundamental difference, although I recognize the gentleman disagrees with me, and he feels it keenly because Michigan has a limited quota, only enough to keep one factory going, and he feels it is a discrimination or restriction on refined sugar. I disagree with him on that point. Hawaii is allowed a quota of 938,000 tons, a substantial reduction, to share with other producing areas in providing for an increased quota for the Louisiana and Florida area. Then we are told that we can process only 3 percent of that allowed quota.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman will agree that if his proposal is put into the law and extended, as it undoubtedly will be extended, that the net result of it will be that we have by legislation destroyed an industry in this country, depriving American citizens living in this country of opportunity to work in order that you may set up another industry of a like character within the islands, and afford labor for your own people.

Mr. KING. No; I do not agree. I am sure the gentleman missed my opening statement. The question of whether we refine or do not refine our sugar does not affect the quota of the beet-sugar people one iota.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the Delegate from Hawaii has expired.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a statement from the Louisiana delegation on the sugar bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent to submit at this point a statement that has been prepared by the entire House Delegation from my State, composed of my colleagues, J. O. FERNANDEZ, PAUL H. MALONEY, ROBERT L. MOUTON, OVERTON BROOKS, NEWT V. MILLS, JOHN K. GRIFFITH, RENÉ L. DEROUEN, and A. LEONARD ALLEN, relating to the Jones sugar bill that is now under discussion.

Mr. Chairman, we believe it is highly desirable and, indeed, necessary that some form of legislation for the control of supply and demand of sugar be enacted if the industry is to exist in a reasonably profitable manner and, at the same time, furnish to the consumer an uninterrupted adequate supply of sugar with a fair price. We believe that this bill with its main provisions is calculated to bring such results and is in accord with the recommendations of the President as on February 26, 1937, in his message to Congress the President stated:

> I, therefore, recommend to Congress the enactment of the sugar-quota system and its necessary complements which will restore the operation on which the Jones-Costigan Act was based. In order to accomplish this purpose, adequate safeguards would be required to protect the interest of each group concerned.

The sugar industry has had its ups and downs and was like all other commodities when the depression came along, on the verge of ruin, thereby causing losses in investments, in lands and machinery and buildings; losses to farmers and losses to laborers. It needed something that would require stabilization of prices and orderly marketing of the product and to accomplish this with an equitable program for the various interested groups was quite a complicated problem. However, the enactment of the Jones-Costigan law with its protective provisions, which law expires this December, brought an orderly movement into the sugar industry, permitting various interested groups to conduct their business on a sound basis which carried its beneficial effects to the farmers as well as the laborers. The bill now under discussion is for the purpose of continuing this program for another 3 years. As it has been perfected, it is an improvement. Of course, the main feature of the bill is the question of quotas. The overproduction of sugar in off-shore areas makes this essential. So the farmer could obtain a reasonable price for his product it was necessary that the quota system be inaugurated and to effect a quota system it was also necessary to control acreage. Therefore, there had to be some compensating requirements to the farmer for his curtailment of acreage and, to take care of this feature, there is a small processing tax placed upon the manufacture of sugar.

The question of quotas has been one that has been very difficult to adjust. We feel as other producing areas that we are entitled to a larger quota than is provided in the present bill. However, realizing the necessity of this legislation we are accepting the compromise quotas as fixed in this present bill. The various groups that have been supplying sugar to the consumer of continental United States and who have been accorded consideration and treatment in this bill reckoned on past performances are the cane and beet producers of continental United States; cane producers of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Virgin Islands, and the cane producers of the Philippines and Cuba, and the refiners of offshore raw sugar in continental United States. In the quotas as provided in this bill each one of these groups have been given consideration and allotments. While it is quite probable that no one group is entirely satisfied as they could produce more than the quota assigned, which is our case in Louisiana, it is a fact that each of the producer groups has been given consideration in keeping with the President's recommendations wherein he stated "that adequate safeguards would be required to protect the interest of each group concerned." This applies not only to the grower of cane and beet in continental United States but also to the refiners. The refining of sugar in continental United States is quite an industry and employs many; the investments are large and we believe that no offshore sugar should come to United States in consumption form; that this particular business should be given to our own investors who have the equipment to do the work and the laborers who need the work. However, we are accepting the compromise on this particular feature as well as the others.

The State of Louisiana has been growing sugarcane for the past 185 years on certain lands particularly adapted to the growing of cane. We have in 1937 in our State 240,000 acres of land in sugarcane for sugar cultivated by 12,000 farmers. In this industry, besides, we have 71 sugar houses and have six refiners. The industry employs approximately 43,000 heads of families. The investment reaches into large figures and means much to the welfare of the community as employers of laborers and taxpayers, all of which only makes us deeply concerned in the welfare of the industry. We appreciate its usefulness and its value to our citizenship as a whole, and, therefore, we can fully appreciate the problem and its needs in the other sugar-producing areas, with which we are in entire sympathy. We believe it is to the interest of the American citizen that the sugar industry of continental United States be protected and not traded off for any imaginary values that may appear for other commodities. It must be remembered that of our thousands of acres in continental United States that are in cane and beet production, that to take this acreage out of such production would mean the acreage would have to go into production of corn, wheat, or cotton, of which there is now an oversupply, and this would not only add an increased supply of these commodities but would take from the sugar-producing areas in continental United States the buying power that they receive now from the sugar industry and which money is spent liberally in the other States for various sundry supplies. We believe the principle of this legislation is economically sound because it was so proven by the experimentation we have had with the Jones-Costigan bill, which this legislation patterns.

We trust there will be no change in the quota features of the continental groups because, if there are, they are bound to work an unjust hardship. We also hope the legislation will not be delayed, as we believe this would have a very serious and damaging effect to all. We are also conscious of the fact of the trying circumstances under which the Agriculture Committee has labored to produce the bill that is now under consideration. We know they have labored diligently and laboriously and have tried to give sympathetic consideration to the various interested groups. We believe they have recommended a compromise bill that should receive the support of this Congress. We want to take this opportunity to congratulate them on the splendid results they have obtained under the most trying conditions.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent in this 3 minutes to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate on sugar. Knowing nothing about it, I have learned. My object in taking the floor now is to call the attention of the House to the condition that the farmer in America finds himself in, so far as expected legislation is concerned in this Congress. It seems that the program is to consider housing and wages and hours, and let the farmer go by the board and take his chances next January and the succeeding months. To me that is a distressing piece of information. If there is a class of people in this country, composing 33,000,000 of our population, who ought to be entitled to some security by legislation, it is the American farmer. What I would like to see done is for this Congress to stay in session until we can yoke the farm program with the work-labor program and with the housing program. There is no reason why the farmer should not be considered along with those two other major matters by the Congress. I would like to join a group that would stay in session until a decent farm program is given consideration. If we cannot give it consideration during this session, then I believe it would be fair to the three major propositions that Congress has to consider, that they be postponed until next January; and next January we ought to resolve that we will have those matters for consideration and they shall have priority over any other legislative matter that comes up for the consideration of the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. May I inquire how long we expect to proceed without a quorum?

Mr. JONES. We expect just to finish the general debate and read one paragraph and then rise.

Mr. MICHENER. How much general debate is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman does not intend to read any of the bill?

Mr. JONES. Just the first paragraph, but not offer any amendments.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it the purpose to finish the bill tomorrow?

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the various arguments that have been presented this afternoon I think the question resolves itself down to whether or not the Territories of Puerto Rico and Hawaii should be entitled to the production and refining of sugar for the American market without restriction, or whether the quotas allotted to those Territories by the provisions of this bill are just and equitable.

This committee has had a big job. It has held hearings. They have given very careful consideration and study to a very complex and difficult problem in an endeavor to settle this very troublesome situation in a manner that will be fair and equitable to all of the various elements concerned.

The claim of the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. KING] just presented in such an able maner is that the Territory of Hawaii is a possesison under the American flag and no discrimination should be exercised against it. In other words, that they should be allowed to produce and refine sugar for the continental American market without any restriction. It seems to me, in view of the facts presented here today, showing conclusively that the provisions contained in the bill restrict other producing and processing areas in our country, that that argument is untenable and without force. We have heard various gentlemen from the beet-producing sections contend that under the terms of the bill their quota is restricted.

The gentlemen from Florida contend that they are not permitted to produce enough sugar to take care of the consumption of their State. Then, surely there is not much merit in the contention of the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. KING] that the bill discriminates against that Territory. No one has contended here today that if the unrestricted privilege of producing and refining sugar is extended to the Territories that it will not mean practical ruination of the refining industry in this country. It will then mean American labor versus poorly paid tropical labor, and our refiners would be unable to cope with that situation. Hawaii and Puerto Rico have the same quotas they always had under this bill. They have not been refining countries. They do not have extensive refining facilities. New refineries would have to be built. The refineries are in this country, mostly in the populous centers of our country, in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, in the States of New Jersey, Florida, Texas, Georgia, and Louisiana, and other sections, where they employ American labor under decent labor standards. For instance, in my own State of Massachusetts there are two refineries employing from 1,500 to 1,800 men. Both of those refineries are unionized, both of them pay union wages.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. They pay 65 cents an hour to common labor and maintain a 40-hour week. They pay to the city of Boston, for instance, something like $500,000 a year in taxes. They have a $3,000,000 pay roll. If you transfer this industry to the insular possessions what will happen in the continental United States to these American workmen? Is it proposed to throw them out of work and add them to the army of unemployed? Do you want to impose a still greater burden on our cities?

In my judgment, Hawaii is being most fairly dealt with in this bill. It has the free and unrestricted privilege of producing and refining sugar for its own Territorial use and for sale in the world market. Under this bill it has received as fair a deal as it has ever had.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not a fact that large industrialists and international financiers in this country who call themselves Americans have established and built not only sugar refineries but other kinds of factories not only in island possessions, but in foreign countries where labor is cheap in order to make their profits?

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman is correct, and their principal purpose is to take advantage of a cheap-labor market in those countries.

I have the figures read into the RECORD by the gentleman from Hawaii, and I submit they are in no way comparable with the wages for persons engaged in similar trades in continental United States.

I know the gentleman is too intelligent and too well informed to seriously contend that wage and working conditions in Hawaii compare favorably with similar conditions in the continental United States.

I believe he knows that if labor conditions were even nearly comparable that refiners in Hawaii would not be able to drive our century-old industry from the continent to the insular possessions. The gentleman [Mr. KING] makes light of the economic dislocation caused by the migration of established industries to low-wage areas. I say to him and to all the Members that the time has arrived when we must take serious notice of these trends and their serious consequences to our national economy.

I trust the Membership of the House will support the committee. Its members have worked arduously and diligently, and have fairly and justly considered this complicated legislation from every angle. In my judgment they merit our full support. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much talk about discrimination on the floor of the House this afternoon that I am beginning to wonder whether Puerto Rico and Hawaii are being discriminated against, or whether Puerto Rico and Hawaii are discriminating against the 48 States. What is discrimination? Discrimination is the placing of unusual burdens upon one group of citizens for the special benefit of another group of citizens.

When the gentlemen from Florida, Michigan, Wisconsin, and other States complain that they are being discriminated against because they cannot raise the quantity of beets or sugarcane they would like to raise, I say that their premise is false, because that is not discrimination in that the beet- and sugarcane-quota burdens in this bill are distributed as equally as it is humanly possible on all the citizens of the United States.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANZETTA. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Is Puerto Rico subject to the income tax? Is Puerto Rico subject to the Social Security Act? Is Puerto Rico subject to——

Mr. LANZETTA. One question at a time, please. If the gentleman is going to set the precedent in this Congress that the rights and privileges of a State or of a citizen depend upon the amount of tax paid, then I say to the gentleman that he is setting a dangerous precedent, because tomorrow many States of the Union and many individuals who are paying the largest amount of taxes may come to this Congress and ask for special privileges.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a memorandum from the Department of the Interior on the subject of discrimination and exploitation of our Territories.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The memorandum is as follows:

A committee of the Department of the Interior, surveying the effect of various sugar proposals on the island possessions within the jurisdiction of that Department, today reported to Secretary of the Interior Ickes:

"The provisions of H. R. 7667, discriminating against Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands in the matter of refined sugar, are in complete violation of traditional American policy and of basic American principles.

"First, these discriminatory provisions establish trade barriers within the United States. These provisions establish that a certain part of the Union may not manufacture, may not process the products of its soil. This discrimination against one part of the Union is established not merely in favor of another part of the Union—in itself an unjustifiable performance. It establishes discriminations against parts of America, inhabited by American citizens, in favor of a few mainland companies already highly privileged by this legislation. As a precedent, this kind of discrimination is unthinkable—and because it was introduced without the administration's approval 3 years ago in the Jones-Costigan bill, in an emergency, is no reason for making it a continuing national policy.

"Second. These discriminations are contrary to the spirit of American institutions. They are contrary to contemporary American policy by establishing an Old World colonialism in America. The essence of Old World colonialism, the colonialism against which the Colonies rebelled when they declared their independence, was the right of the mother country to exploit those colonies, to consider their citizens as occupying a secondary and inferior status, and to place economic obstacles in their path in favor of commercial interests in the mother country. This is still the practice among Old World empires, though to a more limited extent than it was a century and a half ago—because colonies cannot be exploited as ruthlessly now as then. However, it is self-evident that sound statesmanship in the United States cannot recognize, cannot permit, the establishment of such a continuing policy with us. It has been part of our historic process that Territories represented an earlier stage of political development, and that during that period of development their lack of voting strength in the Congress was not to be taken advantage of to penalize them, but, on the contrary, should entitle them to the fullest protection from the entire Congress. Because Hawaii and Puerto Rico have no vote in the Congress is not only not a reason for discriminating against their products and imposing restrictions upon them against which they cannot retaliate, but it is a valid reason for insuring them protection at the hands of the entire Congress. The Congress itself is looked to by American citizens in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands to insure them equal treatment."

Mr. LANZETTA. The thing that the gentleman from Massachusetts spoke about a moment ago is the very thing that caused the trouble between England and the Colonies in 1776. England at that time took the stand that the citizens of the mother country should have special rights and privileges to the detriment of the citizens who resided in the Colonies. When we discriminate against Puerto Rico and Hawaii by restricting the production of refined and direct-consumption sugar in these Territories we are doing the same thing that caused a great deal of the trouble between England and the Colonies.

Much has also been said about how fair we have been to Puerto Rico and Hawaii. Well, now, let us look at the other side of the story and see how fair Hawaii and Puerto Rico have been to us? I want to call the attention of the Members of this House that in the last 10 years Puerto Rico alone has purchased over $900,000,000 worth of goods from us, while Hawaii has purchased an almost similar amount. I say that this is something that the Members of Congress should ponder over, before talking about how fair we have been to these offshore areas. Needless to say, the purchase of this tremendous amount of goods benefited not only the producers but also thousands of workers in continental America.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to insert at this point certain tables which show the various benefits received by Puerto Rico and Hawaii as compared to those received by the States.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER].

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I have spent the whole afternoon listening to the debate on this bill. I heard bandied about the word "Americanism this" and "Americanism that." I do not think I have to remind the East that the United States Government does not maintain a consular office in the Hawaiian Islands. It is not a foreign country. It is part and parcel of the United States just as much as Oklahoma Territory was before it became a State or just as much as New Mexico was before it became a State.

When I rise at this late hour, after listening to the splendid address of the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING], what I have to say may appear more or less as an anticlimax to the arguments that may be made against any discrimination whatsoever. I come from the State of California, on the Pacific Coast. Our relations with the Hawaiian Islands group has been extremely friendly and from the economic standpoint extremely valuable.

Mr. Chairman, there is an attempt in this bill to treat the Hawaiian Islands as if they were a colony. We operate under a Constitution, as is known by all, which is a constricted document. We cannot hope under a constitutional form of government to discriminate against our possessions.

Let us take the State of Oklahoma, for instance. What would the people of that State have said before that Territory became a State, being a State that raises considerable cotton, if they were told they could process only a certain number of tons of cottonseed to make cottonseed oil? I wonder how the Alaskans would feel if they were discriminated against in a similar manner that this bill discriminates against the Hawaiian Islands.

After all, Mr. Chairman, I rise in defense of the patriotism and the truly American spirit demonstrated in the Hawaiian Islands, which I have visited. During the World War a draft act was passed and under that act the quota for the Hawaiian Islands was set at 2,403 troops. However, under the first draft act the Hawaiian Islands were not compelled to draft any soldiers for the war, because theretofore there had been volunteer enlistments in the American Army of 3,479 troops.

There was a call for Liberty Loan sales in this country during the war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LUECKE].

Mr. LUECKE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I was not a Member of the House at the time the Jones-Costigan Act was placed upon the statute books, but if my memory does not fail me, at that time 16 mills out of 19 in Michigan shut down; but after the enactment of the Jones-Costigan Act the greater number of those mills again began operation. The mill located in my district I think closed down for a period of 4 years.

If we do not enact this bill into law at the present time I think it would be very unfortunate. It would be breaking faith with the farmers who have gone ahead on promises and put in their crops, and drawn up contracts to deliver beets to the workers in these beet-sugar mills. I have looked this report over from beginning to end and I cannot see where the offshore areas are being discriminated against. They are left practically the same as they were in the Jones-Costigan Act.

It is said whenever an attempt is made to legislate for the benefit of any industry that great harm has resulted, usually from a disruption of the price of the product. The statistics show that since 1932 the retail price of sugar has remained between 5.4 cents per pound and 5.6 per pound, a variation of about one-fifth of a cent per pound in 4 years. That to me discloses the success of this legislation. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], when he said that we do not go far enough in this bill. I believe we should increase our quota so far as sugar-beet production is concerned.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I have a rather short time in which to develop a whole economic point of view on this question, but that is what I have to try to do. I want to say, first, I am willing to stay with the gentleman from Oklahoma from now on in order to get legislation passed for the benefit of the farmers. I hope that legislation can be fundamental. I hope it can be based on a full production, plus a direct cost-of-production price maintenance for the farmers. If it is, it will require likewise adequate protection against imports for our staple crops—the crops of which we grow an ample supply to care for all our domestic needs.

There are a number of gentlemen in the House who have spoken many times against the idea of attempting to plan, and have criticized rather severely the attempts of this administration to plan our national economic and social life for the welfare of the common people. It is rather interesting to observe that nobody has mentioned this argument today, in spite of the fact that we have been up to our very ears here today in planning for an industry in order to try to parcel out the advantages from one group to another. I believe that what should have been said is that sugar is a special case. I am very much in accord with the opinion expressed that we should have the American market for American labor wherever American producers are able to come within gunshot of a reasonable cost of production. I think, under those circumstances, they should be protected by a tariff. However, I am thoroughly convinced that the sugar question is a special case, and I think it is being dealt with as a special case, or we would not have a special bill for it or a town fairly bulging with lobbyists.

A few facts may illustrate what I mean. American consumers have been paying in the past 3 years over $300,000,000 more for sugar than they would have had to pay had they bought it at the world price. In 1934 the Tariff Commission found that the total investment in sugar production and beet-sugar processing was $700,000,000. It is interesting to compare these figures. Profits of the five largest beet refiners over a 3-year period just passed have averaged 9 percent of the total net worth of these companies.

The extra cost of sugar all comes out of American consumers. It goes partly to American refiners, partly to foreign producers and refiners, partly to great corporations producing sugar, and a little of it goes to the small-scale producing farmers of our country and the workers they hire. I believe firmly in protection against the competition of sweated foreign labor for every American industry and especially every farm crop which can economically fill the American domestic demand.

But I believe sugar is a special case. I think the gentlemen from Florida present a very good case. I think, if we must have quotas, that the size of the quota should depend primarily on how cheaply an area can furnish sugar, provided labor is properly paid in that area. I intend tomorrow to introduce an amendment which points in this direction.

It has been said that we ought to produce all our sugar in the United States itself. What I believe we ought to say is that we should produce all the sugar in the United States which can be produced at a reasonable margin above foreign costs of production—all the sugar we can produce without making of the industry a political special interest—all the sugar we can produce without levying an unjust tribute on American consumers, who are all the people. I believe the consumer has an interest in this legislation which is the only interest that has been seriously neglected.

We started planning our national economic life when the first protective tariff was passed. We have got to go on now. We will be called upon to plan more and more. But we have to be fair and consider every case on its own merits. We want America to be as nearly self-sustained as she can be made without serious economic loss. But we should be careful about building up an industry behind a great barrier of protection and production limitation when doing so means reducing production in other fields in which our Nation enjoys a greater advantage, and in which even more employment can be provided.

It is a question of weighing the gains and losses. Assertion of broad sweeping principles seem to be out of place. There is a point where the cost of protection of an industry becomes prohibitive. That is why we do not grow rubber and coffee in the United States. Has that point been reached in the case of sugar? This is the main question which needs consideration.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] such time as he may desire.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak today about the need for Congress to pass farm legislation at this session which can help the farmers of this Nation maintain the gains which they have made under this administration. I wish to point out the real need for legislation which can be a protection for them against surpluses which, in all too short a time, can bring farmers to their knees again as they were in 1932 and in early 1933.

I come from a State where drought after drought has hit our farmers. Wheat farming is a principal source of income from crops. But in spite of the devastation which drought has wrought in Montana, I have no hesitation in saying that what the farmers of Montana want, and what I know a majority of all farmers want, is enactment of legislation which can give them protection, not only when drought is burning up their crops, but also protection against overwhelming surpluses.

Against drought damage the proposal for crop insurance, which is now pending in the House, has the almost unanimous approval of the farmers of Montana. I say that this is one piece of legislation that should be marked "must" by all of us. With this measure, as proposed, farmers can positively insure one-half to three-fourths of their normal yield of wheat against loss from any cause. They can do this by paying the Crop Insurance Corporation in wheat and receiving wheat back when they have losses. I ask you to consider what such a program would mean to a whole area, such as eastern Montana, where wheat yields are large in some years and almost nothing in others. Think what such a plan can mean to farmers in these areas. Think what such a plan can mean for the cities of this area. But crop insurance is more than a purely local matter. Crop insurance is as important to the manufacturing interests of the East as to the crop areas themselves. Crop insurance means stable buying power in the grain areas. It means a lessening of the load of relief. It means a stable agriculture; and as such I wish to urge that this Congress enact crop insurance into law before any adjournment is considered.

Crop insurance offers protection against scarcity, but it is not intended to meet the problem of surplus. That is the problem that all of our agriculture is going to face, sooner or later, and I fear it is going to be much sooner than later. The promise of crops for this year is abundant. Look at futures prices of corn at Chicago for the market estimate of what corn will be worth. On July 26 the July corn futures closed at 104⅛ cents a bushel, but the December futures closed at only 72⅞ cents a bushel. The price of oats over a good deal of the United States dropped from a farm price of 50 cents a bushel to 25 cents a bushel just as soon as farmers began threshing this year's crop. That shows what a surplus can do to farm prices. In wheat we have a very different situation, but we need only look across the Canadian border to see the reason why. Canadian crop losses from drought and dust storms are largely responsible for the high price of wheat in this country this year. But we cannot go on year after year depending upon Canadian crop failures to hold up the price of wheat. We must keep our own house in order. We must think where we will be if there is no Canadian crop failure. We must consider what year after year of two and one-half billion bushel corn crops will mean to corn prices and eventually to hog prices.

Our farmers are thinking about these things. They are looking to us to redeem the pledges of the campaign of last year to maintain the income of agriculture. I say that this administration is committed to the task of maintaining agricultural income and prosperity, and failure to enact comprehensive farm legislation at this session will be viewed by our farmers as a breach of faith. We all know the demand for such a type of legislation. The wishes of farmers have been made known by their recognized spokesmen. President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace have repeatedly emphasized the urgency of the problem. What are we waiting for? We have been here for nearly 7 months, and we have precious little to show for these months. This is the busy season on the farm and farmers do not have time to write to us. But they are depending on us. I, for one, say that we must not fail. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. GREEVER] such time as he desires.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the subject of sugar-beet legislation has been so fully covered during the committee hearings, which it was my pleasure to attend on a great many occasions, and during the debate in the House yesterday and today, that it seems almost useless to attempt to add anything to what has been said; but I do wish to stress the importance of the sugar-beet industry to the sugar-producing States.

In 1936 continental United States produced 26,100,000 bags of sugar. The crop for that year amounted to more than $130,000,000. In the irrigated sections of the West, which are admirably adapted to beet raising, the sugar-beet industry constitutes the largest cash crop. During the years 1925 to 1936, inclusive, on the Shoshone project in Wyoming the average value of potatoes raised was $76.28 per acre, while during the same period of time the average of sugar beets produced was $77.43 per acre. I believe that this comparison would be true in most of the irrigated sections. Sugar beets qualify as a cultivated crop recommended for successful rotation and provide valuable livestock feed, the sugar-beet industry being a valuable adjunct to the livestock business. In addition to about 3,700 pounds of sugar produced from an acre of beets, the byproducts will produce approximately 400 pounds of beef or mutton. The low-cost byproducts can be supplemented by feed crops which are grown in rotation with the beets. Beets give more than twice as much employment per acre as any other crop, and according to a study made in one county in Colorado, they return more per hour of man-labor than any other crop, namely, 94.64 cents. Employment benefits extend beyond the farm, too, in the factory pay roll and utilization of nearby materials in the sugar-manufacturing process, which adds greatly to the stability of business in the community.

Beet growers in the United States desire legislation primarily for the continuance of the sugar quota system, including benefit payments and a tax on their products for the purpose of raising revenue sufficient to pay such benefits. In his message to Congress on March 1, 1937, the President requested such legislation and recommended that the principles of the Jones-Costigan Act should be reenacted. The quota system instituted under the Jones-Costigan Act has proven to be of tremendous benefit to the sugar growers of this country and has resulted in stabilizing this industry and making it a profitable one throughout the United States. It is a far-sighted, far-reaching policy and one which places the American sugar grower in a position whereby he will have a stabilized and profitable market, with the additional advantage of controlling the price of sugar to the extent where it will not be disastrous to the consumer.

Without exception the beet growers of my State are fully in harmony with the principle of this legislation; and, while the bill is a result of patient compromise, it presents, in my opinion, a strong and well-reasoned piece of legislation.

The charge has been made that because of restriction upon the refined-sugar quotas from Hawaii and Puerto Rico that this legislation discriminates against these two territories. In all fairness, I do not see how either Hawaii or Puerto Rico could complain in the slightest of this legislation. In 1934 Congress passed the Jones-Costigan bill which provided for a quota plan which fixed the value of other continental sugar groups and of Puerto Rico and Hawaii at near their then existing maximum levels. As I understand the Jones-Costigan legislation, it attempted insofar as possible to fix a quota not only of sugar beets and cane sugar to be grown in the continental United States and in the insular possessions, but thereby also in effect fixed the quota as to the amount which should be refined in the United States. There is no question but what Hawaii and Puerto Rico received great benefits from this bill. As a matter of fact, as a result of the bill Hawaiian sugar received benefits amounting to many millions of dollars from the bill on its quota of sugar. The same is true of Puerto Rico. As a matter of fact, the Jones-Costigan Act in establishing quota limitations on production and marketing of sugar for the continental United States did not require Hawaii to reduce her previous maximum volume of refined-sugar shipments to the continent, but limited her to that maximum. In effect exactly this same thing was done in the sugar-beet producing areas, because by limiting the quota, necessarily the manufacturing of sugar was also limited to the areas surrounding and available to the beet factories. If the sections restricting the importations of refined sugar were stricken from this bill, it would simply mean that Hawaii and Puerto Rico would be preferred over the continental United States in that regard.

This bill has been carefully worked out. The committee deserves the congratulations and the thanks of the Congress for the excellent job which they have done under the most adverse and trying conditions. The legislation is constructive and sound and I hope, with my colleagues from sugar-producing areas, that this bill will be passed by a large majority.

It is the province of Congress to consider legislation. Threats of the veto of a bill should not deter us from what we believe to be an honest and constructive purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is a technical bill. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill under the 5-minute rule may be dispensed with and that amendments may be offered anywhere in the bill so long as it is under consideration. I do this in order to allow full discussion of the important amendments which will be offered.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean to say that the bill will not be read tomorrow under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. JONES. The bill will not be read, but amendments will be in order anywhere in the bill as under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This does not affect the time at all?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the Sugar Act of 1937.

TITLE I. DEFINITIONS

SECTION 101. For the purposes of this act, except title IV—

(a) The term "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, or association.

(b) The term "sugars" means any grade or type of saccharine product derived from sugarcane or sugar beets, which contains sucrose, dextrose, or levulose.

(c) The term "sugar" means raw sugar or direct-consumption sugar.

(d) The term "raw sugar" means any sugars which are principally of crystalline structure and which are to be further refined or improved in quality, and any sugars which are principally not of crystalline structure but which are to be further refined or otherwise improved in quality to produce any sugars principally of crystalline structure.

(e) The term "direct-consumption sugar" means any sugars which are principally of crystalline structure and which are not to be further refined or otherwise improved in quality.

(f) The term "liquid sugar" means any sugars (exclusive of sirup of cane juice produced from sugarcane grown in continental United States) which are principally not of crystalline structure and which contain, or which are to be used for the production of any sugars principally not of crystalline structure which contain soluble nonsugar solids (excluding any foreign substances that may have been added) equal to 6 percent or less of the total soluble solids.

(g) Sugars in dry amorphous form shall be considered to be principally of crystalline structure.

(h) The "raw value" of any quantity of sugars means its equivalent in terms of ordinary commercial raw sugar testing 96 sugar degrees by the polariscope, determined in accordance with regulations to be issued by the Secretary. The principal grades and types of sugar and liquid sugar shall be translated into terms of raw value in the following manner:

(1) For direct-consumption sugar, derived from sugar beets and testing 92 or more sugar degrees by the polariscope, by multiplying the number of pounds thereof by 1.07.

(2) For sugar derived from sugarcane and testing 92 sugar degrees by the polariscope, by multiplying the number of pounds thereof by 0.93.

(3) For sugar derived from sugarcane and testing more than 92 sugar degrees by the polariscope, by multiplying the number of pounds thereof by the figure obtained by adding to 0.93 the result of multiplying 0.0175 by the number of degrees and fractions of a degree of polarization above 92°.

(4) For sugar and liquid sugar testing less than 92 sugar degrees by the polariscope, by dividing the number of pounds of the "total sugar content" thereof by 0.972.

(5) The Secretary may establish rates for translating sugar and liquid sugar into terms of raw value for (a) any grade or type of sugar or liquid sugar not provided for in the foregoing and (b) any special grade or type of sugar or liquid sugar for which he determines that the raw value cannot be measured adequately under the provisions of paragraphs (1) to (4), inclusive, of this subsection (h).

(i) The term "total sugar content" means the sum of the sucrose (Clerget) and reducing or invert sugars contained in any grade or type of sugar or liquid sugar.

(j) The term "quota", depending upon the context, means (1) that quantity of sugar or liquid sugar which may be brought or imported into the continental United States, for consumption therein, during any calendar year from the Territory of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, or a foreign country or group of foreign countries; (2) that quantity of sugar or liquid sugar produced from sugar beets or sugarcane grown in the continental United States which, during any calendar year, may be shipped, transported, or marketed in interstate commerce, or in competition with sugar or liquid sugar shipped, transported, or marketed in interstate or foreign commerce; or (3) that quantity of sugar or liquid sugar which may be marketed in the Territory of Hawaii or in Puerto Rico, for consumption therein, during any calendar year.

(k) The term "producer" means a person who is the legal owner, at the time of harvest or abandonment, of a portion or all of a crop of sugar beets or sugarcane grown on a farm for the extraction of sugar or liquid sugar.

(l) The terms "including" and "include" shall not be deemed to exclude anything not mentioned but otherwise within the meaning of the term defined.

(m) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

TITLE II. QUOTA PROVISIONS

SECTION 201. The Secretary shall determine for each calendar year the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the continental United States; such determinations shall be made during the month of December in each year for the succeeding calendar year and at such other times during such calendar year as the Secretary may deem necessary to meet such requirements. In making such determinations the Secretary shall use as a basis the quantity of direct-consumption sugar distributed for consumption, as indicated by official statistics of the Department of Agriculture, during the 12-month period ending October 31 next preceding the calendar year for which the determination is being made, and shall make allowances for a deficiency or surplus in inventories of sugar, and changes in consumption, as computed from statistics published by agencies of the Federal Government with respect to inventories of sugar, population, and demand conditions; and in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under this act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary shall make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirments of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available under this act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to make the production of sugar beets and sugarcane as profitable on the average, per dollar of total gross income, as the production of the five principal (measured on the basis of acreage) agricultural cash crops in the United States.

SEC. 202. Whenever a determination is made, pursuant to section 201, of the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers, the Secretary shall establish quotas, or revise existing quotas—

(a) For domestic sugar-producing areas by prorating among such areas 55.59 percent of such amount of sugar (but not less than 3,715,000 short tons) on the following basis:

Area	Percent
Domestic beet sugar	41.72
Mainland cane sugar	11.31
Hawaii	25.25
Puerto Rico	21.48
Virgin Islands	.24

(b) For foreign countries, and the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, by prorating 44.41 percent of such amount of sugar (except, if such amount of sugar is less than 6,682,670 short tons, the excess of such amount over 3,715,000 short tons), on the following basis:

Area	Percent
Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands	34.70
Cuba	64.41
Foreign countries other than Cuba	.89

The quota for foreign countries other than Cuba shall be prorated among such countries on the basis of the division of the quota for such countries made in General Sugar Quota Regulations, Series 4, No. 1, issued December 12, 1936, pursuant to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended.

SEC. 203. In accordance with the applicable provisions of section 201, the Secretary shall also determine the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers in the Territory of Hawaii, and in Puerto Rico, and shall establish quotas for the amounts of sugar which may be marketed for local consumption in such areas equal to the amounts determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers therein.

SEC. 204. (a) The Secretary shall, as he deems necessary during the calendar year, determine whether, in view of the current inventories of sugar, the estimated production from the acreage of sugarcane or sugar beets planted, the normal marketings within a calendar year of new-crop sugar, and other pertinent factors, any domestic area, the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, or Cuba, will be unable to market the quota for such area. If the Secretary finds that any domestic area or Cuba will be unable to market the quota for such area for the calendar year then current, he shall revise the quotas for the domestic areas and Cuba by prorating an amount of sugar equal to the deficit so determined to the other such areas, on the basis of the quotas then in effect. Any portion of such sugar which the Secretary determines cannot be supplied by domestic areas and Cuba shall be prorated to foreign countries other than Cuba on the basis of the prorations of the quota then in effect for such foreign countries. If the Secretary finds that the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands will be unable to market the quota for such area for the calendar year then current, he shall revise the quota for foreign countries other than Cuba by prorating an amount of sugar equal to the deficit so determined to such foreign countries, on the basis of the prorations of the quota then in effect for such countries: Provided, however, That the quota for any domestic area, the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, or Cuba or other foreign countries, shall not be reduced by reason of any determination made pursuant to the provisions of this subsection.

(b) If, on the 1st day of September in any calendar year, any part or all of the proration to any foreign country of the quota in effect on the 1st day of July in the same calendar year for foreign countries other than Cuba, has not been filled, the Secretary may revise the proration of such quota among such foreign countries, by prorating an amount of sugar equal to such unfilled proration to all other such foreign countries which have filled their prorations of such quota by such date, on the basis of the prorations then in effect.

SEC. 205. (a) Whenever the Secretary finds that the allotment of any quota, or proration thereof, established for any area pursuant to the provisions of this act, is necessary to assure an orderly and adequate flow of sugar or liquid sugar in the channels of interstate or foreign commerce, or to prevent disorderly marketing or importation of sugar or liquid sugar, or to maintain a continuous and stable supply of sugar or liquid sugar, or to afford all interested persons an equitable opportunity to market sugar or liquid sugar within any area's quota, after such hearing and upon such notice as he may by regulations prescribe, he shall make allotments of such quota or proration thereof by allotting to persons who market or import sugar or liquid sugar, for such periods as he may designate, the quantities of sugar or liquid sugar which each such person may market in continental United States, the Territory of Hawaii, or Puerto Rico, or may import or bring into continental United States, for consumption therein. Allotments shall be made in such manner and in such amounts as to provide a fair, efficient, and equitable distribution of such quota or proration thereof, by taking into consideration the processings of sugar or liquid sugar from sugar beets or sugarcane to which proportionate shares, determined pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b) of section 302, pertained; the past marketings or importations of each such person; or the ability of such person to market or import that portion of such quota or proration thereof allotted to him. The Secretary may also, upon such hearing and notice as he may by regulations prescribe, revise or amend any such allotment upon the same basis as the initial allotment was made.

(b) An appeal may be taken, in the manner hereinafter provided, from any decision making such allotments, or revision thereof, to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in any of the following cases:

(1) By any applicant for an allotment whose application shall have been denied.

(2) By any person aggrieved by reason of any decision of the Secretary granting or revising any allotment made to him.

(c) Such appeal shall be taken by filing with said court within 20 days after the decision complained of is effective, notice in writing of said appeal and a statement of the reasons therefor, together with proof of service of a true copy of said notice and statement upon the Secretary. Unless a later date is specified by the Secretary as part of his decision, the decision complained of shall be considered to be effective as of the date on which public announcement of the decision is made at the office of the Secretary in the city of Washington. The Secretary shall thereupon, and in any event not later than 10 days from the date of such service upon him, mail or otherwise deliver a copy of said notice of appeal to each person shown by the records of the Secretary to be interested in such appeal and to have a right to intervene therein under the provisions of this section, and shall at all times thereafter permit any such person to inspect and make copies of appellants' reasons for said appeal at the office of the Secretary in the city of Washington. Within 30 days after the filing of said appeal the Secretary shall file with the court the originals or certified copies of all papers and evidence presented to him upon the hearing involved and also a like copy of his decision thereon and shall within 30 days thereafter file a full statement in writing of the facts and grounds for his decision as found and given by him and a list of all interested persons to whom he has mailed or otherwise delivered a copy of said notice of appeal.

(d) Within 30 days after the filing of said appeal any interested person may intervene and participate in the proceedings had upon said appeal by filing with the court a notice of intention to intervene and a verified statement showing the nature of the interest of such party together with proof of service of true copies of said notice and statement, both upon the appellant and upon the Secretary. Any person who would be aggrieved or whose interests would be adversely affected by reversal or modification of the decision of the Secretary complained of shall be considered an interested party.

(e) At the earliest convenient time the court shall hear and determine the appeal upon the record before it, and shall have power, upon such record, to enter a judgment affirming or reversing the decision, and if it enters an order reversing the decision of the Secretary it shall remand the case to the Secretary to carry out the judgment of the court: Provided, however, That the review by the court shall be limited to questions of law and that findings of fact by the Secretary, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it shall clearly appear that the findings of the Secretary are arbitrary or capricious. The court's judgment shall be final, subject, however, to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon writ of certiorari on petition therefor, under section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, sec. 347), by appellant, by the Secretary, or by any interested party intervening in the appeal.

(f) The court may, in its discretion, enter judgment for costs in favor of or against an appellant, and other interested parties intervening in said appeal, but not against the Secretary, depending upon the nature of the issues involved in such appeal and the outcome thereof.

(g) The Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands shall make allotments of any quota established for it pursuant to the provisions of this act on the basis specified in section 6 (d) of Public Law No. 127, approved March 24, 1934.

SEC. 206. Until sugar quotas are established pursuant to this act for the calendar year 1937, which shall be within 60 days after its enactment, the quotas determined by the Secretary in General Sugar Quota Regulations, series 4, no. 1, issued December 12, 1936, pursuant to the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, shall remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 207. (a) Not more than 29,616 short tons, raw value, of the quota for Hawaii for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(b) Not more than 126,033 short tons, raw value, of the quota for Puerto Rico for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(c) None of the quota for the Virgin Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(d) Not more than 80,214 short tons, raw value, of the quota for the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(e) Not more than 375,000 short tons, raw value, of the quota for Cuba for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(f) This section shall not apply with respect to the quotas established under section 203 for marketing for local consumption in Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

SEC. 208. Quotas for liquid sugar for foreign countries for each calendar year are hereby established as follows:

Country	In terms of wine gallons of 75 percent total sugar content
Cuba	7,970,558
Dominican Republic	830,894
Other foreign countries	0

The quantities of liquid sugar imported into the continental United States during the calendar year 1937, prior to the enactment of this act, shall be charged against the quotas for the calendar year 1937 established by this section.

SEC. 209. All persons are hereby prohibited—

(a) From bringing or importing into the continental United States from the Territory of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, or foreign countries any sugar or liquid sugar after the quota for such area, or the proration of any such quota, has been filled;

(b) From shipping, transporting, or marketing in interstate commerce, or in competition with sugar or liquid sugar shipped, transported, or marketed in interstate or foreign commerce any sugar or liquid sugar produced from sugar beets or sugarcane grown in either the domestic-beet-sugar area or the mainland-cane-sugar area after the quota for such area has been filled;

(c) From marketing in either the Territory of Hawaii or Puerto Rico, for consumption therein, any sugar or liquid sugar after the quota therefor has been filled;

(d) From exceeding allotments of any quota or proration thereof made to them pursuant to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 210. (a) The determinations provided for in sections 201 and 203, and all quotas, prorations, and allotments, except quotas established pursuant to the provisions of section 208, shall be made or established in terms of raw value.

(b) For the purposes of this title, liquid sugar, except that imported from foreign countries, shall be included with sugar in making the determinations provided for in sections 201 and 203 and in the establishment or revision of quotas, prorations, and allotments.

SEC. 211. (a) The raw-value equivalent of any sugar or liquid sugar in any form, including sugar or liquid sugar in manufactured products, exported from the continental United States under the provisions of section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall be credited against any charges which shall have been made in respect to the applicable quota or proration for the country of origin. The country of origin of sugar or liquid sugar in respect to which any credit shall be established shall be that country in respect to importation from which drawback of the exported sugar or liquid sugar has been claimed. Sugar or liquid sugar entered into the continental United States under an applicable bond established pursuant to orders or regulations issued by the Secretary, for the express purpose of subsequently exporting the equivalent quantity of sugar or liquid sugar as such, or in manufactured articles, shall not be charged against the applicable quota or proration for the country of origin.

(b) Exportation within the meaning of sections 309 and 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall be considered to be exportation within the meaning of this section.

(c) The quota established for any domestic-sugar producing area may be filled only with sugar or liquid sugar produced from sugar beets or sugarcane grown in such area: Provided, however, That any sugar or liquid sugar admitted free of duty from the Virgin Islands under the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 1133), may be admitted within the quota for the Virgin Islands.

SEC. 212. The provisions of this title shall not apply to (1) the first 10 short tons, raw value, of sugar or liquid sugar imported from any foreign country, other than Cuba, in any calendar year; (2) the first 10 short tons, raw value, of sugar or liquid sugar imported from any foreign country, other than Cuba, in any calendar year for religious, sacramental, educational, or experimental purposes; (3) liquid sugar imported from any foreign country, other than Cuba, in individual sealed containers of such capacity as the Secretary may determine, not in excess of 1.1 gallons each; or (4) any sugar or liquid sugar imported, brought into, or produced or manufactured in the United States for the distillation of alcohol, or for livestock feed, or for the production of livestock feed.

TITLE III—CONDITIONAL-PAYMENT PROVISIONS

SECTION 301. The Secretary is authorized to make payments on the following conditions with respect to sugar or liquid sugar commercially recoverable from the sugar beets or sugarcane grown on a farm for the extraction of sugar or liquid sugar:

(a) That no child under the age of 14 years shall have been employed or permitted to work on the farm, whether for gain to such child or any other person, in the production, cultivation, or harvesting of a crop of sugar beets or sugarcane with respect to which application for payment is made, except a member of the immediate family of a person who was the legal owner of not less than 40 percent of the crop at the time such work was performed; and that no child between the ages of 14 and 16 years shall have been employed or permitted to do such work, whether for gain to such child or any other person, for a longer period than 8 hours in any one day, except a member of the immediate family of a person who was the legal owner of not less than 40 percent of the crop at the time such work was performed.

(b) That all persons employed on the farm in the production, cultivation, or harvesting of sugar beets or sugarcane with respect to which an application for payment is made shall have been paid in full for all such work, and shall have been paid wages therefor at rates not less than those that may be determined by the Secretary to be fair and reasonable after investigation and due notice and opportunity for public hearing; and in making such determinations the Secretary shall take into consideration the standards therefor formerly established by him under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and the differences in conditions among various producing areas: Provided, however, That a payment which would be payable except for the foregoing provisions of this subsection may be made, as the Secretary may determine, in such manner that the laborer will receive an amount, insofar as such payment will suffice, equal to the amount of the accrued unpaid wages for such work, and that the producer will receive the remainder, if any, of such payment.

(c) That there shall not have been marketed (or processed) an amount (in terms of planted acreage, weight, or recoverable sugar content) of sugar beets or sugarcane grown on the farm and used for the production of sugar or liquid sugar to be marketed in, or so as to compete with or otherwise directly affect interstate or foreign commerce, in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, as determined by the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of section 302, of the total quantity of sugar beets or sugarcane required to be processed to enable the area in which such sugar beets or sugarcane are produced to meet the quota (and provide a normal carry-over inventory) as estimated by the Secretary for such area for the calendar year during which the larger part of the sugar or liquid sugar from such crop normally would be marketed.

(d) That the producer on the farm who is also, directly or indirectly, a processor of sugar beets or sugarcane, as may be determined by the Secretary, shall have paid, or contracted to pay under either purchase or toll agreements, for any sugar beets or sugarcane grown by other producers and processed by him at rates not less than those that may be determined by the Secretary to be fair and reasonable after investigation and due notice and opportunity for public hearing.

(e) That there shall have been carried out on the farm such farming practices in connection with the production of sugar beets and sugarcane during the year in which the crop was harvested with respect to which a payment is applied for, as the Secretary may determine, pursuant to this subsection, for preserving and improving fertility of the soil and for preventing soil erosion, such practices to be consistent with the reasonable standards of the farming community in which the farm is situated.

The conditions provided in subsection (a) and in subsection (b) with respect to wage rates, of this section shall not apply to work performed prior to the enactment of this act; and the condition provided in subsection (c) of this section shall not apply to the marketing of the first crop harvested after the enactment of this act from sugar beets or sugarcane planted prior to such enactment.

SEC. 302. (a) The amount of sugar or liquid sugar with respect to which payment may be made shall be the amount of sugar or liquid sugar commercially recoverable, as determined by the Secretary, from the sugar beets or sugarcane grown on the farm and marketed (or processed by the producer) not in excess of the proportionate share for the farm, as determined by the Secretary, of the quantity of sugar beets or sugarcane for the extraction of sugar or liquid sugar required to be processed to enable the producing area in which the crop of sugar beets or sugarcane is grown to meet the quota (and provide a normal carry-over inventory) estimated by the Secretary for such area for the calendar year during which the larger part of the sugar or liquid sugar from such crop normally would be marketed.

(b) In determining the proportionate shares with respect to a farm, the Secretary may take into consideration the past production on the farm of sugar beets and sugarcane marketed (or processed) for the extraction of sugar or liquid sugar and the ability to produce such sugar beets or sugarcane, and the Secretary shall, insofar as practicable, protect the interests of new producers and small producers and the interests of producers who are cash tenants, share-tenants, adherent planters, or sharecroppers.

(c) Payments shall be effective with respect to sugar or liquid sugar commercially recoverable from sugar beets and sugarcane grown on a farm and which shall have been marketed (or processed by the producer) on and after July 1, 1937.

SEC. 303. In addition to the amount of sugar or liquid sugar with respect to which payments are authorized under subsection (a) of section 302, the Secretary is also authorized to make payments, on the conditions provided in section 301, with respect to bona-fide abandonment of planted acreage and crop deficiencies of harvested acreage, resulting from drought, flood, storm, freeze, disease, or insects, which cause such damage to all or a substantial part of the crop of sugar beets or sugarcane in the same factory district (as established by the Secretary), county, parish, municipality, or local producing area, as determined in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, on the following quantities of sugar or liquid sugar: (1) With respect to such bona-fide abandonment of each planted acre of sugar beets or sugarcane, one-third of the normal yield of commercially recoverable sugar or liquid sugar per acre for the farm, as determined by the Secretary; and (2) with respect to such crop deficiencies of harvested acreage of sugar beets or sugarcane, the excess of 80 percent of the normal yield of commercially recoverable sugar or liquid sugar for such acreage for the farm, as determined by the Secretary, over the actual yield.

SEC. 304. (a) The amount of the base rate of payment shall be 60 cents per hundred pounds of sugar or liquid sugar, raw value.

(b) All payments shall be calculated with respect to a farm which, for the purposes of this act, shall be a farming unit as determined in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, and in making such determinations, the Secretary shall take into consideration the use of common work stock, equipment, labor, management, and other pertinent factors.

(c) The total payment with respect to a farm shall be the product of the base rate specified in subsection (a) of this section multiplied by the amount of sugar and liquid sugar, raw value, with respect to which payment is to be made, except that reductions shall be made from such total payment in accordance with the following scale of reductions:

Reduction in the base rate of payment per hundredweight of such portion	That portion of the quantity of sugar and liquid sugar which is included within the following intervals of short tons, raw value:
$0.050	500 to 1,500
.075	1,500 to 6,000
.100	6,000 to 12,000
.125	12,000 to 30,000
.300	30,000 to 50,000
.450	More than 50,000

(d) Application for payment shall be made by, and payments shall be made to, the producer or, in the event of his death, disappearance, or incompetency, his legal representative, or heirs: Provided, however, That all producers on the farm shall signify in the application for payment the percent of the total payment with respect to the farm to be made to each producer: And provided further, That payments may be made, (1) in the event of the death, disappearance, or incompetency of a producer, to such beneficiary as the producer may designate in the application for payment; (2) to one producer of a group of two or more producers, provided all producers on the farm designate such producer in the application for payment as sole recipient for their benefit of the payment with respect to the farm; or (3) to a person who is not a producer, provided such person controls the land included within the farm with respect to which the application for payment is made and is designated by the sole producer (or all producers) on the farm, as sole recipient for his or their benefit, of the payment with respect to the farm.

SEC. 305. In carrying out the provisions of titles II and III of this act the Secretary is authorized to utilize local committees of sugar beet or sugarcane producers, State and county agricultural conservation committees, or the Agricultural Extension Service and other agencies, and the Secretary may prescribe that all or a part of the expenses of such committees may be deducted from the payments herein authorized.

SEC. 306. The facts constituting the basis for any payment, or the amount thereof authorized to be made under this title, officially determined in conformity with rules or regulations prescribed by the Secretary, shall be reviewable only by the Secretary, and his determinations with respect thereto shall be final and conclusive.

SEC. 307. This title shall apply to the continental United States, the Territory of Hawaii, and Puerto Rico.

TITLE IV. EXCISE TAXES WITH RESPECT TO SUGAR

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 401. For the purposes of this title—

(a) The term "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, or association.

(b) The term "manufactured sugar" means any sugar derived from sugar beets or sugarcane, which is not to be, and which shall not be, further refined or otherwise improved in quality; except sugar in liquid form which contains nonsugar solids (excluding any foreign substance that may have been added) equal to more than 6 percent of the total soluble solids, and except also sirup of cane juice produced from sugarcane grown in continental United States. Notwithstanding the foregoing exceptions, sugar in liquid form (regardless of its nonsugar solid content) which is to be used in the distillation of alcohol shall be considered manufactured sugar.

The grades or types of sugar within the meaning of this definition shall include, but shall not be limited to, granulated sugar, lump sugar, cube sugar, powdered sugar, sugar in the form of blocks, cones, or molded shapes, confectioners' sugar, washed sugar, centrifugal sugar, clarified sugar, turbinado sugar, plantation white sugar, muscovado sugar, refiners' soft sugar, invert sugar mush, raw sugar, sirups, molasses, and sugar mixtures.

(c) The term "total sugars" means the total amount of the sucrose (Clerget) and of the reducing or invert sugars. The total sugars contained in any grade or type of manufactured sugar shall be ascertained in the manner prescribed in paragraphs 758, 759, 762, and 763 of the United States Customs Regulations (1931 edition).

(d) The term "United States" shall be deemed to include the States, the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.

TAX ON THE MANUFACTURE OF SUGAR

SEC. 402. (a) Upon manufactured sugar manufactured in the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax, to be paid by the manufacturer at the following rates:

(1) On all manufactured sugar testing by the polariscope 92 sugar degrees, 0.465 cent per pound, and for each additional sugar degree shown by the polariscopic test, 0.00875 cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion;

(2) On all manufactured sugar testing by the polariscope less than 92 sugar degrees, 0.5144 cent per pound of the total sugars therein.

(b) Any person who acquires any sugar which is to be manufactured into manufactured sugar but who, without further refining or otherwise improving it in quality, sells such sugar as manufactured sugar or uses such sugar as manufactured sugar in the production of other articles for sale shall be considered for the purposes of this section the manufacturer of manufactured sugar and, as such, liable for the tax hereunder with respect thereto.

(c) The manufacturer shall file on the last day of each month a return and pay the tax with respect to manufactured sugar manufactured after the effective date of this title (1) which has been sold, or used in the production of other articles, by the manufacturer during the preceding month (if the tax has not already been paid) and (2) which has not been so sold or used within 12 months ending during the preceding calendar month, after it was manufactured (if the tax has not already been paid): Provided, That the first return and payment of the tax shall not be due until the last day of the second month following the month in which this title takes effect.

For the purpose of determining whether sugar has been sold or used within 12 months after it was manufactured sugar shall be considered to have been sold or used in the order in which it was manufactured.

(d) No tax shall be required to be paid upon the manufacture of manufactured sugar by, or for, the producer of the sugar beets or sugarcane from which such manufactured sugar was derived, for consumption by the producer's own family, employees, or household.

IMPORT COMPENSATING TAX

SEC. 403. (a) In addition to any other tax or duty imposed by law, there shall be imposed, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Customs shall prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, a tax upon articles imported or brought into the United States as follows:

(1) On all manufactured sugar testing by the polariscope 92 sugar degrees, 0.465 cent per pound, and for each additional sugar degree shown by the polariscopic test, 0.00875 cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion;

(2) On all manufactured sugar testing by the polariscope less than 92 sugar degrees 0.5144 cent per pound of the total sugars therein;

(3) On all articles composed in chief value of manufactured sugar 0.5144 cent per pound of the total sugars therein.

(b) Such tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner as a duty imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, and shall be treated for the purposes of all provisons of law relating to the customs revenue as a duty imposed by such act, except that for the purposes of sections 336 and 350 of such act (the so-called flexible-tariff and trade-agreements provisions) such tax shall not be considered a duty or import restriction, and except that no preference with respect to such tax shall be accorded any articles imported or brought into the United States.

EXPORTATION, LIVESTOCK FOOD, AND DISTILLATION

SEC. 404. (a) Upon the exportation from the United States to a foreign country, or the shipment from the United States to any possession of the United States except Puerto Rico, of any manufactured sugar, or any article manufactured wholly or partly from manufactured sugar, with respect to which tax under the provisions of section 402 has been paid, the amount of such tax shall be paid by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the consignor named in the bill of lading under which the article was exported or shipped to a possession, or to the shipper, if the consignor waives any claim thereto in favor of such shipper: Provided, That no such payment shall be allowed with respect to any manufactured sugar, or article, upon which, through substitution or otherwise, a drawback of any tax paid under section 403 has been or is to be claimed under any provisions of law made applicable by section 403.

(b) Upon the use of any manufactured sugar, or article manufactured therefrom, as livestock feed, or in the production of livestock feed, or for the distillation of alcohol, there shall be paid by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to the person so using such manufactured sugar, or article manufactured therefrom, the amount of any tax paid under section 402 with respect thereto.

(c) No payment shall be allowed under this section unless within 1 year after the right to such payment has accrued a claim therefor is filed by the person entitled thereto.

COLLECTION OF TAXES

SEC. 405. (a) Except as otherwise provided, the taxes imposed by this title shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such taxes shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

(b) All provisions of law, including penalties, applicable with respect to the taxes imposed under title IV of the Revenue Act of 1932, shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, be applicable in respect to the tax imposed by section 402. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at 6 percent per annum from the date the tax became due until the date of payment.

(c) The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out all provisions of this title except section 403.

(d) Any person required, pursuant to the provisions of section 402, to file a return may be required to file such return with and pay the tax shown to be due thereon to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which the manufacturing was done or the liability incurred.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 406. The provisions of this title shall become effective on the date of enactment of this act.

TITLE V. GENERAL PROVISIONS

SECTION. 501. For the purposes of this act, except title IV, the Secretary shall—

(a) Appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary in administering the provisions of this act: Provided, That all such officers and employees, except attorneys, economists, experts, and persons in the employ of the Department of Agriculture on the date of the enactment of this act, shall be subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: And provided further, That no salary in excess of $10,000 per annum shall be paid to any such person.

(b) Make such expenditures as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including personal services and rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling expenses (including the purchase, maintenance, and repair of passenger-carrying vehicles), supplies and equipment, lawbooks, books of reference, directories, periodicals, and newspapers.

SEC. 502. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year for the purposes and administration of this act, except for allotments in the Philippine Islands as provided in subsection (g) of section 205, a sum not to exceed $55,000,000.

(b) All funds available for carrying out this act shall be available for allotment to the bureaus and offices of the Department of Agriculture and for transfer to such other agencies of the Federal Government as the Secretary may request to cooperate or assist in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 503. There is authorized to be appropriated an amount equal to the amount of the taxes collected or accrued under title IV on sugars produced from sugarcane grown in the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands which are manufactured in or brought into the United States on or prior to December 31, 1940, minus the costs of collecting such taxes and the estimates of amounts of refunds required to be made with respect to such taxes, for transfer to the Government of the Commonwealth of the Philippines for the purpose of financing a program of economic adjustment in the Philippines, the transfer to be made under such terms and conditions as the President of the United States may prescribe: Provided, That no part of the appropriations herein authorized shall be paid directly or indirectly for the production or processing of sugarcane in the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 504. The Secretary is authorized to make such orders or regulations, which shall have the force and effect of law, as may be necessary to carry out the powers vested in him by this act. Any person knowingly violating any order or regulation of the Secretary issued pursuant to this act shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $100 for each such violation.

SEC. 505. The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction specifically to enforce, and to prevent and restrain any person from violating, the provisions of this act or of any order or regulation made or issued pursuant to this act. If and when the Secretary shall so request, it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States in their respective districts to institute proceedings to enforce the remedies and to collect the penalties and forfeitures provided for in this act. The remedies provided for in this act shall be in addition to, and not exclusive of, any of the remedies or penalties existing at law or in equity.

SEC. 506. Any person who knowingly violates, or attempts to violate, or who knowingly participates or aids in the violation of, any of the provisions of section 209, or any person who brings or imports into the continental United States direct-consumption sugar after the quantities specified in section 207 have been filled, shall forfeit to the United States the sum equal to three times the market value at the time of the commission of any such, (a) of that quantity of sugar or liquid sugar by which any quota, proration, or allotment is exceeded, or (b) of that quantity brought or imported into the continental United States after the quantities specified in section 207 have been filled, which forfeiture shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States.

SEC. 507. All persons engaged in the manufacturing, marketing, or transportation of sugar or liquid sugar, and having information which the Secretary deems necessary to enable him to administer the provisions of this act, shall, upon the request of the Secretary, furnish him with such information. Any person willfully failing or refusing to furnish such information, or furnishing willfully any false information, shall upon conviction be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 for each such violation.

SEC. 508. No person shall, while acting in any official capacity in the administration of this act, invest or speculate in sugar or liquid sugar, contracts relating thereto, or the stock or membership interests of any association or corporation engaged in the production or manufacturing of sugar or liquid sugar. Any person violating this section shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 509. Whenever the President finds and proclaims that a national economic or other emergency exists with respect to sugar or liquid sugar, he shall by proclamation suspend the operation of title II or III above, which he determines, on the basis of such findings, should be suspended, and, thereafter, the operation of any such title shall continue in suspense until the President finds and proclaims that the facts which occasioned such suspension no longer exist. The Secretary shall make such investigations and reports thereon to the President as may be necessary to aid him in carrying out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 510. The provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, shall cease to apply to sugar upon the enactment of this act, and the provisions of Public Resolution No. 109, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 19, 1936, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 511. In order to facilitate the effectuation of the purposes of this act, the Secretary is authorized to make surveys, investigations, including the holding of public hearings, and to make recommendations with respect to (a) the terms and conditions of contracts between the producers and processors of sugar beets and sugarcane and (b) the terms and conditions of contracts between laborers and producers of sugar beets and sugarcane.

SEC. 512. The Secretary is authorized to conduct surveys, investigations, and research relating to the conditions and factors affecting the methods of accomplishing most effectively the purposes of this act and for the benefit of agriculture generally in any area. Notwithstanding any provision of existing law, the Secretary is authorized to make public such information as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 513. No tax shall be imposed on the manufacture, use, or importation of sugar after December 31, 1940, and the powers vested in the Secretary under this act shall terminate on such date, except that the Secretary shall have power to make payments under title III under programs applicable to the crop year 1940 and previous crop years.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 24, in the table between lines 2 and 3, strike out "30,000 to 50,000" and insert in lieu thereof "more than 30,000", and strike out the last line of the table.

On page 26, line 8, after the period, insert the following:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing exceptions, sugar in liquid form (regardless of the nonsugar solid content) which is to be used in the distillation of alcohol shall be considered manufactured sugar."

On page 29, line 20, strike out the comma following the word "exportation" and the words "livestock feed, and distillation", and insert in lieu thereof the words "and livestock feed."

On page 30, line 14, strike out "or for the distillation of alcohol,".

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COCHRAN (at the request of Mr. NELSON), until Monday.

To Mr. DEMPSEY (at the request of Mr. GREEVER), for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, on account of illness.

To Mr. TOWEY, for tomorrow, on account of attending funeral of Hon. Frederick Lehlbach.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill H. R. 7667, which has been under consideration today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand from the majority leader there will be no further business considered at the completion of the consideration of the sugar bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it further proposed to adjourn over at that time until Monday?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the completion of the legislative program for the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 5 minutes on the subject of transient relief in California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert two tables in the remarks I made today in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Flood Control Commission of the State of New Hampshire with reference to the flood-control compacts which are now pending in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered over the radio by my colleague, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a speech I made yesterday at Gettysburg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD with regard to the sugar legislation, and include therein certain tables from Labor Statistics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

WAGE AND HOUR LEGISLATION

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, wage and hour legislation, in line with the Black-Connery bill, presents three questions to the Congress and the American people:

First. Is such legislation constitutional?

Second. Is there a need for it?

Third. Will it accomplish the hoped-for results?

In view of the broad, elastic features of the Constitution of the United States and recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court on social legislation, there are few who would hold that wage and hour legislation is unconstitutional.

When countless people are working for insignificant wages as low as $5 per week and less, some even almost within the shadow of our State capitol dome at Harrisburg, it is time that those charged with the responsibility of looking after the affairs of our Government should concern themselves with this problem. Millions of people are forced to exist on a level which most of us would consider way below even the minimum standard of existence. This deplorable condition holds within it the seeds of grave trouble for the American people and the Nation in the future. For a large part of our people to continue under a substandard of existence is bound to breed evils which will eventually be inimical to our form of government

Much has been said about the causes which brought about dictatorships in some of the great European nations. A most casual study of the situations existing in those countries immediately prior to the establishment of dictatorships shows that in all instances a great percentage of the people of those nations were forced to exist upon the most meager material resources, and it was only after the people of those nations felt that the then government held no hope for their future betterment that dictatorships became possible.

Again, by permitting this large portion of our population to live in such a restricted manner prevents us from the high development of our own domestic production and distribution.

It is true that legislation of such far-reaching consequences, when applied to such a vast nation as ours, presents great difficulties of administration. But since when have the American people shrunk from daring to do new and difficult things? It would be possible to recount innumerable cases in which the genius, inventive mind, and capability of the American people have accomplished what were considered impossible tasks.

Unemployment is not a modern phenomenon. It has been known throughout the civilized world from the early days of the human race. In ancient times the solution for unemployment frequently consisted of the conquest of neighboring tribes and countries and the subjugation and frequently the extermination of their peoples, thus making room for colonization to be undertaken by the citizens of the conquering race.

During the Middle Ages the "black death" swept over European countries and killed a large proportion of their working population. This resulted in a scarcity of labor and for a long period solved the problems of unemployment. In the United States there have been recurring periods when unemployment was a grave problem. However, until recent years the progressive conquest of our own frontier made possible the solution of this economic problem. With the recent depression we experienced unemployment to a greater degree than ever before in the Nation's history. Because there is no further American frontier to conquer the problem persists, even though we have practically emerged from the depression and resumed a period of prosperity so far as industrial production and income are concerned.

This problem is not confined to our own country but is of world-wide proportions. Most nations have undertaken its solution through national planning and legislation. In this country the enactment of N. R. A. was an emergency attempt to solve unemployment. Fashionable as it has recently been to malign and belittle the accomplishments of N. R. A., I want to state, as one who was engaged in active business management in 1933, that the wage and hour provisions of that act were definitely responsible for marking the turning point in our rapidly and spiralling unemployment toward more general employment. I would not for a moment intimate that I would desire to resume N. R. A. with its vast complexities and innumerable business codes as it existed after the voluble General Johnson got through with it. I maintain that the American people's estimate of N. R. A. declined not on account of its wage and hour provisions but because of the fact that business generally—and big business specifically—wrote into the codes of fair practice improper and unworkable business practices.

When we realize that millions of our citizens are still unable to obtain regular employment and that other millions are forced to take employment at shamefully low wages, we must all agree that the need for some solution is definitely evident. A large percentage of our people are forced to exist upon such a low standard that denial of all but the barest necessities is forced upon it. Selfish employers refuse to recognize any social responsibility with respect to those whose services they hire. Throughout my district I can point to scores of establishments which employ people at wages so low that the employees are unable to keep up even a decent standard of self-respect. It is these millions of American citizens who by the very nature of things are practically inarticulate, for whom we as Members of Congress must legislate. They have no high-priced legislative representatives in Washington. They have no powerful newspapers to speak for them. They have no opportunity to describe their needs over the radio. They have no powerful labor organizations through which they can speak with a unified voice. But they are nevertheless part and parcel of our economic and national existence. If we would preserve the hopes and ideals of the Republic, as expressed by our founding fathers in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, we as legislators must concern ourselves with their problems and find the solution.

More than anything else, to my mind, was the large vote for President Roosevelt in 1932 and the much larger vote in 1936, an expression of the hopes and aspirations of these millions. Because this vote placed in power a national Democratic administration with an unprecedented party majority in both Houses of the Congress, my party has a definite responsibility to exert every effort and exhaust every avenue toward establishment of a program which will lead to the realization of the hopes of this great mass of our people.

In examining the last question involved it is admitted that there exists a difference of opinion as to the results which are hoped to be attained. But I think this difference of opinion is represented by the economic philosophy of two distinct schools of thought. Many of us have lived long enough to experience times when the production and distribution of goods—and consequently also price levels—stood at a high figure. Then again we have lived through times when price levels were at a low figure, with a consequent decline in production and distribution. I believe that the vast majority of our people prefer to live under the former conditions. Of course, all of these benefits cannot be obtained for the people in the low-income brackets without a rise in the cost of living. But I refer again to the comparison between so-called good times and poor times.

We should not be too much disturbed about the immediate effects of such legislation upon any particular part of our Nation. We must, of course, insist that the administration of this proposed law shall be handled with a maximum of understanding and consideration for the problems of all sections of our country. If we can raise the standard of living of millions of our people—and I consider it an absolute duty of the Government to be concerned about this—we shall increase the demands and requirements for goods so that all sections of our country will be stimulated thereby, and I believe we will hear very little about overproduction of basic commodities after we have, through experience, learned how to operate this new system wisely.

But I hear sincere opponents of this type of legislation say, "It can't be done; a program of such magnitude cannot be undertaken by the United States Government."

The troubles which have constantly beset the human race throughout the ages have challenged the resourcefulness and intelligence of the leaders of thought. Men whose names stand out in history are not those who were timid and subscribed to the "it can't be done" theory. Benjamin Franklin, starting with accidental experimentation, discovered natural principles which have been converted into one of the greatest servants that mankind has ever seen—the application of electricity to human uses. We are today but on the threshold of an era which will see a presently unbelievable increase in the scope of the use of electricity to perform our labors which formerly needed manual application. Robert Fulton, when he proposed to harness the steam engine to ships, was ridiculed and laughed to scorn. Today, just slightly more than a century after his experiments, we have great ocean liners with palatial appointments which could not have been dreamed of several years ago. The Wright brothers when they proposed to fly a machine heavier than air were considered slightly "balmy." Their experiments were made within the lifetime of almost every Member of this House, and today we have large air liners which fly across our continent practically overnight. Our oceans are being spanned in regular passenger service. Daring aviators have recently flown across the North Pole from one continent to another. The Wright brothers—and all their brave and courageous successors—never for a moment believed that "it couldn't be done."

The discovery and invention of the telegraph, the telephone, and the wireless provide other outstanding examples of the accomplishments possible when men have confidence in their ability and courage to dare to do the unknown or impossible.

Galileo, when he announced his theory of the orderly scheme of the universe, was forced to recant and even then lost his life for the courage of his belief. We enjoy in the New World a free civilization because Columbus dared to venture on a project which was considered foolhardy and impossible by his more conservative contemporaries.

Oh, but I hear someone talking about the danger in setting aside natural economic laws. I have for years endeavored to find out just what the phrase "natural economic laws" means. Through personal observation, I am forced to conclude that many of our industrial overlords who cry loudest on this point have always striven for their own selfish benefit to erect laws that were neither natural nor economic.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the human race has from its earliest days been busy setting aside so-called natural economic laws. Almost every successful effort which we have made to raise ourselves above and distinguish ourselves from the mere animal has been through the promulgation of man-made laws which had for their purpose the setting aside of natural economic laws.

We have debated today the new sugar bill, brought in by the Committee on Agriculture to succeed the Jones-Costigan law. The most serious difficulty with this bill has been the necessity of trying to protect, so far as possible, all the various interests which have a right to be considered in writing its provisions through setting aside the ordinary operation of natural economic laws. Our splendid efforts on behalf of American agriculture represent another example. The stupendous reclamation projects upon which we have acted represent another. In fact, almost every day since I entered Congress last January we have been engaged in discussing measures with which we desire to improve the condition of our people through legislative interference with natural economic laws.

Most of the arguments against the passage of wage and hour legislation are familiar. They can be traced through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at every period when Congress undertook to legislate for the betterment of labor conditions and to lift the burden from the shoulders of the common man. I say that the Government has a responsibility here which it should not shirk. It is for us to set the example which can be pointed to with pride by our people.

In 1892 Congress passed an 8-hour law with reference to Government construction. Several years ago Congress enacted the Bacon-Davis law requiring compliance with certain labor standards on the part of Government contractors, and just last year the final passage of the Walsh-Healey Act, setting up labor and wage standards for successful bidders to supply Government materials brought out these same shopworn arguments. I have been officially told that the Walsh-Healey law is being applied with a minimum of trouble and friction. All of the dire consequences which were predicted if the act should pass have failed to materialize. The administration of the provisions of the act require a relatively small appropriation, only $335,000 having been provided for this fiscal year, and I believe the organization is not set up on nearly a large enough scale at present to consume that amount.

Of course, I want the least possible delegation of power to an administrative board. It is understood that the Labor Committee of this House is bringing in a bill which it is claimed will improve upon the bill passed by the Senate with respect to these provisions. I also hear that safeguards are included for the proper protection of collective bargaining agreements.

Mr. Speaker and Members, I am not here to insist upon a specific formula to be written into this bill. What I do say—most emphatically—is that we should agree upon underlying principles, and then work out a program based on such principles with the greatest tolerance, respect, and consideration for the fundamental needs of the various sections of our country and the various groups of our citizens that are to be affected. Years ago I read a beautiful phrase which I believe is familiar to most of you. It is, "Principles unite men; programs divide them." It is true that we, as a Congress, cannot stop with the enunciation of principles. We are also specifically charged with the necessity of working out programs. But I maintain that if we can agree upon principles it will be far easier to work out programs. The possibility of working out a satisfactory law for wages and hours will be enhanced if we merge our individual opinions fairly and frankly and give each to the other the benefit of sincerity of purpose and high motive.

We hear much about who is for this plan or who is against it. In the final analysis such statements can only be used as guides to determine the greatest good for the greatest number. I venture to state that the President of the United States, when he tells us of the necessity for such legislation, is speaking the wish of the American people. Let us adopt this legislation, not only because he asks us to; not because some labor leader asks us to; not because some other labor leader asks us not to do so; not because some industrialist inveighs against it; not for any reason except that by which we come through the exercise of our own intelligence and our sure knowledge that such a measure will be a step in the right direction toward a solution of some of our economic ills brought about by wide unemployment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] is also entitled to address the House for 15 minutes, but the gentleman has informed the Chair that it is not his purpose to exercise this privilege.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA], who spoke on the sugar bill in the Committee of the Whole, may be permitted to include in his remarks some tables to which he referred in the course of his address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 7472. An act to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. It is apparent that we have not now a quorum, and I suggest its absence, and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Davis	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Dieterich	Lewis	Schwartz
Austin	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Ellender	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Frazier	Lonergan	Shipstead
Berry	George	Lundeen	Smith
Bilbo	Gerry	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Gillette	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Green	McKellar	Townsend
Bridges	Guffey	McNary	Truman
Brown, Mich.	Hale	Maloney	Tydings
Brown, N. H.	Harrison	Minton	Vandenberg
Bulkley	Hatch	Moore	Van Nuys

Clark	King	Pittman

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on official duty as members of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

I further announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably detained; that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], and the Senator from New York [Mr.

COPELAND] are absent on official business, and that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is absent because of illness in his family.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is absent in the performance of official duty as a member of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITION FOR AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may make a statement which will occupy only about an eighth of a minute.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] asked me to state to the Senate that she desired to have her name signed to the petition concerning cotton which was put in the RECORD yesterday.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks a telegram from Mr. H. G. Lucas, president, Texas Agricultural Association, sent to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], dealing with the agricultural situation.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BROWNWOOD, TEX., August 6, 1937.

Hon. HUGO L. BLACK,
Senator from Alabama, Senate Office Building:

Texas and southern farmers appreciate your activity in submitting a petition for crop-control program this session of Congress. Our farmers are overwhelmingly behind the farm bill H. R. 7577, which was presented by farm leaders to Senate Agricultural Committee in May. Our organization has requested Senators SHEPPARD and CONNALLY and Texas Congressmen to work for passage of above bill this session. If this cannot be done we favor recessed or special session in October for consideration of this important matter. Southern cotton farmers face disaster in spite of bountiful crop unless 12-cent loan is provided; optional method would be adjusted payment by A. A. A. to farmers cooperating in Government program of difference between sales price and 12 cents. Farmers appreciate your activity and interest in this matter.

H. G. LUCAS,
President, Texas Agricultural Association.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate 14 letters from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers on the files of the Departments of State, Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor, and the Civil Service Commission (2 lists), the Federal Trade Commission, the Veterans' Administration, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, recommended for disposition as having no permanent value or historical interest, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. McNARY members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the International Association of General Chairmen, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, assembled at Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 69) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce", approved February 4, 1887, as amended and supplemented, by limiting freight or other trains to 70 cars, which was ordered to lie on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 5417) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

WITHDRAWAL OF AMERICAN TROOPS FROM CHINA

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may tender a resolution and request that it lie on the table. I shall not occupy the time of the Senate in delay of the pending measure longer than merely to read my resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 170) reads, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War report to the United States Senate, if not incompatible to the public interest, if there be existing reasons sufficient for the holding of the present troops now stationed in China in the war zone between Tientsin and Peiping, and if it be advisable that the troops continue in their present situation serving as military of the United States.

In view of the address I delivered the day before yesterday and then having suggested the tendering of a resolution, I beg to comply with my promise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

H. B. SHELTON AND OTHERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 826) for the relief of the estates of H. Lee Shelton and Mrs. H. Lee Shelton, Mrs. J. R. MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President has approved and signed the following acts:

On August 4, 1937:

S. 774. An act to incorporate the Marine Corps League; and

S. 2416. An act relating to the citizenship of certain classes of persons born in the Canal Zone or the Republic of Panama.

On August 5, 1937:

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 38, line 7, after the word "created", it is proposed to insert a comma and the following words:

In the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words and only a few words on a specific matter, the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. I have surrendered my own amendment as I feel it is served by the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from New York has no intention of reflecting upon the splendid services which have been rendered by the administrator of whom we speak as the Secretary of the Interior—Mr. Ickes. Yet, sir, I cannot understand what is the meaning or the basis of the contention of those who say that he wishes to assume or has usurped functions not properly belonging to him and who wish to discharge him from the duties he has undertaken as administrator in the matter of housing and the different forms of new construction. The work of Administrator Ickes universally has been greatly praised; there is no charge anywhere of incompetence. Under no surroundings has anyone arisen to intimate the slightest suggestion of dishonor in the disbursement by Administrator Ickes of such large sums as have not been paralleled in the exact experience of similar power under any administration heretofore.

Mr. President, I fear that an attempt to change the administration from him, under whatever guise it may be put, would be construed over the country as a reflection upon his service. There would follow from sinister sources an intimation that there is something wrong with his administration as Secretary of the Interior and Administrator of Housing. As Secretary Ickes is from my own State, Illinois, named to his honor from Illinois, and is one whom I know in person as a high-class gentleman and an official whom the Senate knows as a good administrator, I am unable to see why there should be divisions in the administration of housing projects—now under him—nor why authority should be taken from him in the great work which he has been doing.

I therefore say, sir, that in that work, in order that it shall be completed along the line in which it has been initiated, there ought not to be a change. To do so would be to produce confusion; it would produce embarrassment to the Government. But, in behalf of Mr. Ickes as the administrator, I protest against these subterranean movements from any source whatever that seem to have for their purpose as I see it the hope that the new constitution and proposed arrangement, whatever it will be, will grant new privileges to builders—those who sell the lumber and cement and those who wish to contract for construction work, for I cannot conceive whence this opposition comes unless it be charged to such covert influences. I therefore express these sentiments as information and demand the support of the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I will yield in a moment. The Senator from Missouri yesterday made the only suggestion that has been made at all in connection with the service, and that is the dissatisfaction as to the method in which it is administered in certain localities. I must say that likewise applies to certain sections of Chicago; but I do not feel it justifies the reflections that will follow through a change frum Mr. Ickes, and, therefore, I protest against the amendment being rejected because of the direct implication that would unjustly follow.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is undoubtedly familiar with the fact that at the present time the Department of the Interior has no jurisdiction of any sort, character, or description over the question of housing, and therefore it is certainly no reflection on the Interior Department or the Secretary of the Interior for the Congress to set up a housing authority. It is not, as has been intimated here and as I understand the Senator from Illinois to intimate now, a question of transferring some activity or some authority from the Interior Department, because the Interior Department has never had the slightest jurisdiction over any housing activity of any sort. On the contrary, it is merely a question of the Interior Department reaching out to enlarge its authority.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have said that Mr. Ickes was referred to as Secretary of the Interior but described as an administrator. I refer to him as Secretary of the Interior to wholly identify the office. I am conscious of the fact that in his Department has been created this new authority and it is as administrator that the Secretary administers the new authority. Yes, sir; one cannot avoid a feeling that, while no intimation of incompetence, no suggestion of dishonor, may be intended, yet to have taken from him his work and authority, all to be placed in new hands, an activity over which he has had jurisdiction, leaves all where they cannot escape the implication—that the gentleman who is Secretary of the Interior and a member of the Cabinet had something about him or his administration that has suggested the necessity for that change, and that is the implication against which I seek to defend and which I oppose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. While it may be entirely true that Mr. Ickes, as Secretary of the Interior, has not had housing projects under him, at the same time under the P. W. A. Act he is Administrator of the P. W. A. and as Administrator of the P. W. A., having its offices in his Department, he has control of the housing activities of the P. W. A.

I want to say for Mr. Ickes that, so far as my State is concerned, and I believe so far as every other State about which I have information is concerned, the job done by Mr. Ickes in the Housing Division has been a perfectly splendid job. That Division has constructed buildings and houses which have been for the most part permanent. It has greatly aided in every way the housing projects of the country, and it has done so in a masterly manner. I think it would be a most excellent plan to have the housing project contemplated in the pending bill put under the general jurisdiction of Mr. Ickes, whether as public administrator or as Secretary of the Interior, it makes no difference. He has shown himself to be a very able and splendid administrator of this kind of project, and it seems to me he ought to have jurisdiction over it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to yield to my able friend from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I simply desire to say it involves no reflection on Secretary Ickes, either in his capacity as Secretary of the Interior or in his capacity as Administrator of the Public Works Administration, or as a man and a citizen, for one to be opposed to placing this housing activity as a bureau in the Department of the Interior. It seems to be the prevalent impression here that any time any Senator opposes the transfer of some new activity to the Department of the Interior, he is slapping at Mr. Ickes or stepping on his toes.

I am opposed to the effort of Mr. Ickes to grab the Forestry Service out of the Agricultural Department and transfer it to the Interior Department, an effort which he has been making very actively for the last 2 or 3 years. But, because I am opposed to the transfer of the Forestry Service to the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, it involves no reflection on Mr. Ickes as Administrator or as a man. It is simply a matter for Congress to determine and therefore it seems to me it comes with very poor taste for Mr. Ickes or any of his supporters, when Congress is endeavoring to determine the matter of policy with reference to housing, to say it is a reflection on Mr. Ickes if we do not give the Department of the Interior a jurisdiction it never has had.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I deplore to say that I fear that the objection which has arisen with reference to some department of Mr. Ickes, whether it be Forestry or another, is that which has impelled the expression of objections to further housing projects remaining in his control and under his charge. It is such as this which has stimulated certain opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. I know we cannot escape at times having grievances against men in the Cabinet because they cannot accommodate us all and oftentimes have to disappoint us. But the present movement is not the commendable manner to present their objections as to separate departments and their destiny.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot cast my vote for this amendment on any such hypothesis as the Senator from Illinois submits. My opinion of Mr. Ickes is the highest. He has been a very excellent Administrator of the act under this administration. I have a very high regard for Colonel Hackett. However, it seems to me the chief housing responsibility which has come to the Department of the Interior has come through the P. W. A. P. W. A. is an emergency institution. If we now put a permanent housing program under what is primarily P. W. A. auspices, it occurs to me we are proposing to make P. W. A. a 60-year enterprise also, and I am opposed to that, and it is on that basis I shall vote.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. I invite the attention of the Senator to this point, which seems to me clear, and ask his opinion thereon. The bill we now have before us apparently is drawn upon the theory and based upon the fact that we are to have a wholly independent tribunal and authority to administer it. That theory seems to run all through the bill. If we now proceed along a different line and say the authority we set up, under this board of directors, to whom we pay high salaries and require confirmation of the members thereof by the Senate, is to be a mere bureau in the Department of the Interior, I think the bill should be sent back to the committee to be entirely rewritten on that basis. Otherwise, we have a very unfortunate mixture here.

Mr. LEWIS. I concur with the Senator from Nebraska in the suggestion that if we are to have these conflicting agencies it is unfortunate. But I point out, the work having been begun and being carried on by the Administrator, holding the Housing Authority and exercising and exerting it in a manner about which there is no complaint, the work he has been doing ought to be finished, and that which has been initiated by him should be continued to the end. Then, if it should be provided that some other agency shall be created to undertake a new work upon a new policy, it will be time then to initiate changes; but at present the implication is too apparent, and to take away from the Administrator his office and authority while the work is being done carries with it the suggestion of some form of objection or intimation against the Administration that ought not to be allowed to rest as it now lies.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I have had some familiarity with the Public Works Administration activities, and I have found in my State they have done a splendid job. I think it would be a great mistake if these new housing activities should not be placed under the Secretary of the Interior. It seems to me the work he has done, although it has been done through an emergency organization, has established the fact that it is one of the most effective agencies in the struggle to overcome the depression created during the present administration. I believe the proposed housing activities should be carried on under the direction and supervision of the Administrator of that organization.

I have the honor to be a member of the Committee on Education and Labor. I recall there were no witnesses who appeared there who opposed having this new activity placed under the supervision of the Administrator of the Public Works Administration. Not one of the 22 witnesses who appeared before the committee and discussed this bill opposed a provision which would give the Secretary of the Interior general supervision over the United States housing authority. In fact, several witnesses appeared and testified to the high character of the work done by Secretary Ickes in the administration of the P. W. A. It would be a grave mistake, in my opinion, not to have the new housing administration carried on under the administrator of an agency which has carried on similar activities during several years with such a singular degree of success.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the suggestions of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are once more merely repetition of the impression that there is a transfer of authority in the bill and a taking away from the Interior Department of some jurisdiction it now has. It seems to me it cannot be too strongly emphasized that the Interior Department at the present time has absolutely no jurisdiction on the face of the earth over any housing activity. Such housing activities as Secretary Ickes has personally exercised any jurisdiction over, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] pointed out a moment ago, have to do with a temporary activity, an emergency activity, created for the purpose of an emergency and strictly limited as to its duration.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. Leaving all of that out of the question, we now have an attempted reorganization of the agencies of the Federal Government.

Mr. CLARK. Then why does not the Senator wait until the reorganization bill comes up?

Mr. LOGAN. Let me finish my question, if the Senator will be so kind. It is objected by some of our brethren on the other side and some on this side that the reorganization plan is bad because it empowers the President of the United States to place agencies in different places, and that that is the duty of Congress. I believe we all agree that that would be best. Now Congress is creating an independent agency. Congress should have the power and should exercise the power, should it not, to place that agency under the head of some one of the departments? Does not the Senator agree that we should not create independent establishments without placing them under the head of some department of the Government at this time, if we are going through with the reorganization? To say, "Wait for the reorganization bill" does not answer the question. Congress itself ought to do this.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that, so far as I am concerned, I should not be willing to grant the power contained in this bill to a mere bureau head in some department. I will say further that if we are going to place this new authority under any other head, I think it should be placed under the head of the Federal Housing Administration, which has done a very much better job in its field than the Housing Administration of the Public Works Administration has done.

I am in favor of the bill as it is written. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] that if the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky should be adopted, the bill should be sent back to the committee to be entirely revamped, because the amendment would completely change the theory of the measure. I submit, however, that in this experiment—and it is confessedly in the nature of an experiment and a demonstration of what may be done, as well as the beginning of what we all hope will be a very successful enterprise—the structure of this bill is preferable to placing this authority under any other governmental agency.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Referring to the observation of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] as to the P. W. A., which is under the administration of Mr. Ickes, since the work has gone on under that designation, and since the work seems to have been well done, and there is no complaint as to the work, generally speaking, either for want of competence or want of honesty, and since there is no imputation as against Mr. Ickes' administration, I ask the able Senator from Missouri why that work should be now intercepted, obstructed, and interfered with by new agencies that step in without knowledge of what has been done in the past, when it can be finished and carried on by the same efficiency and honor and competence that has already administered it? It is that to which I refer; and I ask my able friend from Missouri why should that be interfered with?

Mr. CLARK. I shall be very glad to elucidate that matter for the information of my friend from Illinois.

As the Senator from Michigan said a few moments ago, the P. W. A. is an emergency activity, of limited duration, which would have expired a few months ago except for the action of Congress in temporarily continuing it under certain conditions, while this bill contemplates the setting-up of machinery which it is hoped will prove so successful that it may grow and expand and do a great national work. The purpose of placing this activity as a bureau under the Department of the Interior would simply be to give the Interior Department jurisdiction of an entirely new subject. There has been, to be sure, a housing bureau in the Public Works Administration. Opinions may differ as to its success. I am not now reflecting on the success of that activity in the Public Works Administration; but there have been many other governmental housing administrations, none of them under the Department of the Interior, and this proposal simply contemplates an expansion of the Department of the Interior. No other purpose could possibly be accomplished by it.

Let me say that I entirely agree with what the Senator from Illinois has said as to the high character and ability of Mr. Ickes. I also have the very highest opinion of Colonel Hackett and of Colonel Clark and of the other heads of the P. W. A. It is not any reflection on any of them for Congress at this time to say that it desires to put this new and great activity in the hands of an independent agency which shall be directly responsible to Congress, and which will be enabled, without conflict with any administrator or any head of a Department, to work out the task which Congress is assigning to it in this measure.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. If the Senator will be kind enough to yield, I wish to direct his attention to subsection (c) on page 40, for this purpose. The section provides that the President may at any time transfer to the Authority any assets or property of any housing agency. I am wondering if the Senator understands from that, as it seems to me, that the President could transfer to this agency the Federal Housing Administration's assets and property, which include certain funds which are there as guaranty funds; whether under that subsection the housing activities of the Resettlement Administration could be transferred; whether under that subsection the housing activities of the Public Works Administration could be transferred.

To me, the term "housing" is a broad one. The term "slum clearance", of course, does not include any of those activities. When it comes to the term "housing", I am wondering if that is a broad enough term so that the President, if he saw fit, could concentrate within this authority all building activities which could be brought under the term "housing."

Mr. CLARK. I should be of opinion that the terms "housing" and "slum clearance" should be read as one term, and therefore the subsection would have to do with housing activities as slum clearance; but while that has nothing to do with the pending amendment, so far I am concerned, I should be very happy to vote for an amendment making that matter specific, because I do not think such activities as Federal housing, particularly the guaranty feature, should be transferred to the authority set up in this bill, and I do not think it is the intention of the bill to do that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Aside from the question whether or not the Interior Department at the present time has any similar work to the type devolved upon this authority, is it not better to have all these authorities under a Cabinet officer, under a permanent department of the Government the head of which is a member of the President's Cabinet?

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that, so far as I am concerned, I have never been of that opinion. My great objection to a great many of the activities of the Government is that they tend to degenerate into bureaucracies. I should much prefer to have this new and particularly experimental activity in the hands of an authority the members of which are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Congress than to have at the head of a bureau a mere bureaucrat to be appointed by some Cabinet officer over whom the Congress would have no control.

Mr. BORAH. A Cabinet officer is a member of the President's family, and the President is supposed to be the author of our policies while he is in power.

Mr. CLARK. I am perfectly familiar with the theory advanced by the Senator. It so happens that I do not agree with it, and I never have.

Mr. HATCH and Mr. WAGNER addressed the Chair.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator from New Mexico wish to take the floor at this time?

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to ask a question or two, so that perhaps the Senator from New York will be able to clear up some things that are in my mind. I prefer to let him do it in my time rather than to take his time.

As a result of the argument which has been made this morning—I did not hear all of the discussion that took place yesterday—I have become somewhat confused, because it would seem to be indicated by the argument and objections which are raised that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky would remove from the authority some of the powers which are conferred by the bill, and transfer those powers to the Secretary of the Interior. I have been reading the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, and I fail to find in it any such provision. It seems to me, as I now read the bill, that the bill sets up the housing authority, and, of course, it is given full control of its own operations. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator mean in the bill as it now is?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. HATCH. And if the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky should be adopted, none of that authority would be taken from the Board. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WAGNER. No. I suppose I am not betraying any confidence when I say that I inquired of the Senator from Kentucky exactly what "general supervision" meant, and he told me candidly that he was unable to tell me exactly what it meant.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I may say that that provision is taken verbatim from the Bankhead-Jones Tenant Act. I do not want to transgress the rules of the Senate. I think both the Senator from New York and I have exhausted our time on this question.

Mr. WAGNER. Not on the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. What I mean is that while the term "general supervision" cannot be defined in any better terms, it means the general direction and not the specific control of the board. It would be my judgment that it means "in an advisory capacity", but I cannot define what "general supervision" means.

Mr. HATCH. As I read the bill, the power is still vested in the board.

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. On page 39, paragraph (d), I read this:

> The board shall determine all matters of policy and shall exercise the powers hereinafter granted to the authority.

That provision seems to me to be a very plain and specific language, and it does give the power to the board. I am confused, however, about just what authority the Secretary of the Interior would have.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is well aware of the fact that there is an effort to bring all of these independent agencies under some Cabinet officer. The argument in favor of that proposition, as I have understood it, has been that instead of the independent agency reporting directly to the President, it would report to the Cabinet officer, and the Cabinet officer in turn would report to the President. The purpose of this amendment is to do no more than to bring this independent agency, when we create it, under one of the Cabinet officers; and the general supervision that would exist would be to advise and report to the Secretary, and the Secretary would report to the President. That is about all that my amendment does.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Kentucky will pardon me, it occurs to me that his amendment is a very harmless thing.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is true, and it may be that the whole program to bring all the independent agencies under 12 departmental heads is rather harmless; but it is a step, and we cannot deny the President the right to do it and say that Congress has the power, and then, when we create one of these agencies say, "No; Congress will not exercise that power; we will leave it to the President." Whenever we create an independent agency it ought to be put under some department head.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator from New Mexico will read subsection (d), found on page 39 of the bill as it stands, without the inclusion of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, he will find that it clearly shows that it was the purpose of the drafters of the bill, the sponsors of the bill, that the authority to be created should be a policy-making body, and should have complete control and charge of envisioning what should be done in the way of slum clearance, and all that; and how can that be worked out if we add an amendment that says, "But the Secretary of the Interior shall have general supervision over the whole thing"?

To my mind it is perfectly clear that if the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky were to be adopted, and I hope it will not be, it would be necessary to follow that by striking out subsection (d) of the bill altogether, because clearly under the provisions of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky the board, which was conceived as an independent policy-making body, would then become a mere bureau in the Department of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior, subject to whatever supervision remained in the President, would be the policy-making authority, and not the board at all.

Mr. HATCH. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that in pointing out the provision to which I referred I was not arguing the case at all. I took the floor to obtain information, to see just what the amendment meant, if it were possible to do so.

I am convinced in my own mind, from reading the bill, that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will not take any of those powers from the board whatever, and I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that if the amendment should be adopted and the Secretary should be given general supervision, and any Senator should move then to strike out the policy-making power which I read, I should certainly vote against the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I concur exactly in what the Senator has said. He has a very clear understanding of the purpose of the amendment. There is no effort to disturb the policy-making power of the board, but general supervision is sought to be placed in the Secretary of the Interior, who is made the head of the activity, because it is assigned to a particular department.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one further observation?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. If the purpose of the amendment is not to give to Secretary Ickes, and to whomever succeeds him as head of the Department of the Interior, the control and authority which, it seems to me, are clearly contained in the amendment, then the amendment certainly ought not to be adopted, because it would be a useless and unnecessary thing to give general authority to the Secretary of the Interior and then explain it and sell it to the Senate on the theory that it is really not giving him any authority at all, but that the board will continue with all the authority the sponsors of the bill intended it to have. On either horn of the dilemma, it seems to me, the Senator is clearly impaled if he proceeds along that line.

Mr. HATCH. No; the Senator from New Mexico is not impaled on either horn of the dilemma.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In considering the pending amendment, I think the attention of the Senate should be called to the fact that an amendment has already been adopted which was designed not to give either the Board or any Cabinet officer in whose department it might be located final authority to pass upon these projects. That is one thing which, of course, is a vital part of the measure.

If the pending amendment should be adopted, and I am not agitated over it one way or the other, in connection with the amendment which was agreed to providing that no project, or loan, or grant, or expenditure, or extension of credit on any project worked up by the Board should be finally approved except with the approval of the President, the theory is that the Board, as an independent board, would, of course, go through all the minutiae and details of working out these projects, and if it were in the Department of the Interior, it would make a recommendation up through the Secretary of the Interior, which would finally come to the President, and the President would finally act upon all the recommendations of the Board with reference to projects.

The amendment to which I have referred has already been put in the bill, and I think it is a very wise one, because no board or authority or Cabinet member, it seems to me, ought to have authority to commit the Government to the expenditure of $700,000,000 without the President, whoever he may be, having his hand on the rein, so that final authority would not be vested in the Secretary of the Interior or in the Board.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I took the floor to find out just what the amendment meant, because I for one would be opposed to giving any one man final authority in this program. I was very anxious to have the board retain its full powers as outlined in the bill. I do not believe the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky changes that in any respect whatever. I think the power is still in the board, and I have absolutely no objection to giving a Cabinet officer general supervisory power over the board, whatever the general supervisory power may be. Certainly it cannot disturb or change the law as to where the final authority exists.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. In view of the language in the bill which has been read by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], placing the entire responsibility for the contemplated projects on the President, does it not seem rather inappropriate now to take them out of that responsibility and place them primarily under a Cabinet member? Is it not a fact that the President, having this responsibility and realizing that he would not have the time or the opportunity to give a project the supervision necessary, would himself select someone to supervise it so as to advise him? Would it not be better to leave it to the President, upon whom is imposed the responsibility, to make his own selection of the officer in whom he desired to repose the confidence?

Mr. HATCH. I do not quite understand the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky as does the Senator from Nevada. The power is still vested in the board. What is the effect of the amendment the senior Senator from Kentucky mentioned a moment ago?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the projects are first initiated by the local housing authority, application is made through that authority to the board here for a loan, or grant, or for whatever is allowed under the bill. Of course, if the board is not placed under some department, then the board would itself directly take these matters to the President, and we who know the course of procedure with reference to P. W. A. projects realize that now the President personally passes on every one of them. Every schoolhouse, every courthouse, every one of the projects that has been approved by the State P. W. A. administrator, has come up through Colonel Hackett and through the Secretary of the Interior. They are finally placed on the desk of the President, and he himself investigates every one of them and passes on every one of them. He does not leave that to any subordinate officer. That is what is contemplated by the amendment which has been agreed to. It does not in any way minimize the importance of the board. All the preliminary work, the investigation, the plans and specifications, the financial set-up, the application of the local authority, would be submitted to the board, and if it were under the department, would go from the board to the Secretary of the Interior, who would have no final authority however, under the amendment already agreed to, to act upon the projects, but through him, as a sort of a sifter, they would get up to the President for his final approval.

If the amendment of my colleague should not be adopted, and the board should remain wholly independent, then these applications would go directly from the board to the President. But in either case the President would have the final word in passing upon them.

Mr. HATCH. I may add, in the light of what the Senator from Kentucky has said about the other amendment, that I now believe it is all the more necessary that the amendment of the junior Senator from Kentucky should be adopted. It has more importance than I thought it had; and I apologize to him.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada sugests that the President ought to have the right to select the one to do the work for him. The Secretary of the Interior is a Cabinet officer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, just to show the difficulty of passing upon legislation——

Mr. LOGAN. A point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from New York spoke on the pending amendment yesterday; he spoke numbers of times on the bill; and if he is now to be allowed to make another speech, it seems to me I ought to be allowed to make a reply.

Mr. WAGNER. Had my time expired?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk advises the Chair that the Senator from New York has addressed the Senate on the pending amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well, then; my mouth is shut.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah is recognized. Does he yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. KING. I do not. I wish to ask him a question. I should like to ask the Senator from New York, apropos of the amendment now pending, whether he construes it as delegating to the Secretary of the Interior authority and power which might negative or limit the authority and power conferred upon the board which is hereby created.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I may answer the question of the Senator from Utah in this way: Two eminent lawyers in this body spoke a moment ago, and they differed as to the interpretation of the word "supervision." One Senator said it conferred nothing. Of course, if it does nothing I see no purpose in having it in this legislation. The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] contended that it meant everything; that it meant complete control of this particular board by the Interior Department. I may say that the Interior Department so interprets this amendment. I have no fault to find with placing it under the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, if he were always to be Secretary. But I agree with the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the rule applicable to the present situation be followed. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] a question, and the Senator from New York is making a speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asked the Senator from New York a question, and the Chair understands that the Senator from New York is answering the question.

Mr. KING. I am not quite satisfied as yet with the answer.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah asked me what my opinion would be. My opinion is that there is a purpose in introducing this amendment. If its effects were futile no department would be so anxious as the Department of the Interior is to have this amendment included in the legislation.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator for his answer.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, another point of order. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has certainly lost the floor by reason of the speech made by the Senator from New York if the rules of practice are to be sustained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the strict rules of the Senate are applied, as interpreted by the President pro tempore of the Senate, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] did lose the floor. The Senator from Utah, under the rule, had a right to yield to the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] for a question, but he does not retain the floor if he permits the Senator from New York to continue and make a speech.

The point of order is well taken, and the Senator from Utah has lost the floor, under a strict application of the rule, as interpreted and applied during the discussion of the so-called Supreme Court bill.

Mr. KING. I shall then speak on the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah is speaking on the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not appeal from the decision of the Chair, which, if I may be permitted to say, I think is erroneous. Having such a high regard for the Chair, who, in making his ruling, sanctifies what I might regard to be an erroneous interpretation, I therefore yield to the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Utah permit the Chair to make an observation?

Mr. KING. Yes, indeed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair said he was following the precedent set and the interpretation of the rule that was applied in the Senate while the present occupant of the Chair happened to be in the State of Texas. I believe that was the time when the Senator should have taken an appeal from the decision.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the parliamentary interpretation that has been made illustrates the fact that it is unwise for the Senate and disadvantageous to the country for the Vice President to be absent from the Senate, because then we establish precedents which ought not to be followed.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KING. Do I yield the floor if I yield to the Senator from Nevada?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Utah should yield for anything but a question, and any Senator should make the point of order, the Senator from Utah would lose the floor.

Mr. KING. Then I shall not yield. Of course, I do not want to have any controversy between the President pro tempore, under whose occupancy of the chair probably some of these precedents were established, and the distinguished Vice President, but as between the two, with all due respect to the Senator from Nevada, I am inclined to think I should follow the Vice President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a question?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am desirous of speaking on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wanted to clear that rule up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word or two. I think the Congress has been rather improvident and unwise in creating such a vast number of independent organizations and bureaus without placing them under the jurisdiction of some Cabinet officer or some organization that might bring harmony and cooperation between the 60 or 70 or nearly 100 bureaus and Federal agencies which have been established. No one can tell, in examining the multitude of bureaus and Federal organizations, where the ultimate authority rests.

I shall vote for the amendment, because I believe it is a step in the right direction. It seems to me we must coordinate the activities of the Government, we must bring them under closer observation, closer scrutiny, and have someone directly responsible. I am opposed, I may say, to creating any more Cabinet positions, and I am opposed in that respect to the suggestion that has been made, but we must have Cabinet officers, and I think that so far as possible the organizations and bureaus which are created, and which function within the field in which a Cabinet officer should operate, should be brought under the control of that Cabinet officer. Therefore, I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. President, I wanted to say, however, that I have not been satisfied at all with the present housing organization, and I am not attributing any delinquency or default to the Secretary of the Interior, because I think that the housing organization which was set up, with a very large fund, $136,480,000, which finally was allocated to it, has not been, in my opinion, sufficiently controlled by the Secretary of the Interior. It has regarded itself as a sort of a roving, independent organization and it has, with the large appropriation which it has had, completed only seven projects. Forty-one projects are under process of completion, and the Lord only knows when they will be completed.

I have no doubt that the $136,000,000 which has been finally allocated to that housing organization will be inadequate to complete the 41 projects which it still has under way, and we shall be appealed to to make larger appropriations in order to complete them.

I think that that housing organization ought to be abolished and that any activities which are to be performed by it in the future should be brought within the periphery and influence and power of the organization that is to be set up under this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement concerning this amendment. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor held hearings upon this bill, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] pointed out yesterday, and so far as I can recall, every witness that appeared before the committee argued in favor of an independent agency or board to carry on this new housing activity.

I would support an amendment which would provide that the so-called financial housekeeping arrangements of this organization should flow through the Department of the Interior, but with the confusion that exists here concerning the scope and effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, I want to make an appeal to the Senate to reject the amendment.

The Senator from New York has given years of study to this problem; he has devoted his time and his energy to bring about its effective solution. I hope that the Senate at this late stage in the proceedings will not adopt an amendment, the language of which is subject to two very divergent constructions as to its scope and as to its effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] to the committee amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on official duty as members of the committee to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] are absent because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in committee meetings.

The Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is detained by a conference at the White House.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] are detained on official business.

I further announce that the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] is paired on this question with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. If present, the Senator from California would vote "yea", and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] has a pair on this question with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming would vote "yea", and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily absent on official duty as a member of the Battle Monuments Commission. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 37, as follows:

So Mr. LOGAN's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Nevada permit the Chair an oportunity to make a statement?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, the Chair wishes to speak for just a moment about your rules. The question has come up this morning with reference to the rules of the Senate when one Senator interrupts another. The Chair has examined the ruling made by the President pro tempore of the Senate in his absence as well as the precedents, and believes the ruling of the present occupant of the chair earlier today was correct.

The Chair wants to call the attention of the Senate, however, to a rule that is in the Senate manual and which places an obligation on the Presiding Officer. The present Presiding Officer believes that if the Senate has rules they ought to be enforced or that this body ought to repeal them. The Chair wishes to read this rule, so if the Chair does enforce it, Senators will understand the situation. The rule reads:

> It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

Now, Senators, I am in the chair. The Senator from Nevada has the floor; the Senator from Illinois asked him if he would yield that he might present or insert some matter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The rule just read states that it is the duty of the Chair to see that the Senator from Nevada does not yield for that purpose. Shall I enforce the rule or shall I continue the custom that has prevailed ever since the present occupant of the chair has been here?

The Chair calls attention to the inconsistency of the rule or to the persistency of the custom of the Senate in violating the rule. There is a direct rule of the Senate putting a mandate on the Presiding Officer to enforce the rule without a point of order being made. The Chair calls attention to the rule so that Senators may observe it in the future, and suggests that if the Rules Committee cares to look over the rules it might be advisable.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to send a resolution to the desk? [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule.

Mr. LEWIS. I am not aware that my able friend from Nevada has as yet presented anything to the Senate that is being interrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I do not wish to interrupt.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McCARRAN. Under the rule, I cannot yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I would not wish to ask him to yield if he has tendered anything, but I have seen nothing tendered except his honorable self, which I do not wish to interrupt at any time. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Illinois will bear with me, and I have no doubt that the matter for which he desires to gain attention will be heard very shortly.

On Wednesday last there was presented by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] an amendment to the pending bill. I voted on the prevailing side on the amendment. I now move that the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Virginia was adopted be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada desire the floor?

Mr. McCARRAN. I desire to address myself to the motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in furtherance of my motion to reconsider, I wish to say that since voting for the amendment I have conferred with the able junior Senator from Virginia, to some extent, and with others whom I thought had information and that I stand for and will try to sustain the philosophy behind the pending bill. I believe that the Nation is taking a great step forward. I do not believe that it should be hampered by anything that would be short-sighted. So for that reason, having looked into the subject, I have come to the conclusion that, perchance, the limit of $1,000 per room placed in this bill by the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia might destroy the efficacy of the bill and might destroy its entire philosophy. I realize the fact that all the time the authority that will administer this bill will have the right and duty, if you please, to see to it that the costs shall not be excessive, and I have been assured, after conferring with the author of the bill, that he in turn, provided my motion is agreed to, will offer an amendment to the bill limiting the expenditure not to exceed $1,400 a room. I realize that between the two—and I have conferred with the Senator from Virginia no later than this morning—is an indeterminate figure, in some instances of $1,200, in some instances over $1,400, in others under a thousand dollars. But it seems to me, in view of the fact that we stand for a national policy that will take care of the underhoused, those who have not been sheltered, we should not take a chance on destroying the entire philosophy and efficacy of the bill by being parsimonious.

If it were true that everyone of these projects would go forward at $1,400 a room, perhaps, one would hesitate, but we realize that up to $1,400 the human judgment must intervene, and, human judgment intervening, we must rely upon those who will execute the law to exercise honest discretion and honest judgment. It is for that reason alone that I am offering the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before a vote is taken on the motion of the Senator from Nevada I think the Senate is entitled to know what the consequences will be if the motion to reconsider shall be adopted. The Senator from Nevada has made a very clear statement with reference to it. It is not intended that there shall be any objection to a limitation on the cost of the projects.

In company with many others interested in the bill and its success, I have felt that a limitation of $1,000 per room is entirely too low. Under the amendment adopted it would probably be impossible ever to construct a unit house, or apartment containing more than four rooms, because the $4,000 limitation was also inserted for the family unit. There is no rigid rule that can be adopted with respect to the size of units. It may be an unfortunate biological fact, but the poorer people are, usually the more children they have, and, therefore, in the congested areas we find large families. It would be practically impossible to house a family of four or five children in a four-room apartment or four-room house. The bill makes no effort to average homes throughout the United States. It is dealing with an exceptional situation in the crowded areas of our large cities.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] who yesterday said he very frankly conceded that if it were not for the congested cesspools of disease and crime in the larger cities the bill probably would not be here. It is therefore proposed to reconsider the amendment so that we may raise the limitation per room from $1,000 to $1,400. That is not excessive, but is within reason. I hope the motion of the Senator from Nevada may be adopted so that the Senate may raise the limitation to $1,400 per room, in order that in the larger centers and more expensive building areas the operation of the provisions of the bill may not be handicapped.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, as part of the very brief statement I wish to make I ask to have printed in the RECORD the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr.

BYRD]. I also send to the desk and ask to have inserted in the RECORD immediately after the amendment of the Senator from Virginia a table submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] showing that over a period of recent years the cost per room in the various building activities ran from $1,746 down to $1,112, indicating a rather wide range and indicating that also a $1,000 limitation would probably make the program inoperative in a practical way.

There being no objection, the amendment and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment of Mr. BYRD is as follows:

On page 60, between lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

"(6) No contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, lease, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this act shall be entered into by the Authority with respect to any project costing more than $4,000 per family unit or more than $1,000 per room, exclusive of the cost of the land and the cost of removing old buildings, less value of salvage."

Table submitted by Mr. WALSH is as follows:

Cost per room of buildings actually constructed

	Number of rooms	Building cost	Price per room (building only)	Price per unit (of 4 rooms)
Boston (Public Works Administration in depression years)	3,912	$6,124,751	$1,566	$6,264

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think the Senate is laboring under a misapprehension. There is no limit of $1,000 per room. The amendment only provides that the Federal Government shall not make a loan of more than $1,000 per room or more than $4,000 per apartment.

If there is any city in the country that wants to engage in slum clearance and the average cost is $1,200 per room, then it is up to that city to provide the other $200. This is only a safeguard to insure repayment of the obligation to the Government. There is no provision that before the project is started any municipality shall put up as much as one cent. They can borrow the entire amount from the Federal Government. Personally, I should like to have an amendment adopted which would compel the local sponsor to put up as much as 5 or 10 percent, as an evidence of good faith, but, in the absence of such a provision, the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], that the Federal Government shall not let the sponsor have more than $1,000 a room, nor more than $4,000 an apartment, seems to me to be no more than in the nature of protection for the Government that is lending the money.

If there are places in the country where these tenements cannot be built for less than $4,000, then I think New York or Baltimore or St. Louis or whatever community wants slum clearance, ought at least to put up the remainder in order that the apartment or the tenement might be constructed.

There is nothing in the bill which will prevent any locality from adding as much more to the $1,000 per room as it wants to add. Therefore, I can see no reason to reconsider the amendment of the Senator from Virginia. As was pointed out yesterday, at an average of $1,000 per room, or $4,000 per apartment, we can take care of only 175,000 families in the whole United States at a cost or original outlay of $700,000,000 by the Federal Government, plus an annual subsidy of $20,000,000.

Let me say to those who really have the interest of these poor people at heart that if they increase the amount of the cost of these rooms and then write into the bill, as has already been written into it, that the tenants who will occupy the rooms shall come from the lowest bracket of the income earners, or, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] said, the $50 or $60 a month income earners, how in the name of common sense can we build an apartment costing $5,000 or $6,000 and rent it to the man who is making $50 or $60 a month? Let us be frank about it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I preface my question with this statement——

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will ask a question because my time is limited.

Mr. BARKLEY. When we have been able to help the 175,000 families, or any other number of families—which is a considerable number of families, by the way, when we consider only slum districts in the country—does not the Senator feel when we have been able to clear some of the slum areas away and have been able to house those people in better homes their pride and self-respect will increase?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course.

Mr. BARKLEY. And their earning power will increase so the subsidy of which the Senator is so afraid will gradually be absorbed by the increase in the rentability of the houses.

Mr. TYDINGS. I gave yesterday a break-down of the subsidy figures to show that in the case of a man making $50 or $60 a month, even with the subsidies to be paid by the Government, to provide for him a $4,000 apartment will require him to pay almost $25 a month rent. In other words, half of his entire income, with the Government subsidy thrown in, will have to go to pay the rent of a $4,000 apartment. If we make the figures higher, then to be consistent we ought to reconsider the provision inserted in the bill at the instance of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who argued that those getting $50 or $60 a month should have the apartments so created. We cannot build $5,000 or $6,000 apartments and rent them to people who are earning only $50 or $60. Every Senator knows that to be a fact. If $4,000 is too small an amount, let the municipality that wants to have the slums cleared contribute a sufficient amount to permit the Federal Government at least to make its subsidy on the $4,000 basis. Even then the tenant would not be able to pay the rent.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the housing measure known as the Wagner housing bill has been before the Senate for debate for a period of several days. It has for its purpose a very worthy objective. Several amendments have been offered to the bill which materially improve it, notably the so-called Byrd amendment, which makes the greatest improvement, in my judgment.

We have heard a great deal of talk in Washington and in this body, during past years and particularly during the past few months, about economy. One of the outstanding advocates of economy in this body who, in a very able and sincere manner, has practiced what he preaches, is the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. In a very constructive way he has offered an amendment which was adopted in good faith by a majority of one vote. Immediately after the result of the vote was announced the steam roller started to operate. Lobbyists started to appear. They appeared in my office. They have operated on other Senators. Mail was distributed by Senate officials to the desks of various Senators—a very objectionable practice from my point of view.

We provide in the Byrd amendment, which was adopted in good faith and by an honest vote, a limitation of $4,000 per unit or $1,000 per room. In my State of New Hampshire, a small State to be sure, 80 to 85 percent of the people live in homes which are valued today at less than $4,000, exclusive of land.

Many of them have worked a lifetime to acquire those homes by careful saving and by thrift. They today own their homes, either wholly or in part. To them their homes, although worth a small amount in money, are their homes—their castles. We are today asking these people who have struggled for a lifetime to acquire their homes, and who own them today, either in whole or in part, to contribute to the cost of homes costing more than those they themselves can afford. That in itself is unsound. In addition, we are going to ask them to contribute to maintain those homes.

When we look over the disgraceful expenditures by various Government agencies for housing, when we think about Tugwelltown and its cost of $14,239,951 for 880 units, or a cost of $16,182 per unit, and when we consider the various other wasteful projects in this country, it is about time that somebody who really stands for economy should come forth and make a stand. That stand was made by the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. The vote was an honest vote. The steam roller has started. The lobbyists are operating, even right here at the doors of the Senate Chamber.

I hope the motion to reconsider will not prevail.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has yielded the floor.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator refers to a steam roller that he saw in operation around here. I wonder if he saw a little bit of a steam roller over on the other side, manned by an elephant. I notice that all the Republican votes were for the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BRIDGES. I did not see any steam roller operating over here, but I have seen the steam roller operate in other sections of the Chamber.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the motion made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] will prevail.

As I stated when the amendment was under consideration when originally proposed, I did not object, and I do not think there can be any objection, to placing a limitation upon the cost per room of these projects. However, this particular limitation is admittedly based upon an average figure; and the danger of incorporating an average figure is that it may prevent the construction of low-cost housing projects in certain communities where their cost is above the average of the experience we have had thus far in this country in building low-cost housing.

In the second place, I should like to say that I do not think it is any argument for the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] to say today, or as did the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on a previous occasion, that the average valuation of housing occupied by private individuals is less than the amount provided in this amendment. I hope Senators will bear in mind that these projects are to be constructed under the terms of this bill, and their cost is to be amortized or repaid over a period of 60 years. Obviously, flimsy construction cannot endure over that long period of time.

It is my understanding that if this motion shall prevail, a motion will be made to increase slightly the limitation per room, and to strike out the limitation per family.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield for that purpose, I should like to read the amendment which will be offered as a substitute for the Byrd amendment, so that we may know precisely what is contemplated; but I will not take chances on causing the Senator to lose the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Kentucky for the purpose of permitting him to read the amendment he intends to propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. As a substitute for subsection (6) inserted in the bill by the Byrd amendment, it will be proposed to offer the following:

> No contract for loans, contributions, grants, or other expenditures provided for in this act shall be entered into by the Authority with respect to any project costing more than $1,400 per room, exclusive of cost of land and clearance thereof.

In that connection let me say that that does not mean simply a loan of $1,400. It means that there shall be no loan made concerning a project which costs more than that, regardless of any local contribution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad the Senate is now on notice that the purpose of this motion to reconsider is not to eliminate from the bill a limitation on cost per room, but only to increase it slightly so as to take care of situations where building costs may be in excess of the average, which has been $1,000 in our experience to date with low-cost housing in this country.

One more word, Mr. President, concerning the elimination of the family unit provision which is contained in the original amendment offered and adopted at the behest of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

There is no justification for fixing a limitation of cost per room and then multiplying that by four and saying that no project shall be considered where it may be necessary, in order to take care of larger-sized families, to provide more than four rooms. It seems to me that the objective and the purpose of this limitation provision is achieved when we have set a limitation of cost of construction per room, and that it would be unwise to provide a limitation so far as the family unit is concerned, which would make it impossible for the authority to consider the construction of projects which would provide, in part, for families larger than the average. I think we are justified in contending that the limitation, insofar as it applies to the family unit, would be a very serious and unwarranted limitation upon these projects for housing families larger than the average.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I confront a very real perplexity when I face the fundamental problem involved behind the motion to reconsider. I feel very deeply about it, and I want to present this contemplation in utter good faith.

We are proposing to tax the whole American people to provide new housing for the lowest-income group of the country now living in so-called slums. The amendment proposed by the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] provides that in transferring these lowest-income groups from the slums into livable quarters, the limit of expenditure shall be $1,000 per room, or $4,000 per family unit, for the construction only. That means that with the land added, we may fairly say that the Byrd amendment permits $5,000 per family unit to be expended on slum clearance.

Under the substitute that has been suggested by the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the limit is to be raised to $1,400 per room, which would represent $5,600 in construction, plus, let us say, another thousand dollars for the land, or an ultimate expenditure of $6,600 per family unit.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot yield now. I have only a limited time. I am sorry.

Mr. President, this is the contemplation that staggers me: Under the census figures reported in 1930, I find that 51.6 percent of all the urban home owners in America—those who have toiled and saved to create their homes for themselves, those who represent the great self-supporting middle class, the great backbone of the American community, those who by no stretch of the imagination can be called slum dwellers—live in homes that cost $5,000 or less. So far as the limitation proposed by the Senator from Kentucky is concerned, I find that 73 percent of the average American urban home owners live in homes that cost less than the amount we are proposing to expend from funds raised by taxation to create homes for those who are to be removed from the slums. When we get out on the countryside, Mr. President, I find that out of 3,600,000 farmers who own their own homes, 3,300,000 of them live in homes that cost less than $5,000.

Are you going to ask me, in the name of slum clearance—an utterly worthy cause, one that I want to support and sustain—are you going to ask me to say to 80 percent of the home owners of America, "We insist upon taxing you to build homes for slum families that cost more than the homes in which you yourselves live? We require you to pay to provide others with better homes than your own, and then we shall tax you, in addition, to contribute subsidy rental to these families."

Can I justify myself in returning to my constituency of home owners and saying to them that I have voted a tax upon them to provide some slum clearance on the basis of homes which are better than those in which they themselves live?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I said a moment ago, this is not a bill to average the cost of homes in the United States; but does not the Senator realize that out in the various sections of which he speaks, and with which I am familiar, there are many compensations which do not exist in concentrated areas of population, such as fresh air, open country; that there is a lack of facilities which can be utilized, which are desirable always, but absolutely necessary in these crowded areas? So that we cannot, if we are to indulge in this slum-clearance activity, do it on the basis that there are millions of homes that cost less than $5,000, or $4,000. Many of us, I have no doubt, have lived in homes that cost less than $1,000; but we are dealing with an exceptional situation, and it seems that while it is plausible, it is at the same time a specious argument to contend that because many of our people live in homes costing less than $5,000, we are not willing, in a great movement of this sort, to improve the condition of our people by permitting the lending of money to erect homes which may cost more than that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kentucky is the one who offers the specious argument. This is a problem primarily in arithmetic: What does it cost to create a livable home? If across this Nation it has cost less than $5,000 to create livable homes for 80 percent of our people, I do not believe the American Congress is called upon to authorize more than $5,000 to create homes in the name of slum clearance. I do not believe the American people will stand for it.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I do not think the Senator from Michigan is laying sufficient emphasis upon his argument. In his computation he says that under the latest proposal a four-room apartment would cost about $6,500. I think he might stretch that just a little and point out that a six-room or seven-room house would cost just that much more, and probably we would put the so-called slum dweller in a $10,000 home being paid for by the taxpayers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his observation. I neglected to say that in connection with the census figures, the average home in which the average American lives, and which cost less than $5,000, in the ordinary course of events is more than a four-room institution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Not at the moment. In other words, the comparison has been utterly conservative from my point of view.

I want the housing program to proceed on a scientific basis and with every possible advantage to develop adequate slum clearance and reasonable housing for those who are cleared from the slums. I want to vote for the bill if it can be done. I cannot vote for the bill if I am asked to vote that those who live in slums cannot be removed to adequate quarters unless we spend upon that proposition more than 80 percent of what the American people have spent to provide themselves with homes at their own expense.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, for more than 40 years I have been a student of the housing problem. My first interest was attracted to this subject when Theodore Roosevelt was police commissioner of the city of New York, when the late Jacob Riis interested him in the slum-clearance problem of that city. Later, when Theodore Roosevelt was Governor he was instrumental in having enacted some laws which made a beginning in slum clearance in New York.

For 12 years I gave 3 nights a week and Saturday afternoons to welfare work in my home city of Pittsburgh. I studied the housing problem not only from the point of view of social-settlement work, convalescent-home work, welfare work, and fresh-air work, but I was also president of a housing-improvement company in Pittsburgh dealing with the tenement-house problem.

I know that we can do nothing in Pittsburgh to relieve the situation unless we can strike out the amendment of the junior Senator from Virginia. I have had an unfortunate experience with slum clearance. I lost some of my own money in it in an endeavor to help some neighborhood conditions. During the past 2 years, since we have had a progressive Democratic administration in the State of Pennsylvania and in the city of Pittsburgh, we have been able to have torn down almost 3,000 slum houses, but as yet we have been unable to induce capital to step in and replace them with the homes necessary to house those whose dwelling places were demolished. I believe that if the pending bill should be enacted we will be able in Pittsburgh to carry to a successful completion the work some of us have carried on so far.

I have no doubt that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia would meet the necessities in Virginia; and if the standard of wages suggested by the senior Senator from South Carolina prevails in his State, it is entirely too high.

If we comply with the sanitary plumbing laws in the city of Pittsburgh, we cannot build a brick house, with fireproof construction, as required under the ordinance, for the limited amount fixed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GUFFEY. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Can the Senator give us any idea of what it would cost to build a four-room house or apartment?

Mr. GUFFEY. A single house or an apartment?

Mr. TYDINGS. Either.

Mr. GUFFEY. I should say it would cost $6,000 to $6,500.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much would it have to rent for, may I ask the Senator from his experience, in order to furnish enough revenue to pay off the loan?

Mr. GUFFEY. I would not attempt to answer that question today, because I have not the figures; but I know we could not build a house in Pittsburgh under this proposed law with this amendment in it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it possible to build a $6,500 or a $6,000 house or apartment and rent it on terms which people who are living in the slums and drawing the lowest possible income can pay in the way of rent?

Mr. GUFFEY. It may not be possible now, but we are trying to improve conditions. We are trying to increase the wage standard. We have to increase the wage standard if we expect to enable men to live under proper conditions.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much incomes does the Senator think a man would have to have a month in order that he might live in one of these $6,500 buildings?

Mr. GUFFEY. From $100 to $125 a month.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the Senator concedes that we would not be putting into these apartments the people who now are in the lower-income brackets, and who for the most part compose the population of the slums?

Mr. GUFFEY. In the city of Pittsburgh and the city of New York we are endeavoring constantly to raise the minimum-wage standard. The Steel Corporation in Pittsburgh now has a minimum of $5 a day for day laborers. If that is followed, with 20 days' work a month a man can afford to live in these better houses.

Mr. TYDINGS. What does the Senator say offhand one of these $6,000 apartments or houses would rent for per month?

Mr. GUFFEY. I would not attempt to answer that question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would the Senator think it would be at least 8 percent of the initial cost?

Mr. GUFFEY. It is not possible to pay 8 percent of the initial cost.

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean for rent, taxes, insurance, upkeep, repairs, and so forth.

Mr. GUFFEY. I told the Senator I had not the details here this morning; but I heard the discussion, and I wanted to give my experience. I know we cannot do it in Pittsburgh. I am not going to answer any questions involving figures, because I am not a member of the committee and I have not worked out the details.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does not the Senator concede from his own practical experience that usually the rent charged is about 10 percent of the cost? I take the figure of only 8 percent of the cost. Eight percent of $6,000 would be $480, which would be $40 a month. Does the Senator think that a laborer making $100 a month can pay $40 a month rent, and have only $60 left over for himself and his family?

Mr. GUFFEY. I say he can pay $30 or $35 and live in better conditions.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much would he have to earn in order to pay $30?

Mr. GUFFEY. One hundred dollars a month.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator that not one of these apartments about to be built can be rented for $30 a month. There is no way possible that he can figure out taxes, insurance, repairs, depreciation, interest on the loan, and upkeep.

Mr. GUFFEY. I say it can be done, and can be done for $30 a month.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GUFFEY. I am through.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask the Senator a question. The $6,500 figure, given as the cost of constructing a four-room apartment house, does not include ground?

Mr. GUFFEY. That includes the ground.

Mr. BYRD. The amendment which has been offered, then, is exclusive of the ground; that is, the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] does not include the land. From the Senator's experience would he say he could build an apartment house for $6,500, including the cost of the land?

Mr. GUFFEY. That would depend entirely on where the apartment was built.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let us have order. We cannot hear what is going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. GUFFEY. Has my time expired?

Mr. BYRD. I should like to have an answer to the question.

Mr. GUFFEY. What was the question?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator stated that the cost of a four-room apartment would be $6,500. Does that include the land, or not?

Mr. GUFFEY. It does not.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland a moment ago stated that the so-called Byrd amendment—and I think the Senator from Virginia will agree with me on this—did not provide that the rooms must cost no more than $1,000 a room, but merely that no more than $1,000 may be advanced by the Federal Government for each room. Will the Senator from Virginia substantiate me in the statement that his amendment proposes that no project can be constructed with a loan from the Federal Government if any room in the project costs no more than $1,000?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator can read the amendment, or the clerk can read it at the desk.

Mr. WAGNER. Is the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] present in the Chamber? I am sure the amendment provides——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The amendment provides that no loan or grant shall be made on a project that costs more than a thousand dollars a room.

Mr. WAGNER. I wish to clear up some confusion which seems to exist. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the provision of the amendment. I believe through inadvertence he put a wrong construction on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. President, during the discussion with the Senator from Virginia and others earlier in the debate upon this bill, I made the statement that the average cost throughout the country for projects of this character was $1,000 per room. Of course, if the average cost is a thousand dollars per room, that means that there is a maximum cost above that and a minimum cost below that. The average thus stated was based upon the calculation that the maximum cost is $1,500 and the minimum cost is $500. I think it was on the basis of my statement that the Senator from Virginia offered his amendment. But he took my average as being the absolute maximum throughout the country rather than giving leeway to a maximum of $1,500 or a minimum of $500.

After the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia was agreed to, I made inquiry of a number of builders and others who are well informed, not only as to New York but also as to other large centers where the question of slum clearance is being considered. They all assured me that $1,500 was the lowest amount for which a room could be built in congested localities.

As I said in answer to a question asked by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, I was willing to have that amount reduced even below the minimum figure of $1,500, namely, to $1,400. Based upon the information I have received, I desire to assure the Senate that if the amount is limited to $1,000, then in none of the large centers of the country can we do real slum clearance and build decent houses for these particular people.

It is because I desire to make the law universally applicable that I am making this plea to the Senate, in the endeavor at least to raise the limit. That does not mean that every room built in houses in these congested areas must cost $1,400. I am willing to have placed in the measure any kind of provision setting forth that it is the policy of the Congress, or the mandate of Congress, that the authority shall secure the lowest possible price per room in building houses in the congested areas.

Mr. President, I believe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is mistaken in his calculation with respect to the rent that must be charged upon the basis of cost of a thousand dollars per room, or even $1,400 per room. All the calculations that actuaries have made for me in determining the carrying charges, taking into consideration the exemption from taxes in the particular locality, indicate that the carrying charges are far below 10 percent.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] yesterday made that very clear to the Senate, and I do not care to go over those facts again. However, I ask to have inserted as part of my remarks at this point the table which appears on page 14 of the report, which shows clearly that on an investment of a thousand dollars per room, with provision for a subsidy of 3½ percent and an interest charge of 2½ percent, we get down to $3.56 rent per room, and that, of course, is low enough to reach the low-income group that can be financially aided by this particular legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

TABLE 10.—Monthly rent per room, including heat, and income groups served by public housing and private enterprise

	Cost per room, $1,000 (operating expense $2.95)		Cost per room, $1,333 (operating expense $3.93)
	Rent per room	Income group served	Rent per room	Income group served
Public housing under Wagner-Steagall bill, all Federal loans at 2¼ percent for 60 years:
Subsidy at 3¼ percent:
No local tax exemption	$4.39	$1,054	$5.86	$1,406
Half local tax exemption	3.56	854	4.75	1,140
Full local tax exemption	2.73	655	3.64	874
Subsidy at 2½ percent:
No local tax exemption	5.22	1,253	6.97	1,673
Half local tax exemption	4.39	1,054	5.86	1,406
Full local tax exemption	3.56	854	4.75	1,140
Public housing under capital grant formula of 40 percent capital grant; balance 2½-percent loans for 60 years:
No local tax exemption	6.23	1,595	8.30	1,992
Half local tax exemption	5.40	1,296	7.19	1,725
Full local tax exemption	4.57	1,102	6.08	1,459
Private enterprise:
Actual experience of the 43 low-rent projects of Federal Housing Administration costing $1,333 per room			13.82	3,317
Assuming room cost of $1,000	10.37	2,489

In the above table, the family income levels are based upon the requirement (in sec. 2, par. 1) that the family income shall not exceed 5 times the annual rental, and upon an allowance of 4 rooms for a family of 5.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator from New York feel that the influence on wage levels generally in the country, due to the passage of the Black-Connery bill, is quite likely to have a marked effect on the ability of the low-income groups to meet the problems suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]?

Mr. WAGNER. I will say, in answer to the Senator's question, that as a matter of fact it will get down to those low-income groups, because the calculations in the table, on page 14 of the report, show that we can get down to as low as $3.56 rental per room, based on the interest rate of 2½ percent, and also taking into consideration all the other carrying charges, including the amortization of the loan.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, on what cost per room? You get down to a rental of three dollars and some cents on what per-unit cost?

Mr. WAGNER. On a $1,000-per-room cost. If it runs to $1,400 the rent will become a little larger, but very little higher. Of course, we expect when the loan is made that the local authority is going to be required not only to give tax exemption, but to give other aids so as to make it possible to reach even a lower group.

Mr. CLARK. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator because I know his time is limited, but I cannot understand when the Senator says that there will be very little increase in rental between a room costing $1,000 and one costing $1,400, that difference can only be taken care of by an increase in the subsidy, can it not?

Mr. WAGNER. No; because the amount of $400 is not a very substantial sum.

Mr. CLARK. It is a very large proportional sum. It means the addition of nearly 50 percent. One thousand four hundred dollars is nearly 50 percent more than $1,000.

Mr. WAGNER. The figures are contained in the table I referred to. On a cost of $1,333, with local tax exemption—and, of course, they will all have local tax exemption—we get down to a charge of $3.64 per room.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will permit me I will suggest that he started out with a unit figure of $1,000, and if that is increased to $1,400 it is certainly an increase of 40 percent.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator called my attention to an error. On the cost per room of a thousand dollars the charge per room is down to $2.73, and the figure of $3.64 is based on a $1,333 cost, which is still sufficiently low to reach the low-income group that we wish to reach under this bill.

Two other statements were made which I should like to correct so that there will be no misunderstanding about the matter. After all, figures are not always all that we can rely upon, but a statement was made that this cost would run into billions of dollars for the Government to finance these projects. As a matter of fact, I may say to the Senate that the total cost placed upon the Government under this program when it shall be completed will be not more than $20,000,000 per year. It seems to me that for an effort to clear the slums of our country $20,000,000 per year maximum is not a very large expenditure, if we can accomplish something in clearing the slums.

What I wanted to say was that we have got to look at this thing realistically. Everyone knows that in these large centers of population it costs more to clear the slums, and costs more to construct the buildings, than in less-populated sections, and the whole question that we must finally determine is whether we are, as humanitarians and as good businessmen, ready to aid these people and get them out of the slums into decent housing, to the economic benefit of the whole country.

I am not clear whether I understood the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday that he would like a real slum-clearance bill. All I can say to the Senator is that this bill follows exactly the procedure adopted by all other countries that have succeeded in clearing their slums, particularly Great Britain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator misunderstood the application of my remarks. What I said was that I regarded this bill purely as a slum-clearing bill, and I wanted to support it; but I did want sufficient safeguards thrown around it with reference to the expenditures.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. So do I. It may be that we can build the houses for $1,000 per room. If a change occurs in the price of materials, and in some other costs that enter into building, that may be true. But at the present time I am assured that these houses cannot be built in the particular slum areas for less than $1,400 per room, if we want to clear the sums. I only want a maximum of cost. If we can build them for $1,000 a room it is the duty of the board to see that that is done.

Mr. FRAZIER rose.

Mr. WAGNER. I am sorry but I do not have much time left, and I cannot yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. President, I recall that during the Hoover administration, when some of us were trying to secure funds for Public Works Program to take care of the unemployed at that time, when we were going down further, further, and further and more and more people were unemployed and great suffering was occurring and starvation stalked throughout the country, that yet there was a hesitancy to help those people. I recall distinctly one of the brilliant statements that the Senator from Idaho made at that time in a discussion with another Senator, the late Senator Fess, of Ohio, in which the Senator from Idaho finally said:

> Let us not talk about bonds; let us not talk about the effect upon the market; let us think of these people that are starving. If the localities cannot take care of the problem, it is the duty of the Federal Government to take care of it and to see that no one in our country starves.

And we all supported the Senator from Idaho in that position.

We have heard very little about the human beings whom we are trying to help. We have been given nothing but figures and figures and figures. It reminds me that I called on President Hoover—I do not think there is anything confidential about it—and pleaded for a billion-dollar program. At that time another Senator, the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], asked for even a larger appropriation for a relief program. I pleaded for a billion-dollar program with which to put people to work, because I said, "People are out of work and we are going to have difficulty when they begin to suffer hunger and general destitution." I was sent by the President to an official who had charge of the finances of the Government. He said to me, "Why a billion-dollar program?" And he took up a pencil and began to figure the effect that the issuance of a billion dollars in bonds would have upon the price of current bond issues upon the market.

I said, "Mr. Secretary, will you not look out of the window, will you not visualize from ten to twelve million people who are on the point of starvation? Let us think of them. Do not be figuring whether the bonds are going to lose a quarter of 1 percent upon the market, but let us think of these people, Americans, who are willing to work, but who, because of our mismanagement of the economic system, have been thrown out of work through no fault of their own. Let us see that they are put back to work so that their morale will not be destroyed. That is the duty of the Federal Government."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired on the motion.

Mr. WAGNER. I will speak on the bill for a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from New York has already spoken on the bill.

Mr. WAGNER. I had just reached the point where I wished to make a further statement, but I will have to forego it. I may say, however, that I hope the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] will be agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I cannot yield. We have rules which forbid interruptions except for questions.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will not the Senator yield to allow me to propose a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. FRAZIER. No. I have not opened my mouth on this bill, or on very many others, but I do wish to say just a word or two in regard to the pending question.

Mr. President, I cannot, for the life of me, understand why there is any objection to limiting the cost of the units which are to be erected in slum-clearance projects to what seems to me to be a reasonable amount, namely, a thousand dollars a room. I cannot understand, for the life of me, why it should cost any more for materials and for the work to build an ordinary livable home in New York City than it does in the smaller cities in the United States, or why it should even cost so much, for in a large city, such as New York, where there is more competition among the firms which furnish the materials and among the contractors than in the smaller cities.

If projects are to be undertaken in cities which have slums that should be cleared up, cities which are in control of political organizations and which take political tolls, the board or those in charge or the Secretary of the Interior should see to it that the new tenement houses or building units which are to replace the slums should be built outside the limits of those cities. We do not expect to have the new homes built on Fifth Avenue in New York City. There is no reason why they should be. There is plenty of land around New York City, land which can be obtained for a reasonable price, where homes may be built for persons who now inhabit the tenement houses in the slums.

There has been all kinds of criticism of graft and politics being played even in relief work under the present administration. I have tried to defend and to protect the administration from any such charges and have felt that, in general, the situation has been very well taken care of; but in some instance there have been such persistent charges made that I am inclined to believe that there is some truth in them in some instances.

If this bill is honestly intended for the purpose that those in charge of the measure say it is, namely, to build new homes for those who now live in slum districts where the conditions are almost unbearable, then let us see to it that graft is cut out of it on the part of any Government official or any city official or anybody else, and see to it that the price or cost of the homes is limited to a reasonable amount.

In my opinion, the amendment of the Senator from Virginia which was adopted on Wednesday last, limiting the cost of such buildings to a thousand dollars a room, is, to say the least, very reasonable. There is no excuse for paying any more for new homes for the people who now live in slum districts and are living there because they cannot earn sufficient money to have better homes.

Mr. President, it goes a little against the grain with me to have Members of the Senate insist that we must have more money for building high-priced homes to replace the slum districts. I am afraid it would not be for the interests of these poor people but for political graft.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think I have time left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the Senator has spoken once on the motion. The unanimous-consent agreement not only deals with the time but with the number of speeches.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will take my time on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has time on the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to comment very briefly upon the final observations of the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I decline to accept the implication that those who insist upon consulting the fiscal stability of the United States are doing something that is inhumane in respect to some groups of our people. The able Senator from New York says let us not talk about bonds; let us talk about people who starve. Well, no person with a normal sensibility is ever going to weigh bonds against a human being, but, Mr. President, unless somebody thinks about the financial status of the Government of the United States, and that pretty soon, and brings the Federal Budget back into balance; unless somebody gives a little attention to the question of a limitation of Federal expenditures, those who starve will not be confined to the slums, but, under the impulse of the inflationary movement, which is inevitable under those circumstances, the entire American people will be crucified upon the cross of the high cost of living. Starvation will not be reduced; it will be multiplied. I respectfully submit there is just as much humanity in trying to preserve the public credit and in trying to prevent extravagance and waste as there is in the other attitude.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, it has been very interesting to listen to the speeches on the pending bill of the various Senators who have directed their remarks to the problem of housing. Of course, no detail has been furnished with the figures; the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Virginia have furnished no break-down of the thousand-dollar limitation; nor has any other Senator. They arrive at these figures by a sort of average, as pointed out by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on Wednesday last. So the figures that have been submitted with such vigor and assurance by the Senator from Maryland, by way of illustration, have been based upon a guess and an estimate upon an average and without a break-down of detailed figures or without an estimate based upon actual experience.

It so happens that in the housing business the Government has had some experience. The P. W. A. has been engaged in the housing business and has had some experience; and, based upon that experience, we are able to get some reliable figures and not altogether guesswork.

The Senator from Maryland has pointed out, under his system of figures, that one of these units would cost so much, that the rental of it would have to be $40 a month, and that the people we want to help have no such income as to justify paying $40 a month rent. Of course, one cannot justify that kind of rent in view of the meager income of those in the low-income group. The people who are going to live in these projects where slums are cleared away and new construction is placed are people who are in the low-income brackets, and they cannot afford to pay over from $15 to $20 a month. Twenty dollars a month is the top and $15 a month is about an average.

Mr. President, let us examine for a minute the figures of the Housing Administration of the P. W. A. and see if people with low incomes can come within the figures. It is not a matter of guesswork with the P. W. A. Housing Administration. They have actually undertaken 51 projects, 27 of which were slum-clearance projects, and one was in one of the worst slums of the country in the State of Massachusetts. Their experience has been that in these 51 projects the average room cost, net, has been $1,370.15, and with all overhead charges, exclusive of land, it has been $1,407. Now, let us take the various units in the various localities and get some idea of what the cost has been to the P. W. A. in the experimental housing projects which they have undertaken in 51 cities of the United States.

In Atlanta, Ga., for instance, the total room cost, exclusive of land, was $898; with land it was $1,260. That was on project H–1101. On project H–1102 it was $853.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I wonder if the Senator has the figures as to the cost per unit of the resettlement projects, such as Tugwelltown and others, where the cost was $14,000 each?

Mr. MINTON. No; I have not the figures. I am talking about the P. W. A. and the Senator knows it. I am talking about housing projects in connection with which the P. W. A. has had actual experience in slum clearance and actual experience as to the cost per room net and cost per room including land.

Mr. BYRD. Is not the Senator aware the Resettlement Administration spent nearly as much as the P. W. A.? Why not take the experience of the Resettlement Administration?

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Virginia may take it in his own time. I am talking about the P. W. A. The Senator from Virginia permitted things to happen in his own State and expenditures to be made there, and then comes in and cries about the results.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I know the Senator does not want to make a misstatement. He has made a statement which is absolutely incorrect. I did not permit it, and I did all I could to stop it.

Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator object to starting the project?

Mr. BYRD. I was not consulted about starting of the project. It was a lump-sum appropriation, and I did my utmost to stop it.

Mr. MINTON. Did not the Senator know they were going to build the project in his State?

Mr. BYRD. I did not know they were going to construct any of those Virginia projects, one costing $8,000 per room. I assumed they would use ordinary common sense and good judgment in the expenditure of public money, but I was wrong.

Mr. MINTON. My only experience in trying to save money for the Government was in a bill carrying an authorization for appropriations which contained an item of $2,500,000 for a project in my State which we did not think was an economical project, and we did not want it. We opposed it in the beginning and knocked the $2,500,000 out of the appropriation bill, and we did not come in after the project had been started and the money had been spent and squawk about it.

Let me get back to the P. W. A. projects. At Atlantic City the project cost $1,280 per room without land and $1,666 with land. At Birmingham, Ala., the project cost $1,150 per room without land and $1,604 with the land.

In my own State of Indiana, in the city of Indianapolis, we had one project, and the cost per room there without the land was $973 and with the land $1,269.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Does not the Senator know that the average value of nonfarm homes in Indiana is only $3,654?

Mr. MINTON. No; I do not know that, but I am not surprised. As I travel over the country and observe as I go along I would conclude the room cost is lower than that in West Virginia.

In Louisville, Ky., right across the river from where I live, the average room cost is $1,544 without the land and $1,627 with the land. So it is with all the projects all the way down the line.

The average cost per room under the P. W. A. projects is $5.34 per room per month—of all the projects all over the United States, in Georgia, New York, Massachusetts, Ohio, Texas, South Carolina, Indiana, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and Pennsylvania. That includes the projects scattered all over the country. The experience has been that the average rental per room, in order to amortize and pay out the projects under their scheme, is $5.34.

If we take those costs and apply the provisions of the Wagner bill, if we take that experience of the P. W. A. in the various States, 51 projects where the P. W. A. has had this experience, and extend the figures of the Wagner bill to those projects, we will find that the average rent per room would be $3.54, so that the rent of a 4-room unit would be four times $3.54, which would be $13 or $14. Thirteen or fourteen dollars is within the reach of the people we are trying to help, those who are in the low-income brackets.

So what becomes of the estimate of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] which is based upon an average here and an average there, and a guess here and a guess yonder? They fade away in the face of the actual figures and experience of a governmental agency in 51 distinct projects of housing.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. What figures is the Senator quoting? Is he quoting figures of the Federal Housing Administration where the known average rental per room is $14.13?

Mr. MINTON. I am talking about the P. W. A. housing administration. I am not talking about the Federal Housing Administration.

We find, when we consult actual figures and take the actual experience of the Government in housing, that a unit can be built sufficient to take care of these people, adequate in every respect, and can be rented to them under the Wagner bill now pending before the Senate at an average of $3.54 per room. Therefore, it becomes entirely possible to aid the people that everybody is for "but", and everyone wants to help "but", and everyone is pleased to do something "but"; and when we get through "butting" them around the Chamber there is no help in sight for them.

From these figures of the actual experience of a governmental agency, I submit that the bill so ably sponsored by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] meets the problem, is thoroughly practical, and can be worked out in the interest of the poor people the Senator and his friends are trying to help.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson, Colo.	Overton
Andrews	Connally	King	Pepper
Ashurst	Davis	La Follette	Pittman
Austin	Dieterich	Lee	Radcliffe
Bailey	Donahey	Lewis	Reynolds
Barkley	Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz
Berry	Frazier	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	George	Lonergan	Sheppard
Black	Gerry	Lundeen	Shipstead
Bone	Gillette	McAdoo	Steiwer
Borah	Glass	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Green	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Brown, Mich.	Guffey	McKellar	Townsend
Brown, N. H.	Hale	McNary	Truman

Byrd	Hitchcock	Murray	Wagner
Byrnes	Holt	Neely	Walsh
Capper	Hughes	Nye	Wheeler
Chaves	Johnson, Calif.	O'Mahoney	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Virginia and adopted by the Senate provides a limitation of $4,000 per family unit and $1,000 per room, exclusive of the cost of the land and the removal of any buildings existing on the property purchased. As a reasonable price for the purchase of the land and the demolition of the buildings, let us assume $1,000 for a four-room home. This would permit a cost of $5,000 per family unit.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has stated that should this amendment be reconsidered, he will offer an amendment to increase the limit of cost to $1,400 per room. I understand that the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is agreed that the family unit should be limited to six rooms. Therefore, the issue is clearly presented to the Senate, namely, should this amendment be reconsidered, assuming that the cost of the land is $1,000, a four-room family unit will cost $7,600 as compared to the $5,000 limitation proposed in the amendment that I offered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BYRD. I do.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes that that is the maximum, and probably the exceptional case.

Mr. BYRD. I understand.

Therefore, assuming that this limitation would be reached, there is a difference of 50 percent between the two proposals. I desire to say here and now that judging by the experience we have had in these matters, we may expect every dollar to be spent that is permitted under this bill. There will be an increase of cost of 50 percent, therefore, assuming a four-room house; but under the proposal of the Senator from Kentucky a six-room house will cost $9,400, nearly twice as much as is proposed in the limitation of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, how does he get that figure?

Mr. BYRD. Allowing $1,000 for the land and the demolition of the buildings.

Therefore the issue is clearly presented that unless the limitation I propose is retained in the bill, on the basis of a six-room house, 50 percent less of these underprivileged persons can be provided for by this appropriation.

I am not out of sympathy with the general objectives of this legislation, but regard the pending bill as ill-considered and improperly drawn. I think it is worthy of our consideration, however, to give advantages to 50 percent more families than would be possible if the amendment I have offered should be reconsidered and rejected by the Senate.

Mr. President, rarely in the history of the Senate has such a lobby been put in operation as has occurred for the past 24 hours for the purpose of inducing the Senate to reconsider the action it took 2 days ago. The morning newspapers announce that six great national organizations located in Washington are conducting a campaign and bringing pressure upon the Members of the Senate for the purpose of inducing them to change their votes on this amendment. We must remember, Mr. President, that very few bills have been introduced in the Congress of the United States which involve the gigantic expenditures which are expressed and implied in this bill. It will be possible to spend $700,000,000, and that is only a small part of the ultimate cost, because the mayor of New York has stated that the cost of eliminating the slums of New York City alone would be $15,000,000,000; and even though all of this $700,000,000 is spent in the city of New York, it would eliminate the slums there to the extent of only something like 6 percent. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] the other day said on the floor of the Senate that he estimated the cost of eliminating the slums in this country at $60,000,000,000, one-fourth of the value of all the property in the United States. Is it any wonder, Mr. President, that those who sell materials for this gigantic construction program, that those who sell concrete and lumber and brick and steel, desire to have the highest possible prices for the construction of these homes, without limitation?

Yesterday there was placed on the desks of Senators some propaganda to which I desire to make reference. I entirely absolve the Senator from New York from criticism for being responsible for placing on the desks of Senators erroneous propaganda. I think it was in very bad taste; but I desire to make reference to it because I understand that some Senators have been influenced by the figures which are contained in this pamphlet. I desire to show that the figures are misleading, and in some instances tell only half of the truth.

This memorandum was signed by Langdon Post, president of the American Federation of Housing Authorities. A similar memorandum was distributed in the press gallery, signed by the American Federation of Housing Authorities, the Housing Legislation Information Office, the Labor Housing Conference, the National Association of Housing Officials, and concurred in by the American Federation of Labor and the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor. This circular states that the average cost of the construction of certain projects under the Federal Housing Administration would amount to $1,477 per room.

Mr. President, at my request the Federal Housing Administration has furnished me the exact information with respect to the cost of the projects which have been constructed with the aid that has been furnished by that organization.

Four thousand nine hundred and seventy-seven family units have been built with the aid extended by the Federal Housing Administration. The average cost per family unit is $4,641, including the cost of the land, including the cost of the landscaping, and including all other costs, as compared with an estimate of $5,000 under the amendment proposed by me.

The average cost of the rooms is not $1,477, as stated in this circular, but is $1,282, and this includes the cost of the land.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Would the Senator object to increasing the figure to the amount he has just stated, namely, $1,282?

Mr. BYRD. I have just endeavored to make clear to the Senate that this $1,282 includes the cost of the land, the cost of the landscaping, and all the other costs, while the amendment proposed by me limits it to $1,000 per room, exclusive of the land, and with the addition of the land there is no reason to think that the construction at the cost shown by the Federal Housing Administration could not be carried out under the terms of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have a telegram from Cornelius D. Scully, the mayor of Pittsburgh, in which he informs me that—

PITTSBURGH, PA., August 5, 1937.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS:

Limitation of construction cost of low-rent houses to $4,000 very bad. Would eliminate families needing more space. One thousand dollars per room cost is O. K. for Pittsburgh, but unit cost should be $6,000.

CORNELIUS D. SCULLY, Mayor.

Mr. Scully is very well informed on housing matters, and I was wondering whether the Senator could not bring himself to increase the amount to $6,000 as the total amount.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as I have just stated, the 4,977 family units constructed all through this country by the Federal Housing Administration have cost $4,641 to complete. That includes the land and the landscaping, and likewise includes a profit to the contractor.

I am informed that the estimated cost per family in apartment houses privately built in 768 cities of the United States was $2,833 for the year 1936 and that multifamily houses built in the city of New York, exclusive of the land, cost $2,740 per family unit, in accordance with the permits for the building of these projects in that city.

Mr. President, the proposed legislation was presented to the Senate without any estimates of cost, notwithstanding the fact that it involved the expenditure of these huge sums of money and the fact that it was proposed to build certain definite building units. To show how loosely drawn the proposed legislation is, no estimates were furnished to the Senate as to the cost of the buildings.

I received from the Housing Administration some pictures and some figures as to the cost of different projects which have been constructed with the assistance of this organization. I have before me now the details as to a brick house, with a nice garage attached to it, and I think no one who would leave the slums would be insulted by being asked to live in this house. It cost $4,650. It is equipped with a steam heating plant; it is equipped with plumbing and with electrical attachments.

Of course, if those responsible are to waste and squander the money, as has been done under the Resettlement Administration, there could be no success; but it is my firm judgment and opinion that with proper economy and efficiency we could build suitable houses for the use and occupancy of the underprivileged people who now live in the slums for a total of $4,000 per unit, and in fact much less, plus the cost of the land and the cost of clearing the buildings which are now on the land.

I think no greater service can be given and no finer result can be accomplished for the long success of this movement than at the beginning to safeguard and prevent gross extravagance like that which has occurred in so many other projects constructed by Government agencies.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. In line with what the Senator has just been saying, yesterday I ran across one of the leading economists in the United States, one of the pioneers in the housing movement in New York City, Mr. John T. Flynn, who told me that there are within the city of New York now, in the Borough of Queens, with ready access to rapid transit, family units of six rooms per house, with grounds and garage, which may be bought on easy terms for less than $5,000—indeed, for $4,950, I think he said, to be exact, so as to keep within the provisions of the tax-exempt provisions of the New York statute. If that can be done by private enterprise, it would certainly seem that a limitation of $4,000 per family unit, exclusive of the land, would be a very reasonable one.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there can be no question about that. As has been stated on the floor of the Senate, the average value of all the residences in the cities of this country is only $4,400. It is proposed that we spend far more in the construction of buildings for the purpose of slum clearance than the average value of all the dwellings in the cities of the country.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was very much impressed by the inquiry which was directed to the Senator by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who quoted a telegram from the mayor of Pittsburgh to the effect that while a satisfactory slum-clearance project could be constructed for $1,000 a room, the limitation of $4,000 was probably too low, and indicating, as I recall, that a maximum of $6,000 per family unit would cover the situation in Pittsburgh.

I inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether, in the light of all of the conflicting figures which are being presented to us on the part of the proponents of the limitation motion and upon the part of those who are opposing it, the suggestion submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania from the mayor of Pittsburgh might not afford a basis for a general agreement.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it is my frank and considered judgment that a maximum of $5,000 per family unit is sufficient; in fact, the construction cost should be less.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask, then, does the Senator intend to suggest such a modification of the original amendment?

Mr. BYRD. My contention is, I may say in response to the Senator from Wyoming, that my amendment already provides for a maximum cost of $5,000, because it excludes the cost of the land and excludes the cost of the demolishment of the building. Therefore, under the amendment as it now stands, there can be spent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The time of the Senator from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BYRD. May I take time on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has already spoken on the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BARKLEY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WAGNER. May I be informed exactly of the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] that the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia was agreed to be reconsidered. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I again announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on official duty as members of the committee appointed to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

I further announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is unavoidably detained; that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] are detained on official business; and that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is detained from the Senate because of illness in his family.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is paired on this question with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. If present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina would vote "yea", and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea", and the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague [Mr. GIBSON] is absent in France in connection with his duties with the Battle Monuments Commission. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—44

Adams	Capper	Herring	Pittman
Andrews	Clark	Holt	Radcliffe

So Mr. BYRD's motion to lay on the table Mr. MCCARRAN's motion to reconsider was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. GAVAGAN, Mr. SEGER, and Mr. CARTER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

LOW-COST HOUSING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to offer several amendments, one after the other. They are all corrective amendments, and none of them, with one exception, is substantive. I believe the Senate will agree to the substantive amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 40, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "Authority" and insert "Administrator", and on the same page, line 7, to strike out "Authority" and insert "Administrator."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 44, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the comma after the word "rules" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and"; and in the same line to strike out the words "and definitions."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Since the Senate has adopted the amendment placing this activity under the Department of the Interior, I wish to ask the Senator from New York whether any real necessity exists for having an administrator and four directors at high salaries under the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say that the construction which the author of the amendment put upon it was that it merely gives the Secretary of the Interior supervisory power. The powers that are to be exercised still exist in this board.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to the Senator from Texas entirely extravagant and inconsistent to put this authority as a bureau in the Department of the Interior and then have an overhead of five high-salaried officials.

Mr. WAGNER. The number has now been reduced to three.

Mr. CONNALLY. The number has been reduced to three! The Senator has made some progress.

Mr. WAGNER. That was done some time ago.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me there should be a further reduction. It seems to me that one man, under the Secretary of the Interior, is sufficient.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Would it not be the idea of the Senator from Texas that we should strike out the provision for a board of two directors and leave simply the administrator?

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. BURKE. It seems to me that would be advisable, since the Secretary of the Interior has supervisory power.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. It seems to me we can dispense with the two directors and allow the Administrator to function, because if the Secretary of the Interior is to have supervisory power he will, in the last analysis, be the one who determines policy, and the Administrator can simply carry out the policy of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WAGNER. No such power has been given to the Secretary of the Interior by the amendment which has been offered, and it is my belief that if this work is to be effectively done it must be done by a board to define the policies and the Administrator to carry them out.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the Senator from New York shall have concluded with his amendments I shall ask leave to introduce an amendment to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 50, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "and" and insert "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 55, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "purusuant", and insert "pursuant."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the next amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 56 it is proposed to strike out, beginning with the figure "(3)", in line 10, and extending to line 19, and to renumber the succeeding paragraphs of the section to conform to the change thus made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator intend to eliminate by that proposed amendment all the lines from line 10 down to and including line 19, or is the Senator merely eliminating the figure "3" in the parentheses?

Mr. WAGNER. It is proposed to take out the paragraph, because elsewhere in the bill the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] takes care, in a mandatory way, of the matter which this paragraph deals with as merely discretionary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendment last stated to the committee amendment was agreed to on August 3.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, what was the amendment that was agreed to?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I can explain it. Paragraph (3) on page 56 has to do with the elimination of slums where a housing project is undertaken. Under that paragraph, however, it is only discretionary. The Senator from Massachusetts submitted an amendment, which has been agreed to, making it absolutely mandatory. That having been done by the Senator from Massachusetts, the discretionary provision should go out of the bill. It is surplusage.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this amendment should be adopted, although I think the amendment heretofore offered by me proposed to strike out paragraph (3). The provision that is sought to be stricken out sets up one of the standards that the Authority should consider in making any grants or loans to a local housing authority. The amendment which the Senate adopted and to which the Senator from New York refers as my amendment makes it compulsory. Therefore, the optional provision which fixes it as one of the standards should go out of the bill, there being left in the bill the compulsory provision to which reference has been made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is it the understanding of the Senator that by the elimination of the paragraph just referred to, where the insanitary premises have been taken away from the owners and when the buildings have been demolished, the new housing project must be upon the same ground?

Mr. WAGNER. The new housing does not necessarily have to be upon the same ground. The city, for instance, may want to make a park of the slum area by tearing down the buildings, but they must take care of every inhabitant of the slums by erecting buildings at some other place.

Mr. KING. That is what I was interested in. It would seem to me to provide that the new housing units must be built upon the ground where the slum was cleared.

Mr. WALSH. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not a fact the most important thing in connection with the whole business is to take care of the present occupants of the slums, whether they are taken care of on the very ground or otherwise?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and put them in decent houses.

Mr. CLARK. And put them in decent houses, improved houses. But I am told that in the city of New York there are 500,000 persons occupying buildings of a type that has been forbidden by law for 38 years, but at any suggestion of purchasing that property it is held by the owners at an absolutely prohibitive price. Is not the important thing to do to move the occupants of those slums to better homes some place else, and then for the State of New York or the city of New York or other States or other cities, as the case may be, to go in, and, by the process of condemnation, as a matter of public health and public safety, wipe out those slums?

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly what this bill proposes to do. There is to be no private purchase of those properties; they are to be purchased as a result of condemnation. So there can be no question of any land speculation involved.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to inquire if a great city—I am not referring to New York—has slum dwellings which do not meet the requirements of use—that is, if they are insanitary and unsafe—why should the Federal Government and why should the city, why should the housing authority be compelled to buy those buildings?

Why could not the city acquire them under its police power and destroy them and tear them down? The occasion for constructing the new buildings is in order that those who now by force of necessity occupy the slum areas may have other places to which to go. But we certainly should not pay the owner for dwellings which are not fit for habitation, even though he has been obtaining rent from them.

Mr. WAGNER. That is all a matter of court procedure. Where such properties are unfit for human habitation, the courts provide no price for them; in some cases the owners are required to demolish the buildings; but the land, of course, cannot be taken without paying compensation.

Mr. ADAMS. We do not want this bill to be a bill for the benefit of the owners of slum dwellings.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course not. Various suggestions of that character have been made, but I hope the Senator does not think that those who are sponsoring the bill have the owners of that type of uninhabitable houses in mind?

Mr. ADAMS. I do not think so at all. I made the inquiry because of this proper provision that there must be compulsory clearance of the slums. My inquiry was as to the method. I do not want the method to involve payment for insanitary, unfit dwellings.

Mr. WAGNER. No such requirements, of course, are provided. If the courts find that buildings are unfit for habitation, and are worthless, there is no compensation paid for them, but compensation is paid for the land; and we have the power under the law—I do not know how much it has been exercised—even to compel the demolition of properties of that character.

Mr. ADAMS. It cannot have been exercised, because the cities have had the power to compel the demolition of these buildings, anyway, and little or nothing has been done.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator must recognize the tremendous problem involved. If the people who occupy the slums were to be put out without having any other place to go, they would have to live on the streets. As speedily as we can, we will get rid of the slums, but we cannot do so until we build new houses. There have been some demolitions which have forced people to leave their old dwellings, and, having no other place to go, they are now living in tents. That is true not only in New York but in other places. When Senators go home I think they may find evidence awaiting them as to the seriousness of the housing shortage in their own sections.

Mr. LEWIS. But our constituencies do not lose touch with us.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Colorado, and to reiterate what the Senator from New York has stated in a different way, let me say that it is not contemplated that any money shall be expended by the Federal Government to remove slums. There is ample legal authority in any State that wants to exercise the power to remove slums without any cost to municipality or the State or to the Federal Government.

It is provided by the amendment to which reference has been made that when an application is filed for a loan for houses to take the place of slums that have been destroyed by the city or State, there shall be submitted, with the application, plans showing that the slums have been or are to be removed, as well as plans for the new houses. The loans are to be premised upon the removal of slum areas. If it is not desirable to build houses there, they can be built in an entirely different part of the city. So that it is quite possible for the local authority to come to the board and say, "We have or will destroy 25 houses in a slum area in the city of New York"—or Boston or Philadelphia—"they are demolished. We now want a loan to permit us to build 25 or 50 houses to accommodate the people who formerly lived in the slum area in another part of the city." The amendment should be adopted, as it is unnecessary in view of my compulsory amendment in another part of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the next amendment submitted by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 61, line 21, it is proposed to insert a parenthesis at the beginning of the line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 63, it is proposed to strike out lines 16 to 22, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 63, line 23, it is proposed to capitalize the word "Authority."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there is one other amendment. Having amended the section which deals with expenses, the words on page 43, line 3, beginning with "such", down to the end of the sentence, are no longer necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 43, it is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 3 and running through line 7, the following words:

> Such examination shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the Congress and to the Authority of expenditures in violation of law, together with such recommendations thereon as the Comptroller General deems advisable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the committee amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I ask the clerk to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 54, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the period after the word "reasonable" and insert:

> Provided, That upon the certification of the Secretary of the Interior that persons owning lands not suitable for agricultural purposes within existing and authorized national parks or national forests, have tendered satisfactory options for their sale to the United States for national-park purposes, the Authority may allocate to the said Secretary not to exceed $1,000,000 for their acquisition so the vendors may rehabilitate themselves on other lands more suitable for agricultural purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is not the Senator from New York willing to accept the amendment?

Mr. WAGNER. I think it is outside of the scheme of things contemplated by the bill, but I have no objection to letting it go to conference.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before that is done I think the amendment ought to be explained.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment is to be inserted on page 54, at the end of line 18. It merely provides that certain lands may be acquired for park and other recreational facilities. For instance, at Knoxville, Tenn., this would enable the completion of a park which the Government already owns. That is all there is to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand the provision to which the Senator's amendment applies, namely, subsection (f) on page 54, it merely gives the authority power to convert slum areas into parks or lease them for automobile storage or parking purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. My amendment is purely permissive. It does not require it to be done.

Mr. WALSH. I am speaking of what is provided in the bill. Rather than leave the slum areas vacant, they can be converted by lease or by sale into something useful, a park or parking spaces such as have been created in other places. What addition to that authority would be made by the Senator's amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. It would merely give the housing authority permission to do what is provided by the amendment if they see fit. The project I have in mind is to complete a park which belongs to the Government and which can be utilized for recreational purposes.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the Senator ought to press it in connection with this matter. It ought to be on the P. W. A. bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the P. W. A. bill is not before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. The projects under the bill now before us are presumed to be concerned solely and alone with slum areas and their removal by local authorities, and the building of new homes for people who are to be housed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator be on the conference committee?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know whether or not I will be.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest that the Senator take the amendment to conference and see whether it can be worked out.

Mr. WALSH. I certainly should like to accommodate the Senator, but I really believe the amendment ought not to be adopted on the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, has not the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] some amendments which would strike out certain provisions of the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. They have not been offered as yet.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand this paragraph is to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that it has already been stricken from the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. No. I just asked the clerks and was informed it has not been stricken. Let the paragraph be perfected, and then if it is stricken out the entire matter will go out.

Mr. KING. I advise the Senator that section 12 has been stricken from the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was advised just a few moments ago that section 13 has not been stricken from the bill. My amendment does not apply to section 12. It applies to section 13.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] 2 days ago offered an amendment to the bill, to which I did not object, proposing to strike out the authorization conferred upon the board to build demonstration projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is provided for in section 12.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Utah has been given a memorandum, I am sure, to move to strike out other sections of the bill which would confer the same type of power upon the board, namely, that having the power to construct demonstration projects they were also to be given the power to obtain land for parks and playgrounds and other recreation facilities in connection with demonstration projects. If no demonstration projects are to be built, the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee would be pure surplusage. I understood the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was going to endeavor to perfect the bill by moving to strike that section from the bill. Am I correct?

Mr. KING. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before that is done I think my amendment should be adopted. It is entirely in order to perfect the paragraph first.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is there any purpose in the Senator's amendment except to enlarge a park at a particular place in one town?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly the purpose of it.

Mr. CLARK. I do not think that ought to be put on a bill of this kind. This is a slum-clearance bill and has for its purpose to move people out of infested districts or infested tenements and put them in comfortable, proper homes. To suggest now the addition of an amendment for the extension of a park in one particular city in one particular State seems to me absolutely to destroy the purpose of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. In my opinion, it is in perfect accord with the purposes of the bill.

Mr. CLARK. I might be in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee if offered as a separate measure, but I do not think specific projects of that sort, even where the Government already owns the park, ought to be tacked onto a measure of the kind now under consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is in perfect keeping with the provisions now in the bill. Of course, if the section goes out, the whole proposal would go out.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. Am I to understand the Senator's amendment would give permissive authority to the board to spend money appropriated under the bill to buy lands located within the borders of a national park?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes. It is in direct line with subparagraph (f), on page 54, which provides:

> The Authority may dedicate land for parks, playgrounds, and other recreational facilities, for sewers, for the opening or widening of streets, for incidental improvements, or for any other public purpose—

It will be seen that it takes in all public purposes.

> and may grant licenses and easements upon such terms as it deems reasonable.

If the paragraph is all going out, that is all right.

Mr. WAGNER. It should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to strike from the bill paragraph (f) on page 54.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not now in order. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have been unable to follow the discussion because three Senators have been on their feet at the same time, all talking at the same time. I understand there is pending a motion to strike out and another motion to add to that which is to be stricken out. May I ask just what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May we have the amendment again stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 54, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the period after the word "reasonable" and insert:

> Provided, That upon the certification of the Secretary of the Interior that persons owning land not suitable for agricultural purposes within existing and authorized national parks or national forests, have tendered satisfactory options for their sale to the United States for national purposes, the Authority may allocate to the said Secretary not to exceed $1,000,000 for their acquisition so the vendors may rehabilitate themselves on other lands more suitable for agricultural purposes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to understand that this is an amendment to a paragraph of the bill as to which a motion is pending to strike out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to strike out has not as yet been made.

Mr. KING. I indicated a few days ago I should move to strike out this paragraph. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will be rejected, and then I shall move to strike out the whole subdivision.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill, which is perfectly plain, provides:

> The Authority may dedicate lands for parks, playgrounds, and other recreational facilities.

I wanted it to apply to a project in my State; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, in my own time I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee the question that I started to ask a few moments ago. This is a slum-clearance bill; and before I can vote for the Senator's amendment I want him to tell me definitely in what national park in this country there is a slum area that needs to be cleared up.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no such slum area in a national park that I know of.

Mr. BURKE. Then I am against the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I now move to strike out subdivision (f) on page 54, in the following words:

> (f) The Authority may dedicate land for parks, playgrounds, and other creational facilities, for sewers, for the opening or widening of streets, for incidental improvements, or for any other public purpose, and may grant licenses and easements upon such terms as it deems reasonable.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to pages 52, 53, 54, and 55 of this bill, which provide for just the kind of things to which my amendment applied. If they are all stricken out, that will suit me entirely, and I hope they will all be stricken out; but certainly the provision of the bill known as section 13 ought to go out. It ought not to apply to part of the country without applying to all of the country. It ought to go out, and I think it will go out.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to strike from the amendment reported by the committee paragraph (f) on page 54.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There has been so much disorder in the Chamber that it is impossible to know what is being done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let us have order. I make the point of order that the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will state it.

Mr. McNARY. What was the decision of the Chair on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. McKELLAR. What was the amendment, Mr. President?

Mr. KING. To strike out subdivision (f) on page 54.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understood, a few moments ago the author of the bill stated that the entire section 13, under the heading of "General Powers of the Authority", was surplusage and ought not to be in the bill. Therefore, I move that the entire section 13 be stricken out.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator misunderstood me. I said section 10.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was I recognized by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. I send to the desk an amendment which I offer and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, at the proper place, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

No part of the fund herein provided shall be made available for any project unless and until the State, city, county, or other political subdivision in which such project is situated shall have contributed or agreed to contribute 5 percent of the sum granted or loaned hereunder and 5 percent of the rental subsidy herein provided.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Must the State, city, or county contribute that sum?

Mr. TYDINGS. Whatever it may be—the city or the county or the State.

Mr. President, I have offered this amendment in the best of faith, and I have made the requirement for the sponsor's contribution as low as it possibly can be made. Five percent of $1,000,000 is only $50,000.

Figure what will happen in any large city in America—a city of 800,000, 1,000,000, 2,000,000, or 5,000,000 persons. There are large areas of slums, we will assume, which it is desired to eliminate. Every man who owns property will be interested in the elimination of those slums as a personal, financial consideration. Therefore, in order that the sponsor, whether it be a city, a county, or a State, and the taxpayers therein, may be conscious——

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me finish my statement.

Mr. WAGNER. Perhaps we might save some time. The Senator's amendment provides for a 5-percent contribution?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is all.

Mr. WAGNER. I shall not object to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I assume that unless there are some other questions, the Senator's agreement will insure the inclusion of the amendment in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 61, line 11, after the word "architects" and the comma, it is proposed to insert "technical engineers, draftsmen", so as to read:

(2) Any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, or lease pursuant to this act shall contain a provision requiring that the wages prevailing in the locality, as determined or adopted (subsequent to a determination under applicable State or local law) by the Authority, shall be paid to all architects, technical engineers, draftsmen, technicians, laborers, and mechanics employed in the development or administration of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved; and the Authority may require certification as to compliance with the provisions of this paragraph prior to making any payment under such contract.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am sure there will be no objection on the part of any one to this amendment. The amendment simply clarifies what is obviously the intent of the paragraph.

Mr. WAGNER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a day or two ago the provision of the bill with respect to experiments was stricken out. Section 12 was eliminated. That necessitates a number of perfecting amendments in other parts of the bill.

For instance, on page 36, in line 14, after the word "Authority", I move to strike out the comma and "whether or not developed pursuant to section 12."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 36, line 14, after the word "Authority", it is proposed to strike out the comma and the remainder of the section down to the period in line 15, in the following words:

whether or not developed pursuant to section 12.

Mr. WAGNER. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. On page 55, line 21, after the comma, I move to insert the word "or"—just a perfecting amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 55, line 21, after the comma, it is proposed to insert the word "or", so as to read:

In making any loan pursuant to section 9, any annual contributions pursuant to section 10, or—

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. On the same page, page 55, beginning with the word "or" in line 22, I move to strike out through the comma in line 23.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk informs the Chair that that language has already been stricken out.

Mr. KING. Very well.

On page 59, I move to strike out lines 21 to 24, both inclusive, and lines 1 and 2 on page 60.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 59, it is proposed to strike out lines 21 to 24, inclusive, and lines 1 and 2 on page 60, in the following words:

(4) When a lease of a low-rent housing project is made pursuant to section 12, the Authority shall retain the right to terminate such lease in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in such lease) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of such housing project.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment it is proposed to insert, at the proper place, the following:

Appointment to positions made under the provisions of this act, the annual salary of which is $4,000 or more, shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be offered? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in enrolling the bill the clerks may have authority to renumber the sections and to reletter the paragraphs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. TYDINGS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Radcliffe
Andrews	Davis	Lee	Reynolds
Ashurst	Dieterich	Lewis	Schwartz
Austin	Donahey	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Ellender	Logan	Sheppard
Barkley	Frazier	Lonergan	Shipstead
Berry	George	Lundeen	Smith
Bilbo	Gerry	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Gillette	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Green	McKellar	Townsend
Bridges	Guffey	McNary	Truman
Brown, Mich.	Hale	Maloney	Tydings
Brown, N. H.	Harrison	Minton	Vandenberg
Bulkley	Hatch	Moore	Van Nuys
Bulow	Herring	Murray	Wagner

Byrd	Holt	Nye	Wheeler
Byrnes	Hughes	O'Mahoney	White
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	Overton
Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper
Clark	King	Pittman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the passage of the bill. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACK (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote for the bill.

Mr. KING (when Mr. COPELAND's name was called). The senior Senator from New York is unavoidably detained. I agreed to pair with him. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] is detained from the Senate on official business, that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained in an important committee meeting, and that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS] is detained because of illness in his family. I am advised that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

I again announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on official duty as members of the commission to attend the dedication of the battle monuments in France.

I am authorized to state that the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], were she present and voting, would vote "yea." I am also instructed by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] to state that I am also authorized by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], now absent, to announce that were he present and voting he would vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST. The junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BULKLEY. My colleague the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware, which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. AUSTIN. My colleague the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is absent attending to his duties as a member of the Battle Monuments Commission. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

The result was announced—yeas 64, nays 16, as follows:

So the bill (S. 1685) was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, in connection with the housing bill, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a statement furnished me by the Federal Housing Administration.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Federal Housing Administration was established 3 years ago for the declared purpose of encouraging improvement in housing standards and conditions and creating a sound system of home financing to replace the practices which had proven so disastrous in the depression period. The progress made in the pursuit of these objectives up to August 1 may be summarized as follows:

Gross business transacted including mortgages selected for appraisal, commitments to insure large scale rental projects, and modernization notes insured, totaled nearly $1,800,000,000.

Home mortgages accepted for insurance reached a total of 220,000, valued at $890,000,000. The homes securing these mortgages would provide for a city of nearly a million inhabitants.

More than 2,500 additional families are becoming their own landlords under this program each week.

Mortgages on large-scale projects providing rental housing for persons of moderate means amounted to $27,332,000.

Modernization and repair notes amounting to slightly over $560,000,000 were insured under the emergency provisions of title I which expired on April 1. By this means the Housing Administration has raised the living standards of millions of persons living in the more than 1,250,000 urban dwellings and farm properties improved, and has enabled more than 100,000 small business concerns to modernize their plants and equipment. In addition, it is estimated that the "better housing campaigns" sponsored by the Housing Administration in more than 8,000 communities has stimulated modernization and repair work amounting to several times the value of the insured notes officially recorded.

A distinctive feature of the Federal Housing Administration is that it lends no money and makes no grants of Federal funds. It simply insures loans made by banks, building and loan associations, insurance companies, and other private lending institutions to finance the construction of new homes, to refinance homes already built, and up to April 1, 1937, for the repair and modernization of old structures.

Moreover, the Housing Administration is now paying the major portion of its operating expenses. Eventually, it should be on an entirely self-sustaining basis and will operate as the National Housing Act originally contemplated, without cost to the Government. Income is now being received by the Housing Administration, principally through revenue derived from mortgage insurance premiums and appraisal fees, at the rate of more than $500,000 a month. This will increase substantially as the volume of mortgage insurance grows. Thus, during the present fiscal year $5,000,000 of income will be used to pay the expenses of the administration's 66 insuring offices, leaving a substantial amount to be turned into the mutual mortgage insurance fund to meet possible losses on foreclosed mortgages.

The mutual mortgage insurance fund now exceeds $19,000,000. Of this amount $10,000,000 was supplied by Congress as an original revolving fund. The remainder has been accumulated through the receipt of mortgage insurance premiums, appraisal fees, and interest on reinvested funds. Chargeable against the fund are debentures amounting to less than $100,000. The Federal Housing Administration has assets in the form of foreclosed properties turned over to the Administrator adequate to retire all but a small fraction of the debentures outstanding.

In this connection, the soundness of the Federal Housing Administration appraisal methods, now standardized throughout the country, is attested by the foreclosure record on properties financed under the insured mortgage system. Of the 219,000 homes on which commitments to insure mortgages have been made, only 31 have been conveyed to the Administrator after foreclosure.

When the Housing Administration began operations, residential construction in America had almost ceased. During 1934 only about 50,000 urban and suburban homes were built in the entire United States. Last year this number was increased over 500 percent. Data gathered by the Bureau of Labor Statistics on building permits, supported by F. H. A. operating figures, indicate a still further improvement in 1937.

Newly constructed homes represent approximately 56 percent of the total value of mortgages accepted for insurance by the F. H. A. for the past year. Approximately one-half of the estimated value of all mortgage loans eligible for insurance on newly constructed, single-family urban homes are being financed under the F. H. A. plan. The widespread distribution of the benefits of the F. H. A. system may be seen in the fact that approximately 40 percent of the mortgages insured on new homes are in small cities and towns where heretofore it has been exceedingly difficult and expensive to obtain mortgage money.

In carrying out the mandate "to encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions" and "to create a sound mortgage market", the Federal Housing Administration has found it necessary to discourage certain outmoded lending practices, such as the second mortgage, oppressive interest rates, costly commissions, and expensive renewal fees which prevailed prior to the real-estate collapse of the early thirties, as well as the old-fashioned lot-selling rackets and jerry building. In the place of those practices, the F. H. A. has devised a new system, based upon the principle of insurance to spread losses, conservative, standardized appraisals, long-term monthly amortization, reasonable interest rates and careful consideration of the home buyer's capacity to pay. Recognizing that the home surroundings may deteriorate more rapidly than the home structure itself, closest scrutiny is being given to subdivision planning and neighborhood standards.

Funds for home financing which had almost disappeared from the market when the Federal Housing Administration came into being are now generally available on fairer terms than ever before in the history of the country. The acquisition of a home has been made easier and safer for the family of moderate means. Over half of the families buying homes under the F. H. A. plan have annual incomes of $2,500 or less and 9 out of 10 of them are using less than one-fifth of their incomes to meet their monthly payments on their homes.

In measuring the progress of the F. H. A., consideration should be given to the increased revenue flowing into the National Treasury from taxes paid by corporations and individuals, formerly "in the red", deriving their income directly or indirectly from the revived construction industry and also to the lightening of the Government relief load as a consequence of providing employment for hundreds of thousands of workers in the construction and related industries benefited by the F. H. A.

COURT REFORM AND JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2260, to provide for appearance on behalf of and appeal by the United States in certain cases in which the constitutionality of acts of Congress is involved.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection to making the bill the unfinished business, provided we can go forward with the calendar today and tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have two or three times announced on the floor, and in private more frequently, that the program is to make the bill just referred to the unfinished business, and immediately to lay it aside and have a call of the calendar for action on unobjected-to bills. If that is the information the Senator desires, I am glad to give it to him.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that, but I was going one step further. Is it the understanding that we will not take up the Court bill until Monday?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no such understanding. We are to have a session tomorrow, and if we finish with the calendar, we will take up the Court bill.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2260) to provide for appearance on behalf of and appeal by the United States in certain cases in which the constitutionality of acts of Congress is involved, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED-TO BILLS ON CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with a call of the calendar for action on unobjected-to bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1436) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporting in the executive branch of the Government was announced as first in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 847) a bill to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 100) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies" approved July 2, 1890, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been incorporated as an amendment to a bill which has already been passed by the Senate, and it should be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1261) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4276) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia", and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2106) for the allowances of certain claims not heretofore paid, for indemnity for spoliations by the French, prior to July 31, 1801, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1760) to promote the safety of scheduled air transportation was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by aircraft in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PHILIPPINE CURRENCY RESERVES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 892) to repeal the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States", which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States", approved June 19, 1934, is hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a bill similar to this passed the Senate a year ago, during the latter days of the session, but time did not permit its consideration by the House.

The bill involves certain financial transactions growing out of the deposits of Philippine moneys in American banks. The Philippine government had on deposit in American banks at the time of the declaration of the gold policy some $56,000,000. In some way, through some misunderstanding, both of fact and of law, it was concluded by Members of Congress that the Philippine government was entitled to an increment upon this deposit, and a bill was passed authorizing the payment to the Philippine government of $24,000,000, being the amount by which the deposits of the Philippine government would have increased had they been in gold and had they belonged to the United States Government, rather than simply to have been bank deposits.

There were at that time in the banks of the United States deposits of the Federal Government and States and counties aggregating some $4,000,000,000. There were deposits of private citizens in the banks amounting to some $40,000,000,000, which were in the exact situation of the deposits of the Philippine government. But there was some misunderstanding of the situation, and the bill was passed authorizing the payment to the Philippine government of $24,000,000.

As a matter of fact, the Philippine government has drawn from the banks every single dollar that was on deposit. They did not lose a cent. Their money was like other moneys on deposit, and this bill is for the purpose of repealing that authorization which was passed under a mistaken understanding both as to facts and law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that a bill passed the Senate at the last session making similar provision, and I understood it had become law.

Mr. ADAMS. No; it did not pass the House. It was passed after a full discussion on the floor of the Senate, and after hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. What the Senator means is that if the bill shall pass it will repeal the previous action, and the increment will not be paid?

Mr. ADAMS. It is one of the few bills which save the United States money. It will save the United States $24,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2113) to provide benefits on account of disability or death due to service in the armed forces of the United States in the event of war, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2226) to regulate interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that with the approval of the authors of the bill it might be indefinitely postponed, since it was made a part of the wage and hour bill which has already passed the Senate.

Mr. KING. I suggest that it be passed over, but that it maintain its place on the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the bill go over, and remain on the calendar for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6215) to repeal provisions of the income tax requiring lists of compensation paid to officers and employees of corporations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BENEFITS UNDER SOIL CONSERVATION ACT

The bill (S. 2229) to permit Members of Congress to enter into agreements under agricultural programs was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if this bill is to pass I suggest an amendment to be placed at the end of line 9, reading as follows:

Provided such exemptions are made a public record.

The purpose of this bill is to permit Members of Congress to enjoy benefits under the Soil Conservation Act. I have no objection if they shall elect to do so, but I believe that if Members of Congress do so it should be a matter of public record, and it ought not to be difficult to get the information, as is otherwise the case. I offer the amendment as indicated.

Mr. KING. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let the amendment be pending with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

TROUP MILLER AND HARVEY D. HIGLEY

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the House amendment to a Senate bill, just passed by the House and sent to the Senate. The bill relates to the claim of two officers of the Army from whom was taken $5,257.50. The bill was passed by the Senate, and the House has made one change in the language of the bill by striking out the words "such sum representing money paid by such officers", and inserting in lieu thereof "in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for money paid."

I should like to have the action of the House laid before the Senate so that I may move concurrence in the House amendment.

There being no objection, the President pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1160) for the relief of Troup Miller and Harvey D. Higley, which was, on page 1, line 9, to strike out "such sum representing money paid by such officers" and to insert "in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for money paid."

Mr. McADOO. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL SAFETY STANDARDS COMMISSION

The bill (S. 18) to establish a National Safety Standards Commission to reduce the danger of accidents at highway grade crossings, and drawbridges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment offered as a substitute for section 2 (a) of the bill, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 6, it is proposed to strike out section 2 (a), contained in lines 7 to 18, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 2. (a) It shall be the duty of the Commission to make investigations, studies, and examinations of devices, appliances, systems, and methods now in use or hereafter proposed for the protection of the public and the promotion of safety on railroads, drawbridges, and highways in those cases where the duty or authority to make such investigations, studies, and examinations is not vested in any other Federal agency or department; to collect and consolidate information resulting from such investigations, studies, and examinations by other Federal agencies and departments; to coordinate the work of other Federal agencies and departments in promoting safety on railroads, drawbridges, and highways; to recommend safety standards for devices, appliances, systems, and methods used on railroads, drawbridges, and highways for the protection of the public and the promotion of safety in cases (1) where such safety standards established by other Federal agencies or departments are in conflict, and (2) where, because of the intersection of a drawbridge with a railroad or highway or the intersection of a railroad and a highway, two or more Federal agencies or departments exercise such jurisdiction within the area contingent to such intersection; and to make available to the States and their political subdivisions the results of its investigations, studies, and examinations; and to establish such safety standards in cases where other Federal agencies or departments are not authorized to establish such safety standards: Provided, That nothing in this section, with the exception of the authority of the Commission to recommend such safety standards in cases where other Federal safety standards are in conflict and in connection with intersections, shall be considered as a repeal or modification of the provisions of any other act but shall be construed as supplemental thereto.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, what would be the cost of participation? Section 6 provides:

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. LONERGAN. That paragraph is not necessary. The bill provides for a coordination of the work of the Public Roads Bureau, the War Department, and the Interstate Commerce Commission in the prevention of highway accidents.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am in complete sympathy with the purposes of the bill, but it provides for an unlimited authority, and anyone who is put in charge of it could easily use all the money he wanted. I think it is a worthy measure, but I do not like that provision.

Mr. LONERGAN. I move to strike out the last paragraph on page 6 of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, upon an examination of the report I find that the Department of Agriculture has recommended against the bill, that the Interstate Commerce Commission has reported as being adverse to its consideration, and in view of those two adverse reports, from the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Secretary of Agriculture, I ask that the bill go over until I may have an opportunity to study it more carefully.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2410) to amend the Judicial Code, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 144) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting child labor was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL RESERVOIRS UNDER FEDERAL RECLAMATION LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2512) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from any funds in the Treasury available for relief or work relief there is hereby authorized to be expended the sum of $500,000 by the Secretary of the Interior, under the Federal reclamation laws, in the construction of small storage reservoirs at such locations within the States subject to the Federal reclamation laws as the said Secretary may select, no reservoir to be constructed hereunder the estimated cost of which exceeds $50,000.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, as to House bill 2512, being Calendar 811, which was passed earlier in the day, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. O'MAHONEY, and Mr. NYE conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1507) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2482) to provide for the assignment of officers of the Navy for duty under the Department of Commerce and appointment to positions therein was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CONGRESSIONAL CONSENT TO MINIMUM-WAGE COMPACT

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 137) granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a House joint resolution of a similar nature and character is on the calendar, being Calendar No. 1082, being House Joint Resolution 321, and I ask unanimous consent that the House joint resolution be substituted for the Senate joint resolution and that the Senate consider the House joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation.

Mr. WALSH. I will say that the compact represents an agreement on the part of the States referred to, namely, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, to set up in their minimum-wage laws the same standards for the minimum-wage law in these States. Of course, any State in the Union has a right to pass whatever minimum-wage law it sees fit. This compact between the States is an agreement that they will adopt the same standards fixed by mutual agreements. In other words, the compacts are an agreement for the same type of minimum-wage laws in these States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 321) granting the consent of Congress to the minimum-wage compact ratified by the Legislatures of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the compact for establishing uniform standards for conditions of employment, particularly with regard to the minimum wage, in States ratifying the same, which was signed in Concord, N. H., on May 29, 1934, by representatives of the Governors of Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, and Pennsylvania, and which was ratified by the Legislature of Massachusetts on June 30, 1934, by the Legislature of New Hampshire on May 29, 1935, and by the Legislature of Rhode Island on May 1, 1936, is hereby approved and declared to be effective in said States in accordance with the terms thereof, and hereafter in such States as may at any time ratify the same; which compact is as follows:

COMPACT FOR ESTABLISHING UNIFORM STANDARDS FOR CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT, PARTICULARLY WITH REGARD TO THE MINIMUM WAGE, IN STATES RATIFYING THE SAME

TITLE I—POLICY AND INTENT

Whereas enforcement among the industrial States of the Union of reasonably uniform standards for labor in industry, determined in accordance with the general welfare, would not only benefit labor but would be of real advantage to employers, removing the pressure toward low wages, long hours of work, exploitation of minors and women, and similar action commonly admitted to be injurious to all concerned; and

Whereas the advantages of such uniform standards have already been indicated by the operation of the National Industrial Recovery Act and the codes of fair competition adopted thereunder; and

Whereas such operation points to the desirability of continued uniform legislation affecting labor standards, by Federal action or otherwise, and of joint action by the States to establish such uniform standards; and

Whereas the establishment of reasonably uniform standards in States concerned with the same general fields of industry and competitors in the same markets will afford the advantages of stability in labor legislation to all concerned, with disadvantage to none: Now, therefore

The States whose commissioners have signed this compact and which have, by their legislature, ratified the same, acting to promote the general welfare of the people, do hereby join in establishing the said compact to provide uniform minimum standards affecting labor and industry in the said States: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abrogating, repealing, modifying, or interfering with the operation of laws already in effect in any State party hereto which establish standards equivalent to or above those herein specified, nor to prevent or discourage the enactment of additional laws establishing similar or higher standards; nor shall anything herein contained repeal or affect any laws concerning conditions of employment that are not in conflict herewith or that deal with subjects not included herein: And provided further, That no part of any title of this compact nor of any legislation adopted in pursuance thereof, except as may be expressly specified in such title or in such legislation, shall be in effect in any State party hereto until this compact shall have been approved as provided in section 6 of title II, but whenever title I and II hereof and any other title included herein are so approved and ratified, such titles shall be in full force and effect as laws of the States so approving and ratifying the same.

TITLE II—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SECTION 1. Each State party to this compact shall require its administrative agency or agencies charged with the administration and enforcement of this compact and of State laws relating thereto, to make comprehensive and detailed reports concerning the operation and administration of said compact and laws. Such agency shall report at least once each year and shall send copies of such report to the interstate commission established under the following section, to the Governors of the several ratifying States, and to the appropriate administrative agencies in such States.

SEC. 2. Each State party hereto shall make provision for a continuing unpaid commission representing industry, labor, and the public, and appointed by the Governor of said State, to deal with the other ratifying States concerning questions arising under this compact and the operation of the same within the limits of their respective States. The chairman of such State commission shall be designated by the Governor and shall be the representative of his State on an interstate commission which shall be composed of the representatives so designated by the several States parties to this compact. The Governors of the signatory States shall request the President of the United States to appoint a representative of the Federal Government to the interstate commission. The expenses of the interstate commission shall be shared equally by the States ratifying this compact. The interstate commission shall annually make a report of its activities and shall furnish copies to the Governors of the ratifying States and to the permanent commissions of said States.

SEC. 3. Should any question arise on the part of one or more of the States ratifying this compact concerning a matter involved in said compact or in any State law adopted in pursuance thereof, then such question shall be brought before the said interstate commission for consideration. Said interstate commission shall make any necessary investigations, shall publish its findings and any recommendations, and shall furnish copies of such findings and recommendations to the State commissions in each State party to this compact.

SEC. 4. If any ratifying State should desire a modification of any provision or provisions of this compact, or a revision of the entire compact, or if for any reason it should become desirable to extend the scope of said compact, the aforesaid interstate commission shall, upon the application of one or more of the ratifying States, and after 30 days' notice to the Governors and State commissions of the other States, proceed to consider such application and the reasons advanced for the proposed modification or revision and shall make such recommendations to the ratifying States concerning the same as may seem fitting and proper. Whenever said modification, revision, or extension is ratified in the manner prescribed in section 6 of this title for the ratification of this original compact and the Congress of the United States has consented thereto, then such modification, revision, or extension shall be in full force and effect in the States ratifying the same.

SEC. 5. Each State party to this compact agrees that it will not withdraw therefrom until it has reported to the interstate commission the reasons for its desire to withdraw. The interstate commission shall, upon receipt of such report, investigate the situation and shall, within 6 months, submit its recommendations. If the State still desires to withdraw from the compact, it shall defer such action for 2 years from the date of the findings of the interstate commission.

SEC. 6. Upon ratification by the legislative act of the requisite number of States as specified in subsequent titles of this compact, and with the consent of the Congress of the United States, this compact shall be in full force and effect in the States ratifying the same. Each State so ratifying shall forthwith enact necessary and suitable legislation to establish and maintain the minimum standards set forth in the following title or titles and shall make provision for the continuing State commission required by section 2 of this title. The appropriate administrative agencies of each State shall thereafter enforce and supervise the operation of the laws relating to this compact and the laws enacted to make the provisions of said compact effective.

SEC. 7. Any State may at any time become a party to this compact by taking the action required by the preceding section of this title to ratify the same, subject to the consent of the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 8. If any part of this compact or the application thereof to any person or circumstance should be held to be contrary to the constitution of any ratifying State or of the United States, all other separable parts of said compact and the application of such parts to other persons or circumstances shall continue to be in full force and effect.

TITLE III—MINIMUM WAGE

SECTION 1. No employer shall pay a woman, or a minor under 21 years of age, an unfair oppressive wage.

SEC. 2. The State agency administering the minimum-wage law enacted in conformity with this compact shall have authority to investigate the wages of women and minors; to appoint wage boards, upon which employers, employees, and the public shall have equal representation, for the purpose of recommending minimum fair-wage rates for women and minors; and after a public hearing, to enter directory orders based on the determinations of the wage boards, together with such administrative rulings as are appropriate to make the determinations effective; and may have further authority, without the agency of a wage board, to enter such orders in the case of occupations with less than a specified number of employees.

SEC. 3. The State administrative agency and the wage boards appointed by such agency shall have authority to administer oaths and to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of records relative to the wages of women and minors.

SEC. 4. The State administrative agency shall have further authority to inspect to determine compliance with its orders; to publish the names of employers violating a directory order; and, after a directory order has been in effect for a specified period, to make such order mandatory after a public hearing thereon. Such mandatory order shall carry a penalty of fine, imprisonment, or both. Said agency shall have authority to reconvene wage boards or to form new wage boards for the purpose of modifying wage orders. It shall have authority at any time on its own motion to modify administrative regulations after a public hearing thereon.

SEC. 5. The State administrative agency shall have authority to issue special licenses to employees who, by reason of physical or mental condition are incapable of earning the minimum fair-wage rate established for the occupation in which they are employed. Said agency shall have authority to take assignment of wage claims at the request of women or minor employees paid less than the minimum wage to which they are entitled under a mandatory order, and to bring legal action necessary to collect such claims. Such employees shall be authorized, under the statute, to recover by civil action the full amount to which they are entitled under a mandatory fair-wage order.

SEC. 6. Employers subject to the minimum-wage law enacted in conformity herewith shall be required to keep specified records, including the names, addresses, occupations, hours, and wages of the women and minors in their employ; to permit the inspection and transcript of such records by the State administrative agency and its authorized representatives; and upon request, to furnish said agency with a sworn statement of the same. Employers shall further be required to post and maintain the notices regarding wage orders issued by the State administrative agency.

SEC. 7. Each minimum-wage law so enacted shall contain provisions for appeal to the courts on questions of law by persons aggrieved by the decisions of said agency. Said law shall also contain a provision to the effect that in no case shall wage orders or decrees entered under a previously existing law be nullified until the provisions of the law enacted in conformity herewith have become operative and until new wage orders covering the same occupations have been entered and made effective.

SEC. 8. Each minimum-wage law enacted in conformity herewith shall contain a saving clause to the effect that if any provisions of such law or its application be held invalid, the remainder of the law and its application elsewhere shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 9. Mandatory fair-wage legislation now in effect in any of the signatory States, and such legislation in course of passage in any of such States as is in conformity with the provisions of this compact, is hereby declared to meet the minimum standards required by this compact.

SEC. 10. This compact as applied to minimum wage shall, when ratified by two or more States in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of title II, be in full force and effect in the States so ratifying the same.

In witness whereof the commissioners of the States of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and of the Commonwealths of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania have signed this compact in a single original which shall be deposited in the archives of the Department of State of the United States of American at Washington, D. C., and of which a duly certified copy shall be forwarded to the Governor of each of the signatory States.

Done at Concord, N. H., this 29th day of May, A. D. 1934.

(Signed by members of commissions and by delegates of the States of Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island, and the Commonwealths of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 137 will be indefinitely postponed.

PUNISHMENT FOR IMPERSONATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2381) to amend the Criminal Code by providing punishment for impersonation of officers and employees of Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. HATCH. The letter from the Attorney General which accompanies the report is short and explains the purpose of the proposed legislation. It states that the existing law makes it a crime to impersonate any officer or employee of the United States with intent to defraud. This bill extends the existing law to employees of a Government-owned corporation.

That, in brief, is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 32 of the Criminal Code (act of Mar. 4, 1909, ch. 321, sec. 32; 35 Stat. 1095; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 76) be amended to read as follows:

"Whoever, with intent to defraud either the Untied States or any person, shall falsely assume or pretend to be an officer or employee acting under the authority of the United States, or any department, or any officer of the Government thereof, or under the authority of any corporation owned or controlled by the United States, and shall take upon himself to act as such, or shall in such pretended character demand or obtain from any person or from the United States, or any department, or any officer of the Government thereof, or any corporation owned or controlled by the United States, any money, paper, document, or other valuable thing, shall be fined not more than $3,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS TO WHICH UNITED STATES IS A PARTY

The bill (S. 2386) to give precedence to certain proceedings to which the United States is a party, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That if, in any civil or criminal proceeding to which the United States is a party, arising under the customs or internal-revenue laws, the district attorney files, at any time after joinder of issue, with the clerk of the district court in which such proceeding is pending a certificate that such proceeding involves a charge of fraud upon the revenues of the United States, thereupon such proceeding shall be given precedence over other cases on the civil or criminal docket of such court and shall be assigned for hearing and trial at the earliest practicable date, and be expedited in every way.

MARINE HOSPITAL IN FLORIDA

The bill (H. R. 4716) authorizing the construction and equipment of a marine hospital in the State of Florida, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire by gift, purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in the State of Florida, to be selected by the Federal Board of Hospitalization, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable building or buildings for a marine hospital, together with the necessary auxiliary structures, equipment, furniture, accessories, appurtenances, approaches, walkways, roads, parkways, ground improvements, wharfage, dockage, and trackage facilities, heating, ventilation, air conditioning, water, sewers and sanitary facilities, and the necessary preparation and improvements to the site.

SEC. 2. That the plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and the cost thereof, including the cost of the site and the improvement thereof, shall not exceed the sum of $1,500,000.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $1,500,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2601) to provide for refund of amounts collected as tax under the Bankhead Cotton Act, 1934; the Kerr Tobacco Act as amended; and the Potato Act of 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, there is a good deal involved in the bill, and consequently I will ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4689) to provide an additional sum for the payment of claims under the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain officers and enlisted men or former officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps for personal property lost, damaged, or destroyed as a result of the earthquake which occurred at Managua, Nicaragua, on March 31, 1931", approved January 21, 1936 (49 Stat. 2212), was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is requested.

Mr. McKELLAR. If not, let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MARKING OF WRECKED AND SUNKEN CRAFT

The bill (S. 2579) to provide more effectively for the marking of wrecked and sunken craft for the protection of navigation, to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is an identical House bill on the calendar, being House bill 7402. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill, and be considered at this time. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7402) to provide more effectively for the marking of wrecked and sunken craft for the protection of navigation, to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4676 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4676. Whenever the owner of any sunken vessel, boat, watercraft, raft, or other similar obstruction existing on any river, lake, harbor, sound, bay, or canal or other navigable waters of the United States has failed to mark, or in the judgment of the Commissioner of Lighthouses has failed suitably to mark, the same in accordance with the provisions of section 15 of the act of March 3, 1899 (ch. 425, 30 Stat. 1152), the Commissioner of Lighthouses is authorized to suitably mark the same for the protection of navigation. Until such time as abandonment of any such obstruction has been established in accordance with the provisions of section 19 of the act of March 3, 1899 (ch. 425, 30 Stat. 1154), the owner thereof shall pay to the Commissioner of Lighthouses the cost of such marking. As soon as abandonment of any such obstruction has been so established, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to keep the same so marked pending removal thereof in accordance with the provisions of section 19 of the act of March 3, 1899 (ch. 425, 30 Stat. 1154), but the Commissioner of Lighthouses may at the request of the Department of War continue the suitable marking of any such obstruction for and on behalf of that Department. The cost of continuing any such marking shall be borne by the Department of War. All moneys received by the Commissioner of Lighthouses from the owners of obstructions, in accordance with the provisions of this section, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. No provision of this section shall be construed so as to relieve the owner of any such obstruction from the duty and responsibility suitably to mark the same in accordance with the provisions of section 15 of the act of March 3, 1899 (ch. 425, 30 Stat. 1152)."

SEC. 2. The Lighthouse Service is authorized, whenever an aid to navigation or other property belonging to that Service is damaged or destroyed by a private person, and such private person or his agent shall pay to the satisfaction of the proper official of the Lighthouse Service for the cost of repair or replacement of such property, to accept and deposit such payments, through proper officers of the Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, in special deposit accounts in the Treasury, for payment therefrom to the person or persons repairing or replacing the damaged property and refundment of amounts collected in excess of the cost of the repairs or replacements concerned.

SEC. 3. The Commissioner of Lighthouses, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is authorized in his discretion hereafter to establish and maintain aids to navigation to mark rivers, waterways, or channels, connected by navigable waters with the sea or the Great Lakes, which have been improved for navigation by the United States under proper authority, and appropriations made for the support of the Lighthouse Service are made available for the expenses of establishing and maintaining such aids to navigation.

SEC. 4. Section 4 of the act of Congress approved June 17, 1910 (ch. 301, 36 Stat. 537; U. S. C., title 33, secs. 711, 721), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. There shall be in the Department of Commerce a Bureau of Lighthouses and a Commissioner of Lighthouses, who shall be the head of said Bureau, to be appointed by the President. There shall also be in the Bureau a Deputy Commissioner, to be appointed by the President, and a Chief Clerk, who shall perform the duties of Chief Clerk and such other duties as may be assigned to him by the Secretary of Commerce or by the Commissioner. There shall also be in the Bureau such inspectors, clerical assistants, and other employees as may from time to time be authorized by Congress. The Commissioner of Lighthouses shall make an annual report to the Secretary of Commerce, who shall transmit the same to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof. The Commissioner of Lighthouses, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is authorized to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine all claims for damages, where the amount of the claim does not exceed the sum of $500, occasioned by collisions, for which collisions vessels of the Lighthouse Service shall be found to be responsible, and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due to the claimants to Congress at each session thereof through the Treasury Department for payment as legal claims out of appropriations that may be made by Congress therefor."

SEC. 5. That so much of section 20 of the act approved May 28, 1935 (Public, No. 81, 74th Cong.), entitled "an act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of certain lighthouse reservations, and for other purposes", as reads "to convey to the town of Southold, State of New York" is hereby amended to read "to convey to the Southold Park District in the town of Southold, State of New York."

SEC. 6. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to convey to the State of Florida for public roadway purposes an additional portion of the Crooked River Range Lighthouse Reservation, Fla., 34 feet in width and approximately 500 feet in length adjoining the strip of land conveyed pursuant to section 4 of the act approved May 28, 1935 (Public, No. 81, 74th Cong.), to provide for a roadway 100 feet in width across the reservation. The deed of conveyance shall describe by metes and bounds the portion of the reservation transferred and the conditions imposed by section 36 of the act of May 28, 1935 (Public, No. 81, 74th Cong.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2579 will be indefinitely postponed.

FISHERIES OF ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 5860) making further provision for the fisheries of Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think we ought to have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An explanation is requested.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WHITE subsequently said: Mr. President, my attention was diverted when Calendar No. 887, being House bill 5860, was called. I understood the Senator from Tennessee to ask that it go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked for an explanation, and there seemed to be no one to give it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is a bill that is of particular interest to the Pacific coast, and I take it that some Senator from that region could make a better explanation than could I, and yet I understand its terms and effect.

Under the act of 1924 it is provided that in Alaskan waters there may be granted no exclusive or several right of fisheries; that if any area was opened up to fishing at all, it should be opened up to all who might desire to fish therein.

This proposed legislation relates only to Bristol Bay, which is the great salmon area of Alaska. The bill is designed to protect the natives and residents of that locality against fishing operations by those who come from outside. It provides, in substance, that a certain type of fishing shall be permitted in that area only by the persons who have resided there for a period of 5 years.

I think the bill is aimed both at Japanese fishermen who have been coming into that area and also, I think, at the large fishing operations which originate down the coast, but which move up into that area and now threaten the commercial fisheries of the natives and the inhabitants of that section.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the bill permit the natives to fish in the area mentioned?

Mr. WHITE. It will permit the residents of that area to fish there and would exclude others.

Mr. McKELLAR. All others?

Mr. WHITE. The bill would work a change in a principle of law which was written in the statute in 1924, but I understand it is satisfactory to the Department and to the people who are residents there. I know of no objection coming from any source.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CHAVEZ subsequently said: Mr. President, in order to clear the record I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 887, being House bill 5860, making further provision for the fisheries of Alaska. Under a misapprehension as to the calendar number, I objected when that bill was called, thinking that the clerk had called Calendar No. 889. I have no objection to Calendar 887, being House bill 5860.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5860) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved June 6, 1924, entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes" (43 Stat. 464), as amended, is further amended by inserting in said section at the end of the first proviso thereof another proviso to read as follows: "Provided further, That in the area embracing Bristol Bay and the arms and tributaries thereof, no person shall at any time fish for or take salmon with a stake net or set net, for commercial purposes, unless such person shall have theretofore continuously resided for the period of at least 5 years within a radius of 30 miles of the place where such net is staked or set."

WILDLIFE RESTORATION PROJECTS

The bill (S. 2670) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife restoration projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over and be called at the end of the calendar, inasmuch as the Senator who is now presiding over the body is interested in the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BOARD AT WOLF POINT, MONT.

The bill (S. 2372) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., for completing the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 45, town of Wolf Point, county of Roosevelt, Mont., for completing the construction, extension, equipment, and improvement of the public high-school building at Wolf Point, Mont.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so authorized shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That plans and specifications for construction, extension, or improvement of structures shall be furnished by local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials. Payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service: Provided further, That any amount expended on any project hereunder shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils enrolled in public or high schools of the district involved, or by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such schools without cost to the United States; and in computing the amount of recoupment for each project interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 140) authorizing an investigation of the delivery or nondelivery of mail to establishments where industrial strife is in progress, which has been reported adversely from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT FOR VIOLATION OF NARCOTIC LAWS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6283) to increase the punishment of second, third, and subsequent offenders against the narcotic laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find no report on that bill. I should like to have an explanation of the measure.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the bill was referred by the Judiciary Committee to a subcommittee of which I was chairman. House bill 6283 was substituted for the Senate bill. The purpose of the bill is to provide for more severe sentences in cases of conviction for selling narcotics for second and other offenses. For the second offense the penalty is increased to $5,000 or 10 years' imprisonment, or both, and for the third and subsequent offenses to $10,000 or 20 years' imprisonment, or both. it is a bill for which the Attorney General has asked because of the difficulty of dealing with offenders against the narcotic laws. Under the penalties which are now imposed offenders violate the law time and time again and repeatedly repeat the offense. This bill provides for the second, third, and subsequent offenses more severe penalties than are now provided.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the passage of the bill recommended by the Department of Justice?

Mr. HUGHES. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a person who, after having been convicted of selling, importing, or exporting, or conspiring to sell, import, or export, opium, coca leaves, cocaine, or any salt, derivative, or preparation of opium, coca leaves, or cocaine, again sells, imports, or exports, or conspires to sell, import, or export, any of the said narcotic drugs, in violation of the laws of the United States, shall, upon conviction of such second offense, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned in a Federal penitentiary for not more than 10 years, or both, in the discretion of the court, whenever the fact of such previous conviction is established in the manner prescribed in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 2. A person who, after having been two times convicted of selling, importing, or exporting, or conspiring to sell, import, or export, opium, coca leaves, cocaine, or any salt, derivative, or preparation of opium, coca leaves, or cocaine, again sells, imports, or exports, or conspires to sell, import, or export, any of the said narcotic drugs, in violation of the laws of the United States, shall, upon conviction of such third offense, or any offense subsequent thereto, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned in a Federal penitentiary for not more than 20 years, or both, in the discretion of the court, whenever the fact of such previous convictions is established in the manner prescribed in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. Whenever it shall appear, after conviction and before or after sentence, that a person convicted of unlawfully selling, importing, or exporting, or conspiring unlawfully to sell, import, or export, any of the narcotic drugs enumerated in this act has previously been convicted of unlawfully selling, importing, or exporting, or conspiring unlawfully to sell, import, or export, any of said narcotic drugs, in violation of the laws of the United States, it shall be the duty of the United States district attorney for the district in which such subsequent conviction was had to file an information alleging that the defendant has previously been so convicted, and further alleging the number of such previous convictions. The court in which the defendant was convicted shall cause the said defendant, whether confined in prison or otherwise, to appear before it and shall apprise him of the allegations of the information and of his right to a trial by jury as to the truth thereof. The court shall inquire of the defendant whether he is the person who has previously been convicted. If the defendant states he is not such person, or if he refuses to answer or remains silent, a plea of not guilty shall be entered by the court, and a jury shall be empaneled to determine whether the defendant is the person alleged in the information to have previously been convicted, and the number of such previous convictions. If after a trial on the sole issue of the truth of such allegations the jury determines that the defendant is in fact the person previously convicted as charged in the information, or if he acknowledges in open court, after being duly cautioned as to his rights, that he is such person, he shall be punished as prescribed in sections 1 or 2 of this act, as the case may be, and the previous sentence of the court, if any, shall be vacated and there shall be deducted from the new sentence the amount of time actually served under the sentence so vacated.

LEO L. HARRISON

The bill (S. 2768) authorizing the Comptroller General to adjust and settle the claim of Leo L. Harrison was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Leo L. Harrison for blood furnished February 19, 1937, for transfusion to George L. Oertel, a patient in a Government hospital, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim an amount not in excess of $25, under the appropriation of the Veterans' Administration available for payment for blood transfusion: Provided, That no part of the amount in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

IRVIN U. JOHNSON

The bill (S. 2769) authorizing the Comptroller General to adjust and settle the claim of Irvin H. Johnson was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Irvin H. Johnson for blood furnished January 26, 1937, for transfusion to Nellie L. Ruble, a patient in a Government hospital, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claim an amount not in excess of $25, under the appropriation of the Veterans' Administration available for payment for blood transfusion: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

AL COCHRAN AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2427) for the relief of the estates of Al Cochran, Willis Cochran, and Russell Cochran, and for the relief of Shirley Cochran and Matilda Cochran, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$15,095" and insert "$5,145.55"; on line 9, after the words "the sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$3,505"; on page 2, line 1, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$4,514.50"; in line 3, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,338.10" and insert "$2,338.10"; in line 4, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$16,557" and insert "$5,057.93"; in line 14, after the words "excess of", to strike out "10" and insert "5"; and in line 20, after the words "excess of", to strike out "10" and insert "5", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Russell E. Smith, as administrator of the estate of Al Cochran, deceased, the sum of $5,145.55; to Russell E. Smith, as administrator of the estate of Willis Cochran, deceased, the sum of $3,505; to Russell E. Smith, as administrator of the estate of Russell Cochran, deceased, the sum of $4,514.50; to Russell E. Smith, as guardian of the estate of Shirley Cochran, a minor, the sum of $2,338.10; and to Matilda Cochran the sum of $5,057.93; in full satisfaction of the claims of such estates and said Matilda Cochran against the United States on account of the deaths of Al Cochran, Willis Cochran, and Russell Cochran, and personal injuries to Shirley Cochran and Matilda Cochran resulting from an accident on August 14, 1936, 4 miles west of Alberton, Mont., on United States Highway No. 10, caused by a Civilian Conservation Corps ambulance striking the automobile in which the persons killed and injured were then riding: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 5 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 5 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2707) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING and Mr. McKELLAR asked that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM A. PATTERSON AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1700) for the relief of William A. Patterson, Albert E. Rust, Louis Pfeiffer, and John L. Nesbitt and Cora B. Geller, as executors under the will of James T. Bentley, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, this bill provides for repayment to the claimant of the sum of $46,670 which is now in a special fund in the Treasury and which was paid during the war as the result of a regulation of the Wool Section of the War Industries Board. The particular check which was given to the Wool Section of the War Industries Board contained on the back of it, as part of the endorsement by which it was accepted, the specific statement that it was paid with the understanding that the money would be returned if the regulation was declared invalid. The regulation was later declared invalid by the circuit court of appeals for the second circuit, in which the claimant was domiciled.

The objection of the Department to the bill is not so much the repayment of the money, but the Department contends that the passage of the bill would create a precedent. The committee did not feel that it would create a precedent.

There is a total in the special fund of only $51,000, some four or five thousand dollars more than the amount of this particular check. That money was put in by three or four other persons. So, since it was understood that the money was to be returned if the regulation was declared invalid by the Court, and the Court has declared it invalid, and since the Government accepted the check under the condition stated in the endorsement, it was the feeling of the committee that the money should be repaid.

It will not come out of the general fund of the Treasury. The money has been kept there all these years in a special fund, the Government recognizing that it was not entitled to this money.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the report of the Secretary of Agriculture states:

The total amount of $760,702.91 was collected from 1,014 wool dealers. The amounts involved range from a few dollars to $80,000, the latter amount having been paid by one dealer in 1920 without court action, similar to the payment of $46,670.34 made by Patterson & Co.

It is stated that the matter for Congress to consider is as to whether all these sums should be paid back and there is indicated opposition on the part of the Department to paying one without paying all.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, as I said before, the position of the Department is to the effect that it may create a precedent. In view of the fact that this check was accepted under special circumstances on the endorsement specifically providing that it would be repaid, and since the Government put it into a special fund which contains a total of only four or five thousand dollars more than the amount of the check, the committee could not see how it would create a precedent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the remainder of the money held in the same way?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Only some $4,000 or $5,000. I think there is $51,000 in the fund.

Mr. McKELLAR. The remainder of $760,000 is in the Treasury and would not be affected by the passage of the bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is the belief of the committee that it would not be affected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 4, after the word "sum" to insert "which is to be in full and final settlement", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to repay, out of the special fund in the Treasury subject to check of the disbursing officer of the Department of Agriculture in which a payment of $46,670.34 made by Patterson & Co. on August 31, 1920, was deposited, said sum of $46,670.34 to William A. Patterson, Albert E. Rust, and Louis Pfeiffer, surviving members of the firm of Patterson & Co., a copartnership doing business in Boston, Mass., on August 31, 1920; and John L. Nesbitt and Cora B. Geller as executors under the will of James T. Bentley, a deceased member of said firm. Said sum, which is to be in full and final settlement, represents a payment made by Patterson & Co. in compliance with regulations promulgated on or about May 21, 1918, by the Wool Section of the War Industries Board, which regulations have since been held to be invalid by the Circuit Courts of Appeals for the First and Fourth Circuits, and was made under protest and upon condition that it be repaid if it should be determined by the courts that said regulations were of no legally binding effect: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. C. WILLIAMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1043) for the relief of A. C. Williams, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,962.63"; in line 8, after the word "injuries", to insert "and property damage"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. C. Williams, of Sentinal, Okla., the sum of $2,962.63 in full settlement of any and all claims against the Government on account of personal injuries and property damage sustained by him in an automobile collision with a truck owned by the United States Government and driven by Charles Cordell, agent and employee of the Government, in the service of the Works Progress Administration, near Socorro, N. Mex., on July 31, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPAIR AND CONSTRUCTION OF NAVAL SHORE ESTABLISHMENTS

The bill (S. 2338) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we have already passed during this session a very large appropriation bill for the Navy in which a very generous amount was carried for the acquisition of naval bases and lands in connection with the development of naval bases.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Utah is entitled to consideration, for he is always deeply concerned about Government expenses. Annually it becomes necessary for our Government to replace obsolete naval vessels and remodel, repair, and expand shore establishments of the Navy. The bill would authorize the construction and repair of certain shore establishments of the Navy. The original request from the Navy Department was for an authorized appropriation of about $20,000,000. The committee reduced it to $6,000,000. The exact amount to be authorized for appropriation is $6,099,057.

Nearly all of the projects referred to in the bill are on the west coast. Some of them are for the construction of radio stations, one for the construction of suitable housing facilities at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and at the submarine base at New London, where the present barracks buildings for the enlisted personnel are of temporary wooden wartime construction, totally inadequate to meet the demands upon them; are cold and draughty, without suitable accommodations for sleeping, bathing, recreation, or study; are in bad state of repair and constitute a menace to the health and life of the personnel occupying them. This group of buildings, nos. 14A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and no. 49, constitute a grave fire hazard, which is combated by constant and ever-watchful supervision and patrol. It is believed that should a fire get started in this group it could not readily be brought under control and might be accompanied by loss of life. The average number of enlisted men attached to the base, attending the Submarine School, Submarine Division 4, and transients from submarines having overhaul work done at the base, is approximately 550. The limited accommodations do not permit of segregating these men entirely by units and exercising the proper unit control over them. Because of the limited space and the uncomfortable living accommodations, many enlisted men are now, by preference, living in shops and other places where they are employed. It is expected that these buildings will become wholly unlivable within the next few years. The bad effect on health and morale of enlisted men living in the present barracks cannot be too strongly emphasized. It is believed that the existing barracks buildings are in such a bad state of repair that it is no longer economical to keep them in repair and that before long, repairs required will be tantamount to reconstruction.

The estimated cost of the building, with all services and accessories, is $675,000. As nearly as can be estimated in a period of rapidly changing prices, this figure is good as of April 1937.

Other projects approved by the committee are quarters for officers at the Fleet Air Base at Canal Zone, naval radio-station improvements at Annapolis, Md., Mare Island, Calif., and Hawaii, and improvements in marine barracks at Parris Island, S. C.

Mr. KING. The point I am making is that we passed a bill recently carrying over $500,000,000 for the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. It carried the usual authorizations.

Mr. KING. The same information must have been possessed then by the naval officials that was possessed by them when this bill was drafted and considered. Why were not these appropriations carried in the former bill?

Mr. WALSH. There was no authorization. The Navy cannot rebuild or repair buildings without authorization. Each year they have to obtain these authorizations. They cannot replace anything without an authorization. This is simply an authorization bill, and the committee decided that these matters requested were so essential and so necessary that the request ought to be granted.

I want particularly to stress the situation in other naval bases, particularly the one at New London, Conn., which I saw with my own eyes, where the young men who are working on our submarines are housed in quarters which are unsafe and unfit for habitation. We have just passed a slum-clearance bill. Both of the Senators from Connecticut are fully aware that the conditions in New London are as bad as many so-called city slums.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. It is also true that valuable machinery is being stored in New London in a building which constitutes an extreme fire hazard.

Mr. WALSH. In New London I saw a valuable marine machine that cost $90,000 in a building which cost, probably, less than $5,000, and which could easily be burned and destroyed by fire. Almost all the buildings at this naval station are real fire hazards.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I dislike very much to object to any bill sponsored by the Senator from Massachusetts, but I think an appropriation of $50,000,000 is of such importance that it ought not to be considered and passed by unanimous consent on a call of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills.

More than that, we have had the experience in the last 3 or 4 years of having the Navy come back year after year always with requests for larger appropriations. They have been given unprecedented appropriations. They are like Oliver Twist, coming back and saying "More, more." So far as I am concerned, I think the matter should be considered more leisurely than can be done today, and accordingly I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. WALSH. I think the request of the Senator is in every way reasonable and I am glad to yield to it. I have no desire to press the matter at this time except I thought the amount involved so small that there would not be any objection.

Mr. CLARK. The amount is small only in comparison with what the Department asked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ARTHUR W. BASS, UNITED STATES NAVY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2598) to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Arthur W. Bass, a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after date of enactment of this act Arthur W. Bass, lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired, shall have the rank of a lieutenant on the retired list of the United States Navy: Provided, That the said Arthur W. Bass shall not receive any increase in retired pay, allowances, or other benefits as a result of the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is a bill recommended by the Navy Department and introduced at the request of the Navy Department simply to do justice to an officer of the Navy who because of illness was not given the promotion to which he was entitled. I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MUNICIPAL BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM

The bill (H. R. 5969) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senators who objected to withhold their objection for a moment in order that I may make a statement?

This is a bill in which the late Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, was very much interested. The bill was drawn after the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional the so-called Municipal Bankruptcy Act, which was previously passed. The bill was very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee and framed along the lines outlined in the decision of the Supreme Court. It provides six divisions which are included under the bill—drainage, levee districts, and so forth; local improvement districts, involving sewers, paving, and other things of that kind; local improvement districts involving roads and highways; public-school districts, cities, and towns. Unless there is serious objection to it, in view of the care to which it has been drawn, I hope it may be considered at this time and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, supplementing what the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has said, let me say that the bill passed the House and came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It was the subject of close and careful examination by that committee. Division of opinion took place as to some parts of the bill, whereupon a subcommittee was named, of which I believe the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] was chairman, and the other members of which were the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. After a careful examination the subcommittee reported favorably to the main committee, and the main committee has reported the bill favorably to the Senate.

I hope Senators may find it within the scope of their duty to withhold any objection, because the bill is designed to cure, or to meet rather, the objections of the Supreme Court of the United States wherein the Court declared certain features of the previous bankruptcy law to be invalid.

No one will claim this is a perfect bill. Indeed I believe the able chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] is not in accord with some provisions of the bill, but the bill is the result of a vast amount of study and faithful work.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator think this is an extremely important bill to be passed under the circumstances, on a call of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills? I have been told by the representatives of municipalities in my own State and also of municipalities in other States that both the original bankruptcy bill and the one to which reference is now being made involve the credit of every solvent municipality in the United States. The bill could not be carefully considered at this time under the circumstances. I have no doubt the subcommittee and the full Committee on the Judiciary considered it carefully, but it seems to me, being of such vast importance and involving such vast ramifications, it is entitled to a more careful consideration by the Senate than can be given to it at this time.

Mr. ASHURST. If it were a question of first instance and the prior bill and all the features surrounding it had never been the subject of examination, I would say the able Senator from Missouri was correct in his conclusions.

I do not know whether I ought to say this or not, but certainly it is true that the departed former Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]—may the sod rest lightly on his breast—seemed to take great interest in this measure.

Mr. KING. I think the bill ought to be passed over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in that connection may I suggest that the late Senator Robinson was very deeply interested because of the drainage and other districts in his State which would be affected.

Mr. ASHURST. I am sure that is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. The bill involves a broad general policy.

Mr. ASHURST. The late Senator Robinson did not have any other than a perfectly proper interest in the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, has objection been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall be glad to join in moving at some proper time that the bill be taken up for consideration. I objected to some of the provisions in the committee, but I have no doubt we can arrange to consider it hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I give notice that at the earliest possible time I shall move to take up this bill for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to press the matter now, during the call of the calendar. I think we may look forward within a few days to an opportunity to consider this bill on its merits.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to join the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936

The bill (S. 2455) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858; 49 Stat. 1985), was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, that bill goes over under a previous order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, was Senate bill 2455 passed over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made to its consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] brought it up last evening, and it went over until his return on Monday.

Mr. WHITE. Did he bring up this particular bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was it not this bill?

Mr. WHITE. I do not think it was this bill.

Mr. McNARY. The bill which the Senator from New York brought up yesterday evening was the flood-control bill.

Mr. WHITE. The flood-control bill and the river and harbor bill. This is a bill in which I know the Senator from New York is very much interested. It is designed to cure the current defects in the Merchant Marine Act of 1936. I can make a very brief explanation of the bill if the Senator desires it.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, by section 202 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 there were transferred to the new Maritime Commission all the physical properties which were in the possession and control of the old United States Shipping Board and the Merchant Fleet Corporation, by whatever names they went. A question has been raised by the Comptroller General as to the right of the new Commission to lease some of the docks and piers and terminal facilities. The first part of the bill is designed to clear up that doubt, and to make certain that the original purpose of the Congress in passing the 1936 act shall be carried out.

The next major point in the bill is the right of the Commission to have in its funds the rentals and other income derived from these leases. Senators will remember that by the 1920 act there was set up a construction loan fund. That was carried on through the 1934 act and through the 1928 act and all other legislation of the Congress. In the 1936 act, all of these physical properties, including the entire construction loan fund, whatever was in it, and all amounts accruing to it from any source, were turned over to the Maritime Commission. Again, the Comptroller General has raised the question whether the Commission may carry in this fund the rentals and income from these properties which are under lease. The Comptroller General held that those receipts must be turned into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

This bill is designed to make certain that the purpose of the Congress in the 1936 act shall be fully carried out, and that these funds shall be available for the Maritime Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when the bill first came up I thought it was House bill 7646, Calendar No. 940, providing for flood control. That was the bill which was passed over last night before the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] left.

Mr. WHITE. I know of no objection on the part of anyone to this bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is a question of changing the law under which certain receipts are covered into the Treasury, I am not so sure but that the law ought to remain that way.

Mr. WHITE. I think I may say that there is in the record a very definite statement from the Director of the Budget that this bill does not conflict with the budgetary plans; and I am sure every one who has expressed himself concerning this measure has spoken approvingly of it, because it is simply designed to carry out the plain purpose of the Congress in the 1936 act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in section 2, page 2, line 23, after the words "shall be" to strike out "controlled and employed" and insert "available for expenditure"; on page 3, line 1, after the word "provisions", to strike out "of titles IV, V, VI, and VII"; and in line 4, after the words "authority of", to strike out "said titles" and insert "this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 202 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, 1986), is hereby amended by adding a sentence at the end thereof to read as follows: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commission may, in accordance with good business methods and on such terms and conditions as it determines to effectuate the policy of this act, operate or lease any lands, docks, wharves, piers, or real property under its control, and all money heretofore or hereafter received from such operation or lease shall be available for expenditure by the Commission as provided in this act."

SEC. 2. That section 206 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, 1987), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 206. All sums of money now in the construction loan fund created by section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, together with the proceeds of all debts, accounts, choses in action, and the proceeds of all notes, mortgages, and other evidences of indebtedness, hereby transferred to the Commission, and all of the proceeds of sales of ships and surplus property heretofore or hereafter made, including proceeds of notes or other evidences of debt taken therefor and the interest thereon, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, all money representing amounts of unclaimed wages, salvage awards and miscellaneous unclaimed items carried as liabilities on the books of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation and all money heretofore or hereafter received from the operation or leasing of lands, docks, wharves, piers, or real property shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and there maintained as a revolving fund, herein designated as the construction fund, and shall be available for expenditure by the Commission in carrying out the provisions of this act. All moneys received by the Commission under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in its construction fund, and all disbursements made by the Commission under authority of this act shall be paid out of said fund, and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, all disbursements applicable to the money referred to in this section may be made by the Commission out of said fund. Further appropriations by Congress to replenish said fund are hereby authorized."

SEC. 3. That section 209 (b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (act of June 29, 1936, ch. 858, 49 Stat. 1985, 1988), is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, without deduction, allocation, or segregation in any manner for amounts of unclaimed wages, salvage awards, and miscellaneous unclaimed items carried as liabilities on the books of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation."

SEC. 4. The sections of this act shall be deemed operative as of the effective date of the sections of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, amended thereby.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors, for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2575) to increase the efficiency of the Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May we have an explanation of that bill, Mr. President?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MISSOURI RIVER DIKE NEAR PIERRE, S. DAK.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6693) to legalize a dike in the Missouri River 6.9 miles downstream from the South Dakota State highway bridge at Pierre, S. Dak., which was read.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? I do not know anything about the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the State Highway Commission of South Dakota obtained permission from the War Department to build a dike to protect the banks of the Missouri River from damage due to the construction of a highway bridge at Pierre, S. Dak. They actually constructed the dike a mile below the point where they were authorized to locate it. The bill corrects that situation and legalizes the dike where it now stands, in order that the War Department may continue to have jurisdiction of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESERVOIR SYSTEM, PITTSBURGH AND JOHNSTOWN, PA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2478) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, as amended by act of Congress approved April 27, 1937, is hereby further amended to provide that, if, in the execution of the project for a reservoir system for the protection of Pittsburgh, it is found that geological and engineering conditions make it impracticable to construct a reservoir to provide protection for the city of Johnstown, Pa., flood protection shall be provided for said city by channel enlargement or other works: Provided, That the total estimated construction cost of the entire project shall not be increased.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, legislation previously enacted provided for the construction of certain reservoir dams near the city of Johnstown. In drilling test holes, it was found that reservoir dams of the size contemplated could not be built there.

The city of Johnstown and Cambria County, Pa., have appropriated $2,000,000 to help build the wall and dredge the river through Johnstown; and we desire the permission of the Government to build smaller dams and help on that matter, all the money to be expended under the direction of the Army Engineers.

Mr. KING. The bill does not call for an additional appropriation?

Mr. GUFFEY. No additional appropriation; the same appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEQUESTS OF JAMES REUEL SMITH

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 179) to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of certain bequests of James Reuel Smith, late of the city of Yonkers, State of New York, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This joint resolution is similar to Calendar No. 1037, House Joint Resolution 446, which, without objection, will be substituted for it and be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 446) to authorize the acceptance on behalf of the United States of certain bequests of James Reuel Smith, late of the city of Yonkers, State of New York, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 179 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 988) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce a Foreign Commerce Service of the United States, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1927, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] asked that that bill be allowed to go over, due to his absence. Therefore I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SUSPENSION OR REVOCATION OF LICENSES OF MERCHANT MARINE OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2433) to amend section 4450 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of May 27, 1936 (49 U. S. Stat. 1380, 1383; title 46, U. S. C., sec. 239), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4450 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of May 27, 1936 (49 U. S. Stat. 1380, 1383; 46 U. S. C., sec. 239), be, and it is hereby, amended by inserting in the third sentence of paragraph (g) of said section the words "suspended or", after the word "is" and before the word "revoked", so that the said paragraph (g) of said section, when amended, shall read as follows:

"(g) In any investigation of acts of incompetency or misconduct or of any act in violation of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer or any holder of a certificate of service, the person whose conduct is under investigation shall be given reasonable notice of the time, place, and subject of such investigation and an opportunity to be heard in his own defense. The whole record of the testimony received by the board conducting such investigation and the findings and recommendations of such board shall be forwarded to the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, and if that officer shall find that such licensed officer or holder of certificate of service is incompetent or has been guilty of misbehavior, negligence, or unskillfullness, or has endangered life, or has willfully violated any of the provisions of this title or any of the regulations issued thereunder, he shall, in a written order reciting said findings, suspend or revoke the license or certificate of service of such officer or holder of such certificate. The person whose license or certificate of service is suspended or revoked may within 30 days appeal from the order of the said Director to the Secretary of Commerce. On such appeal the appellant shall be allowed to be represented by counsel. The Secretary of Commerce may alter or modify any finding of the board which conducted the investigation or of the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, but the decision of the Secretary of Commerce shall be based solely on the testimony received by the said board and shall recite the findings of fact on which it is based."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, under existing law there is authority either to revoke or to suspend the license of an officer of the merchant marine who has been guilty of any offense or of any inefficiency. The law provides that he may have an appeal to the Secretary of Commerce from the action of a board which finds him guilty of an act which warrants revocation. The law does not give him an appeal in case of a suspension. The pending bill is designed to give him the same right of appeal to the Secretary from an order of suspension that he now enjoys from an order of revocation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2578) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to continue the existing system of classification and pay of positions of lighthouse keepers was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the present law expire and call for an additional statute to protect the rights of employees?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if the inquiry is addressed to me, I must admit that I am not familiar with this particular bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2638) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2729) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer the two unused lighthouse sites in Kahului Townsite, island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, in exchange for two plots of land located in the same town site and now occupied for lighthouse purposes under permission from the respective owners, the Kahului Railroad Co., and the Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Co., Ltd., was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is the same as Calendar No. 1030, House bill 7714, which, without objection, will be substituted for it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let the bills go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be passed over.

GUANICA LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, P. R.

The bill (S. 2786) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to exchange with the people of Puerto Rico the Guanica Lighthouse Reservation for two adjacent plots of insular forest land under the jurisdiction of the commissioner, department of agriculture and commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is the same as Calendar No. 957, House bill 7823, which, without objection, will be substituted for it.

The bill (H. R. 7823) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to exchange with the people of Puerto Rico the Guanica Lighthouse Reservation for two adjacent plots of insular forest land under the jurisdiction of the commissioner, department of agriculture and commerce, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2786 will be indefinitely postponed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 413) to permit the transportation of passengers by Canadian passenger vessels between ports or places in the United States on Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of this? If not, let it go over.

Mr. WHITE. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

HUNTING ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION

The bill (H. R. 4642) to provide for the conveyance by the United States to the county of Beaufort, S. C., of the Hunting Island Lighthouse Reservation was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATANO RANGE REAR LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, P. R.

The bill (H. R. 6045) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Commerce to transfer to the government of Puerto Rico a portion of land within the Catano Range Rear Lighthouse Reservation, P. R., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAST GUARD STATION, DAUPHIN ISLAND, ALA.

The bill (H. R. 6976) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Alabama at or near Dauphin Island, Ala., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COAST GUARD STATION NEAR FORT MYERS, FLA.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6048) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station in the vicinity of Fort Myers, Fla.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the past few weeks we have passed a large number of bills similar to that now before the Senate, establishing Coast Guard stations, and I am told that the expense is considerable not only for the establishment of such stations but for their maintenance. I was wondering whether at the mouth of every little creek, or bayou, or river, or at every indentation along the coast, there was to be established a Coast Guard station.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I know the Senator would not be disposed to object to this bill, because it is recommended by the Department. There is a long coast line that is not sufficiently protected, and it was the Department's idea, as much as that of anyone else, that a station should be established at this point. I hope, in view of the committee having passed on the matter, the House having passed the bill, and the Department having recommended it, that the Senator will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE, NEW YORK

The bill (H. R. 7514) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUALIFICATION OF EMPLOYEES IN THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2024) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to qualify for positions under the competitive classified civil service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that in lines 10 and 11, on page 1, and in lines 1 and 2, there be stricken out the words "or assistant clerk to a Senator and/or as a clerk to a Representative and/or as a clerk or employee to the several committees of the House and the Senate."

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. May not the amendment be pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be pending.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish also to suggest another amendment, on page 2, to strike out "the 1st of the first month following its approval", and make it effective on the 1st day of July, 1937. I ask the Senator from Utah whether the amendment may not be agreed to?

Mr. KING. I think we had better let the bill go over. I find a letter of objection from the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. Mitchell, and I am induced to make the objection by reason of the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF LAND IN BRECKINRIDGE COUNTY, KY.

The bill (H. R. 4705) to authorize the transfer of a certain piece of land in Breckinridge County, Ky., to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATION OF HOLDINGS OF FEDERAL AND STATE LANDS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2682) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to States under the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), as amended by the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1976), subject to prior leases issued under section 15 of the said act, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior in adjudicating State exchanges, under section 8 of the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), as amended by the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1976), involving lands embraced in outstanding leases under section 15 of said act issued prior to the filing of the State exchange application, is hereby authorized upon the request of any State to issue patent to the State, subject to such outstanding lease: Provided, That the United States shall not by reason of the issuance of any such patents be required to account to the State for any money due and collected prior thereto as rent for any part of the then-current annual rental period except as is now provided by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this measure comes from the Committee on Public Lands, and it bears the recommendation of the Department of the Interior.

Under the grazing law States to which have been granted public lands in the past are authorized to offer those lands in exchange for other lands for the purpose of consolidating the holdings both of the Federal Government and of the States. It was found that where the Department of the Interior had issued grazing leases upon Government-owned land that constituted an impediment to the exchange. The only effect of the bill is to permit the Department to exchange the lands subject to any leases which may be outstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 589) prohibiting the operation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce by unlicensed operators was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is too important a bill to be considered under the present proceeding. Let it go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce whether this bill would apply to commercial vehicles only, or also to pleasure cars.

Mr. KING. I have asked that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, under objection.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MARINE SCHOOLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7614) to amend the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1911, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes", approved March 4, 1911 (36 Stat. 1353; U. S. C., title 34, secs. 1121–1123), is amended by adding at the end of the first section the following paragraph:

"The port of Norfolk specified in the preceding paragraph shall be construed as embracing Norfolk, or Portsmouth, or Newport News, or any other city, town, municipality, or locality within the territorial limits of the customs-collection district having its headquarters at Norfolk, Va."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the title of this bill is very misleading. Existing law permits the establishment of a marine school at Norfolk. In fact, the law enacted in 1911 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to furnish vessels or other naval equipment to any State which established under State authority a marine school. In the original act certain places were designated, and among them Norfolk was named as a place where a marine school could be established.

The officials of the State of Virginia desire to locate this school, not at Norfolk, but at Portsmouth or Newport News, and a Senate bill was introduced for that purpose by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], but a House bill similar to it is now under consideration, and the committee reported the House bill favorably. All the measure does is to change the word "Norfolk", so as to permit the authorities to locate the school at Newport News or Portsmouth, which are near Norfolk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF NAVAL EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 4676) to provide for the reimbursement of certain civilian employees of the Navy for the value of personal effects destroyed in a fire at the naval air station, Hampton Roads, Va., May 15, 1936, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL TO MAJ. GEN. GEORGE W. GOETHALS

The bill (S. 2676) to amend the act approved August 24, 1935, entitled "An act to authorize the erection of a suitable memorial to Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals within the Canal Zone" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, That section 2 of the act to authorize the erection of a suitable memorial to Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals within the Canal Zone, approved August 24, 1935, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: Strike out the figures "$75,000" where they occur in said section and insert in lieu thereof "$160,000", so that section 2 as amended will read: "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $160,000 for every object connected with the purposes of this act, including site development and any essential approach work."

MINIMUM SALARY OF DEPUTY UNITED STATES MARSHALS

The bill (H. R. 6453) to increase the minimum salary of deputy United States marshals to $2,000 per annum, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT SCHUYLER MILITARY RESERVATION, N. Y.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2639) to authorize the Secretary of War to lease the Fort Schuyler Military Reservation, N. Y., which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the word "chiefly," and on line 10, to strike out the comma after the word "occupancy", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lease to the State of New York, for nautical education purposes in the interests of national defense, the Fort Schuyler Military Reservation, N. Y., or portions thereof, for such term or terms, and upon such conditions as the Secretary of War may deem advisable, and he may authorize the State of New York incident to making the premises suitable for occupancy to change the contour of the land, alter or demolish existing buildings and other structures, erect new buildings and structures, construct roads and other utilities, and landscape the reservation: Provided, That all alterations, construction, and improvements made shall become the property of the United States: Provided further, That the consideration for said lease or leases shall be the repair and maintenance of the property by the State of New York in accordance with the terms of the lease, and such lease or leases shall reserve to the United States of America the right to resume possession and occupy said premises or any portion thereof whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of War an emergency exists that requires the use and appropriation of the same for the public defense.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OATHS OF OFFICE OF CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6295) to dispense with unnecessary renewals of oaths of office by civilian employees of the executive departments and independent establishments, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That civilian employees of the executive departments and independent establishments of the United States who, upon original appointment, have subscribed to the oath of office required by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be required to renew the said oath because of any change in status so long as their services are continuous in the department or independent establishment in which employed, unless in the opinion of the head of the department or independent establishment the public interests require such renewal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what change would this bill make in existing law?

Mr. McGILL. The bill would change the law by providing that so long as civilian employees in any department or independent agency of the Government are in continuous service, they shall not be required to renew their oaths of office by reason of some change in their status. At the present time there are, in the Treasury Department in particular, as I understand, a number of employees in the field service, and when any change is made with reference to their status they have to go some distance to renew their oaths of office before they can perform any services for the Government. What is provided for in the bill is now provided by existing law insofar as the Department of Agriculture and the Veterans' Administration are concerned. The bill before us would make the law general as to all departments of the Government as it now prevails with reference to those two departments.

Mr. McKELLAR. It merely means that where a man has been sworn in once that is regarded as sufficient?

Mr. McGILL. So long as he works continuously in the same department or independent agency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BURR CREEK, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

The bill (S. 2708) to declare Burr Creek, from Fairfield Avenue southward to Yacht Street in the city of Bridgeport, Conn., a nonnavigable stream was announced as next in order.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask that there be substituted for the Senate bill and considered at this time House bill 7766, Order of Business 1081.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7766) to declare Burr Creek, from Fairfield Avenue southward to Yacht Street in the city of Bridgeport, Conn., a nonnavigable stream.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, what is the object of declaring this a nonnavigable stream?

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, Burr Creek is an open sewer in Bridgeport, and the health authorities want it closed.

Mr. BLACK. What is the object of declaring it a nonnavigable stream?

Mr. LONERGAN. My colleague can answer the Senator.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, the power authorities of the War Department are quite satisfied to have the bill passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2708 will be indefinitely postponed.

ADJUSTMENT OF TAXES OF CERTAIN ENROLLED INDIANS

The bill (S. 879) to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreement was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person duly enrolled as a member of an Indian tribe who received in pursuance of a tribal treaty or agreement with the United States an allotment of land which by the terms of said treaty or agreement was exempted from taxation, restricted against alienation, or which by the terms of any act of Congress was continued under the supervision of the United States during the minority of such allottee, and from which land the restrictions have or have not been removed, and who was required or permitted to pay any Federal income tax on the rents, royalties, or other gains arising from such lands during such tax-exempt period or on income from any allotment during the minority of the allottee, or any such person who has been erroneously or illegally taxed by reason of not having claimed or received the benefit of any deduction or exemptions permitted by law, and who would be entitled under this or previous acts or rulings of the Treasury Department in similar Indian cases to a refund of the taxes so illegally or erroneously collected but for the fact that he failed to file a claim for such refund within the time prescribed by law, shall be allowed 2 years after the approval of this act within which to file such claim, and if otherwise entitled thereto he may recover such taxes in the same manner and to the same extent as if such claims for refund had been theretofore duly filed as required by law, it not being the policy of the Government to invoke or plead a statute of limitations to escape the obligations of agreement solemnly entered into with the Indian wards, or to exact for its own use and benefit an income tax from them while their property continued under the supervision of the United States and/or during the minority of such Indian allottee: Provided, however, That in the case of the death of any member of an Indian tribe any such illegal taxes paid by him or on his account may in like manner be claimed and recovered by the person or persons who would have received such money had it constituted a part of his estate at the time of his death.

That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are modified for the purpose, and only for the purpose, of carrying into effect the provisions hereof.

NAVAL HOSPITAL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The bill (H. R. 6547) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works in or in the vicinity of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief statement about this measure.

On February 25, 1931, Congress authorized an appropriation of $3,200,000 for the remodeling and reconstruction of the naval hospital here in Washington. Nothing has ever been done since the authorization due to several reasons, one of them being that the present site was thought not to be sufficiently large, and secondly, because the National Planning Commission of Washington thought that the present site should be used for other purposes.

It is desirable when we undertake to build the new naval hospital to have ample acreage, so that in the event of war the hospital facilities can be extended, and provision made for temporary accommodations of many thousands who may be injured or incapacitated.

The bill now under consideration increases the amount of the original authorization, which was $3,200,000, and provides for $1,600,000 additional, part of it being for the purchase of land. No location has as yet been agreed upon. No location is designated in the bill. There is a provision in the bill that has already passed the House that not more than 15 percent of the appropriation, however, shall be used for the purchase of land.

I may add one other word. Probably every Senator on the floor knows about the inadequacy of the present Naval Hospital. If not, all Senators ought to know about it, because it is the place where Members of Congress are usually taken when they are ill. Most of the buildings of the Naval Hospital are temporary wartime buildings, obsolete and inadequate. It is highly desirable that steps be taken in the immediate future to build a new hospital. We already have authorized $3,200,000. It is generally agreed that the Naval Hospital should not be built at its present location because sufficient land is not available; that it ought to be built on a larger acreage of ground, on an acreage of at least 50 acres; the present location consists of only a few acres; and that in building this hospital we should have in mind the possibilities of a rapid expansion, if necessary in time of war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, earlier today I heard the Senator object very strenuously to using any money for buying any land at this time. We have made enormous appropriations for the Navy Department, and we have a very excellent hospital now. I have not been there as a patient, but I frequently go there to see my friends, and the hospital is a very excellent and well set up one. It seems to me in this particular when we have spent so much money; and especially when we have spent so much money on the Navy, that as the Senator from Massachusetts argued a while ago in connection with another bill, we can let the purchase of land go over a little while. I hope the Senator will let the bill go over.

Mr. WALSH. I am sorry that the Senator should feel that he should make an objection to a bill of such a public and humane character because of objections to an amendment offered by him to the slum-clearance bill that I did not think germane.

Mr. McKELLAR. When I referred to the Senator's objection I did it in a joking manner.

Mr. WALSH. I have one more word to say. This is an administration bill. It is not my bill. It is a bill in which the President of the United States is sincerely interested. He has given much thought to the question of naval hospitalization, and it is through his resistance to building a new hospital on the present site, and at the amount provided, that this measure providing for a new hospital is prevented. I think the President is correct in desiring a different location for the hospital, and desiring that the building of a hospital be on a more expansive scale.

Mr. President, the buildings of the present hospital have so deteriorated as to compel their abandonment as hospital spaces with the result that the bed capacity at the naval hospital has been reduced from 600 to 178. Buildings of permanent construction also have deteriorated to a point where special safety precautions have had to be installed. Estimated bare maintenance costs for the next 7 years are $276,753. Any appropriation toward the modernization of this plant would cost at least $1,000,000 and the facilities still would be inadequate.

The Naval Hospital, Washington, serves the personnel of a very large area, including the Navy Department; Washington Navy Yard; Naval Air Station, Anacostia; Naval Research Laboratory; Marine Barracks, Quantico; Naval Proving Ground, Dahlgren; Naval Powder Factory, Indian Head; Naval Observatory; Naval Radio Station; certain special cases from the Naval Academy, Annapolis; a large number of retired personnel living in Washington and vicinity; and certain officers and personnel of other governmental activities. Unusually extensive facilities for the hospitalization of officers under examination to determine their physical qualifications for retention in or retirement from the service are required. Provision also must be made at this hospital for the care of all Navy and Marine Corps mental cases pending final determination as to their disposition.

The facilities at the present naval hospital are entirely inadequate to fully and completely provide for the above activities and, too, the space for expansion is so limited that there is no room for the additional requirements that would be necessary in time of an emergency.

In view of all of the above, the committee considers that the authority provided in this bill should be granted and therefore recommends enactment of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Navy Department already has an appropriation for the hospital?

Mr. WALSH. An appropriation in 1931 was authorized for $3,200,000, but it has not been appropriated as no action toward building the new hospital has been taken. That authorization law in 1931 provided for the hospital buildings being located on the present site. The pending bill seeks to remove that requirement and permits building elsewhere on a larger area.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where will the hospital be built if the proposed legislation is passed?

Mr. WALSH. It will be built wherever the Navy authorities, under the guidance, direction, and approval of the President, directs the location of the new site.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I originally asked that the bill be passed over. In view of the explanation made by the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee [Mr WALSH], I desire to explain briefly the objection which I made to the consideration of the bill at this time.

In accordance with the statement just made, ever since 1931, or for a period of 6 years, the sum of over $3,000,000 has been available for building the Naval Hospital. In the hearings it was shown that over $100,000 was spent in the preparation of plans which were never used. If a great need existed for building the hospital, attention is called to the fact that for 6 years the money was available. It seems to me there has been carelessness almost amounting to nonfeasance in connection with this matter.

Mr. President, I very much dislike to disagree with the chairman of the committee, or to go against the President's wishes, but it seems to me the measure ought not to be passed by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

IRRIGATION CONSTRUCTION COSTS ON WAPATO PROJECT, WASHINGTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 558) amending acts fixing the rate of payment of irrigation construction costs on the Wapato Indian irrigation project, Yakima, Wash., and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to add a new section at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act approved February 14, 1920 (41 Stat. 431), as amended by the act approved May 25, 1922 (42 Stat. L. 595 and 596), as fixes the annual rate of payment of irrigation construction costs or assessments on the Wapato Indian irrigation project on the Yakima Reservation in the State of Washington be, and it is hereby, amended so as to fix the per-acre per-annum assessment rate of $1.25 against those lands classed as A or B which are subject to construction assessments pursuant to existing law. Such rate is to take effect immediately upon approval of this act and shall continue until the total cost assessable under existing law against such of the A and B lands shall have been repaid.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to modify the annual repayment schedule set forth in the memorandum agreement of March 9, 1921, approved March 31, 1921, as amended, wherein provision is made among other things for payment of the actual cost of the 250,000 acre-feet of water for certain of the lands under the Wapato Indian irrigation project so as to extend payment of the balance of the cost of such water over a 24-year period commencing with the payment due December 31, 1937.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator who introduced the bill, the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], whether this appropriation comes out of a tribal fund, or whether it is a direct appropriation out of the United States Treasury. I should like an explanation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The bill simply brings this one particular project in line with all other irrigation projects and all other Bureau of Reclamation projects in the country insofar as it refers to the repayment of construction costs.

The Indians have a 40-year period within which to repay the construction costs. The only objection the Department offers to the bill in the report is that a House bill calling for a general investigation of the financing of Indian irrigation projects is now on the calendar. The representatives of the Department who appeared before the committee at the time of the hearing interposed no objection, and it was pointed out by them that in this particular case, as shown by the report, they have all the facts and all the information. All that the bill does is to put this project upon precisely the same basis as every other Indian project and every other reclamation project in the country. The bill extends the period of repayment to a total of 40 years, and it will not make any difference so far as the Treasury is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELINQUISHMENT OF LAND TO BLACKFEET TRIBE, MONTANA

The bill (S. 2774) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to relinquish in favor of the Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., the interest in certain land acquired by the United States under the Federal Reclamation laws was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to relinquish in favor of the Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont., the interest acquired by the United States for Federal reclamation purposes in the lands within the exterior boundaries of the present Blackfeet Indian Reservation, that were acquired for Federal reclamation purposes and are determined in the opinion of said Secretary not to be needed for such purposes. Such relinquishment shall be conditioned upon the repayment into the reclamation fund of a sum equal to the amount taken therefrom for the purchase of the lands so relinquished, including the amounts paid for the benefit of allottees where the land acquired for Federal reclamation purposes was allotted land. Upon such relinquishment and payment being made, the title to said lands shall be and remain in the United States in trust for the Indians of the Blackfeet Tribe of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation of Montana: Provided, That in making such relinquishments the Secretary may reserve for Federal reclamation purposes such easements and rights as in his opinion may be required for present or future developments under the Federal reclamation laws, and the amount payable into the reclamation fund on account of such relinquishment shall be reduced by the value of the easements and rights so retained for Federal reclamation purposes, such value to be conclusively ascertained by said Secretary: Provided further, That no relinquishments herein authorized shall be effective unless approved in writing by the Blackfeet Tribal Council.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend from any moneys on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Blackfeet Indians not to exceed $30,000 for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of this act.

ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR SHOSHONE IRRIGATION PROJECT, WYOMING

The bill (H. R. 6914) to authorize the acquisition by the United States of certain tribally owned lands of the Indians of the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, Wyo., for the Wind River irrigation project was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOOD CONTROL IN CONNECTICUT RIVER VALLEY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 177) consenting to an interstate compact relating to flood control in the Connecticut River Valley was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked that the joint resolution be passed over.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I ask that the objection to Calendar No. 979, being Senate Joint Resolution 177, be withdrawn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am willing to withdraw my objection if the Senator wishes to make a statement. However, I assure the Senator that the joint resolution cannot be acted on today.

Mr. MALONEY. I rather suspected that it could not be acted on today. I wish, however, to call attention to the fact that the joint resolution would ratify a flood compact between four States. The commissioners of those four States met under the guidance of the War Department, I am advised by the commissioners representing my State, and entered into a compact. The four States, through their legislative authorities, concurred in the compact. Officials of the War Department sat in on the various meetings during the time the compact was being drawn; and it was our understanding, and I believe my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] and the Senators from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE]—these are the States most particularly affected by the floods—concur in the thought that all the conditions laid down by the Federal Government have been satisfied.

It now develops that there is objection on the part of the Federal Power Commission, on the ground that the compact trespasses on the Federal Power Act of 1920 and the subsequent legislation of 1936. I disagree with that opinion, Mr. President; and I should like to have Senators know that this is probably the last chance that the States of New England, which suffered to such a considerable extent from the disastrous floods of the last 2 years, will have in any way to correct that situation without calling into special session the legislative bodies of the States involved.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2838) to establish a public airport in the vicinity of the National Capital was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRD. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2846) to promote air commerce by providing for the enlargement of Washington Airport in the public interest was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRD. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WORK ON BONNEVILLE PROJECT

The bill (H. R. 7642) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of Bonneville project for navigation, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is my desire that the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on page 18 of the calendar will be found a Senate bill, being Senate bill 2092, Calendar No. 1046, which covers the same subject matter. I ask unanimous consent that all after the enacting clause of the House bill be stricken out, and that the language of the Senate bill, as reported from the committee, be inserted in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada, the present occupant of the chair, objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. That may be, Mr. President; but I am entitled to this form of order at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7642 for the purpose of amending that bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the language of Senate bill 2092, being Calendar No. 1046, as reported from the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment offered by Mr. McNARY was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That for the purpose of improving navigation on the Columbia River, and for other purposes incidental thereto, the dam, locks, power plant, and appurtenant works now under construction at Bonneville, Oreg. (hereinafter called Bonneville project), shall be completed, maintained, and operated under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, subject to the provisions of this act relating to the powers and duties of the Bonneville power administrator provided for in section 2 (a) (hereinafter called the administrator) respecting the transmission and sale of electric energy generated at said project. The Secretary of War shall provide, construct, operate, maintain, and improve at Bonneville project such machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy as the administrator may deem necessary to develop such electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor. The electric energy thus generated and not required for the operation of the dam and locks at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith shall be delivered to the administrator for disposition as provided in this act.

SEC. 2. (a) The electric energy generated in the operation of the said Bonneville project shall be disposed of by the said administrator as hereinafter provided. The administrator shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; shall be responsible to said Secretary of the Interior; shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per year; and shall maintain his principal office at a place selected by him in the vicinity of the Bonneville project. The administrator shall, as hereinafter provided, make all arrangements for the sale and disposition of electric energy generated at Bonneville project not required for the operation of the dam and locks at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith. He shall act in consultation with an advisory board composed of a representative designated by the Secretary of War, a representative designated by the Secretary of the Interior, a representative designated by the Federal Power Commission, and a representative designated by the Secretary of Agriculture. The form of administration herein established for the Bonneville project is intended to be provisional pending the establishment of a permanent administration for Bonneville and other projects in the Columbia River Basin. The administrator is authorized and empowered to direct and require the Secretary of War to install and maintain additional machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy at the Bonneville project when in the judgment of the administrator such additional generating facilities are desirable to meet actual or potential market requirements for such electric energy. The Secretary of War shall schedule the operations of the several electrical generating units and appurtenant equipment of the Bonneville project in accordance with the requirements of the administrator. The Secretary of War shall provide and maintain for the use of the administrator at said Bonneville project adequate station space and equipment, including such switches, switchboards, instruments, and dispatching facilities as may be required by the administrator for proper reception, handling, and dispatching of the electric energy produced at the said project, together with transformers and other equipment required by the administrator for the transmission of such energy from that place at suitable voltage to the markets which the administrator desires to serve.

(b) In order to encourage the widest possible use of all electric energy that can be generated and marketed and to provide reasonable outlets therefor, and to prevent the monopolization thereof by limited groups, the administrator is authorized and directed to provide, construct, operate, maintain, and improve such electric transmission lines and substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as he finds necessary, desirable, or appropriate for the purpose of transmitting electric energy, available for sale, from the Bonneville project to existing and potential markets, and, for the purpose of interchange of electric energy, to interconnect the Bonneville project with other Federal projects and publicly owned power systems now or hereafter constructed.

(c) The administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to acquire, by purchase, lease, condemnation, or donation, such real and personal property, or any interest therein, including lands, easements, rights-of-way, franchises, electric transmission lines, substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as the administrator finds necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act. Title to all property and property rights acquired by the administrator shall be taken in the name of the United States.

(d) The administrator shall have power to acquire any property or property rights, including patent rights, which in his opinion are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain and to institute condemnation proceedings therefor in the same manner as is provided by law for the condemnation of real estate.

(e) The administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such personal property as in his judgment is not required for the purposes of this act and such real property and interests in land acquired in connection with construction or operation of electric transmission lines or substations as in his judgment are not required for the purposes of this act: Provided, however, That before the sale, lease, or disposition of real property or transmission lines, as herein provided, the administrator shall secure the approval of the President of the United States.

(f) Subject to the provisions of this act, the administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to negotiate and enter into such contracts, agreements, and arrangements as he shall find necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 3. As employed in this act, the term "public body", or "public bodies", means States, public power districts, counties, and municipalities, including agencies or subdivisions of any thereof.

As employed in this act, the term "cooperative", or "cooperatives", means any form of non-profit-making organization or organizations of citizens supplying, or which may be created to supply, members with any kind of goods, commodities, or services, as nearly as possible at cost.

SEC. 4. (a) In order to insure that the facilities for the generation of electric energy at the Bonneville project shall be operated for the benefit of the general public, and particularly of domestic and rural consumers, the administrator shall at all times, in disposing of electric energy generated at said project, give preference and priority to public bodies and cooperatives.

(b) To preserve and protect the preferential rights and priorities of public bodies and cooperatives as provided in section (a) and to effectuate the intent and purpose of this act that at all times up to January 1, 1941, there shall be available for sale to public bodies and cooperatives not less than 50 percent of the electric energy produced at the Bonneville project, it shall be the duty of the administrator in making contracts for the sale of such energy to so arrange such contracts as to make such 50 percent of such energy available to said public bodies and cooperatives until January 1, 1941: Provided, That the electric energy so reserved for but not actually purchased by and delivered to such public bodies and cooperatives prior to January 1, 1940, may be disposed of temporarily so long as such temporary disposition will not interfere with the purchase by and delivery to such public bodies and cooperatives at any time prior to January 1, 1940: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or impair the preferential and priority rights of such public bodies or cooperatives after January 1, 1940; and in the event that after such date there shall be conflicting or competing applications for an allocation of electric energy between any public body or cooperative on the one hand and a private agency of any character on the other, the application of such public body or cooperative shall be granted.

(c) An application by any public body or cooperative for an allocation of electric energy shall not be denied, or another application competing or in conflict therewith be granted, to any private corporation, company, agency, or person, on the ground that any proposed bond or other security issue of any such public body or cooperative, the sale of which is necessary to enable such prospective purchaser to enter into the public business of selling and distributing the electric energy proposed to be purchased, has not been authorized or marketed, until after a reasonable time, to be determined by the administrator, has been afforded such public body or cooperative to have such bond or other security issue authorized or marketed.

(d) It is declared to be the policy of the Congress, as expressed in this act, to preserve the said preferential status of the public bodies and cooperatives herein referred to, and to give to the people of the States within economic transmission distance of the Bonneville project reasonable opportunity and time to hold any election or elections or take any action necessary to create such public bodies and cooperatives as the laws of such States authorize and permit, and to afford such public bodies or cooperatives reasonable time and opportunity to take any action necessary to authorize the issuance of bonds or to arrange other financing necessary to construct or acquire necessary and desirable electric distribution facilities, and in all other respects legally to become qualified purchasers and distributors of electric energy available under this act.

SEC. 5. (a) Subject to the provisions of this act and to such rate schedules as the Federal Power Commission may approve, as hereinafter provided, the administrator shall negotiate and enter into contracts for the sale at wholesale of electric energy, either for resale or direct consumption, to public bodies and cooperatives and to private agencies and persons. Contracts for the sale of electric energy to any private person or agency other than a privately owned public utility engaged in selling electric energy to the general public, shall contain a provision forbidding such private purchaser to resell any of such electric energy so purchased to any private utility or agency engaged in the sale of electric energy to the general public, and requiring the immediate canceling of such contract of sale in the event of violation of such provision. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall be binding in accordance with the terms thereof and shall be effective for such period or periods, including renewals or extensions, as may be provided therein, not exceeding in the aggregate 20 years from the respective dates of the making of such contracts. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall contain (1) such provisions as the administrator and purchaser agree upon for the equitable adjustment of rates at appropriate intervals, not less frequently than once in every 5 years, and (2) in the case of a contract with any purchaser engaged in the business of selling electric energy to the general public, the contract shall provide that the administrator may cancel such contract upon 5 years' notice in writing if in the judgment of the administrator any part of the electric energy purchased under such contract is likely to be needed to satisfy the requirements of the said public bodies or cooperatives referred to in this act, and that such cancelation may be with respect to all or any part of the electric energy so purchased under said contract to the end that the preferential rights and priorities accorded public bodies and cooperatives under this act shall at all times be preserved. Contracts entered into with any utility engaged in the sale of electric energy to the general public shall contain such terms and conditions, including among other things stipulations concerning resale and resale rates by any such utility, as the administrator may deem necessary, desirable, or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act and to insure that resale by such utility to the ultimate consumer shall be at rates which are reasonable and nondiscriminatory. Such contract shall also require such utility to keep on file in the office of the administrator a schedule of all its rates and charges to the public for electric energy and such alterations and changes therein as may be put into effect by such utility.

(b) The administrator is authorized to enter into contracts with public or private power systems for the mutual exchange of unused excess power upon suitable exchange terms for the purpose of economical operation or of providing emergency or breakdown relief.

SEC. 6. Schedules of rates and charges for electric energy produced at the Bonneville project and sold to purchasers as in this act provided shall be prepared by the administrator and become effective upon confirmation and approval thereof by the Federal Power Commission. Subject to confirmation and approval by the Federal Power Commission, such rate schedules may be modified from time to time by the administrator, and shall be fixed and established with a view to encouraging the widest possible diversified use of electric energy. The said rate schedules may provide for uniform rates or rates uniform throughout prescribed transmission areas in order to extend the benefits of an integrated transmission system and encourage the equitable distribution of the electric energy developed at the Bonneville project.

SEC. 7. It is the intent of Congress that rate schedules for the sale of electric energy which is or may be generated at the Bonneville project in excess of the amount required for operating the dam, locks, and appurtenant works at said project shall be determined with due regard to and predicated upon the fact that such electric energy is developed from water power created as an incident to the construction of the dam in the Columbia River at the Bonneville project for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this act. Rate schedules shall be drawn having regard to the recovery (upon the basis of the application of such rate schedules to the capacity of the electric facilities of Bonneville project) of the cost of producing and transmitting such electric energy, including the amortization of the capital investment over a reasonable period of years. Rate schedules shall be based upon an allocation of costs made by the Federal Power Commission. In computing the cost of electric energy developed from water power created as an incident to and a byproduct of the construction of the Bonneville project, the Federal Power Commission may allocate to the costs of electric facilities such a share of the cost of facilities having joint value for the production of electric energy and other purposes as the power development may fairly bear as compared with such other purposes.

SEC. 8. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all purchases and contracts made by the administrator or the Secretary of War for supplies or for services except for personal services, shall be made after advertising, in such manner and at such times, sufficiently in advance of opening bids, as the administrator or Secretary of War, as the case may be, shall determine to be adequate to insure notice and opportunity for competition. Such advertisement shall not be required, however, when (1) an emergency requires immediate delivery of the supplies or performance of the services; or (2) repair parts, accessories, supplemental equipment, or services are required for supplies or services previously furnished or contracted for; or (3) the aggregate amount involved in any purchase or supplies or procurement of services does not exceed $500; in which cases such purchases of supplies or procurement of services may be made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen. In comparing bids and in making awards, the administrator or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, may consider such factors as relative quality and adaptability of supplies or services, the bidder's financial responsibility, skill, experience, record of integrity in dealing, and ability to furnish repairs and maintenance services, the time of delivery or performance offered, and whether the bidder has complied with the specifications.

SEC. 9. (a) The administrator, subject to the requirements of the Federal Water Power Act, shall keep complete and accurate accounts of operations, including all funds expended and received in connection with transmission and sale of electric energy generated at the Bonneville project.

(b) The administrator may make such expenditures for offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, and books; for attendance at meetings; and for such other facilities and services as he may find necessary for the proper administration of this act.

(c) In December of each year, the administrator shall file with the Congress, through the Secretary of the Interior, a financial statement and a complete report as to the transmission and sale of electric energy generated at the Bonneville project during the preceding governmental fiscal year.

SEC. 10. The administrator, the Secretary of War, and the Federal Power Commission, respectively, shall appoint such attorneys, engineers, and other experts as may be necessary for carrying out the functions entrusted to them under this act, without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and shall fix the compensation of each of such attorneys, engineers, and other experts at not to exceed $10,000 per annum; and they may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 11. All receipts from transmission and sale of electric energy generated at the Bonneville project shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, save and except that the Treasury shall set up and maintain from such receipts a continuing fund of $500,000, to the credit of the administrator and subject to check by him, to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. The administrator may, in the name of the United States, bring such suits, at law or in equity, as he may find necessary in carrying out the purposes of the act; and he shall be represented in all litigation affecting the status or operation of Bonneville project by such counsel as he may select.

SEC. 13. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. McNARY. I now move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 2092 will be indefinitely postponed, and House bill 7642 will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill has been on the calendar for some time. It conforms to the wishes of the administration in every particular; it has been agreed upon by the Senators from Washington and Oregon, inasmuch as the dam is in the Columbia River between these two Northwestern States.

I apprehend from what the Chair stated a moment ago that he objects to the consideration of the bill at this time. With that I certainly could have no objection, but I do wish to give notice that I shall do everything that I may to have the bill considered immediately following the disposition of the court bill.

SELECTION OF SITE FOR NATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for a minute in which to explain the airport bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Utah may proceed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some time ago the President of the United States and Congress joined in the appointment of a commission to select a site for a national airport. The commission functioned; they selected a site for an airport; they submitted a report; a bill has been submitted pursuant to the report. Objection was made to its consideration. I merely wish to state that the bill is of the greatest importance to the District of Columbia and the Nation, and I shall seek an early opportunity for its consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it proposed to locate the airport in the vicinity of where it is now or near the Potomac River?

Mr. KING. I can answer the Senator categorically, no. We were charged with the duty of selecting a site that would be safe and suitable under all conditions of weather for a national airport. We carried out, I think, the instructions which were embodied in the authorization.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator does the bill select the site for the airport?

Mr. KING. Yes; we were authorized to select a site, and that was done.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What is the site which was selected?

Mr. KING. It is several miles from Washington and is known as Camp Springs, containing about 2,300 acres. The best experts of the United States testified in regard to the matter. Forty-two sites were examined by the experts and by representatives of the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is there any serious objection to that site?

Mr. KING. A number of persons wanted us to select a site nearer than about 8 or 9 miles from the city, and I understand that the Navy Department objected because they claimed there would be interference with some radio operations 3 or 4 miles away. I will be prepared at any time to show the fallacy of that contention.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I am trespassing upon the time of the Senate, because the bill is not now before the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The questions that I ask are suggested by the fact that the next bill on the calendar apparently refers to the same subject matter.

Mr. KING. That has been objected to also.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I, with the indulgence of the Senate, make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah on the same subject? I think I have on my desk some correspondence advocating the location of the airport in Anacostia, and also I have had literature like those sponsoring what is called the Washington Airport, in Virginia. Have those two sites been examined and is the one the Senator has mentioned the ultimate site that the committee recommends?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the committee was charged with the duty of locating an airport. We examined 42 proposed airport sites and selected one which met all the requirements contained in the act under which we were charged with responsibility. We disregarded the Washington Airport; we did not report favorably upon it, nor upon the other site to which the Senator refers. After examining 42 sites we unanimously selected one.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber for a moment. May I inquire where that location is?

Mr. KING. Camp Springs is about in a direct line from the Capital, I should say, 8 or 9 miles. It embraces 2,300 acres; it is on high ground where there will be no fog. It would be free from obstruction and the experts testified that it would be safe 100 percent every day of the year.

Mr. BARKLEY. I merely wish to observe that it seems to me that in the Capital of the Nation, with as much land as there is in close proximity to Washington, it ought to be possible to select a location for an airport for the city.

Mr. KING. I think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am satisfied the Senator and his colleagues have diligently sought to do that, and, while I know nothing of this subject, if the committee examined 42 sites and found the one mentioned the most feasible, that fact would weigh a great deal with me in undertaking to locate a site.

Mr. KING. May I trespass a moment further by saying that General Westover, Chief of the Air Corps of the Army, and one of the most competent pilots in the United States, if not in the world, was the head of the subcommittee that examined aerially and over the terrain the 42 airport sites, and he and the executive committee were unanimous. Then the full committee, consisting of three Senators, three Members of the House of Representatives, and three members appointed by the President of the United States, likewise joined in the unanimous report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the calendar will be stated.

LEWIS LEONARD WOOD AND WINIFRED WOOD

The bill (S. 1673) for the relief of Lewis Leonard Wood and Winifred Wood was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I will be pleased to explain the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I find that I have already read the report, and that the bill is a proper one; so the Senator need not explain it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MALONEY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws Lewis Leonard Wood and Winifred Wood shall be held and considered to have been legally admitted to the United States for permanent residence on April 9, 1925.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to cancel any warrants of arrest or orders of deportation which may have been issued in the cases of said Lewis Leonard Wood or said Winifred Wood upon the ground of unlawful residence in the United States.

FLOOD CONTROL IN MERRIMACK RIVER VALLEY

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 178) consenting to an interstate compact relating to flood control in the Merrimack River Valley was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think it is appropriate that the same disposition should be made of this joint resolution as was made of the one relating to the Connecticut River, preceding it on the calendar. I should like to state for the RECORD that the Senator from New Hampshire has today introduced a resolution at the request of the administration which sets forth their position in reference to such flood-control compacts as the two on the calendar. Apparently the administration feels that the provision in the compact to the effect that the States may have the use or sale of the power generated at dams on flood-control reservoirs is not in conformity with the national program which the administration is planning. The authorities of the States claim that they seek control of power generated only by permission and consent of the Federal Government and that there is provision in the act of ratification to enable the Government to repeal or change the conditions. In any event, the point I wish to make is that there is another joint resolution dealing with the same subject, and I think that in time both the Federal authorities and the State authorities may be able to reach an agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BUILDING, MASON COUNTY, WASH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2368) to provide funds for cooperation with School District No. 2, Mason County, State of Washington, in the construction of a public-school building, to be available to both white and Indian children, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000 for the purpose of cooperating with School District No. 2, Mason County, State of Washington, for the construction and equipment of a public-school building at Lower Skokomish, State of Washington: Provided, That said school shall be conducted for both white and Indian children without discrimination, and that the cost of education of white children shall be defrayed by the State and local public-school authorities, in accordance with such agreement or agreements as may be made between the Secretary of the Interior and State or local officials, and any and all sums of money obtained by reason of such agreement or agreements shall be available for reexpenditure for support and maintenance of said school.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether there is not now a schoolhouse for the Indians at the place mentioned in the bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the report of the Department shows that the schoolhouse there is not adequate or safe and that there is the necessity for a new schoolhouse.

Mr. KING. Why was not an appropriation made from the Indian funds and carried in the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It should be remembered that this is not an appropriation. It comes under the general act under which the Department asks for appropriations every year for certain schoolhouses. They have left us out, the committee thought, a little too long. So I wanted it specifically designated so that when the appropriation is made for the operation of schools under the Indian Service the school referred to in the bill may be provided for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIXING OF FEES IN RECEIVERSHIP AND BANKRUPTCY CASES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2849) to prohibit certain agreements fixing fees or compensation in receiverships, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceedings, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) it shall be unlawful for any party in interest, or any attorney for any party in interest, in any receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceeding, in or under the supervision of any court of the United States, to enter into any agreement, written or oral, express or implied, with any other party in interest, or any attorney of any other party in interest, in such proceeding for the purpose of fixing the amount of the fees or other compensation to be paid to any party in interest or any attorney of any party in interest in such proceeding, for services rendered in connection therewith. As used in this section, the term "party in interest" includes any debtor, creditor, receiver, or trustee and any representative of any of them.

(b) It shall be unlawful for the judge of any court of the United States to approve the payment of any fees or compensation the amount of which is fixed as the result of any act declared to be unlawful by subsection (a) of this section.

(c) Any person who commits any act declared by this section to be unlawful shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, apparently there is no report accompanying the bill. Will the Senator from Idaho explain it?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is rather an important measure, but I think I can explain it by making a short statement. In the first place, it has been reported by the Judiciary Committee. The bill simply provides that any agreement between attorneys in bankruptcy cases and reorganization cases as to fees shall be illegal, also as to compensation of receivers. It prohibits any agreement between parties in interest fixing compensation of receivers or fixing the compensation of attorneys. We have found out through investigation that the heart of the misdoings with reference to receivership cases was that attorneys get together and agree upon large fees, agree upon a receiver, agree upon receivers' fees, agree upon the compensation of all parties concerned, and the result is that they simply divide up the carcass and there is nothing left for creditors or anybody else.

Mr. McKELLAR. In view of the many scandals that have arisen in regard to receivership fees and even attorneys' fees in receivership cases, I am heartily in favor of the Senator's bill, and I hope not only the Senate will pass it but that the other House will pass it and that it will become a law.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator.

I desire to offer an amendment for clarification more than anything else. I send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was on page 2, line 2, after the word "therewith" to insert:

When such fees or other compensation are to be paid from the assets of the estate in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization.

So as to make the section read:

That (a) it shall be unlawful for any party in interest, or any attorney for any party in interest, in any receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization proceeding, in or under the supervision of any court of the United States, to enter into any agreement, written or oral, express or implied, with any other party in interest, or any attorney of any other party in interest, in such proceeding for the purpose of fixing the amount of the fees or other compensation to be paid to any party in interest or any attorney of any party in interest in such proceeding, for services rendered in connection therewith when such fees or other compensation are to be paid from the assets of the estate in receivership, bankruptcy, or reorganization. As used in this section, the term "party in interest" includes any debtor, creditor, receiver, or trustee and any representative of any of them.

Mr. BORAH. It was thought the bill as written would prevent a client from agreeing with his own attorney as to how much compensation he should pay his attorney, so we are proposing to limit the agreement to such compensations or attorneys' fees as are to come out of the estate or the reorganization fund, and so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to offer another amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was on page 2, after line 9, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(c) It shall be unlawful for the judge of any court of the United States to appoint as receiver, or trustee, any person related to such judge by consanguinity, or affinity, within the fourth degree.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I move to amend further by renumbering the last paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 10, it is proposed to renumber the paragraph by striking out "(c)" and inserting "(d)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY PRICES, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 158) to provide for an investigation of agricultural commodity prices, of an ever-normal granary for major agricultural commodities, and of the conservation of national soil resources, submitted by Mr. SMITH on the 23d instant.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the resolution. I send it to the desk and ask that it may be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 12, after the word "Senate", to strike out the words "at the earliest practicable date" and insert "not later than October 15, 1937", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct investigations and draft legislation to maintain both parity of prices paid to farmers for agricultural commodities marketed by them for domestic consumption and export and parity of income for farmers marketing such commodities; and, without interfering with the maintenance of such parity prices, to provide an ever-normal granary for each major agricultural commodity; and to conserve national soil resources and prevent the wasteful use of soil fertility; and, in particular, so to consider S. 2787. The committee shall report to the Senate, not later than October 15, 1937, the result of its investigations together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The committee unanimously agreed that they would take their time in making the investigation. I understand the object of the amendment, and I hope the Senate will accept the action of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry which was taken in good faith. We propose to make the investigation as thorough as possible in the interest of agriculture. This is a matter which was threshed out yesterday on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, Senators know there is no one for whom I have greater respect and admiration than I have for the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senator knows that the price of cotton has been going down very regularly in recent days, probably due to the fact that a great many people think we will have a very much larger crop than we have had in the last several years. While the price of cotton has been going down rather steadily lately, the new crop is about to come in.

If ever there was a time when we need control and a law for control it is now, for the reason that in the next 3 months the farmers, for whose interest the Senator from South Carolina has worked in this body as probably no other Senator has, are going to dispose of their cotton crop. If we are to have control, if we are to have regulation so as to benefit the farmers who have made this crop, the sooner we have it the better it will be for all concerned.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina knows about the movement of the cotton crop. We have a law now that will take care of the situation. Cotton has been produced and it is now being sold. It will be sold through September. It will be sold through October. By that time we could have a bill back here and by the time Congress got through arguing over it, the whole cotton crop would be sold.

This is nothing more nor less than an attempt by those who have gotten themselves in bad by sponsoring a bill that has destroyed the South, to come here now and try to placate the farmers of the South with an impossible thing.

I appeal to the Senate. Cotton is now moving in Texas, South Carolina, Georgia, and elsewhere. By the 15th of October the bulk of it will have been sold. Now a proposition is made here which is obvious to everybody, that we shall reconvene October 15 and debate a bill which is highly debatable, and there would be no assurance at all as to the time we would get through with it and ultimately have the desired regulation. I am as much in favor of regulation as is any other Member of this body, but I want common sense used in connection with it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if this matter is going to lead to an extended discussion, as apparently it is, I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let me say just one word, if I may have unanimous consent to do so. The committee wanted to begin its work and wanted to know what funds were available for it. If it is desired to deprive the committee of its funds, it is perfectly all right with me, but I am not going to sit here and allow this kind of thing to happen without a vigorous protest. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, there will be no harm done by letting the resolution go over, because the committee will not commence its investigations until after the adjournment of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS DURING 1937

The bill (S. 189) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1937 was announced as next in order.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, a similar bill passed the House and has been reported to the Senate by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and is now on the calendar, being Calendar No. 1041. I ask that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill and be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2888) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1937, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, after line 3, to insert a new section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated an amount equal to the amount of the unpaid balance of principal and interest which the Secretary of the Interior may find to be due on homestead and other entries or purchases on opened lands of the Coeur d'Alene, Cheyenne River, Colville, Fort Berthold, Fort Peck, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Shoshone, and Standing Rock Reservations, and the Chippewa lands in Minnesota opened in accordance with the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L. 642), on the date of the enactment of this act, less an amount equal to the amount of payments made on such homestead entries after the enactment of this act and before the appropriation herein authorized has been made. Such an amount when appropriated shall be placed to the credit of the Indian tribes of such reservations in the Treasury of the United States, and shall be available upon the recommendation of the Indian tribe or tribes concerned for making permanent improvements on lands of the Indians, including the development of irrigation and the granting of aid to individual Indians in establishing permanent homes, and for the purchase of lands on said reservations from individual Indians or from white owners, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and under such regulations as he may prescribe. Title to any lands so purchased shall be taken in the name of the United States in trust for the respective Indian tribes and such lands shall not be allotted in severalty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 4, to insert a new section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall in no way affect the liability of entrymen or purchasers on such opened lands in the said Indian reservations to complete payments on their entries. Any payments made by said homesteaders after the appropriation authorized by this act has been made shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States. If any entry or purchase shall be relinquished or canceled on which the United States shall have advanced payments to the Indians of the reservation involved, said payments shall be reimbursed to the United States out of any funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 17, to renumber the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 20, before the word "entry", to strike out "this" and insert "his"; and in line 24, before the word "entry", to strike out "this" and insert "his", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. Any homestead entryman or purchaser of ceded Indian land who is delinquent in the payment of the purchase money or interest, or both, due on the land embraced in his entry, entries, purchase, or purchases, and who is unable to make payment thereof in accordance with existing laws, shall be accorded the privilege of relinquishing any subdivision, or subdivisions, as shown on the approved plat, of his entry, entries, purchase, or purchases, so that the purchase money paid on the whole of such entry, entries, purchase, or purchases, will be sufficient to complete payment on the lands retained, which retained lands shall be in reasonably compact form. Relinquishments heretofore made may be accepted under the provisions of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to grant relief to homesteaders and purchasers of public and ceded Indian lands and to authorize advance of amounts due on delinquent homestead entries on certain Indian reservations."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill (S. 189) granting leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1937 is indefinitely postponed.

PERISHABLE AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

The bill (H. R. 6762) to amend the act known as the "Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act, 1930", approved June 10, 1930, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that seems to be rather a formidable measure. I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, that bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EAST COAST SHIP & YACHT CORPORATION, OF NOANK, CONN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 718) for the relief of the East Coast Ship & Yacht Corporation, of Noank, Conn., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after "(1)", to strike out "$4,200" and insert "$2,100"; in line 11, after "(2)", to strike out "$7,200.34" and insert "$4,518.74"; on page 2, line 3, after the word "contract", to strike out "and (3) $1,950, representing liquidated damages withheld by the Government under a contract numbered W–52, qm 416, entered into by said corporation with the War Department for repairs to the United States distribution box boat L–40"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the East Coast Ship & Yacht Corporation, of Noank, Conn., the following sums: (1) $2,100, representing liquidated damages withheld by the Government under a contract numbered W–51, qm–412, entered into by said corporation with the War Department for repairs to the United States steamer Colonel Barnett; (2) $4,518.74, representing payment for additional repairs which said corporation was required to make upon said steamer and which were not specified by said contract. The payment of such sums shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of said corporation against the United States arising out of said contracts or in connection with the repairs made on either of said vessels: Provided, That in the settlement of the claim the rights of subrogation by the Home Insurance Co. shall be fully protected: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION AND REHABILITATION AT MILITARY POSTS

The bill (H. R. 7645) to authorize appropriations for construction and rehabilitation at military posts, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, this bill is similar to a bill which passed the Senate a few weeks ago, and represents the minimum housing needs of the Army. It also provides for the acceptance by the Government of some very valuable property at Denver, Colo., and for the establishment there of an Air Corps technical school and firing ranges which are immediately necessary. It carries no appropriation, and none will be asked for during the present fiscal year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I observe that the bill authorizes an appropriation of $25,587,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The War Department's complete housing program calls for $162,000,000. After combing the matter thoroughly the Senate and the House Military Affairs Committees have developed a minimum priority program of about $25,000,000. The House added to what was in the Senate bill projects amounting to four or five million dollars and left out several items that were in the Senate bill. When the House bill came to the Senate, these Senate items were restored by the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the money already been appropriated? Is the money in hand to carry out the provisions of the bill, or will this be new money?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This is only an authorization.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know; but will the authorization prepare the way before the Appropriations Committee for supplemental appropriations, or for a deficiency appropriation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, will the matter come up in the appropriation bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In the appropriation bill of the next fiscal year it will be necessary to have some kind of a program so that the War Department may begin its plans. The housing facilities at many of these posts are deplorable, and the construction of this school at Denver is immediately imperative. There we have a chance to secure the donation of a very valuable amount of property.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may say so—and I hope my friend will pardon me—I think if we should close about two-thirds of the Army posts in the United States, it would make for economy and make for efficiency in the Army. I think we have scores more posts than are needed, and we have upon the shores a large number of naval stations that we do not need.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is probably true that a number of posts ought to be dispensed with.

Mr. KING. Why not practise a little economy, instead of planning now for further appropriations and further posts?

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill does not apply to the posts which are not needed.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. ASHURST subsequently said: Mr. President, I apologize for discussing a subject not immediately before the Senate; but we have today passed a housing bill calling for many millions of dollars. Now a bill is on our calendar which provides for the housing and hospitalization of our troops in various Army posts.

I respect the right of every Senator to object; but let Senators visit these Army posts. I have visited two of them, and I should not think of quartering a human being in some of the quarters now occupied by troops of the United States. One commanding general told me he was ashamed to quarter his troops in such a place.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that some of the pictures on the wall show better structures than those in some of the posts.

Mr. ASHURST. Quite so. These so-called slums, pictures of which are on the wall, are in some respects superior to the housing facilities of United States troops in places that I could mention. Indeed, in one post the soldiers are required to take iron bars to support the walls, to keep the walls from falling in upon them.

Having authorized the expenditure of millions of dollars to provide homes for people in so-called slums—with that I have no quarrel—at the same time, in the case of the troops of the United States who are protecting the lives and the liberty of the people, the soldiers whose civil rights are more or less suspended, we find ourselves in a situation where we cannot pass a bill providing for adequate housing and hospital facilities for the troops of the United States.

I find no fault with any Senator who deems it his duty to object; but I believe the able Senator from Texas would be within his rights in serving notice that at the earliest moment he will try to secure action upon this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator from Texas because of the diligence he has exercised in the matter.

Take, for example, if you will, the report of the Senator from Texas upon the bill to which I refer. It authorizes hospitals and beds, hospitals and quarter barracks, and now and then telephone construction. Forsooth, I do not like the idea of going into the purlieus of our large cities and there providing homes far better than the homes in which the majority of United States Senators were born for persons many of whom will not be citizens of the United States, and then shamefully neglecting the soldiers who have suspended their civil rights and gone into the Army to protect the people of the United States.

I should feel recreant to my ideas of duty and propriety if I did not say this much.

LOSSES TO FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS DUE TO APPRECIATION OF FOREIGN CURRENCIES

The bill (H. R. 7512) to amend the act approved March 26, 1934, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER LEVELS OF LAKE OF THE WOODS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6338) to fulfill certain treaty obligations with respect to water levels of the Lake of the Woods, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the word "claimant", to strike out "or, in case the claim has been assigned, to the assignee thereof", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to pay the claims for damages against the United States arising out of the fluctuations of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods as ascertained by him under authority of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain to regulate the level of Lake of the Woods concluded on the 24th day of February 1925", approved May 22, 1926, as amended. The amount paid with respect to each claim shall be the amount of award set forth in the letter of the Secretary of War of February 16, 1931 (House Document No. 774, 71st Cong., 3d sess.), and the letter of the Secretary of War of December 8, 1931 (House Document No. 133, 72d Cong., 1st sess.). Such sums shall be paid to the claimant, or, in case the claimant is dead or insane, to the legal representative of the claimant. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of establishing the identity of claimants or their assignees or representatives, and his determination thereof shall be final. Payment by the Secretary of War shall be in full settlement of all claims for damages cognizable under section 2 of such act of May 22, 1926, as amended. If with diligent effort the Secretary of War has been unable to pay any such claim within 3 years after the date of the enactment of this act, the amount of such claim shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $73,270.97 to carry out the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill. I see that the Secretary of State approves it with certain amendments. I wonder if those amendments have been made. If the distinguished President pro tempore approves of the bill, he being chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I have no objection to it. Is the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] familiar with the bill? If not, let it go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Utah that this Lake of the Woods matter has been pending before the two Houses for a long while. It is a border matter which is regulated by treaty between Canada and the United States.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that state of affairs; but an appropriation is asked for, and I notice that in a letter from the Secretary of State he states he approves of the bill if certain amendments are made. If those amendments are made, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. The bill has been recommended by the Department.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CECILE C. CAMERON

The bill (H. R. 7387) for the relief of Cecile C. Cameron was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1567) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act authorizing the conservation, production, and exploitation of helium gas, a mineral resource pertaining to the national defense, and to the development of commercial aeronautics, and for other purposes' ", was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire what disposition was made of Calendar No. 996, House bill 2260.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill is the unfinished business of the Senate.

EXCHANGE OF LAND BY IGNATIUS T. FULKS AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 6145) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to accept title to a certain parcel of land at Gaithersburg, Md., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Res. 21) authorizing the printing of the report of the Subcommittee on Technology to the National Resources Committee, entitled "Technological Trends and National Policy, Including the Social Implications of the New Inventions", as a document was considered and agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL PETROLEUM EXPOSITION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7127) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to be held May 14 to May 21, 1938, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, to strike out "All articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the International Petroleum Exposition upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of the payment of duty, customs, fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition" and to insert "All articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the International Petroleum Exposition, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to invite by proclamation, or in such other manner as he may deem proper, the States of the Union and all foreign countries to participate in the proposed International Petroleum Exposition, to be held at Tulsa, Okla., from May 14, 1938, to May 21, 1938, inclusive, for the purpose of exhibiting samples of fabricated and raw products of all countries used in the petroleum industry and bringing together buyers and sellers for promotion of trade and commerce in such products.

SEC. 2. All articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the International Petroleum Exposition, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign buildings or exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulatio.ns as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said exposition to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition any article entered hereunder may be abandoned to the Government or destroyed under customs supervision, whereupon any duties on such article shall be remitted: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law, and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond, and imported articles in bonded warehouses under the general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That the International Petroleum Exposition shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for, articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by the International Petroleum Exposition to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930.

SEC. 3. That the Government of the United States is not by this act obligated to any expense in connection with the holding of such exposition and is not hereafter to be obligated other than for suitable representation thereat.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LUTHER JENNINGS WORKMAN

The bill (H. R. 4527) for the relief of Luther Jennings Workman, a minor, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMILY HYER LAVERGNE, EXECUTRIX OF ESTATE OF W. K. HYER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 593) for the relief of Emily Hyer LaVergne, executrix of the estate of W. K. Hyer, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and to insert "allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps", and on line 8, to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Emily Hyer LaVergne, executrix of the estate of W. K. Hyer, the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of personal injuries resulting in the death of the said W. K. Hyer, in a collision on October 21, 1935, between an automobile owned and operated by the said W. K. Hyer and a Government vehicle operated in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps near Charleston, S. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine, in accordance with law but without regard to any statute of limitations, any claim filed not later than 6 months after the passage of this act by Harry W. Dubiske, whose business address is 208 South La Salle Street, Chicago, of the State of Illinois, for the refund of income and profits taxes erroneously collected from the said Harry W. Dubiske for the year 1919: Provided, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall deduct from the amount of any overpayment determined under the provisions of this act the amount of any additional tax determined to be due for the year 1919, whether or not the assessment or collection of such additional tax is barred by any statute of limitations: Provided further, That in the settlement of said claim there shall be no allowance of interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) relative to determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments, on page 5, line 2, after the word "by", to insert the words "said special Mexican Claims Commission during its existence and thereafter by", and to add a new section at the end of the joint resolution, so as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas the act entitled "An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934", approved April 10, 1935 (49 Stat. 149), provides for the establishment of the Special Mexican Claims Commission and confers upon that Commission jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims against the Republic of Mexico, notices of which were filed with the Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, established by a convention of September 10, 1923, in which the said Commission failed to award compensation, except such claims as may be found by the committee provided for the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, to be general claims and recognized as such by the General Claims Commission; and

Whereas the said Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, provides that the jurisdiction in and validity of the claims found by the said committee to be general claims shall be determined in each case when examined and adjudicated by the Commissioners or Umpire in accordance with the provisions of the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, and the protocol of April 24, 1934, or the Special Claims Convention of September 10, 1923, and the protocol of June 16, 1933, in the event it shall be found by the Commissioners or Umpire to have been improperly eliminated from the special claims settlement; and

Whereas certain claims filed with the said Special Claims Commission, United States and Mexico, established by the said convention of September 10, 1923, were found by the said committee to be general claims but have not yet been the subject of any determination by the said General Claims Commission; and

Whereas the said Special Mexican Claims Commission, established in pursuance of the said act approved April 10, 1935, expires by the terms of the said act on August 31, 1937; and

Whereas, by the terms of the protocol of April 24, 1934, between the United States of America and the United Mexican States, the said General Claims Commission expires on October 24, 1937, and the two Governments have undertaken, upon the basis of the joint report of the members of the said Commission, to conclude a convention for the final disposition of the claims pending before the said Commission, the said convention to take either the form of an agreement for an en-bloc settlement of the said claims or the form of an agreement for the disposition of the claims upon their individual merits by reference to an umpire; and

Whereas the committee provided for in the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, found that the amount to be paid by the Government of Mexico in settlement of the special claims comprehended in that convention was $5,448,020.14, it being understood that the sum thus determined was susceptible of increase after express decision of the General Claims Commission in case the said Commission might decide to be within the jurisdiction of the Special Commission any one or more of the claims which the said committee found to be general claims; and

Whereas the said Special Mexican Claims Commission, in the event that the total amount of the awards made by it upon all claims is greater than the amount which the Government of Mexico has agreed to pay to the Government of the United States in satisfaction of the claims, is required by the said act approved April 10, 1935, to reduce the awards on a percentage basis to such amount; and

Whereas, in the circumstances set forth, it is not now possible to ascertain which, if any, of the claims found by the said committee to be general claims will be found by the said General Claims Commission to be special claims, nor what will be the amount of the total en-bloc settlement provided for in the said Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934; and

Whereas payments on awards of the said Special Mexican Claims Commission from funds paid to the Government of the United States by the Government of Mexico under the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, should not, in justice to the beneficiaries, be deferred until the question of the jurisdiction of the claims now pending before the General Claims Commission, by virtue of the classification of such claims as general claims by the joint committee, shall have been finally determined in the manner provided for in the said convention of April 24, 1934, or in the said protocol of the same date: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the jurisdiction of the Special Mexican Claims Commission established in pursuance of the act approved April 10, 1935 (49 Stat. 149), shall not be deemed to include any of the claims found by the committee provided for in the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, to be general claims.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of the reduction of awards on a percentage basis as provided for in section 4 of the act approved April 10, 1935 (49 Stat. 149), the amount which the Government of Mexico has agreed to pay to the Government of the United States in satisfaction of the claims shall, subject to the provision in section 3 hereof, be deemed to be the sum of $5,448,020.14, set forth in the report of the said committee provided for in the said convention of April 24, 1934.

SEC. 3. That, in the event of the reclassification as special claims of any of the claims found by the said committee to be general claims, the claims so reclassified shall be passed upon by said Special Mexican Claims Commission during its existence and thereafter by a commission to be established in conformity with the said act of April 10, 1935, and the total amount payable by the Government of Mexico to the Government of the United States on account of the claims so reclassified, together with interest on all deferred payments under the Special Claims Convention of April 24, 1934, shall be added to the sum of $5,448,020.14 set forth in the report of the said committee. The total amount awarded by the Commission so established upon the claims so reclassified shall be added to the total amount of the original awards made by the Special Mexican Claims Commission, and any necessary readjustment of the awards of the Special Mexican Claims Commission and those that may be made by the Commission to be established pursuant to this section shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury on the basis prescribed by section 4 of the act approved April 10, 1935.

SEC. 4. Upon the certification of the Secretary of the Treasury of the awards of the Special Mexican Claims Commission, he shall proceed to make payments as provided for in section 9 of the act approved April 10, 1935; and upon the certification of the Secretary of the Treasury of awards upon any claims reclassified as special claims he shall, after making the readjustments provided for in section 3 of this resolution, accord priority of payment on such awards until the beneficiaries thereof shall have been placed upon an equal percentage basis as to payments with the beneficiaries of awards of the Special Mexican Claims Commission.

SEC. 5. Section 6 of the act approved April 10, 1935, creating the Special Mexican Claims Commission, and for other purposes, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The Commission shall complete its work within 3 years from the date on which it undertakes the performance of its duties, at which time all powers, rights, and duties conferred by this act upon the Commission shall terminate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

RESERVATION OF MINERALS IN CHOCTAW-CHICKASAW LANDS IN OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 2851) to authorize the reservation of minerals in future sales of lands of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation of this bill. If there is no explanation to be made, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently said: Mr. President, during my momentary absence from the Chamber Senate bill 2851, Calendar No. 1018, was reached and was objected to. I ask unanimous consent that we return to that order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2851) to authorize the reservation of minerals in future sales of lands of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, in all sales of tribal lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma provided for by existing law, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to offer such lands for sale subject to a reservation of the mineral rights therein, including oil and gas, for the benefit of said Indians, whenever in his judgment the interests of the Indians will best be served thereby.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the so-called timberlands of said Indians described in notice of sale of such lands published by the Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes Indian Agency, Muskogee, Okla., dated June 19, 1937.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, all this bill does is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in the sale of Indian lands in my State, to withhold the mineral rights, to sell the surface only. That is the only object of the bill.

I do wish to offer an amendment, to strike out section 2. When the bill was introduced the Secretary had advertisements out for the sale of certain lands, and because the advertisements were running we placed a clause in the bill to exempt the lands under that advertisement. Since that time the lands have been withdrawn, so that there is no occasion now to withhold the provisions of the act. Therefore, I move to strike out section 2.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, in view of several letters which I received several months ago, whether the rights of the Indians in the oil and other minerals in the State of Oklahoma are fully safeguarded now by the Indian Bureau, and by the legislation which has been enacted recently by the Congress.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If they are not, there has been no complaint, because our committee has been very diligent, and every bill that has come before the committee which has been recommended by the Department has received a favorable report from the committee.

Mr. KING. The complaints that came to me were as to administrative features, rather than as to legal questions.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have heard no complaint myself, I will say to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS

The bill (S. 2689) to regulate the leasing of certain Indian lands for mining purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter unallotted lands within any Indian reservation or lands owned by any tribe, group, or band of Indians under Federal jurisdiction, except those hereinafter specifically excepted from the provisions of this act, may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be leased for mining purposes, by authority of the tribal council or other authorized spokesmen for such Indians, for terms not to exceed 10 years and as long thereafter as minerals are produced in paying quantities.

SEC. 2. That leases for oil- and/or gas-mining purposes covering such unallotted lands shall be offered for sale to the highest responsible qualified bidder, at public auction or on sealed bids, after notice and advertisement, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Such advertisement shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to reject all bids whenever in his judgment the interest of the Indians will be served by so doing, and if no satisfactory bid is received, or the accepted bidder fails to complete the lease, or the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that it is unwise in the interest of the Indians to accept the highest bid, said Secretary may readvertise such lease for sale, or with the consent of the tribal council or other governing tribal authorities, a lease may be made by private negotiations: Provided, That the foregoing provisions shall in no manner restrict the right of tribes organized and incorporated under sections 16 and 17 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), to lease lands for mining purposes as therein provided and in accordance with the provisions of any constitution and charter adopted by any Indian tribe pursuant to the act of June 18, 1934.

SEC. 3. That hereafter lessees of restricted Indian lands, tribal or allotted, for mining purposes, including oil and gas, shall furnish corporate surety bonds, in amounts satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, guaranteeing compliance with the terms of their leases: Provided, That personal surety bonds may be accepted where the sureties deposit as collateral with the said Secretary of the Interior any public-debt obligations of the United States guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States equal to the full amount of such bonds, or other collateral satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, or show ownership of unencumbered real estate of a value equal to twice the amount of the bonds.

SEC. 4. That all operations under any oil, gas, or other mineral lease issued pursuant to the terms of this or any other act affecting restricted Indian lands shall be subject to the rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior. In the discretion of the said Secretary, any lease for oil or gas issued under the provisions of this act shall be made subject to the terms of any reasonable cooperative unit or other plan approved or prescribed by said Secretary prior or subsequent to the issuance of any such lease which involves the development or production of oil or gas from land covered by such lease.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, authorize superintendents or other officials in the Indian Service to approve leases for oil, gas, or other mining purposes covering any restricted Indian lands, tribal or allotted.

SEC. 6. Section 1, 2, 3, and 4 of this act shall not apply to the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona, the Crow Reservation in Montana, the ceded lands of the Shoshone Reservation in Wyoming, the Osage Reservation in Oklahoma, nor to the coal and asphalt lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes in Oklahoma.

SEC. 7. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE INDIAN LANDS, OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 2698) to set aside certain lands in Oklahoma for the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby eliminated from the Seger School Reserve and set aside for the use and benefit of the Indians of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation in Oklahoma, in township 10 north, range 14 west, Indian meridian, all of sections 22 and 23, all of section 21, except the east half northwest quarter and east half east half west half northwest quarter, and in section 15 a tract beginning at the northeast corner thereof, thence west along the north line of the section 88 rods, thence south 160 rods, thence east 88 rods to the east line of the section, thence north 160 rods to the point of beginning: Provided, That until otherwise directed by Congress none of the lands shall be allotted in severalty.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1351) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. GILLETTE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1344) providing for relief in cases of desert-land applications, or entries of lands within Verde River irrigation and power district, Arizona, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. This bill was reported adversely by the committee, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN TUSCUMBIA, ALA.

The bill (H. R. 3421) to quiet title and possession with respect to certain lands in Tuscumbia, Ala., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POLICE JURISDICTION OVER SHENANDOAH NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 7086) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to notify the State of Virginia that the United States assumes police jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Shenandoah National Park, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OIL AND GAS PERMITS AND LEASES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2613) for the relief of certain applicants for oil and gas permits and leases, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue oil and gas prospecting permits pursuant to applications filed therefor under section 13 of the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), 90 days or more prior to the date of the amendatory act of August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 674), by Blanche S. Trigg, attorney in fact for the respective applicants, said applications bearing serial numbers Las Cruces 050186, 050589, 050590, 050591, 050592, 050595, 050607, 050903, 050911, 050912, 050913, 050914, 050916, 050917, 050918, 050922, 051017, 051018, 051052, 051053, 051054, 051055, 051056, 051125, 051127, 051128, 051129, 051160, 051161, 051162, 051163, 051173, 051201, 051202, 051203, 051204, 051205, 051206, 051207, 051208, 051209, 051210, 051211, 051239, 051241, 051242, 051243, 051244, 051245, 051246, 051247, 051248, 051249, 051250, 051251, 051252, 051255, 051256, 051257, 051258, 051259, 051260, 051262, 051264, 051266, Sante Fe 069715, 069716, 069799, 069800, 069801, 069803, 069805, 069806, 069807, 070093, 070094, and to issue oil and gas leases under the ninth and tenth provisos of section 13 of the act of February 25, 1920, as amended by the act of August 21, 1935, pursuant to applications for prospecting permits filed after 90 days prior to the effective date of the amendatory act by said attorney in fact, said applications bearing serial numbers Las Cruces 051275, 051301, 051302, 051303, 051304, 051305, 051321, 051322, 051323, 051324, 051325, 052231, 052232, 052233, 052234, 052235, 052236, 052237, notwithstanding that the proof of qualifications submitted by each applicant in connection with his application was not under oath although acknowledged before a notary public, and notwithstanding that a curative qualifying affidavit was not filed until after the passage of the amendatory act of August 21, 1935, the delay in furnishing said curative qualifying affidavit being attributable to the suspension in the General Land Office of action on all applications for prospecting permits pending the enactment of the aforesaid amendatory act and the promulgation of regulations thereunder: Provided, That the lands applied for and described in said applications are unreserved and unappropriated public lands not subject to prior claims and that the applications are otherwise regular and allowable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this is a bill giving the Secretary authority to issue permits under the new law passed in 1935. Difficulty arose because the applications for the permits filed prior to the enactment of the law of 1935 contained a technical defect, and the defect was that under the old law it was required that the applicant should make an affidavit as to his qualifications. The applicants in these cases did not make affidavits. They attached to their applications a notary's acknowledgement instead of an affidavit. That is the only difference. The Secretary of the Interior construed that as a defect, and held that the applications were void because of that difference.

Then the act of 1935 came into effect, and the error was not discovered until after the act became effective. The Secretary held that under the new act he had no legal authority to grant relief although the applicants filed their new applications or affidavits in strict compliance with the former law.

It is a purely technical defect, and the Secretary in his report advises that he has no objection to issuing the permits under the law in effect at the time the applications were filed, and which the 1935 law attempted to safeguard, but which, because of the technical defect, could not be safeguarded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

O. W. WADDLE

The bill (S. 112) for the relief of O. W. Waddle was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 15 to 20, inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of O. W. Waddle, of Tishomingo, Miss., for injuries alleged to have resulted from a poisoning contracted while in the performance of his duties with the United States Engineer Service during the year 1926: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

LOWRENZA D. JOHNSTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 181) for the relief of Lowrenza D. Johnston, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$1,500"; in line 8, after the figures "26", to strike out "1934" and insert "1924"; and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lowrenza D. Johnston the sum of $1,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of the crushing and maiming of his left hand, received April 26, 1924, while serving a sentence as a military prisoner at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITION TO GOSHUTE INDIAN RESERVATION, UTAH

The bill (S. 2671) to reserve certain lands in Utah as an addition to the Goshute Indian Reservation was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all vacant unappropriated lands in the following-described area be, and they are hereby, added to the Goshute Indian Reservation, subject to all valid existing rights and claims:

Township 10 south, range 19 west, and fractional sections 1, 12, 13, 24, 25, and 36, township 10 south, range 20 west, Salt Lake meridian, Utah.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BUILDING, WORLEY, IDAHO

The bill (S. 2862) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Worley, Idaho, in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children in the town of Worley and county of Kootenai, Idaho, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $101,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 57, Kootenai County, Idaho, for the construction and equipment of a public-school building at Worley, Idaho: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of the town of Worley and county of Kootenai, Idaho, on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other school children of said districts: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

CHOCTAW INDIANS, MISSISSIPPI

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1478) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out section 5 and insert a new section 5, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to hear and determine all claims against the United States of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi based upon the provisions of any treaty or agreement with or statute of the United States, or upon the failure of the United States to recognize or fairly and adequately to provide for the settlement of any interest, vested or contingent, of the aforesaid Choctaw Indians in administering or liquidating the assets or property of the Choctaw Nation and allotting in severalty the lands of said nation and distributing its property to the individual citizens of said nation enrolled on its final aproved citizenship rolls, or for indemnification to the extent of the aggregate average value of the interest in any lands lost by them, as to which they shall be entitled to recover if the said court shall find that, by treaty provisions or by acts of Congress, they would have been entitled to share therein upon identification and removal to and residence in the Choctaw Nation, and that the performance of any of these necessary conditions prior to the final closing of the citizenship rolls was prevented by the United States or by its officers or agents by their neglect, misrepresentation, failure to provide adequate or timely aid in removal after advising them against or obstructing private aid in their removal and the giving of assurances that the Government would so provide for their removal, disapproval of a general roll of identification embracing more than 500 of the present claimants without consideration of the merits of their application for identification, failure to exercise reasonable diligence to give actual notice to many of said Indians of the limitations placed by Congress upon the exercise of their treaty rights, or by any other acts, conduct, or omissions not consistent with the rules of fair and honorable dealing with Indians under the circumstances and conditions then existing: Provided, however, That the jurisdiction conferred by this act shall not extend to or embrace any claim or claims of any nature against the Choctaw Nation of Indians in Oklahoma, but solely to claims against the United States asserted by those Indians hereby authorized to sue, and no sum or sums recovered in any action hereby authorized or sums appropriated in payment or settlement thereof shall ever be the subject of a charge against or claim for reimbursement out of any of the property or funds of the said Choctaw Nation of Indians in Oklahoma, directly or indirectly, or as a set-off or counter-claim against any claim or demand of said nation against the United States now or hereafter asserted, whether said claim or demand be of a legal or equitable nature, or for a gratuity.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of the action to be brought in said Court of Claims under the provisions of this act, the said Indians are hereby recognized as having the status of a separate band with authority in their representatives to employ counsel and to execute and file a petition or petitions setting forth their claims, and to prosecute said suit or suits to a final determination: Provided, however, That any question which may arise, or objection which may be made, as to the representative character of the organization so acting on behalf of said Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi, shall be heard and adjudicated by the said Court of Claims in the suit or suits hereby authorized to be brought.

SEC. 3. That any petition or petitions filed in the said Court of Claims under the provisions of this act shall be submitted to said court within 2 years from the date of this act, and said cause or causes shall thereupon be proceeded with in accordance with the law and practice of said court, and any claims not so presented within the said period of 2 years shall be thereafter forever barred: Provided, however, That, should the Court of Claims find that a petition so presented within said time is not presented by persons fairly representative of the said Indians, said court shall have the authority to permit amendments thereafter bringing proper parties before the court.

SEC. 4. That the hearing and adjudication of said claims shall be governed by equitable principles and shall fairly and finally determine the merits of the claims of said Indians and the obligations of the United States to them in administering the affairs of Indians subject to the guardianship and authority of the United States, in accordance with the customary action and precedents in the conduct of the estates of incompetent Indians, if the court shall find that said Mississippi Choctaw Indians were in fact as a group incompetent to manage their own affairs.

SEC. 5. That the amount of any judgment rendered in said cause when appropriated shall be set aside as a special fund to be paid or disbursed only upon such terms and conditions as Congress may by its subsequent legislation direct: Provided, however, That in entering its final judgment in said cause the Court of Claims shall hear and determine the amount, not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of any final award, which on a quantum meruit basis it shall find to be a reasonable compensation for the respective services and expenses of James E. Arnold as the representative, and of William E. Richardson and Thomas E. Rhodes as attorneys for said Indians, heretofore rendered or which may hereafter be rendered in the suit authorized by the provisions of this act, and shall as a part of said judgment award so much thereof as may be necessary to pay said compensation and reimbursement upon the basis herein directed to such person or persons, respectively, as the said court may find entitled thereto.

SEC. 6. That said court shall have further jurisdiction to hear and determine any counterclaims or counterdemands on the part of the United States against the said Choctaw Indans of Mississippi upon the said basis of equity and justice as directed in respect to the adjudication of all matters under the authority of this act.

SEC. 7. That either party aggrieved by any final decision of the said Court of Claims in said cause shall have the right to appeal such final decision to the Supreme Court of the United States as provided by law in respect to appeals from the Court of Claims to said Supreme Court: Provided, That the question of the validity of the claim or claims of said Choctaw Indians against the United States, or any counterclaims or demands of the United States against said Indians, the appellate jurisdiction of said Supreme Court of the United States is hereby expressly extended to the hearing and determination of an appeal by or on behalf of said Choctaw Indians or the United States.

SEC. 8. That for the purpose of this act the term "Choctaws of the State of Mississippi" shall include only those persons who on July 1, 1902, were residents in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana, having not less than one-eighth Choctaw Indian blood, and their descendants, and such persons as were thereafter identified on any approved roll of Mississippi Choctaws and their descendants, and shall not include any persons who were enrolled on the final citizenship rolls of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. F. LASSLY

The bill (S. 2476) for the relief of R. F. Lassly was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of R. F. Lassly, former chief disbursing clerk, Department of the Interior, for the payment of $30 to D. W. Robinson, Jr., of Columbia, S. C., for the preparation of a legal opinion at the request of the South Carolina State Advisory Board for the Public Works Administration on the application of the town of Summerton, S. C., for a loan from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, and for the payment of $75 to J. M. Cantez, Jr., of Columbia, S. C., for the preparation of a legal opinion at the request of the South Carolina State Advisory Board for the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, on the application of the city of Columbia, S. C., for a loan from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, which payments were made by vouchers no. 7127 and 7128, respectively, and disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

CARL E. PADGETT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1810) for the relief of Carl E. Padgett, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 2, line 3, after the word "disability", to strike out "resulting" and to insert "alleged to have resulted", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the requirements of sections 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in the case of Carl E. Padgett, of Kansas City, Mo., formerly employed as a ward attendant, United States Veterans' Hospital, Kansas City, Mo., and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to consider and act upon any claim filed by him under the provisions of such act, as amended, within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, for compensation for disability alleged to have resulted from disease contracted by him while in the performance of his duties as such employee; but compensation, if any, shall be paid from and after the date of enactment of this act. Such payments of compensation shall be made out of funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the payment of awards under the provisions of such act of September 7, 1916, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NELSON W. APPLE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2138) for the relief of Nelson W. Apple, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "the sum of", to strike out "$2,260" and insert "$1,000", and on page 2, line 1, after the word "signals", to strike out "in the middle of" and to insert "on", and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nelson W. Apple, Gallup, N. Mex., the sum of $1,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Nelson W. Apple on account of personal injuries received on the night of September 26, 1936, when the automobile in which he was riding ran into the rear of a truck, with trailer attached, in the service of the Office of Indian Affairs, such truck being parked without proper warning signals on the highway about 10 miles east of Gallup, N. Mex.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAMILLE CARMIGNANI

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Camille Carmignani, Gallup, N. Mex., the sum of $5,000. The payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Camille Carmignani on account of the death of her son, George Carmignani, who lost his life on the night of September 26, 1936, when the automobile which he was driving ran into the rear of a truck, with trailer attached, in the service of the Office of Indian Affairs, such truck being parked without proper warning signals on the highway about 10 miles east of Gallup, N. Mex.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REDEMPTION OF CERTAIN DOCUMENTARY REVENUE STAMPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 886) authorizing the redemption by the United States Treasury of certain documentary revenue stamps now held by L. J. Powers, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized", to strike out "to redeem certain documentary revenue stamps, to wit: One for $500, serial no. 928; one for $500, serial no. 3577; total, $1,000; said stamps having been purchased to be used upon a deed of conveyance, which was never executed, and now owned by and in the possession of L. J. Powers, of Waterloo, Iowa", and to insert "and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to L. J. Powers, of Waterloo, Iowa, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for redemption of certain documentary revenue stamps now in the possession of said L. J. Powers; one known as serial no. 928, for $500, and one known as serial no. 3577, for $500: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

And to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to L. J. Powers, of Waterloo, Iowa, the sum of $1,000 for the redemption of said documentary revenue stamps.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of L. J. Powers."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2904) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COMPENSATION TO UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES INJURED IN PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1802) to amend section 40 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after the words "and all", to strike out "to persons, other than independent contractors and their employees, employed on the Menominee Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin, subsequent to September 7, 1916, in operations conducted pursuant to the act entitled 'An act to authorize the cutting of timber, the manufacture and sale of lumber, and the preservation of the forests on the Menominee Indian Reservation in the State of Wisconsin', approved March 28, 1908, as amended" and insert "employees (other than independent contractors and their employees) any part of the compensation of whom is paid out of any Indian tribal funds held in trust by the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 40 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, is amended by inserting after the words "Panama Railroad Co.", the following: "and all employees (other than independent contractors and their employees) any part of the compensation of whom is paid out of any Indian tribal funds held in trust by the United States."

SEC. 2. Any award heretofore made by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission under such act of September 7, 1916, to persons coming within the purview of the first section hereof, for disability or death resulting from a personal injury sustained prior to the enactment of this act, shall be valid, if such award would be valid if made in respect to an injury or death sustained after the enactment of this act. Any claim for disability or death to any person coming within the purview of the first section hereof, if such disability or death occurred prior to the enactment of this act, may be filed at any time within 1 year after the enactment hereof.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, what about Calendar No. 1037?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that joint resolution was passed a short time ago, when a similar Senate joint resolution was reached on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire what change is made in existing law by the pending measure?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is my contention that this measure does not make any change in what has always been the policy of the United States Compensation Commission in relation to Indian employees or persons in the Bureau who are paid out of tribal funds so far as the compensation act applying to them is concerned; but for 20 years, in every instance that I know of, no injury was incurred by the Indians or employees of the Indian Service for which they were paid out of the tribal funds. They were compensated for under the Compensation Act.

In September 1936, however, the Compensation Commission reversed its policy which had existed ever since 1916, and held that Indians injured in lumber operations on the Menominee Indian Reservation were not entitled to compensation under the Compensation Act, because they were paid out of tribal funds. As I introduced the bill it was designed to take care only of that particular decision; but after we had the matter under consideration in the committee it was decided that the bill should apply to all similar instances. So, at the suggestion of the committee, the bill was amended to apply to all similar instances. It will simply define a policy which had existed for 20 years, from 1916 to 1936, and which is now in effect in many similar and analogous situations to that existing on the Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator, in view of the statement he has made, whether the Indians, if they were employed in the lumber regions for private individuals, would come within the terms of this measure?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; they must be employed and paid out of tribal funds in order to come within the provisions of the measure.

Mr. KING. And doing work for the benefit of the tribe, or in connection with the activities of the Government when it is dealing with the tribe?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF CERTAIN ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2871) for the protection of certain enlisted men of the Army, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the language contained in the second proviso on page 6 of the act of July 1, 1937 (Public, No. 176, 75th Cong., 1st sess.), or any other act, during the 3-year period following the enactment of this act, enlisted personnel of the Army who have legally declared their intention to become citizens, or who do so during their current enlistment, and who also agree to complete expeditiously their naturalization and become citizens of the United States may be reenlisted and receive the pay to which, except for the aforesaid proviso, they would otherwise be legally entitled: Provided, That Filipinos who were serving in the Army on July 1, 1937, may be reenlisted without regard to their citizenship status, and receive the pay to which otherwise legally entitled.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "enlistment", it is proposed to insert "or who have been discharged from the Army since July 1, 1937."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of my colleague whether Filipinos who served in the United States Army, and who returned to the Philippine Islands and are now being regarded as citizens of the Philippine Republic that is soon to be, will come within the terms of this bill and could be reenlisted in the United States Army.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I shall have to go back and make a statement in order that there may be an understanding of what the bill provides.

The appropriation act for 1937 carries a provision that none but citizens shall receive pay as civilians, or those in the Army. Since the 1st of July the enlistment periods of quite a number of noncommissioned officers who are Filipinos have come to an end. Exception has been made of them. The bill will make it possible for those to be continued. Among the noncommissioned officers there are many who have served for many years, some of them over 20 years, and they have taken out their first papers, but they have not completed their citizenship. The bill, of course, has the approval of and is recommended by the War Department, and is for the benefit of these particular classes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASE OF METAL FOR MINOR COINS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2794) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes relating to the purchase of metal for minor coins of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is similar to Calendar No. 1130, House bill 8025. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and will be considered at this time.

The bill (H. R. 8025) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes relating to the purchase of metal for minor coins of the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2794 is indefinitely postponed.

ISSUANCE OF NOTES IN AMOUNTS LESS THAN ONE DOLLAR

The bill (S. 2592) to repeal section 178 of the Criminal Code entitled "Issuing notes less than $1" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 178 of the Criminal Code reading "No person shall make, issue, circulate, or pay out any note, check, memorandum, token, or other obligation for a less sum than $1, intended to circulate as money or to be received or used in lieu of lawful money of the United States; and every person so offending shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both" (R. S., sec. 3583; March 4, 1909, ch. 321, sec. 178, 35 Stat. 1122; 18 U. S. C. 293) is hereby repealed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL CREDIT UNION ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2675) to amend certain sections of the Federal Credit Union Act approved June 26, 1934 (Public, No. 467, 73d Cong.), which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, after "(U. S. C.", to insert "1934 edition", and in line 6, before the word "Federal", to insert "Sec. 6", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the Federal Credit Union Act, approved June 26, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 12, sec. 1756), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Federal credit unions shall be under the supervision of the Governor, and shall make such financial reports to him (at least annually) as he may require. Each Federal credit union shall be subject to examination by, and for this purpose shall make its books and records accessible to, any person designated by the Governor. The Governor shall fix a scale of examination fees to be paid by Federal credit unions, giving due consideration to the time and expense incident to such examinations, and to the ability of Federal credit unions to pay such fees, which fees shall be assessed against and paid by each Federal credit union promptly after the completion of such examination. Examination fees collected under the provisions of this section shall be deposited to the credit of the special fund created by section 5 hereof, and shall be available for the purposes specified in said section 5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 13, after "(U. S. C.", to insert "1934 edition", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. Paragraph (7) of section 7 of the Federal Credit Union Act (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 12, sec. 1757) is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof, inserting a semicolon, and adding the following: "(c) in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Governor, in loans to other credit unions in the total amount not exceeding 25 percent of its paid-in and unimpaired capital and surplus; (d) and in shares or accounts of Federal savings and loan associations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 22, after "(U. S. C.", to insert "1934 edition", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. Section 16 of the Federal Credit Union Act (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 12, sec. 1766) is hereby amended by adding subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(e) The Governor is hereby authorized to make investigations and to conduct researches and studies of the problems of persons of small means in obtaining credit at reasonable rates of interest, and of the methods and benefits of cooperative saving and lending among such persons. He is further authorized to make reports of such investigations and to publish and disseminate the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 9, after "(U. S. C.," to insert "1934 edition", and in line 11, before the word "The", to insert "Sec. 18", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. Section 18 of the Federal Credit Union Act (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 12, sec. 1768) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. The Federal credit unions organized hereunder, their property, their franchises, capital, reserves, surpluses, and other funds, and their income shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, Territorial, or local taxing authority; except that any real property and any tangible personal property of such Federal credit unions shall be subject to Federal, State, Territorial, and local taxation to the same extent as other similar property is taxed. Nothing herein contained shall prevent holdings in any Federal credit union organized hereunder from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owners or holders thereof in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State or political subdivision thereof in which the Federal credit union is located: Provided, however, That the duty or burden of collecting or enforcing the payment of such tax shall not be imposed upon any such Federal credit union and the tax shall not exceed the rate of taxes imposed upon holdings in domestic credit unions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES IN MARYLAND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2761) authorizing the State of Maryland, by and through its State roads commission or the successors of said commission, to construct, maintain, and operate certain bridges across streams, rivers, and navigable waters which are wholly or partly within the State, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 15, after the word "Island", to insert "Provided, That the latter bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such bridge and approaches thereto"; on page 3, line 6, after the word "Fairfield", to insert "Provided, That the said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such bridge and approaches thereto"; and on page 4, line 15, after the word "other", to strike out "public board" and insert "corporation, public board", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Maryland by and through its State Roads Commission or the successors of said commission, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate any or all of the following bridges and approaches thereto, at points suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, to wit:

A bridge across the Potomac River from a point in Charles County at or near Ludlows Ferry to a point approximately opposite in the State of Virginia near Dahlgren and Colonial Beach.

A bridge across the Chesapeake Bay from a point in Baltimore County at or near Millers Island to a point approximately opposite in Kent County at or near Tolchester; or, as an alternate thereto, a bridge across the Chesapeake Bay from a point in Anne Arundel County at or near Annapolis to a point approximately opposite on Kent Island: Provided, That the latter bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such bridge and approaches thereto.

A bridge across the Susquehanna River from a point in Cecil County at or near Perryville to a point approximately opposite in Harford County at or near Havre de Grace.

A bridge across the Patapsco River south of the city of Baltimore from a point at or near the mouth of North West Branch to a point approximately opposite at or near Fairfield: Provided, That the said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such bridge and approaches thereto.

The times for commencing and completing the construction of any of the bridges authorized by this section shall expire 3 and 5 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

In lieu of any bridge hereinabove mentioned in this section, the State of Maryland by, and through its State roads commission or the successors of said commission be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a tunnel and approaches thereto at the same location; but no such tunnel shall be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for its construction, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such tunnel and accessory works. The word "bridge" or "bridges" as hereinafter used in this act shall be deemed to include and to apply to any such tunnel or tunnels, and the powers granted by and the conditions and limitations contained in this act shall be applicable in all respects to any such tunnel or tunnels.

The authority herein granted to construct, maintain, and operate any of the foregoing bridges shall not be deemed to be exclusive or to repeal the authority heretofore granted to any other corporation, public board, or agency to construct a bridge at the same location.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 8, line 1, after the word "bridges", to insert "(except as applied to any bridge over the Potomac River)", so as to make sections 2 to 8 read:

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Maryland and its State roads commission or the successors of said commission all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of any or all such bridges and their approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The State of Maryland, by and through its State Roads Commission or the successors of said commission, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over any or all such bridges and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the Act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. The State of Maryland, by and through its State Roads Commission or the successors of said commission, may unite or group all or such of said bridges into one or more separate projects for financing purposes as in its judgment shall be deemed practicable. If tolls are charged for the use of a bridge or bridges in a project, the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge or bridges embraced in the particular project shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund not to exceed an amount sufficient to pay the reasonable costs of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge or all of the bridges included in the particular project and their approaches under economical management, and not to exceed an amount sufficient in addition to the foregoing, to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the aggregate cost of the bridge or all of the bridges embraced in the particular project, and their approaches, including reasonable interest and financing costs, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period not exceeding 40 years from the completion of such bridge or from the date of completion of the last completed bridge in the particular project. The tolls derived from the bridge or bridges embraced in any particular project may be continued and paid into the appropriate sinking fund until all such costs of the bridge or bridges embraced in the particular project shall have been amortized. In any event, tolls may be charged on the basis aforesaid for transit over the bridge or bridges in each project for which revenue bonds of said State are issued, and such tolls may be continued and adjusted at such rates as may be necessary to pay such bonds with interest thereon and any lawful premium for the retirement thereof before maturity, subject only to the power of the Secretary of War or other authorized Federal authority to regulate such rates.

SEC. 5. The failure of the State of Maryland, by and through its State roads commission, to construct, maintain, and operate any one or more of the foregoing bridges, or to unite or group any two or more for financing purposes, shall in no wise affect its authority or powers hereby granted to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge or bridges as it may deem expedient, and any one of the bridges herein authorized may be constructed, maintained, and operated as a single project without uniting such bridge in a joint project with other bridges authorized herein.

SEC. 6. After a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of any bridge or bridges in any particular project or group or sufficient to pay the principal and interest on bonds issued for the purpose of financing such particular bridge or bridges or project or group shall have been provided to the extent hereinbefore required, the bridge or bridges included in any such project or group shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls: Provided, however, That tolls for the use of any such bridge or bridges may be continued thereafter in the event that such tolls shall have been pledged by the State roads commission to the payment of revenue bonds issued for any other bridge or bridges the construction of which shall have been authorized by Congress. An accurate record of the cost of each bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 7. The powers conferred by this act are supplementary and additional to all other authority and powers heretofore granted by law for the construction of the hereinbefore-named bridges, but all acts or parts of acts heretofore enacted, authorizing the construction of the hereinbefore-named bridges (except as applied to any bridge over the Potomac River) which are in conflict with the terms of this act be, and the same are, hereby repealed insofar as such conflict exists. Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing tolls to be charged for the use of any one or more of the hereinbefore-named bridges except as hereinabove provided, and nothing herein shall be construed so as to prohibit the State of Maryland from paying all or any part of the costs of the construction of any one or more of such bridges or their approaches, and any and all bonds issued for such purposes, from any funds of the State which may now or hereafter be made available for that purpose.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS FOR REFUNDS UNDER AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1681) to extend the time for filing claims for refunds under section 15 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments, in line 3, after the word "refund" to strike out "of processing taxes", and in line 5 to strike out "July 1, 1937", and insert "January 1, 1938", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for filing claims for refund under section 15 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended and reenacted, is hereby extended to January 1, 1938.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] as to the necessity for this measure.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, it is an entirely proper measure, merely extending the time for the filing of claims for refund to certain parties. The bill would merely give them an opportunity to present their claims. It does not require the payment of any claims.

Mr. KING. Is it approved by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 610) to amend the act entitled "An act conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad", approved June 24, 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ESSIE E. LEATHERWOOD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1660) for the relief of Essie E. Leatherwood, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, at the end of the bill, to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Essie E. Leatherwood, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., the sum of $5,000 in settlement of any and all claims against the Government on account of the death of her minor son, William Eugene Leatherwood, who died as a result of injuries received in an automobile collision with a truck owned by the Government and driven by Lauren Allen, agent and employee of the Government, in the service of the Division of Grazing, near what is commonly known as Five Points, on the public highway in Bernalillo County, N. Mex., on August 8, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOOD CONTROL IN LOWELL CREEK, ALASKA

The bill (S. 2258) to authorize a modification of the project for the control of floods in Lowell Creek, Alaska, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the project for the control of floods in Lowell Creek, Alaska, is hereby modified in accordance with the recommendation in House Document No. 154, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth therein, the work to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers.

RECORD OF NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF PASSENGERS ON VESSELS

The bill (S. 2874) requiring the deposit in a safe place ashore of the names and addresses of passengers sailing on vessels plying the inland or coastal waters of the United States was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after 10 days following the approval of this act it shall be the duty of the owner or operator of every vessel carrying passengers for hire upon the inland or coastal waters of the United States upon a voyage of one or more nights' duration, or upon a voyage for which the use of staterooms is sold, to deposit in a secure place ashore, prior to the sailing of said vessel, a complete list of the names and addresses of passengers sailing on said voyage.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation of the Department of Commerce to enforce the provisions of this act by appropriate inspection from time to time; and in case of failure to comply with said provisions, the Secretary of Commerce may levy a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500 against the owner or operator of a vessel so failing to comply, which fine may be collected by suit in admiralty in any court of competent jurisdiction.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2817) providing for the purchase by the United States of air-navigation facilities established with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce by air-mail contractors on their contract routes was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JUROR FEES IN FEDERAL COURTS

The bill (H. R. 8007) to restore the per-diem fee of $4 for service of jurors in Federal courts was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the twenty-third paragraph under the heading "Medical and Hospital Service" in the Department of Justice Appropriation Act, 1938, approved June 16, 1937, which continues for the fiscal year 1938 the reduction of jurors' fees from $4 to $3, is hereby repealed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2580) to amend existing laws so as to promote safety at sea by requiring the proper design, construction, maintenance, inspection, and operation of ships; to give effect to the Convention of Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, 1929, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

COURT AT SHAWNEE, OKLA.

The bill (H. R. 4605) relating to the accommodations for holding court at Shawnee, Okla., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Oklahoma at Shawnee, Okla.", approved May 13, 1936 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 28, sec. 182), is amended by striking out the period at the end of the proviso and adding the following: "until, subject to the recommendation of the Attorney General of the United States with reference to providing such rooms and accommodations for holding court at Shawnee, a public building shall have been erected or other Federal space provided for court purposes in said city."

REGULATIONS FOR PREVENTING COLLISIONS AT SEA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1273) to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Rules and Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, appearing in annex II, as amended, of the Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, signed at London May 31, 1929, and proclaimed by the President of the United States September 30, 1936, so far as the same are applicable are hereby adopted and approved as the rules and regulations of the United States applying to all public and private vessels of the United States upon the high seas and in all waters connected therewith navigable by seagoing vessels.

SEC. 2. Said rules and regulations shall become of full force and effect upon proclamation thereof by the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this is a very important matter. We ought to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is a bill to make effective certain means for preventing collisions at sea, under the recommendations of the International Congress held in 1929 dealing with the general subject. At that conference detailed provisions were adopted with respect to safety at sea. The conference considered as a part of its work the problem of signaling, the "language of the sea", if I may so express it, which is designed to minimize accidents arising from collisions. The conference did not adopt and make a part of the treaty those regulations. It simply approved the regulations and made recommendations to the nations of the world that the regulations be adopted.

We have on our statute books at the present time the act of 1890, which deals with the whole subject matter. The act of 1890 embodied previous international agreements with respect to what I call the "language of the sea", the meaning of lights and signals, rules for determining the rights-of-way of vessels approaching and crossing and overtaking each other, and all that sort of thing.

The conference made recommendation to the nations of the world that they adopt the provisions and regulations there worked out. This bill simply adopts the regulations there recommended and requires the President to make proclamation of the regulations. They become effective upon the proclamation of the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, we are all in favor of something of this kind. What nations have adopted these regulations?

Mr. WHITE. I cannot name the various nations which have done so, but I think most of the maritime nations of the world have adopted the rules and are following them in the navigation of their vessels.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator ascertain and place in the RECORD tomorrow the names of the nations which have adopted similar regulations?

Mr. WHITE. I shall undertake to get the information and insert it in the RECORD tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section 3, as follows:

The act of Congress approved August 19, 1890, entitled "An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea" and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the rules and regulations contained in said annex II are hereby repealed, said repeal to become effective upon issuance of the proclamation by the President authorized by section 2 hereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WELTON B. HUTTON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4536) to provide for the holding of an examination by the Board of Optometry of the District of Columbia for a license to practice optometry in the District of Columbia for Welton B. Hutton, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitations relating to the time required to be engaged in the practice of optometry as set forth in the act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of optometry", District of Columbia, 1924, the Board of Optometry in and for the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to hold an examination for a license to practice optometry in the District of Columbia for Welton B. Hutton, Washington, D. C., in accordance with the other provisions of the aforesaid act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] explain the bill?

Mr. KING. Dr. Hutton has been practicing more than 12 years in the District and has an excellent reputation for integrity, honor, and ability. The bill merely authorizes the board to give him a special examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

OPERATION OF AUTOMATIC MERCHANDISE VENDING MACHINES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 6446) to prohibit in the District of Columbia the operation of any automatic merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle designed to receive or be operated by lawful coin of the United States of America, or a token provided by the person entitled to the coin contents of such receptacle in connection with the sale, use, or enjoyment of property or service by means of slugs, spurious coins, tricks, or devices not authorized by the person entitled to the coin contents thereof; and to prohibit in the District of Columbia the manufacture, sale, offering for sale, advertising for sale, distribution, or possession for such use of any token, slug, false or counterfeited coin, or any device or substance whatsoever except tokens authorized by the person entitled to the coin contents of such receptacle; and providing a penalty for violation thereof was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who shall operate or cause to be operated, or who shall attempt to operate or attempt to cause to be operated, in the District of Columbia any automatic merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle, designed to receive or be operated by lawful coin of the United States of America or a token provided by the person entitled to the coin contents of such receptacle, in furtherance of or in connection with the sale, use, or enjoyment of property or service, by means of a slug or any false token, counterfeited, mutilated, sweated or foreign coin, or by any means, method, trick, or device whatsoever not authorized by the person entitled to the coin contents of such merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle; or any person who shall take, obtain, or receive from or in connection with any such merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle described in this section any goods, wares, merchandise, gas, electric current, or other article of value, or the use or enjoyment of any transportation or any telephone or telegraph facilities or service, or of any musical instrument, phonograph, or other property, in the District of Columbia, without depositing in and surrendering to such merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle described in this section lawful coin of the United States of America to the amount required therefor by the person entitled to the coin contents of any such merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle, or tokens provided and to the amount required by the person entitled to the coin contents of such legal receptacle, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not to exceed 6 months, or by both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. Any person who, with intent to cheat or defraud the owner, lessee, licensee, or other person entitled to the coin contents of any automatic merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle, designed to receive or be operated by lawful coin of the United States of America or a token provided by the person entitled to the coin contents of such legal receptacle, in furtherance of or in connection with the sale, use, or enjoyment of property or service, or any person who, knowing or having cause to believe that the same is intended for fraudulent or unlawful use on the part of the purchaser, donee, or user thereof, shall manufacture, sell, offer to sell, advertise for sale, give away, or possess, in the District of Columbia, any token, slug, false or counterfeit coin, or any device or substance whatsoever intended or calculated to be placed, deposited, or used in the operation of any such merchandise vending machine, turnstile, coin-box telephone, or other legal receptacle shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not to exceed 6 months, or by both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. The word "person", where used in this act, shall be construed to include any individual, individuals, copartnerships, associations, groups, and corporations.

INSPECTION OF MOTOR VEHICLES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 2194) to provide for the semiannual inspection of all motor vehicles in the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That at the time of the registration of each motor vehicle there shall be levied and collected a fee known as the "inspection fee" of $1 for the calendar year 1938 for each motor vehicle registered in the District of Columbia, including electrics, and that during 1939 and each year thereafter inspection fee thus levied shall be 50 cents on each vehicle.

SEC. 2. The inspection fee shall be paid to the collector of taxes and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. The annual estimates of appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1938 and succeeding fiscal years shall include estimates of appropriations for the construction and/or rental and/or leasing of ground and buildings, the purchase of equipment and supplies, and the payment of salaries of mechanics, laborers, clerks, and other employees to carry out the semiannual inspection of all motor vehicles in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. All motor vehicles owned and officially used by the Government of the United States or by the government of the District of Columbia or by the representatives of foreign governments, shall be subject to semiannual inspection, such inspections to be furnished without charge.

SEC. 5. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia or their designated agent may refuse to register any motor vehicle or trailer which has not been inspected as required, or which is unsafe or improperly equipped, or otherwise unfit to be operated, and for like reason they may revoke or suspend any registration already made: Provided, That the provisions of section 13 (a) of the Traffic Acts, District of Columbia, shall be applicable in all cases where registration is refused, revoked, or suspended under the terms of this act.

SEC. 6. Any individual, partnership, firm, or corporation found guilty of using or permitting the use of any unregistered motor vehicle or trailer, or who is found guilty of using or permitting the use of the same during the period for which any such vehicle's registration is revoked or suspended under the terms of this act shall, for each such offense, be fined not more than $300.

SEC. 7. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make such regulations as in their judgment are necessary for the administration of this act, and may affix thereto such reasonable fines and penalties as in their judgment are necessary to enforce such regulations.

PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 6696) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", known as the "Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928", approved February 27, 1929, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia", known as the "Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928", approved February 27, 1929, be amended by striking from the first paragraph of section 24 thereof the sentence reading as follows: "After 5 years after the approval of this act the commission shall issue no license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia on the basis of a license to practice medicine and surgery or to practice midwifery, in the District of Columbia, in force on the date of its approval."

PROTECTION OF BUYERS OF POTATOES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 6242) to protect the buyers of potatoes in the District of Columbia was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFENSES AGAINST PROPERTY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6388) to amend subchapter 2 of chapter 19 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to offenses against property.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, these blind titles convey no information. I ask for an explanation of this bill.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] reported the bill from the committee, and I am sure he will explain it.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, the District Commissioners and the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia drafted this bill and brought it before the District Committee. It appears that as the laws now stand in the District there is difficulty in arriving at the distinction between grand and petit larceny. The purpose was to simplify the procedure, provide what is grand larceny and what is petit larceny, and fix the penalty for each of them. The same thing is true as to obtaining money under false pretenses.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I have no further objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASE IN AGE OF CONSENT IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (H. R. 5462) to increase the age of consent for marriage in the District of Columbia to 18 years of age in the case of males and 16 years of age in the case of females was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DRS. M. L. PERRY AND N. E. JACKSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1732) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. M. L. Perry, of Lumberton, N. C., and to Dr. N. E. Jackson, of Laurinburg, N. C., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to issue a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. M. L. Perry, of Lumberton, N. C., and to Dr. N. E. Jackson, of Laurinburg, N. C., in accordance with the other provisions of the first paragraph of section 24 of the Healing Arts Practice Act, District of Columbia, 1928.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was acting in good faith when I said I thought the bill of which I spoke was the last bill of its kind. The bills about to be acted on are the last of these physicians' bills.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Have the bills been recommended by the District authorities?

Mr. KING. Oh, yes; by the Commissioners and by the medical board. No measure comes from our committee which is not recommended by the Commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. FREDERICK W. DIDIER

The bill (H. R. 4876) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Frederick W. Didier was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. WILLIAM JUSTIN OLDS

The bill (H. R. 4982) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. William Justin Olds was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. RUSSELL V. PEMBERTON

The bill (H. R. 5110) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Dr. Russell V. Pemberton was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARBORING OF PERSONS CHARGED WITH CRIME

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1547) to amend the law relating to the harboring of persons charged with crime, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "shall", to strike out "rescue or attempt to rescue" and insert "take or attempt to take", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 141 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 246) be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 141. Whoever shall take or attempt to take from the custody of any officer or person lawfully assisting him any person arrested upon a warrant or other process issued under the provisions of any law of the United States, or shall, directly or indirectly, aid, abet, or assist any person so arrested to escape from the custody of such officer or other person, or shall harbor or conceal any person for whose arrest a warrant or process has been so issued, for the purpose of preventing his discovery or arrest, after notice or knowledge of the fact that a warrant or process has been issued for the apprehension of such person, or shall harbor or conceal any person who has committed an offense against the United States, for the purpose of preventing his discovery or arrest, knowing that such person has committed such offense, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think I should make a short explanation of this bill. I ask that the committee amendment be rejected, because upon a careful investigation of the Criminal Code it has been found that the original language of the law reads "rescue or attempt to rescue"; and since that language has been construed by the courts, I think it is safer to retain the original language. Therefore, I ask that the committee amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRAND JURY EXTENSIONS

The bill (S. 481) to permit grand-jury extensions to be ordered by any district judge was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 284 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 421), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 284. No grand jury shall be summoned to attend any district court unless the judge thereof, in his own discretion or upon a notification by the district attorney that such jury will be needed, orders a venire to issue therefor. If the United States attorney for any district which has a city or borough containing at least 300,000 inhabitants shall certify in writing to a district judge of the district that the exigencies of the public service require it, the judge may, in his discretion, also order a venire to issue for a second grand jury. If the United States attorney for the southern district of New York shall certify in writing to the senior district judge of said district that the exigencies of the public service require it, said judge may, in his discretion, also order a venire to issue for a third grand jury. The district court may in term order a grand jury to be summoned at such time, and to serve such time as it may direct, whenever, in its judgment, it may be proper to do so. A district judge may, upon request of the district attorney or of the grand jury or on his own motion, by order authorize any grand jury to continue to sit during the term succeeding the term at which such request is made, solely to finish investigations begun but not finished by such grand jury, but no grand jury shall be permitted to sit in all during more than three terms. Nothing herein shall operate to extend beyond the time permitted by law the imprisonment before indictment found of a person accused of crime or offense, or the time during which a person so accused may be held under recognizance before indictment found."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7561) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes", approved March 24, 1934, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks for an explanation of House bill 7561.

Mr. McKELLAR. If not, let it go over.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

The bill (H. R. 4343) to amend section 77B of the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, as amended, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROCEEDINGS IN ADOPTION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2281) to regulate proceedings in adoption in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. KING. That is a good bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, line 13, after the words "adoptee is", to strike out "a minor" and insert "under 21 years of age"; in line 15, after the word "attached", to insert "which shall be served in such manner as the court shall therein direct"; in line 16, after the words "directed to", to insert "all parties to the decision who do not appear and consent to the adoption and to"; and in line 22, after the word "within", to insert "a period not in excess of", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia to hear and determine petitions and decrees of adoption of any adult or child (hereinafter called adoptee) with authority to make such rules, not inconsistent with this act, as shall bring fully before the court for consideration the interests of the adoptee, the natural parents, the petitioner, and any other properly interested party. No petition shall be considered by the court unless petitioner's spouse joins in the petition or consents to the adoption.

Jurisdiction is conferred if either of the following circumstances exist:

(1) If petitioner is a legal resident of the District of Columbia;

(2) If petitioner has actually resided in the District of Columbia for at least 1 year.

The petition shall state, so far as known, the name, age, race, occupation, and address of the natural parents, when known, and of the petitioner, whether the petitioner is married or single, the age and sex of the adoptee, the property owned by the adoptee, and such other facts as the court may require.

The court shall thereupon, if the adoptee is under 21 years of age, issue a rule with copy of the petition attached, which shall be served in such manner as the court shall therein direct, directed to all parties to the petition who do not appear and consent to the adoption, and to the Board of Public Welfare to verify the allegations of the petition, to make a thorough investigation for the purpose of ascertaining if the adoptee is a proper subject for adoption and if the home of the petitioner is a suitable one for the adoptee and within a period not in excess of 60 days to report its findings with recommendations to the court. If an investigation already has been made by a qualified social agency, the Board of Public Welfare shall accept it instead of making one itself.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 6, after the word "age", to strike out "the legal guardian of adoptee, if any"; in line 17, after the word "parents", to insert "or adoptive parents by a previous adoption,"; in line 22, after the word "order", to strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "where", to insert "it shall appear to the court that they have abandoned the adoptee and voluntarily failed to contribute to his or her support for a period of at least 1 year next preceding the date of the filing of the petition; or (4) where", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. If adoptee is under 21 years of age, no decree of adoption shall be made unless the court shall find that the following persons have consented to the adoption: Adoptee, if 14 or more years of age; and the natural parents or adoptive parents by a previous adoption, if living. The consent of the father of an adoptee born out of wedlock shall not be necessary unless he has both acknowledged the adoptee and contributed voluntarily to its support. The consent of a parent who is a minor shall not be voidable because of that minority.

If adoptee shall have attained the age of 21 years or over, the only consents which shall be required are those of such adoptee, and its spouse, if any.

The consent of a natural parent, or parents, or adoptive parents by a previous adoption, may be dispensed with (1) where after such notice as the court shall direct it shall appear to the court that such person or persons cannot be located; (2) where they have been permanently deprived of custody of the adoptee by court order; (3) where it shall appear to the court that they have abandoned the adoptee and voluntarily failed to contribute to his or her support for a period of at least 1 year next preceding the date of the filing of the petition; or (4) where investigation has shown to the satisfaction of the court extraordinary cause why such consent should be dispensed with.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 13, after the words "shall be", to strike out "signed by the court" and insert "entered"; in line 15, after the words "of the", to strike out "petition and if" and insert "petition. If, however"; and in line 17, after the word "court", to strike out "shall" and insert "may", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. After considering the petition, the consents, and such evidence as the parties and any other properly interested person may wish to present, the court may enter a final decree of adoption if it is satisfied (a) that adoptee is physically, mentally, and otherwise suitable for adoption by the petitioner; (b) that the petitioner is fit and able to give the adoptee a proper home and education; and (c) that the change will be for the best interests of adoptee.

No final decree of adoption shall be entered unless the adoptee shall have been living with the adoptor at least 6 months prior to the filing of the petition. If, however, it shall appear in the interests of the adoptee, the court may enter an interlocutory decree for adoption, which decree shall by its terms automatically become a final decree of adoption on a day therein named, which shall not be more than 6 months from the entry of such interlocutory decree unless such decree shall be set aside for cause shown. If it shall appear in the interests of the adoptee, the Board of Public Welfare shall visit the adoptee during the period of the interlocutory decree at regular intervals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 5, line 10, after the word "all", to strike out "legal"; in line 17, after the word "adoptee", to strike out "its" and insert "his or her"; and in line 18, after the word "off" and the period, to insert "In the event one of the natural parents shall be the spouse of petitioner, then the rights and relations as between adoptee, such natural parent, and his or her parents and collateral relatives, including mutual rights of inheritance and succession, shall in nowise be altered", so as to make sections 4 and 5 read:

SEC. 4. Notice of a final decree of adoption shall be sent to the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the Health Department. This Bureau shall cause to be made a new record of the birth in the new name and with the names of the adoptor and shall then cause to be sealed and filed the original birth certificate with the order of the court and such sealed package shall be opened only by order of court.

SEC. 5. Entry of a final decree of adoption shall establish the relation of natural parent and natural child between adoptor and adoptee for all purposes including mutual rights of inheritance and succession the same as if adoptee was born of adoptor, except that adoptee shall not inherit from collateral relatives of or the parents of adoptor although such collateral relatives and parents of adoptor shall have the right of inheritance from adoptee. All rights and duties including those of inheritance and succession between adoptee, his or her natural parents, their issue, collateral relatives, and so forth, shall be cut off. In the event one of the natural parents shall be the spouse of petitioner, then the rights and relations as between adoptee, such natural parent, and his or her parents and collateral relatives, including mutual rights of inheritance and succession, shall in nowise be altered.

The family name of the adoptee shall be changed to that of adoptor unless the decree shall otherwise provide, and the given name of the adoptee may be fixed or changed at the same time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 6, line 23, after "395", to insert "(title 15, sec. 1, New Code)", so as to make sections 6 and 7 read:

SEC. 6. Records and papers in adoption proceedings, after the petition is filed and prior to the entry of a final decree, shall be open to inspection by the parties or their attorneys, and members of the Board of Public Welfare or their agents, upon order of the court. Upon the entry of a final decree the Board of Public Welfare and the clerk of the court shall seal all papers in the proceedings. Said seals shall not be broken, and said papers shall not be inspected by any person, including the parties to the proceeding, except upon order of the court. Application for leave to inspect papers in adoption proceedings shall be by petition and shall be granted only for extraordinary cause shown. The court may appoint a master to consider and investigate the facts upon which such a petition is based, who shall make his findings and recommendations to the court.

The clerk of the court shall keep a docket of all adoption proceedings which shall only be inspected upon order of the court upon the same conditions hereinabove set out for the inspection of papers.

SEC. 7. Section 395 (title 15, sec. 1, New Code) of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia is hereby repealed. The provisions hereof shall have no retroactive effect and shall not be construed as affecting in any way the rights and relations obtained by any decree of adoption entered heretofore, and all proceedings instituted and pending on the date of this enactment shall be carried to their final determination in accordance with the provisions of section 395 as if this act had not been enacted, and all orders and decrees entered therein shall remain valid and binding on all parties thereby affected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SMALL CLAIMS COURT FOR THE DISTRICT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1835) establishing a small claims and conciliation branch in the municipal court of the District of Columbia for improving the administration of justice in small cases and providing assistance to needy litigants, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 4, page 2, line 9, after the word "cases", to insert "within the jurisdiction of the court"; in line 11, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$100" and insert "$50"; and in line 14, after the word "authority", to insert "with the consent of all parties"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. (a) Said branch shall have exclusive jurisdiction over all cases within the jurisdiction of the court in which the amount of the plaintiff's claim or the claimed value of personal property in controversy does not exceed $50, exclusive of interest, attorneys' fees, protest fees, and costs.

(b) In order to effect the speedy settlement of controversies said branch shall also have authority with the consent of all parties to settle cases, irrespective of the amount involved, by the methods of arbitration and conciliation. The judges of said branch may also act as referees or arbitrators, either alone or in conjunction with other persons, under title 24, chapter 5, sections 91 to 109, inclusive, of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, or under the United States Arbitration Act of February 12, 1925 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 9, secs. 1 to 15), or otherwise. No judge, officer, or other employee of the municipal court shall receive or accept any fee or compensation in addition to his salary for services performed under this subsection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 1, after the word "constitute", to insert "prima facie"; under the subhead "municipal court of the District of Columbia—small claims and conciliation branch", after the word "clerk" and the comma, to strike out "shall" and insert "may, if action is on a contract, express or implied,"; on page 5, after the word "foregoing", to strike out "verified"; and at the end of the form of affidavit to insert "clerk of the small claims and conciliation branch, municipal court", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. (a) Actions shall be commenced in said branch by the filing of a statement of claim, in concise form and free of technicalities. The plaintiff or his agent shall verify the statement of claim by oath or affirmation in the form herein provided, or its equivalent, and shall affix his signature thereto. The clerk of said branch shall, at the request of any individual, prepare the statement of claim and other papers required to be filed in an action in this branch, but his services shall not be available to any corporation, partnership, or association in the preparation of such statements or other papers. A copy of the statement of claim and verification shall be made a part of the notice to be served upon the defendant named therein. The mode of service shall be by the United States marshal, as provided by law; or by registered mail with return receipt; or by any person not a party to or otherwise interested in the suit, especially appointed by the judge for that purpose.

(b) When notice is to be served by registered mail, the clerk shall enclose a copy of the statement of claim, verification, and notice in an envelope addressed to the defendant, prepay the postage with funds obtained from plaintiff, and mail the same forthwith, noting on the records the day and hour of mailing. When such receipt is returned, the clerk shall attach the same to the original statement of claim, and it shall constitute prima-facie evidence of service upon the defendant.

(c) When served by a private individual, as above provided, he shall make proof of service by affidavit before the clerk, showing the time and place of such service.

(d) When served by the marshal, or by registered mail, the actual cost of service shall be taxable as costs. When served by an individual, as above provided, the cost of service, if any, shall not be taxable as costs.

(e) The statement of claim, verification, and notice shall be in the following or equivalent form, and shall be in lieu of any forms now employed and of any form of summons now provided by law:

You are hereby notified that _____ has made a claim and is requesting judgment against you in the sum of _____ dollars ($_____), as shown by the foregoing statement. The court will hold a hearing upon this claim on _____ at _____ m. in the small claims and conciliation branch (address of court).

You are required to be present at the hearing in order to avoid a judgment by default.

If you have witnesses, books, receipts, or other writings bearing on this claim, you should bring them with you at the time of the hearing.

If you wish to have witnesses summoned, see the clerk at once for assistance.

If you admit the claim, but desire additional time to pay, you must come to the hearing in person and state the circumstances to the court.

You may come with or without an attorney.

[SEAL] _____
Clerk of the Small Claims and Conciliation Branch, Municipal Court.

(f) The foregoing verification shall entitle the plaintiff to a judgment by default, without further proof, upon failure of defendant to appear, when the claim of the plaintiff is for a liquidated amount; when the amount is unliquidated, plaintiff shall be required to present proof of his claim.

(g) The clerk shall furnish the plaintiff with a memorandum of the day and hour set for the hearing, which time shall be not less than 5 nor more than 15 days from the date of the filing of the action. All actions filed in this branch shall be made returnable herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 6, line 9, after the word "for", to strike out "commencing" and insert "issuing summons and copies, trial, judgment, and satisfaction in"; and in line 11, after the figure "$1" and the period, to insert "other fees shall be as the court shall prescribe", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. The fee for issuing summons and copies, trial, judgment, and satisfaction in an action in said branch shall be not more than $1. Other fees shall be as the court shall prescribe. The judge sitting in said branch shall have full discretionary power to waive the prepayment of costs or the payment of costs accruing during the action upon the sworn statement of the plaintiff or upon other satisfactory evidence of his inability to pay such costs. When costs are so waived the notation to be made on the records of said branch shall be "Prepayment of costs waived", or "Costs waived." The term "pauper" or "in forma pauperis" shall not be employed in said branch. If a party shall fail to pay accrued costs, though able to do so, the judge of said branch shall have power to deny said party the right to file any new case in said branch while such costs remain unpaid, and likewise to deny such litigant the right to proceed further in any case pending in said branch. The award of costs shall be according to the discretion of the judge who may include therein the reasonable cost of bonds and undertakings, and other reasonable expenses incident to the suit, incurred by either party.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 4, to strike out:

SEC. 8. The judge shall have full power in his discretion to award costs in a sum to be fixed by said judge, but not in any event to exceed the sum of $25, against any party, whether the prevailing party or not, who has set up a frivolous, vexatious, or false claim, or defense, or has made an unfair, insufficient, or misleading answer, or has in any other manner sought to hamper a party or interfere with the judge in securing a speedy determination of the claim upon its just merits; and to enter judgment and issue execution for such an award of costs or to set the same off against the affirmative award of costs, as justice may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 16, to change the section number from 9 to 8, and in line 20, after the word "conciliation" and the period, to strike out "No attorney shall have the right to represent any party in such effort at conciliation", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. (a) On the return day mentioned in section 5 hereof, or such later time as the judge may set, the trial shall be had. Immediately prior to the trial of any case the judge shall make an earnest effort to settle the controversy by conciliation. If the judge fails to induce the parties to settle their differences without a trial, he shall proceed with the hearing on the merits pursuant to section 9 (b) of this act.

(b) The parties and witnesses shall be sworn. The judge shall conduct the trial in such manner as to do substantial justice between the parties according to the rules of substantive law, and shall not be bound by the statutory provisions or rules of practice, procedure, pleading, or evidence, except such provisions relating to privileged communications.

(c) If the defendant fails to appear, judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff by default as above provided, or under any rule or rules of the municipal court now existing or hereafter promulgated, or on ex-parte proof. If the plaintiff fails to appear, the suit may be dismissed for want of prosecution, or a nonsuit may be ordered, or defendant may proceed to a trial on the merits, or the case may be continued or returned to the files for further proceedings on a later date, as the judge may direct. If both parties fail to appear, the judge may return the case to the files, or order the same dismissed for want of prosecution, or make any other just and proper disposition thereof, as justice may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, to change the section number from 11 to 10; in line 12, after the word "case", to insert "if all parties consent"; in line 13, after the word "or", to strike out "may" and insert "in the absence of such consent shall"; and in line 14, after the word "court", to strike out the comma and "as justice may require" and insert "for trial", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. Whenever the interests of justice shall seem to require it, and all parties consent thereto, any judge of the municipal court may certify any case to said branch for conciliation, or to endeavor to obtain a complete or partial agreed statement of facts or stipulation, which will simplify and expedite the ultimate trial of the case. The trial of any such case if all parties consent may be completed in said branch or in the absence of such consent shall be recertified to another judge of the court for trial.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, to change the section number from 13 to 12; and in the same line, before the words "judge shall", to strike out "The" and insert "In all cases where the judgment is founded in whole or in part on a claim for wages or personal services the", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. In all cases where the judgment is founded in whole or in part on a claim for wages or personal services the judge shall, upon motion of the party obtaining judgment, order the appearance of the party against whom such judgment has been entered, but not more often than once each four weeks for oral examination under oath as to his financial status and his ability to pay such judgment, and the judge shall make such supplementary orders as may seem just and proper to effectuate the payment of the judgment upon reasonable terms.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 22, to insert:

SEC. 18. In any case filed or pending in said branch in which any party is entitled to demand a trial by jury and files such demand, the case shall be assigned to and tried in one of the regular branches of the court under the procedure provided for such trials.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 3, to strike out:

SEC. 19. Nothing in this act contained shall deprive any party of the constitutional right to trial by jury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the municipal court of the District of Columbia a small claims and conciliation branch.

SEC. 2. Whenever used in this act—

(a) "Branch" means the small claims and conciliation branch of the municipal court, herein created.

(b) "Judge" means the judge or judges presiding in said branch.

(c) "Clerk" means the clerk or any assistant clerk of said municipal court assigned to said branch.

(d) "Court" means the municipal court of the District of Columbia and the several judges thereof.

SEC. 3. One or more judges of the municipal court shall serve in said branch for such periods and in such order of rotation as the judges of the court may determine.

SEC. 4. (a) Said branch shall have exclusive jurisdiction over all cases within the jurisdiction of the court in which the amount of the plaintiff's claim or the claimed value of personal property in controversy does not exceed $50 exclusive of interest, attorneys' fees, protest fees, and costs.

(b) In order to effect the speedy settlement of controversies said branch shall also have authority with the consent of all parties to settle cases, irrespective of the amount involved, by the methods of arbitration and conciliation. The judges of said branch may also act as referees or arbitrators, either alone or in conjunction with other persons, under title 24, chapter 5, sections 91 to 109, inclusive, of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, or under the United States Arbitration Act of February 12, 1925 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 9, secs. 1 to 15), or otherwise. No judge, officer, or other employee of the municipal court shall receive or accept any fee or compensation in addition to his salary for services performed under this subsection.

SEC. 5. (a) Actions shall be commenced in said branch by the filing of a statement of claim, in concise form and free of technicalities. The plaintiff or his agent shall verify the statement of claim by oath or affirmation in the form herein provided, or its equivalent, and shall affix his signature thereto. The clerk of said branch shall, at the request of any individual, prepare the statement of claim and other papers required to be filed in an action in this branch, but his services shall not be available to any corporation, partnership, or association in the preparation of such statements or other papers. A copy of the statement of claim and verification shall be made a part of the notice to be served upon the defendant named therein. The mode of service shall be by the United States marshal, as provided by law; or by registered mail with return receipt; or by any person not a party to or otherwise interested in the suit, especially appointed by the judge for that purpose.

(b) When notice is to be served by registered mail, the clerk shall enclose a copy of the statement of claim, verification, and notice in an envelope addressed to the defendant, prepay the postage with funds obtained from plaintiff, and mail the same forthwith, noting on the records the day and hour of mailing. When such receipt is returned, the clerk shall attach the same to the original statement of claim, and it shall constitute prima-facie evidence of service upon the defendant.

(c) When served by a private individual, as above provided, he shall make proof of service by affidavit before the clerk, showing the time and place of such service.

(d) When served by the marshal, or by registered mail, the actual cost of service shall be taxable as costs. When served by an individual, as above provided, the cost of service, if any, shall not be taxable as costs.

(e) The statement of claim, verification, and notice shall be in the following or equivalent form, and shall be in lieu of any forms now employed and of any form of summons now provided by law:

If the judge fails to induce the parties to settle their differences without a trial, he shall proceed with the hearing on the merits pursuant to section 9 (b) of this act.

(b) The parties and witnesses shall be sworn. The judge shall conduct the trial in such manner as to do substantial justice between the parties according to the rules of substantive law, and shall not be bound by the statutory provisions or rules of practice, procedure, pleading, or evidence, except such provisions relating to privileged communications.

(c) If the defendant fails to appear, judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff by default as above provided, or under any rule or rules of the municipal court now existing or hereafter promulgated, or on ex-parte proof. If the plaintiff fails to appear, the suit may be dismissed for want of prosecution, or a nonsuit may be ordered, or defendant may proceed to a trial on the merits, or the case may be continued or returned to the files for further proceedings on a later date, as the judge may direct. If both parties fail to appear, the judge may return the case to the files, or order the same dismissed for want of prosecution, or make any other just and proper disposition thereof, as justice may require.

SEC. 9. If the defendant asserts a set-off or counterclaim, the judge may, in his discretion, require a formal plea of set-off to be filed, or may waive the same. If plaintiff requires time to prepare his defense against such counterclaim or set-off, the judge may, in his discretion, continue the case for such purpose. If the set-off or counterclaim be for more than the jurisdictional limit of said branch but within the jurisdictional limit of this court, the action shall nevertheless remain in said branch and be tried therein in its entirety.

SEC. 10. Whenever the interests of justice shall seem to require it, and all parties consent thereto, any judge of the municipal court may certify any case to said branch for conciliation, or to endeavor to obtain a complete or partial agreed statement of facts or stipulation, which will simplify and expedite the ultimate trial of the case. The trial of any such case if all parties consent may be completed in said branch or in the absence of such consent shall be recertified to another judge of the court for trial.

SEC. 11. When judgment is to be rendered and the party against whom it is to be entered requests it, the judge shall inquire fully into the earnings and financial status of such party and shall have full discretionary power to stay the entry of judgment, and to stay execution, except in cases involving wage claims, and to order partial payments in such amounts, over such periods, and upon such terms, as shall seem just under the circumstances and as will assure a definite and steady reduction of the judgment until it is finally and completely satisfied. Upon a showing that such party has failed to meet any installment payment without just excuse, the stay of execution shall be vacated. When no stay of execution has been ordered or when such stay of execution has been vacated as provided herein, the party in whose favor the judgment has been entered shall have the right to avail himself of all remedies otherwise available in said municipal court for the enforcement of such judgment.

SEC. 12. In all cases where the judgment is founded in whole or in part on a claim for wages or personal services the judge shall, upon motion of the party obtaining judgment, order the appearance of the party against whom such judgment has been entered, but not more often than once each four weeks for oral examination under oath as to his financial status and his ability to pay such judgment, and the judge shall make such supplementary orders as may seem just and proper to effectuate the payment of the judgment upon reasonable terms.

SEC. 13. The clerk of said branch shall maintain an accurate daily record of all transactions had therein and shall prepare and transmit to the Attorney General of the United States a monthly report in detail showing the number and nature of all such transactions.

SEC. 14. All provisions of law relating to the municipal court and the rules of the municipal court shall apply to the practice herein so far as they may be made applicable and are not in conflict with the provisions of this act or with the rules hereunder promulgated. In case of conflict the provisions of this act and the rules hereunder promulgated shall control.

SEC. 15. The judges of the municipal court shall forthwith make rules to provide for a simple, inexpensive, and speedy procedure to effectuate the purposes of this act and shall have power to prescribe, modify, and improve the forms to be used therein, from time to time, to insure the proper administration of justice and to accomplish the purposes of this act.

SEC. 16. The small-claims branch with a judge in attendance shall be open for the transaction of business on every day of the year except Saturday afternoons, Sundays, and legal holidays, and shall also hold at least one night session during each week.

SEC. 17. Nothing in this act contained shall deprive any party of the right now existing to petition the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia for a writ of error to review any judgment rendered in said branch of said municipal court.

SEC. 18. In any case filed or pending in said branch in which any party is entitled to demand a trial by jury and files such demand, the case shall be assigned to and tried in one of the regular branches of the court under the procedure provided for such trials.

SEC. 19. Except as otherwise provided in this act, or in the rules promulgated hereunder, a party obtaining a judgment in said branch shall be entitled to the same remedies, processes, costs, and benefits as are given or inure to other judgment creditors in said municipal court.

SEC. 20. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 21. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 22. This act shall take effect on the thirtieth day after the date of its enactment.

VERDE RIVER IRRIGATION AND POWER DISTRICT, ARIZONA

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like permission to return to Calendar No. 1022, Senate bill 1344, before the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] leaves the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1022, Senate bill 1344. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1344) providing for relief in cases of desert-land applications or entries of lands within Verde River irrigation and power district, Arizona, which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this bill was passed over on the call of the calendar at my request. Under the circumstances, in view of the report that has been made both by the Department and by the committee, I think the bill should be indefinitely postponed and retired from the calendar, and I make that motion.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course I want to be a good loser. I introduced the bill. The Department reported unfavorably upon it; and the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, of which I am a member, and over which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] presides with great fairness, was almost unanimously against me.

I do not wish to indulge in any brutum fulmen, any harmless thunderbolts. In a case in which the Department and the committee of which I am a member are so nearly unanimous, I see nothing to do but acquiesce as gracefully as I may. There is nothing else I can do.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION OF STATE TAXES

The bill (S. 1551) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States over suits relating to the collection of State taxes was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, no district court shall have jurisdiction of any suit to enjoin, suspend, or restrain the assessment, levy, or collection of any tax imposed by or pursuant to the laws of any State where a plain, speedy, and efficient remedy may be had at law or in equity in the courts of such State."

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall not affect suits commenced in the district courts, either originally or by removal, prior to its passage; and all such suits shall be continued, proceedings therein had, appeals therein taken, and judgments therein rendered, in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON HAWAII

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) to provide for the creation of a Joint Committee on Hawaii was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Hawaii, which shall be composed of not to exceed 12 Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and not to exceed 12 Members of the House of Representatives and the Delegate from Hawaii, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The committee shall select a chairman from among its members. The committee shall cease to exist upon making its report to Congress pursuant to this resolution.

SEC. 2. The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a comprehensive investigation and study of the subject of statehood and of other subjects relating to the welfare of the Territory of Hawaii. The committee shall report to the Senate and to the House of Representatives not later than January 15, 1938, the results of its investigation and study, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it deems necessary or desirable.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act, as a whole or by subcommittee, at such times and places as it deems advisable, to hold such hearings, to administer such oaths and affirmations, to take such testimony, and to have such printing and binding done as it deems necessary.

ROBERT G. DUNCAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1646) for the relief of Robert G. Duncan, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "Treasury", to strike out "is" and insert "be, and he is hereby"; in line 5, after the word "appropriated", to insert "and in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government, to Robert G. Duncan, of Portland, Oreg., the sum of $500, such sum representing the amount of a fine for violation of the Radio Act of 1927, which was paid by him on November 12, 1931, and covered into the Treasury, said Robert G. Duncan having also served a sentence in jail because of such violation: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK PASHLEY AND BROWN GARRETT

The bill (S. 2832) authorizing the adjustment of the claims of Frank Pashley and Brown Garrett was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claims of Frank Pashley for blood furnished February 24 and 27, 1937, for transfusion to Llewelyn T. McKee, a patient in a Government hospital, and to allow in full and final settlement of said claims an amount not in excess of $15 and $10, a total of $25; also to adjust and settle the claim of Brown Garrett for blood furnished February 11, 1937, for transfusion to Albert King, a patient in a Government hospital, and to allow in full settlement of said claim an amount not in excess of $25, all under the appropriation of the Veterans' Administration available for payment for blood transfusion: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

F. P. WEAVER COAL CO., LTD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2458) to carry out certain treaty obligations of the United States and for the relief of the F. P. Weaver Coal Co., Ltd., and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund and pay to the F. P. Weaver Coal Co., Ltd., a corporation, of Quebec, Canada, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,957.10: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that the F. P. Weaver Coal Co. would have been entitled to receive such a refund if it had filed a proper and timely protest against the action of the collector of customs in the premises: Provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the bill authorizes the refund to this company of customs duties collected upon the importation of coal into the United States.

The company is a Canadian company which imported coal from Great Britain in a British vessel. The coal was received at the port of Portland some time in 1932. A contract for the purchase of the coal was entered into, and the importation of the coal was made in reliance upon rulings of the Treasury Department.

The particular ruling relied upon was, in substance, as follows: This is a ruling interpreting the Revenue Act of 1932. It says:

In view of the provisions in the treaties between the United States, and Great Britain and Germany, respectively, and of the express provision made by the Congress in section 601 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932 for an exception from the application of the taxes thereby imposed in cases where treaty provisions of the United States otherwise provide, held that, so long as coal from Canada or any other country is exempt from the tax prescribed in section 601 (c) (5) of the revenue act, coal from Great Britain or Germany is entitled to similar treatment when imported into this country. Bureau letter dated November 14, 1932.

Notwithstanding that ruling, the tax was collected. Subsequently, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury issued instructions to the effect that coal imported from Canada during the year 1933 would not be subject to the tax provided for in this section. Still later, the courts of the United States handed down decisions to the effect that coal imported from Great Britain was entitled to entry free of the said tax, so long as coal from Canada was entitled to such free entry.

It is in reliance upon that Treasury ruling, in reliance upon these decisions of our courts, and in reliance upon our treaty obligations, that these people are seeking the refund of taxes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion that there is no reason why this bill should not be passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the F. P. Weaver Coal Co., Ltd."

SAM KIMZEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 824) for the relief of Sam Kimzey, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sam Kimzey, of Cornelia, Ga., the sum of $1,500, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages arising out of the removal of certain buildings of an abandoned Civilian Conservation Corps camp from land owned by said Sam Kimzey: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF LIGHTHOUSE SITES IN HAWAII

The bill (H. R. 7714) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to transfer the two unused lighthouse sites in Kahului town site, Island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, in exchange for two plots of land located in the same town site and now occupied for lighthouse purposes under permission from the respective owners, the Kahului Railroad Co. and the Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Co., Ltd., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which House bill 7714 was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the vote by which House bill 7714 was passed be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1651) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", approved May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, to strike out, beginning with line 1, through line 13, page 7, as follows:

"SECTION 1. That for the purposes of this act the Indians of California shall be defined to be all Indians who were residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, who are now on the census roll of the Indians of California under the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended, and who may be enrolled in addition thereto under the provisions of this act."

SEC. 3. That sections 2 and 3 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all claims of whatsoever nature the Indians of California as defined in section 1 of this act may have against the United States by reason of lands taken from them in the State of California by the United States without just compensation or for the failure or refusal of the United States to protect their interests in lands in said State and for the loss of the use of the same, may be submitted to the United States Court of Claims by attorneys acting for and on behalf of said Indians, and it is hereby declared that the loss to the said Indians on account of their failure to secure the lands and compensation provided for in the 18 unratified treaties entered into with certain bands of said Indians in 1851 and 1852, and the loss to such Indians who were not parties to said unratified treaties of their lands to which they had title rising from occupancy and use, without just compensation therefor, is sufficient ground for equitable relief, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the said court, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear, consider, and determine all such claims submitted to them and the said courts shall settle the equitable rights therein and decree just compensation therefor, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation or the fact that the same claim or claims have or have not been presented to any other tribunal, including the commission created by the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. L. 631): Provided, That the courts shall determine, as near as may be, the acreage of the lands described in said unratified treaties as lands set apart forever for the occupancy and use of the tribes or bands of Indians parties to the said unratified treaties and shall compute the value of said acreage at $1.25 per acre, which amount shall be the basis upon which the court shall render judgment for just compensation for the taking of said lands: And provided further, That the courts shall consider and determine, as near as may be, the value of the personal property, rights, services, facilities, and improvements set out, described, and proposed in the aforesaid 18 unratified treaties and include just compensation for the value and loss of the benefit of the same in any decree rendered hereunder: And provided further, That the court shall determine, as near as may be and so far as necessary, the acreage of lands which such tribes of Indians, not parties to the said treaties, claimed by reason of occupancy and use, and shall compute the value of said acreage at $1.25 per acre, which amount shall be the basis upon which the court shall render judgment for just compensation for the taking of said lands: Provided, however, That the amount to be allowed on account of such nontreaty Indians shall not be less than the amount allowed on account of the treaty Indians, and shall be limited to an amount which shall bear a relation to the amount allowed by reason of said treaties, not greater than the number of tribes of nontreaty Indians bore to the number of tribes of treaty Indians and the court shall determine as near as may be the number of such tribes. Any payment which may have been made by the United States or moneys heretofore expended for the benefit of the Indians of California made under specific appropriations for the support, education, health, and civilization of Indians of California, including purchases of land, shall not be pleaded as an estoppel but may be pleaded by way of set-off against the total amount found due the treaty Indians and nontreaty Indians."

SEC. 4. That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended by adding a new section as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the Indians of California shall have the right to be represented by an attorney or attorneys of their own selection under contract or contracts approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the courts are directed to recognize such attorneys as attorneys of record: Provided, That for the purposes of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall classify by counties the Indians enrolled as Indians of California under the provisions of the act approved May 18, 1928, as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), and determine the number of units therein of 100 each or fraction thereof, and under such regulations as he may prescribe shall provide for the election of Indian delegates to be held at one or more convenient places in each county in the State of California within 90 days after the approval of this act, provided each county shall be entitled to one vote for each unit or major fraction thereof and any Indian enrolled under said act shall be eligible for election as a delegate, and said Indians of each country may elect a delegate to represent each vote or one delegate to represent all its votes and any delegate may be elected by more than one county, and said Secretary shall provide for two conventions of such delegates to select and retain attorneys to represent the Indians of California; one convention to convene at Riverside and include all delegates in counties south of the southern boundaries of San Luis Obispo and Kern Counties and the northern boundary of San Bernardino County and the other convention at San Francisco to include all delegates north of said boundaries. Said conventions shall be held within 30 days after said election and shall be conducted in accordance with such rules as are usual for a convention: Provided further, That due and proper notice shall be given of the time, place, and purpose of said election and conventions; and upon final determination of such suit, said court is authorized and directed to fix and determine a reasonable fee for such attorney or attorneys, the aggregate amount of such fees not to exceed 5 percent of the amount recovered on a quantum meruit basis, for services actually rendered, and in addition thereto all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit and such fees and expenses shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the appropriation made by Congress in payment of any decree renderd and the balance of such appropriation shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of California and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians."

SEC. 4. That section 7 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), is further amended by adding the following proviso: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to allow 1 year from the date of the approval of this act in which to receive applications for enrollment of Indians residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, not now on the census roll of the Indians of California under the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have 6 months thereafter to approve such supplemental roll, at the expiration of which time the roll shall be forever closed and thereafter no additional names shall be added thereto.

"The time for filing amendments to the petition is hereby continued and extended to any time prior to the entry of judgment."

And to insert:

"SECTION 1. That for the purposes of this act the Indians of California shall be defined to be all Indians who were residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, and others born thereafter and living on date of entry of judgment of the Court of Claims herein, and all Indians who are now on the census roll of the Indians of California as authorized by the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended, and who may be enrolled in addition thereto under the provisions of this act."

SEC. 3. That sections 2 and 3 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all claims of whatsoever nature the Indians of California as defined in section 1 of this act may have against the United States by reason of lands taken from them in the State of California by the United States without just compensation or for the failure or refusal of the United States to protect their interests in lands in said State, may be submitted to the United States Court of Claims by the attorney general of the State of California acting with associate attorneys selected by said Indians, and it is hereby declared that the loss to the said Indians on account of their failure to secure the lands and compensation provided for in the 18 unratified treaties entered into with certain bands of said Indians in 1851 and 1852, and the loss to such Indians who were not parties to said unratified treaties of their said lands without just compensation therefor, is sufficient ground for relief, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the said court, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, anything in the Judicial Code of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, to hear, consider, and determine all such claims submitted to them, and the said courts shall decree just compensation therefor, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation or the fact that the same claim or claims have or have not been presented to any other tribunal, including the commission created by the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. L. 631), and the court shall determine, as near as may be, the acreage of the lands described in said unratified treaties and shall compute the value of said acreage at $1.25 per acre and shall render judgment for just compensation for the taking of said lands, and shall determine, as near as may be, the just value of the personal property, rights, services, facilities, and improvements set out, described, and proposed in the aforesaid 18 unratified treaties and award just compensation therefor in any decree rendered hereunder, and it is hereby declared that it was the purpose of the Congress that the Commission appointed to negotiate treaties with the Indians of California should negotiate the same kind of treaties with all of said Indians and it is the purpose of this act to treat those Indians not parties to said unratified treaties the same as if similar treaties had been negotiated with them, and the court shall consider that such unnegotiated treaties, if negotiated, would have commuted the claim of occupancy of those Indians, not parties to the unratified treaties, into reduced acreages and into pledged goods and services in the same ratios as that which the court shall find to have been promised in the said unratified treaties. To this end and under this declared policy of the Congress, the court shall find and determine as near as may be on the evidence submitted and such finding and determination shall be final and conclusive upon the parties, the number of bands who were parties to the 18 unratified treaties and the number of bands with whom no treaties were negotiated, and in lieu of more definite and conclusive evidence the court is hereby instructed to receive and accept official documents, maps, and records, including reports, records, and maps in the possession of the Smithsonian Institution, and depositions of experts, as sufficient proof. And the court shall find that each band of those Indians not parties to said unratified treaties is entitled to compensation for the wrong done and loss inflicted limited to the average amount allowed each band of those Indians who were parties to said unratified treaties and shall render judgment therefor. The court in finding the number of bands shall consider a village or rancheria as a band.

"Any payment which may have been made by the United States or moneys heretofore expended for the benefit of the Indians of California made under specific appropriations for the support, education, health, and civilization of Indians of California, including purchases of land, shall not be pleaded as an estoppel but may be pleaded by way of set-off against the total amount found due the treaty and nontreaty Indians. The court is hereby authorized and directed to hear, determine, and fix reasonable fees for the attorneys, and the compensation for other persons, for services rendered which the court may determine to have merit and value for the benefit of the Indians of California since approval of the enabling act of May 18, 1928, on a quantum meruit basis for such services, less any amount that the court upon evidence submitted may find to have been received on account of such services, such fees and compensation not to exceed 5 percent of the amount recovered, and the court shall find and fix, on the evidence presented, reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of such services, and shall deduct from such finding any amount which the court finds has been paid as expenses for such services, and the difference shall be the amount finally fixed as reasonable expenses, and such fees and compensation and expenses shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the appropriation made by Congress in the payment of any decree rendered and the balance of such appropriation shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of California and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of the Indians."

"SEC. 3. That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended by striking from section 6 thereof the following words: 'and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per capita payments to said Indians.'"

SEC. 4. That section 7 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), is further amended by adding the following proviso: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to allow 1 year from the date of entry of judgment of the Court of Claims in which to receive applications for enrollment of Indians residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, and others born thereafter and living on the date of judgment, not now on the census roll of the Indians of California under the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have 6 months thereafter to approve such supplemental roll, at the expiration of which time the roll shall be forever closed and thereafter no additional names shall be added thereto.

"The right to present the claims hereunder to the Court of Claims either by original petition or amendment to the petition now pending in the court is extended to any time prior to the entry of judgment."

SEC. 5. That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended by adding a new section as follows:

"SEC. 8. That after the word 'that' and before the word 'notwithstanding' in the first line of section 8, insert the following: 'the claims of the Indians of California may be submitted to the United States Court of Claims by the attorney general of the State of California acting with associate attorneys selected by said Indians and notwithstanding any provision in the act of May 18, 1928, or in the Judicial Code of the United States to the contrary, any 500 or more of said Indians, who are 18 years of age or over, enrolled as Indians of California under existing law, may within 90 days after the approval of this act serve notice upon and file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement signed by them stating that they have retained an attorney or attorneys therein named, and the said Secretary shall within 30 days after the receipt of each of said statements certify to the Court of Claims the number of Indians signing each of said statements who are qualified to sign as herein provided, and immediately thereupon such attorney or attorneys thereby become associate attorney or attorneys with the attorney of record, provided there shall be only one attorney selected for each 500 qualified signers, and shall have the duties, responsibilities, and authority usually vested in associate attorneys to the end that the said Indians may have their claims hereunder adjudicated with the advantage of their selected attorney or attorneys and the Court of Claims is hereby instructed to recognize such attorney or attorneys so selected as associate attorney or attorneys of record and shall order that notices of all proceedings in said suit thereafter be sent to all such associate attorneys, and the attorney general of California shall continue as principal attorney of record. The Court of Claims is authorized and directed to fix and determine a reasonable fee for such attorney or attorneys on a quantum meruit basis for services rendered and the total amount paid for all services whether to attorneys or other persons acting for the Indians of California since the date of the enabling act of May 18, 1928, shall not exceed 5 percent of the judgment rendered hereunder, and shall determine and fix necessary and proper expenses, including compensation for experts and other persons, incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit and such fees and expenses as determined by the court, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the appropriation made by Congress in payment of any judgment rendered'."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), entitled "An act authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California", as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 1 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That for the purposes of this act the Indians of California shall be defined to be all Indians who were residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, and others born thereafter and living on date of entry of judgment of the Court of Claims herein, and all Indians who are now on the census roll of the Indians of California as authorized by the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended, and who may be enrolled in addition thereto under the provisions of this act."

SEC. 3. That sections 2 and 3 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all claims of whatsoever nature the Indians of California as defined in section 1 of this act may have against the United States by reason of lands taken from them in the State of California by the United States without just compensation or for the failure or refusal of the United States to protect their interests in lands in said State, may be submitted to the United States Court of Claims by the attorney general of the State of California acting with associate attorneys selected by said Indians, and it is hereby declared that the loss to the said Indians on account of their failure to secure the lands and compensation provided for in the 18 unratified treaties entered into with certain bands of said Indians in 1851 and 1852, and the loss to such Indians who were not parties to said unratified treaties of their said lands without just compensation therefor, is sufficient ground for relief, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the said court, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, anything in the Judicial Code of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, to hear, consider, and determine all such claims submitted to them, and the said courts shall decree just compensation therefor, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation or the fact that the same claim or claims have or have not been presented to any other tribunal, including the commission created by the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. L. 631), and the court shall determine, as near as may be, the acreage of the lands described in said unratified treaties and shall compute the value of said acreage at $1.25 per acre and shall render judgment for just compensation for the taking of said lands, and shall determine, as near as may be, the just value of the personal property, rights, services, facilities, and improvements set out, described, and proposed in the aforesaid 18 unratified treaties and award just compensation therefor in any decree rendered hereunder, and it is hereby declared that it was the purpose of the Congress that the Commission appointed to negotiate treaties with the Indians of California should negotiate the same kind of treaties with all of said Indians and it is the purpose of this act to treat those Indians not parties to said unratified treaties the same as if similar treaties had been negotiated with them, and the court shall consider that such unnegotiated treaties, if negotiated, would have commuted the claim of occupancy of those Indians, not parties to the unratified treaties, into reduced acreages and into pledged goods and services in the same ratios as that which the court shall find to have been promised in the said unratified treaties. To this end and under this declared policy of Congress, the court shall find and determine as near as may be on the evidence submitted and such finding and determination shall be final and conclusive upon the parties, the number of bands who were parties to the 18 unratified treaties and the number of bands with whom no treaties were negotiated, and in lieu of more definite and conclusive evidence the court is hereby instructed to receive and accept official documents, maps, and records, including reports, records, and maps in the possession of the Smithsonian Institution, and depositions of experts, as sufficient proof. And the court shall find that each band of those Indians not parties to said unratified treaties is entitled to compensation for the wrong done and loss inflicted limited to the average amount allowed each band of those Indians who were parties to said unratified treaties and shall render judgment therefor. The court in finding the number of bands shall consider a village or rancheria as a band.

"Any payment which may have been made by the United States or moneys heretofore expended for the benefit of the Indians of California made under specific appropriations for the support, education, health, and civilization of Indians of California, including purchases of land, shall not be pleaded as an estoppel but may be pleaded by way of set-off against the total amount found due the treaty and nontreaty Indians. The court is hereby authorized and directed to hear, determine, and fix reasonable fees for the attorneys, and the compensation for other persons, for services rendered which the court may determine to have merit and value for the benefit of the Indians of California since approval of the enabling act of May 18, 1928, on a quantum meruit basis for such services, less any amount that the court upon evidence submitted may find to have been received on account of such services, such fees and compensation not to exceed 5 percent of the amount recovered, and the court shall find and fix, on the evidence presented, reasonable expenses incurred in the performance of such services, and shall deduct from such finding any amount which the court finds has been paid as expenses for such services, and the difference shall be the amount finally fixed as reasonable expenses, and such fees and compensation and expenses shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the appropriation made by Congress in the payment of any decree rendered and the balance of such appropriation shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of California and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of the Indians."

"SEC. 3. That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended by striking from section 6 thereof the following words: 'and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per capita payments to said Indians.'"

SEC. 4. That section 7 of the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended by the act of April 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 259), is further amended by adding the following proviso: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to allow 1 year from the date of entry of judgment of the Court of Claims in which to receive applications for enrollment of Indians residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants living on May 18, 1928, and others born thereafter and living on the date of judgment, not now on the census roll of the Indians of California under the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), as amended and the Secretary of the Interior shall have 6 months thereafter to approve such supplemental roll, at the expiration of which time the roll shall be forever closed and thereafter no additional names shall be added thereto.

"The right to present the claims hereunder to the Court of Claims either by original petition or amendment to the petition now pending in the court is extended to any time prior to the entry of judgment."

SEC. 5. That the act of May 18, 1928 (45 Stat. 602), be amended by adding a new section as follows:

"SEC. 8. That after the word 'that' and before the word 'notwithstanding' in the first line of section 8, insert the following: 'the claims of the Indians of California may be submitted to the United States Court of Claims by the attorney general of the State of California acting with associate attorneys selected by said Indians and notwithstanding any provision in the act of May 18, 1928, or in the Judicial Code of the United States to the contrary, any 500 or more of said Indians, who are 18 years of age or over, enrolled as Indians of California under existing law, may within 90 days after the approval of this act serve notice upon and file with the Secretary of the Interior a statement signed by them stating that they have retained an attorney or attorneys therein named, and the said Secretary shall within 30 days after the receipt of each of said statements certify to the Court of Claims the number of Indians signing each of said statements who are qualified to sign as herein provided, and immediately thereupon such attorney or attorneys thereby become associate attorney or attorneys with the attorney of record, provided there shall be only one attorney selected for each 500 qualified signers, and shall have the duties, responsibilities, and authority usually vested in associate attorneys to the end that the said Indians may have their claims hereunder adjudicated with the advantage of their selected attorney or attorneys and the Court of Claims is hereby instructed to recognize such attorney or attorneys so selected as associate attorney or attorneys of record and shall order that notices of all proceedings in said suit thereafter be sent to all such associate attorneys, and the attorney general of California shall continue as principal attorney of record. The Court of Claims is authorized and directed to fix and determine a reasonable fee for such attorney or attorneys on a quantum meruit basis for services rendered and the total amount paid for all services whether to attorneys or other persons acting for the Indians of California since the date of the Enabling Act of May 18, 1928, shall not exceed 5 percent of the judgment rendered hereunder, and shall determine and fix necessary and proper expenses, including compensation for experts and other persons, incurred in the preparation and prosecution of the suit and such fees and expenses as determined by the court, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the appropriation made by Congress in payment of any judgment rendered.'"

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, on page 12 of the bill, I desire to propose an amendment to the committee amendment, after the word "That", in line 21, to strike out:

After the word "that" and before the word "notwithstanding", in the first line of section 8, insert the following.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether the bill in its present form meets the objections which were made when the veto message was sent in.

Mr. WHEELER. This is a bill which was worked out by the Indian Office and the Indians. My understanding is that it is the hope of the Indian Office that it will meet the objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCLUSION OF HOPS UNDER THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The bill (S. 2791) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by including hops as a commodity to which orders under such acts are applicable was announced as next in order.

Mr. GUFFEY. Let this bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7836) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by including hops as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable was announced as next in order.

Mr. GUFFEY. Let this bill go over also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Oregon state what these bills provide?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, Order of Business 1084 is a Senate bill, and Order of Business 1085 is a House bill, both bills covering precisely the same subject matter. Objection was made to both bills when called.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I objected to both bills at the request of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE], who has been called out of town. I do not know anything about the merits of the bills.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, Mr. President, in deference to the wishes of the senior Senator from New Jersey, who is absent, I shall consent to the bills going over. I wish to state, however, that there is a misapprehension concerning these measures.

A year ago a bill was brought before the Senate providing for a processing tax of 2 cents on hops. It was then the purpose to provide that hops should be considered a basic commodity. Upon a vote the bill was defeated by a small margin.

The two bills now on the calendar in nowise contemplate benefit payments. They merely bring hops under the Marketing Agreement Act so that hop growers, in bad financial condition, may make contracts under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture with respect to the marketing of hops. In nowise do the bills involve the processing tax. I desire to make this clear so that those who are objecting to the bills may know they are not the same as the measure that was before the Senate last year. Heretofore no commodities have been denied treatment under the marketing provisions of the act. Just recently we passed a bill making soybeans subject to marketing agreements. Without provision for any benefit payments or any effort to raise the price of hops, the desire is to permit the growers to come to the Secretary of Agriculture and receive assistance in the marketing of their products.

I think that with this explanation no objection could be made, and if the Senator from New Jersey were present, I am sure he would acquiesce in my statement. The bill was considered by the House Committee on Agriculture, was reported favorably, and was passed unanimously by the House, and I hope that tomorrow, if the Senator from New Jersey is present, or on the next call of the calendar, to bring the bill up, and I am sure he will not object.

BADGE OF THE GIRL SCOUTS, INC.

The bill (H. R. 5194) granting a renewal of patent no. 60731 relating to the badge of the Girl Scouts, Inc., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPACT BETWEEN OHIO AND PENNSYLVANIA RELATING TO PYMATUNING LAKE

The bill (S. 2831) to approve a compact or agreement between the State of Ohio and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relating to Pymatuning Lake was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas, under date of the 28th day of October 1936, the State of Ohio and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania entered into a certain compact or agreement in the following words:

"AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA AND THE STATE OF OHIO RE PYMATUNING LAKE

"This agreement made and concluded between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, acting by and through its lawfully authorized agency, namely, the Water and Power Resources Board, as party of the first part, and the State of Ohio, acting by and through its lawfully authorized agency, namely, its Director of Conservation, as party of the second part.

"Witnesseth:

"Whereas by act of Assembly of Pennsylvania approved the 2d day of May 1929 (Pamphlet Laws, 1503), as amended by the acts approved the 5th day of May 1931 (Pamphlet Laws, 84), the 24th day of April 1933 (Pamphlet Laws, 67), and the 9th day of July 1935 (Pamphlet Laws, 619), the Department of Forests and Waters of Pennsylvania, acting through the Water and Power Resources Board, was authorized inter alia to complete the work begun and continued under an act approved the 25th day of July 1913 (Pamphlet Laws, 1270), entitled 'An act providing for the erection of a dam at the outlet of Pymatuning Swamp and the establishment of a reservoir to conserve the waters thereof, providing for the taking of land and materials necessary thereto, vesting certain powers and duties in the Water Supply Commission, and making an appropriation', and did duly complete said work whereby there was created a lake or reservoir now known and hereinafter called Pymatuning Lake, extending in part across the boundary line between said States of Ohio and Pennsylvania into the State of Ohio; and

"Whereas the primary purposes of the project by which said lake was created was to conserve water draining said swamp, all of which has its source in Pennsylvania, as well as control floods and regulate the flow of water in the Shenango and Beaver Rivers, and, secondary thereto, permit the water and the land surrounding the same to be used for fishing, hunting, recreational, and park purposes under such terms and conditions as the Water and Power Resources Board might determine, in such way or ways as in the opinion of the said board will not materially interfere with the primary purpose in said acts of assembly and hereinbefore specifically referred to; and

"Whereas in view of the fact that a certain part of the lake extends into the State of Ohio whereby it is necessary and desirable that the use of the lake for the secondary purposes, namely, hunting, fishing, and recreational use, be uniformly provided for as well as to guard against inconveniences and mischiefs which might hereafter arise from the uncertainty of jurisdiction within and on said lake, to the end that the lake may be adequately policed and conflicts of jurisdiction for the arrest and punishment of offenders be avoided.

"Now, then, therefore, in order that law and justice may in all cases be executed and take effect upon said lake from shore to shore in all parts and places thereof where the lake is a boundary between said States the said parties hereto do agree for and in behalf of their respective States in the manner following:

"General use:

"It is hereby agreed that the entire Pymatuning Lake or Reservoir, subject to the primary use thereof by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for regulating the flow of the water in the Shenango and Beaver Rivers, as in paragraph 9 hereinafter more specifically mentioned, shall be open for recreational use equally to the citizens of both contracting parties save as restricted as to hunting, fishing, and boating in this agreement set forth or hereafter mutually agreed upon by both parties, but no person shall be permitted to hunt or fish thereon unless the lawful holder of a fishing or hunting license authorizing him or her so to do issued by the proper authorities of Pennsylvania or of Ohio.

"2. Arrest and prosecution of offenders:

"That each State shall enjoy and exercise a concurrent jurisdiction upon the water, but not upon the dry land between the shores of said lake, including the islands therein, with respect to the arrest and prosecution of offenders, but in such sort that any boat or vessel fastened to or aground on the shore of either State shall be considered exclusively within the jurisdiction of said State, but that all capital and other offenses, trespasses, or damages committed on or over said lake the judicial investigation and determination thereof shall be exclusively vested in the State wherein the offender or person charged with such offense shall be first apprehended, arrested, prosecuted, or first brought to trial, it being the intent of this agreement that an offender may be pursued and arrested anywhere on or over said lake or shores thereof or islands therein, regardless of the boundary line, by any peace officers or persons of either State authorized to make arrests whether the offenses be committed on or over any part of the lake on the shores or islands therein, regardless of the State in which the place where the offense was committed lies.

"3. Islands:

"All islands within the lake shall be considered as part of the State of Pennsylvania.

"4. Pollution of water:

"The lake shall forever be protected against pollution of its waters by industrial trade waste, individual or municipal sewage from shore or boat, and the discharge of any noxious or deleterious substance, liquid or solid, into the waters of the lake which is or may become inimical or injurious to public health or to animal or aquatic life is hereby expressly forbidden.

"No sewage may be discharged into the waters of the lake except after complete treatment and then only upon permit first approved by the health departments of both States.

"5. Boats and vessels:

"No power or motorboats nor hydroplanes or aquaplanes shall be permitted anywhere on said lake except such police or administration motorboats to the number which shall be mutually agreed upon by the parties hereto. Sail boats, rowboats, and canoes shall be permitted provided they first obtain a license from the respective State of which the owner is a resident under such regulations as each party to this agreement may now have or hereafter adopt.

"6. Fishing:

"Any person possessing a duly issued fishing license by either State, shall be permitted to fish anywhere on the entire lake (except such portion thereof as is closed to fishing by paragraph 8 hereof or such further portion as may hereafter by regulation be mutually agreed to by the parties hereto) but no fisherman shall be entitled to fish from the shores of the State of which he is a nonresident unless he complies with the nonresident fishing license law of said State.

"In order to permit the fish to fully propagate and develop, no part of the lake shall be open for fishing until the 1st day of July 1937 and thereafter shall be closed in each year between the 10th day of December and the 30th day of June.

"Until otherwise mutually agreed to by both parties hereto the creel size and season limits for the respective kinds of fish caught shall be such as may hereafter be agreed upon between the two States.

"7. Reciprocal hunting rights:

"Reciprocal hunting rights are hereby granted to the licensed hunters of each State on the water of that portion of the lake both in Pennsylvania and Ohio over the area bounded on the south by an east and west line crossing the State boundary five-tenths of a mile north of Simons, Ohio, and on the north by a line drawn between the point at which the Padamaram Road crosses the State boundary and a point formerly known as the Polleck Bridge but such reciprocal hunting rights hereby granted shall extend only to such wild migratory birds as are covered by the Federal Bird Treaty and Federal laws adopted thereunder.

"Hunting in such portions of the lake as are not included in the area above described and designated shall be and remain under the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"No permanent blinds shall be erected anywhere on the lake and shores thereof but this provision shall not be interpreted as forbidding the use of a boat as a blind temporarily moored to or grounded on the shore of the lake or islands thereof.

"8. Wild game and fish sanctuaries:

"A. The Game Commission of the State of Pennsylvania having established a wild migratory bird and game sanctuary or refuge in that part of the lake located southeast of the Pennsylvania Railroad crossing it is expressly agreed that nothing herein contained shall be interpreted as entitling the residents of either State whether licensed to fish or hunt, trespass, or enter upon said sanctuary for any purpose whatsoever. Anyone so doing shall become amenable to prosecution therefor under the game laws of the State of Pennsylvania applicable to game refuges.

"B. The Conservation Division of the Department of Agriculture of the State of Ohio having established a fish sanctuary and game refuge in the following portion of the lake.

"Being the southerly parts of lots nos. 79 and 80, Richmond Township, all of lot no. 41 and all of lot no. 42 except the westerly 1,000 feet thereof in Andover Township, Ashtabula County, Ohio.

"Beginning at a point in the west line of lot no. 79, that is, 1,523 feet south of the north line of lot no. 79, also being the center line of Padanaram Road, thence southerly along the county highway along the westerly side of lot no. 79, 1,869.5 feet to the north line of Andover Township; thence westerly along the northerly line of Andover Township, 939.7 feet to the northwest corner of lot no. 41; thence southerly along the highway that marks the westerly line of lot no. 42, 1,000 feet to a point thence of lot no. 42; thence easterly along the north line of lot no. 42, 1,000 feet to a point; thence in a southerly direction parallel to and 1,000 feet easterly from the westerly line of lot no. 42, 2,734 feet more or less to the southerly line of lot no. 42; thence easterly along the said southerly line of lot no. 42, 5,180.4 feet to the Ohio and Pennsylvania State line; thence northerly along the said Ohio and Pennsylvania State line 7,297.6 feet more or less to a point that is 1,523 feet southerly from the north line of lot no. 80; thence in a westerly direction 1,523 feet southerly from and parallel to the north lines of lots nos. 79 and 80, 5,260 feet more or less to the place of beginning.

"It is expressly agreed that nothing herein contained shall be interpreted as entitling the residents of either State whether licensed to fish or otherwise to fish in, hunt, trespass, or enter upon said sanctuary for any purpose whatsoever. Anyone so doing shall become amenable to prosecution therefor under the laws of the State of Ohio applicable thereto.

"9. Reservation of Pennsylvania's Right to the Body of the Water:

"It is expressly agreed that nothing herein contained shall operate to deny, limit, or restrict the right of the Water and Power Resources Board of Pennsylvania or any authority established hereafter by said State to exercise such power to at any time now or hereafter raise or draw off so much of the waters of the lake as in their sole judgment may be necessary to maintain or regulate the flow of the Shenango and Beaver Rivers in furtherance of the primary purpose for which said lake was established, and said water and power resources board shall without let or hindrance have the full right, irrespective of other considerations, to release so much of the water as they may deem proper to maintain the flow of the Shenango and Beaver Rivers irrespective of its effect on the level of the lake or use thereof for other purposes.

"In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their respective hands and seals by, for, and under the authority of their respective States this 28th day of October, 1936.

EXTENSION OF MINING PROSPECTING PERMITS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4277) to provide for the extension of certain prospecting permits, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That oil and gas prospecting permits issued under authority of an act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale gas, and sodium on the public domain", approved February 25, 1920, as amended, outstanding on December 31, 1937, (a) which have been committed in whole or in part to a cooperative or unit plan of development and operation that on December 31, 1937, has been approved or prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, or is in process of revision or reconsideration pursuant to prior review, without rejection, in the Department of the Interior; or (b) which, together with one or more other permits, have been committed in whole or in part to a cooperative or unit plan of development and operation for the whole of any single oil or gas pool or field (or reasonably compact area) that was filed before January 1, 1937, and rejected pursuant to instructions of said Secretary; or (c) under which approved drilling was actively in progress at some time within the calendar year 1937; or (d) under which at least one well shall have been drilled to a depth of not less than 2,000 feet subsequent to August 21, 1935; or (e) which have been issued subsequent to August 21, 1935, and for which timely compliance has been made with the drilling requirements of section 13 of said act of February 25, 1920, to the extent required by December 31, 1937, or, in the absence of such timely drilling, for which an acceptable cooperative or unit plan of development and operation has been filed on or before said date are all hereby extended to December 31, 1939, the provisions of any other act or acts to the contrary notwithstanding, subject, however, to the applicable conditions of the permits and of unfulfilled conditions of any prior extensions. All oil and gas prospecting permits shall cease and terminate without notice of cancelation on the final date of their current term, including any extension herein granted, and no extension of any permit beyond December 31, 1939, shall be granted under the authority of this act or any other act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY subsequently said: Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment to House bill 4277, and ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. O'MAHONEY, and Mr. NYE conferees on the part of the Senate.

GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 5472) to authorize the exchange of certain lands within the Great Smoky Mountains National Park for lands within the Cherokee Indian Reservation, N. C., and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS ON CIMARRON, WASHITA, AND NORTH CANADIAN RIVERS, OKLA.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6628) to permit the further extension of the Air Mail Service was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7433) to advance a program of national safety and accident prevention was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TERM OF COURT AT BENTON, ILL.

The bill (H. R. 169) to provide for a term of court at Benton, Ill., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask for information as to the bill which was just passed. A bill is pending providing for the Federal court session at Benton, Ill., which was reported from the House and is awaiting Senate action. Am I to understand that that is the bill which is now before us?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill was just passed.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; but does the bill which was passed provide when the court shall sit at Benton, Ill.? There is one other bill relating to the same court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill that was just passed provides for the term of court.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Chair.

CONVEYANCE OF LAND TO NEW MEXICO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1889) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey all right, title, and interest of the United States in certain lands to the State of New Mexico, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the figures "17", to strike out "1922. Such quitclaim deed shall be conditioned upon such State's holding in trust, for the use and benefit of the Carrie Tingley Crippled Children's Hospital, all lots, tracts, or parcels of land patented under such patent as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine have not at the date of enactment of this act been irrigated and reclaimed as provided in section 4 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes', approved August 18, 1894, as amended" and insert "1922, under the provisions of volume 28, United States Statutes, page 422, commonly known as the Carey Act: Provided, That such quitclaim deed shall contain a reservation of a right-of-way for ditches and canals as required by the act of August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 391)", and to strike out all of section 2, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the State of New Mexico all the right, title, and interest, legal and equitable, of the United States in and to all lands patented to such State under patent no. 854989, issued March 17, 1922, under the provisions of volume 28, United States Statutes, page 422, commonly known as the Carey Act: Provided, That such quitclaim deed shall contain a reservation of a right-of-way for ditches and canals as required by the Act of August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 391).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS OF LAND TO NEW MEXICO AND CORDY BRAMBLET

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2614) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain tracts of land to the State of New Mexico and Cordy Bramlet, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after "Cordy", to strike out "Bramlet" and insert "Brambiet", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue, without requiring the payment of any fees or charges whatsoever, (1) to the State of New Mexico a patent for lot 13, section 4, township 14 south, range 4 west, New Mexico principal meridian, such land to be subject to a reservation of a sufficient right-of-way and easement for the maintenance of any part of the sewer lines and sewage-disposal plant of the city of Hot Springs now maintained upon such tract; (2) to Cordy Bramblet, of Hot Springs, N. Mex., a patent for lot 14, section 4, township 14 south, range 4 west, New Mexico principal meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to patent certain tracts of land to the State of New Mexico and Cordy Bramblet."

BRIDGE ACROSS CAMBRIDGE CREEK, MD.

The bill (H. R. 7807) authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Cambridge Creek in or near Cambridge, Dorchester County, Md., to replace a bridge already in existence was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF ENLISTED MEN OF COAST GUARD TO FLEET NAVAL RESERVE

The bill (S. 2206) to provide for the transfer of enlisted men of the Coast Guard to the Fleet Naval Reserve was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That enlisted men now or hereafter in the Coast Guard shall be entitled to be transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve upon the completion of 20 or more years' service; and when so transferred shall, except when on active duty, receive pay at the rate of one-half the base pay they were receiving at the time of transfer, plus all permanent additions thereto: Provided, That the pay authorized in this section shall be increased 10 percent for all men who may be credited with extraordinary heroism in the line of duty or whose average marks in conduct for 20 years or more shall not be less than 95 percent of the maximum. The determination of the Secretary of the Treasury as to what constitutes extraordinary heroism for the purpose of this section shall be final and conclusive. Enlisted men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve under this act shall upon completing 30 years' service be transferred to the retired list of the United States Coast Guard with the pay they are then legally entitled to receive, plus the allowances to which enlisted men of the Coast Guard are entitled on retirement after 30 years' service. As used in this act, the term "service" includes all service in the Coast Guard, the Revenue Cutter Service, the Life Saving Service, the Navy, and the Fleet Naval Reserve, time on the retired list of the Coast Guard, and other service which may be included in computing length of service for the purpose of retirement from the Coast Guard.

SEC. 2. In time of peace all enlisted men transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve under this act may be required to perform not more than 2 months' active duty in each 4-year period, and shall be examined physically at least once during each 4-year period. Men found not physically qualified upon such examination shall be transferred to the retired list of the Coast Guard, with the pay they are then receiving, and upon the completion of 30 years' service they shall receive the pay they are then legally entitled to receive, plus the allowances to which enlisted men of the Coast Guard are entitled to on retirement after 30 years' service.

SEC. 3. All provisions of law applicable to enlisted men of the Navy who are transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve shall, insofar as they are consistent with the provisions of this act, be applicable to enlisted men of the Coast Guard transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask the status of Calendar No. 1104, Senate bill 2206.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was passed without objection. The Senator has a right to return to it.

Mr. KING. I ask to recur to Calendar No. 1104, being Senate bill 2206.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, after the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] has made a short statement, I am sure the Senator from Utah will reserve his objection.

Mr. KING. I desire to call attention to the fact that the Acting Secretary of the Treasury says that the proposed legislation is not in accord with the program of the President.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, for the information of my friend from Utah I desire to say that this measure was referred to a subcommittee. The chairman of the subcommittee was the junior Senator from the State of Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. The subcommittee held exhaustive hearings upon the bill, after which the report was brought to the attention of the full committee; and the full committee reported the bill favorably, with the recommendation that it be passed. It requires the expenditure of no additional money on the part of the Government; and, as a matter of fact, I believe the chairman of the subcommittee would tell the Senate, as was agreed upon by the members of the committee itself, that the bill will encourage increased enlistment in the Coast Guard, which has been so long sought.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the votes by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and if that is done, I shall ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]? The Chair hears none, and the votes are reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over so that I may have a chance to study it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, ARROW ROCK, MO.

The bill (H. R. 6975) granting the consent of Congress to the county court of Saline County, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Mo., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, NEW ORLEANS AND GRETNA, LA.

The bill (H. R. 7440) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER LAKE SABINE, PORT ARTHUR, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 6979) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge over Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS NARRAGANSETT BAY, R. I.

The bill (H. R. 7266) authorizing the State of Rhode Island, acting by and through the Jamestown Bridge Commission as an agency of the State, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the west passage of Narragansett Bay between the towns of Jamestown and North Kingstown was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce for further study.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

LANDS IN JEFFERSON COUNTY, WASH.

The bill (H. R. 7278) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to grant and convey to the State of Washington fee title to certain lands of the United States in Jefferson County, Wash., for highway purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, OWENSBORO, KY.

The bill (H. R. 7767) creating the Owensboro Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Owensboro, Ky., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAHOE NATIONAL FOREST, NEV.

The bill (S. 2583) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Tahoe National Forest, in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may be have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the bill gives the United States an opportunity to acquire the last tract of land on Lake Tahoe which will be or is available for public park purposes. The land is to become a part of the national forest. The land was acquired privately many years ago, and has been so held for many years; and an agreement exists between the owners and the Government that the Government shall acquire it. It will afford the only opportunity the public will have to get to the lake at all. All the land around the lake has been held for many years in private ownership, including this tract; but while it is held in private ownership, it is not subdivided.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have great sympathy with the object of the Senator from Nevada. I wonder if the Senator will let the bill go over until tomorrow, and accept an amendment from me on a similar matter in my own State.

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall help the Senator some other time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a provision covering exactly the same situation which I undertook to put on another bill today, and was defeated. The present bill provides a perfect avenue for that provision, and it will not be loaded down. It will help the Senator's bill through the House. I shall give him a guarantee as to that.

Let this bill go over until tomorrow. Meanwhile, I shall talk to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PIPESTONE INDIAN SHRINE, MINNESOTA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1075) to establish the Pipestone Indian Shrine in the State of Minnesota, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the lands lying in Pipestone County, Minn., within the area hereinafter described are hereby dedicated and set apart as a national monument for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States, under the name of the "Pipestone National Monument": Beginning at a point 22.4 feet north and 45.08 feet west of the southwest corner of sec. 1, T. 106 N., R. 46 W., fifth principal meridian; thence north 1,655 feet; thence north 89°15′ E., 708 feet; thence north 0°45′ W., 607.3 feet; thence north 62°5′ E., 987.1 feet; thence south 27°55′ E., 264.5 feet; thence south 88°19′ E., 967.5 feet; thence south 0°24′ E., 144.3 feet; thence south 83°43′ W., 472.4 feet; thence south 2°17′ E., 2,249 feet; thence south 89°20′ W., 458.2 feet; thence south 0°0′ E., 101.1 feet; thence south 90°0′ W., 137.2 feet; thence north 0°0′ W., 100 feet; thence south 89°20′ W., 1,683.8 feet to the point of beginning; containing approximately 115.86 acres, including concourse, excluding from the area described herein 0.47 acres, constituting a right-of-way of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway.

SEC. 2. The administration, protection, and development of such monument shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1916, as amended.

SEC. 3. The quarrying of the red pipestone in the lands described in section 1 is hereby expressly reserved to Indians of all tribes, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish the Pipestone National Monument in the State of Minnesota."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot complete the calendar this evening, and I think we had better discontinue at this point.

FORT PECK PROJECT, MONTANA

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 1119, Senate bill 2650.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2650) to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Fort Peck project for navigation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 7, after the words "energy as", to strike out "in his opinion will provide for the maximum production of hydroelectric power consistent with the primary demands of navigation, and the same shall be installed at such times as the administrator may deem necessary to develop electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor. The electric energy thus generated and not required for the operation of the dam and appurtenant works at such project shall be delivered to the administrator, at a switchboard to be installed in or near the power plant, for disposition as provided in this act" and insert "the administrator may deem necessary to develop such electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor. The electric energy thus generated and not required for the operation of the dam at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith shall be delivered to the administrator for disposition as provided in this act", so as to make the section read:

That for the purpose of improving navigation on the Missouri River, and for other purposes incidental thereto, the dam and appurtenant works now under construction at Fort Peck, Mont., and a suitable power plant for the production of hydroelectric power (which dam, power plant, and appurtenant works are hereinafter called Fort Peck project), shall be completed, maintained, and operated under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, subject to the provisions of this act relating to the powers and duties of the Fort Peck project administrator provided for in section 2 (a) (hereinafter called the administrator) respecting the transmission and sale of electric energy generated at said project. The Secretary of War shall provide, construct, operate, maintain, and improve at Fort Peck project such machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy as the administrator may deem necessary to develop such electric energy as rapidly as markets may be found therefor. The electric energy thus generated and not required for the operation of the dam at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith shall be delivered to the administrator for disposition as provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 20, after the word "basin", to strike out "The administrator shall give notice to the Secretary of War when he deems it necessary to provide, construct, maintain, improve, or increase generating machinery, equipment, or facilities at the Fort Peck project to meet market requirements for such electric energy" and insert "The administrator is authorized and empowered to direct and require the Secretary of War to install and maintain additional machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy at the Fort Peck project when in the judgment of the administrator such additional generating facilities are desirable to meet actual or potential market requirements for such electric energy. The Secretary of War shall schedule the operations of the several electric generating units and appurtenant equipment of the Fort Peck project in accordance with the requirements of the administrator. The Secretary of War shall provide and maintain for the use of the administrator at said Fort Peck project adequate station space and equipment, including such switches, switchboards, instruments, and dispatching facilities as may be required by the administrator for proper reception, handling, and dispatching of the electric energy produced at the said project, together with transformers and other equipment required by the administrator for the transmission of such energy from that place at suitable voltage to the markets which the administrator desires to serve", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. (a) The electric energy generated in the operation of the said Fort Peck project shall be disposed of by the administrator as hereinafter provided. The administrator shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; shall be responsible to said Secretary of the Interior; shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per year; and shall maintain his principal office at a place selected by him in the vicinity of the Fort Peck project. The administrator shall, as hereinafter provided, make all arrangements for the sale and disposition of electric energy generated at the Fort Peck project not required for the operation of the dam at such project and the navigation facilities employed in connection therewith. He shall act in consultation with an advisory board composed of a representative designated by the Secretary of War, a representative designated by the Secretary of the Interior, a representative designated by the Federal Power Commission, and a representative designated by the Secretary of Agriculture. The form of administration herein established for the Fort Peck project is intended to be provisional pending the establishment of a permanent administration for Fort Peck and other projects in the Missouri River Basin. The administrator is authorized and empowered to direct and require the Secretary of War to install and maintain additional machinery, equipment, and facilities for the generation of electric energy at the Fort Peck project when in the judgment of the administrator such additional generating facilities are desirable to meet actual or potential market requirements for such electric energy. The Secretary of War shall schedule the operations of the several electrical generating units and appurtenant equipment of the Fort Peck project in accordance with the requirements of the administrator. The Secretary of War shall provide and maintain for the use of the administrator at said Fort Peck project adequate station space and equipment, including such switches, switchboards, instruments, and dispatching facilities as may be required by the administrator for proper reception, handling, and dispatching of the electric energy produced at the said project, together with transformers and other equipment required by the administrator for the transmission of such energy from that place at suitable voltage to the markets which the administrator desires to serve.

(b) In order to encourage the widest possible use of all electric energy that can be generated and marketed and to provide reasonable outlets therefor, and to prevent the monopolization thereof by limited groups, the administrator is authorized and directed to provide, construct, operate, maintain, and improve such electric transmission lines and substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as he finds necessary, desirable, or appropriate for the purpose of transmitting electric energy, available for sale, from the Fort Peck project to existing and potential markets, and, for the purpose of interchange of electric energy, to interconnect the Fort Peck project with other Federal projects and publicly owned power systems now or hereafter constructed.

(c) The administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to acquire, by purchase, lease, condemnation, or donation, such real and personal property, or any interest therein, including lands, easements, rights-of-way, franchises, electric transmission lines, substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, as the administrator finds necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act. Title to all property and property rights acquired by the administrator shall be taken in the name of the United States.

(d) The administrator shall have power to acquire any property or property rights, including patent rights, which in his opinion are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain and to institute condemnation proceedings therefor in the same manner as is provided by law for the condemnation of real estate.

(e) The administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of such personal property as in his judgment is not required for the purposes of this act and such real property and interests in land acquired in connection with construction or operation of electric transmission lines or substations as in his judgment are not required for the purposes of this act: Provided, however, That before the sale, lease, or disposition of real property or transmission lines, as herein provided, the administrator shall secure the approval of the President of the United States.

(f) Subject to the provisions of this act, the administrator is authorized, in the name of the United States, to negotiate and enter into such contracts, agreements, and arrangements as he shall find necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 7, line 8, after "(b)", to strike out "To preserve and protect the preferential rights and priorities of public bodies and cooperatives as provided in subsection (a), not less than 50 percent of the energy which the electric generating facilities, installed or readily installable, at the Fort Peck project are capable of producing, shall be reserved for sale to said public bodies and cooperatives until January 1, 1940", and insert: "To preserve and protect the preferential rights and priorities of public bodies and cooperatives as provided in subsection (a) and to effectuate the intent and purpose of this act that at all times up to January 1, 1941, there shall be available for sale to public bodies and cooperatives not less than 50 percent of the electric energy produced at the Fort Peck project, it shall be the duty of the administrator in making contracts for the sale of such energy to so arrange such contracts as to make such 50 percent of such energy available to said public bodies and cooperatives until January 1, 1941"; on page 8, line 2, before the word "may", to strike out "1940" and insert "1941"; in line 5, after "January 1", to strike out 1940" and insert "1941"; and in line 8, after "January 1", to strike out "1940" and insert "1941", so as to make sections 3 and 4 read:

SEC. 3. As employed in this act, the term "public body", or "public bodies", means States, public power districts, counties, and municipalities, including agencies or subdivisions of any thereof. As employed in this act, the term "cooperative", or "cooperatives", means any form of non-profit-making organization or organizations of citizens supplying, or which may be created to supply, members with any kind of goods, commodities, or services, as nearly as possible at cost.

SEC. 4. (a) In order to insure that the facilities for the generation of electric energy at the Fort Peck project shall be operated for the benefit of the general public, and particularly of domestic and rural consumers, the administrator shall at all times, in disposing of electric energy generated at said project, give preference and priority to public bodies and cooperatives.

(b) To preserve and protect the preferential rights and priorities of public bodies and cooperatives as provided in subsection (a) and to effectuate the intent and purpose of this act that at all times up to January 1, 1941, there shall be available for sale to public bodies and cooperatives not less than 50 percent of the electric energy produced at the Fort Peck project, it shall be the duty of the administrator in making contracts for the sale of such energy to so arrange such contracts as to make such 50 percent of such energy available to said public bodies and cooperatives until January 1, 1941: Provided, That the electric energy so reserved for but not actually purchased by and delivered to such public bodies and cooperatives prior to January 1, 1941, may be disposed of temporarily so long as such temporary disposition will not interfere with the purchase by and delivery to such public bodies and cooperatives at any time prior to January 1, 1941: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or impair the preferential and priority rights of such public bodies or cooperatives after January 1, 1941; and in the event that after such date there shall be conflicting or competing applications for an allocation of electric energy between any public body or cooperative on the one hand and a private agency of any character on the other, the application of such public body or cooperative shall be granted.

(c) An application by any public body or cooperative for an allocation of electric energy shall not be denied, or another application competing or in conflict therewith be granted, to any private corporation, company, agency, or person on the ground that any proposed bond or other security issue of any such public body or cooperative, the sale of which is necessary to enable such prospective purchaser to enter into the public business of selling and distributing the electric energy proposed to be purchased, has not been authorized or marketed, until after a reasonable time, to be determined by the administrator, has been afforded such public body or cooperative to have such bond or other security issue authorized or marketed.

(d) It is declared to be the policy of the Congress, as expressed in this act, to preserve the said preferential status of the public bodies and cooperatives herein referred to, and to give to the people of the States within economic transmission distance of the Fort Peck project reasonable opportunity and time to hold any election or elections or take any action necessary to create such public bodies and cooperatives as the laws of such States authorize and permit, and to afford such public bodies or cooperatives reasonable time and opportunity to take any action necessary to authorize the issuance of bonds or to arrange other financing necessary to construct or acquire necessary and desirable electric distribution facilities, and in all other respects legally to become qualified purchasers and distributors of electric energy available under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 15, line 3, after the word "appoint", to strike out "and fix the compensation of"; in line 6, after the words "provisions of", to strike out "other laws applicable to the employment, compensation, and classification of officers and employees of the United States" and insert "the civil-service laws and shall fix the compensation of each of such attorneys, engineers, and other experts at not to exceed $10,000 per annum", so as to make sections 5 to 11, inclusive, read:

SEC. 5. (a) Subject to the provisions of this act and to such rate schedules as the Federal Power Commission may approve, as hereinafter provided, the administrator shall negotiate and enter into contracts for the sale at wholesale of electric energy, either for resale or direct consumption, to public bodies and cooperatives and to private agencies and persons. Contracts for the sale of electric energy to any private person or agency other than a privately owned public utility engaged in selling electric energy to the general public, shall contain a provision forbidding such private purchaser to resell any of such electric energy so purchased to any private utility or agency engaged in the sale of electric energy to the general public, and requiring the immediate canceling of such contract of sale in the event of violation of such provision. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall be binding in accordance with the terms thereof and shall be effective for such period or periods, including renewals or extensions, as may be provided therein, not exceeding in the aggregate 20 years from the respective dates of the making of such contracts. Contracts entered into under this subsection shall contain (1) such provisions as the administrator and the purchaser agree upon for the equitable adjustment of rates at appropriate intervals, not less frequently than once in every 5 years, and (2) in the case of a contract with any purchaser engaged in the business of selling electric energy to the general public, the contract shall provide that the administrator may cancel such contract upon 5 years' notice in writing if in the judgment of the administrator any part of the electric energy purchased under such contract is likely to be needed to satisfy the requirements of the said public bodies or cooperatives referred to in this act, and that such cancelation may be with respect to all or any part of the electric energy so purchased under said contract to the end that the preferential rights and priorities accorded public bodies and cooperatives under this act shall at all times be preserved. Contracts entered into with any utility engaged in the sale of electric energy to the general public shall contain such terms and conditions, including among other things stipulations concerning resale and resale rates by any such utility, as the administrator may deem necessary, desirable, or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act and to insure that resale by such utility to the ultimate consumer shall be at rates which are reasonable and nondiscriminatory. Such contract shall also require such utility to keep on file in the office of the administrator a schedule of all its rates and charges to the public for electric energy and such alterations and changes therein as may be put into effect by such utility.

(b) The administrator is authorized to enter into contracts with public or private power systems for the mutual exchange of unused excess powef upon suitable exchange terms for the purpose of economical operation or of providing emergency or breakdown relief.

SEC. 6. Schedules of rates and charges for electric energy produced at the Fort Peck project and sold to purchasers as in this act provided shall be prepared by the administrator and become effective upon confirmation and approval thereof by the Federal Power Commission. Subject to confirmation and approval by the Federal Power Commission, such rate schedules may be modified from time to time by the administrator, and shall be fixed and established with a view to encouraging the widest possible diversified use of electric energy. The said rate schedules may provide for uniform rates or rates uniform throughout prescribed transmission areas in order to extend the benefits of an integrated transmission system and encourage the equitable distribution of the electric energy developed at the Fort Peck project.

SEC. 7. It is the intent of Congress that rate schedules for the sale of electric energy which is or may be generated at the Fort Peck project in excess of the amount required for operating the dam and appurtenant works at said project shall be determined with due regard to and predicated upon the fact that such electric energy is developed from water power created as an incident to the construction of the dam in the Missouri River at the Fort Peck project for the purposes set forth in section 1 of this act. Rate schedules shall be drawn having regard to the recovery (upon the basis of the application of such rate schedules to the capacity of the electric facilities of Fort Peck project) of the cost of producing and transmitting such electric energy, including the amortization of the capital investment over a reasonable period of years. Rate schedules shall be based upon an allocation of costs made by the Federal Power Commission. In computing the cost of electric energy developed from water power created as an incident to and a byproduct of the construction of Fort Peck project, the Federal Power Commission may allocate to the costs of electric facilities such a share of the cost of facilities having joint value for the production of electric energy and other purposes as the power development may fairly bear as compared with such other purposes.

SEC. 8. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all purchases and contracts made by the administrator or the Secretary of War for supplies or for services, except for personal services, shall be made after advertising, in such manner and at such times, sufficiently in advance of opening bids, as the administrator or Secretary of War, as the case may be, shall determine to be adequate to insure notice and opportunity for competition. Such advertisement shall not be required, however, when (1) an emergency requires immediate delivery of the supplies or performance of the services; or (2) repair parts, accessories, supplemental equipment, or services are required for supplies or services previously furnished or contracted for; or (3) the aggregate amount involved in any purchase of supplies or procurement of services does not exceed $500; in which cases such purchases of supplies or procurement of services may be made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen. In comparing bids and in making awards, the administrator or the Secretary of War, as the case may be, may consider such factors as relative quality and adaptability of supplies or services, the bidder's financial responsibility, skill, experience, record of integrity in dealing, and ability to furnish repairs and maintenance services, the time of delivery or performance offered, and whether the bidder has complied with the specifications.

SEC. 9. (a) The administrator, subject to the requirements of the Federal Water Power Act, shall keep complete and accurate accounts of operations, including all funds expended and received in connection with transmission and sale of electric energy generated at the Fort Peck project.

(b) The administrator may make such expenditures for offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, and books; for attendance at meetings; and for such other facilities and services as he may find necessary for the proper administration of this act.

(c) In December of each year, the administrator shall file with the Congress, through the Secretary of the Interior, a financial statement and a complete report as to the transmission and sale of electric-energy generated at the Fort Peck project during the preceding Governmental fiscal year.

SEC. 10. The administrator, the Secretary of War, and the Federal Power Commission, respectively, shall appoint such attorneys, engineers, and other experts as may be necessary for carrying out the functions entrusted to them under this act, without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and shall fix the compensation of each of such attorneys, engineers, and other experts at not to exceed $10,000 per annum; and they may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out such functions and fix their salaries in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, page 16, line 5, before the word "transmission", to insert "generation", so as to make sections 11, 12, and 13 read:

SEC. 11. All receipts from transmission and sale of electric energy generated at the Fort Peck project shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts, save and except that the Treasury shall set up and maintain from such receipts a continuing fund of $500,000, to the credit of the administrator and subject to check by him, to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. The administrator may, in the name of the United States, bring such suits, at law or in equity, as he may find necessary in carrying out the purposes of the act; and he shall be represented in all litigation affecting the generation, transmission, and sale of electric energy generated at the Fort Peck project by such counsel as he may select.

SEC. 13. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTIONS REPORTED FROM THE COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolutions 162, 160, and 159, and also, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 164. I ask unanimous consent for their consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolutions reported by the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none and the resolutions will be considered in their order.

ALICE H. KEEGAN

The resolution (S. Res. 162) submitted by Mr. GLASS on July 30, 1937, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Alice H. Keegan, widow of Henry F. Keegan, late an employee of the Senate, under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

The resolution (S. Res. 160) submitted by Mr. CONNALLY on July 28, 1937, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was read, considered, and agree to, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 111, Seventy-third Congress, agreed to January 19, 1934, and continued by subsequent resolutions through the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, authorizing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION

The resolution (S. Res. 159) submitted by Mr. RUSSELL on July 27, 1937, and reported this day by Mr. BYRNES from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 57, Seventy-fifth Congress, agreed to February 10, 1937, authorizing the Committee on Immigration to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,400 per annum during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the end of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

REORGANIZATION OF COURTS AND REFORM OF JUDICIAL PROCEDURE

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 164) submitted by Mr. HATCH and Mr. BURKE on August 2, 1937, and reported this day from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with an amendment.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 20, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of the chairman and six Senators who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary, to be appointed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation and study of all matters relating to the reorganization of the courts of the United States, the appointment of additional judges for any of such courts, and the reform of judicial procedure, with respect to which any bills or resolutions (including resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution of the United States) have heretofore been introduced in the Senate or may hereafter be introduced therein during the Seventy-fifth Congress, and to report to the Senate from time to time its recommendations with respect to such matters. The committee so appointed is further authorized and directed to make a special report to the Senate and to the Committee on the Judiciary with respect to any such pending bill or resolution, if such report is requested by the Committee on the Judiciary.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $7,500, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF PROPERTY OWNED BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, very early in the consideration of bills on the calendar tomorrow calendar no. 1118, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to regulate the use of public streets and sidewalks within the District of Columbia adjacent to property owned or occupied by foreign governments for diplomatic purposes will be called for consideration. I think it advisable to publish, as a part of my remarks, at this point in the RECORD, the entire report of the Foreign Relations Committee upon the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the report (No. 1072) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, having had under consideration the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to regulate the use of public streets and sidewalks within the District of Columbia adjacent to property owned or occupied by foreign governments for diplomatic purposes, hereby report the same with the following amendments and with the recommendation that it do pass:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That it shall be unlawful to display any flag, banner, or device designed or adapted to bring into public notice any party, organization, or movement, or the political, social, or economic acts, views, or purposes of any individual, party, group, or organization, within 500 feet of any building or premises within the District of Columbia used or occupied by any foreign government or its representatives as an embassy or for diplomatic or other official purposes, except by, and in accordance with, a permit issued by the superintendent of police of the said District; or to congregate within 500 feet of any such building or premises, and refuse to disperse after having been ordered so to do by the police authorities of the said District.

"SEC. 2. The police court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of offenses committed in violation of this resolution; and any person convicted of violating any of the provisions of this resolution shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment not exceeding 60 days, or both."

Amend the title so as to read:

"Joint resolution to protect foreign diplomatic and consular officers and the buildings and premises occupied by them in the District of Columbia."

The object of the resolution is to offer the same protection to foreign diplomatic and consular officers and their embassies, legations, and consulates in the District of Columbia that we are urging foreign governments to grant to our diplomatic and consular officers and our embassies, legations, and consulates in their respective countries. Our citizens in foreign countries in the event of disturbances in such countries must rely in many cases upon the sanctuary universally granted in our embassies, legations, and consulates. Our immediate and pressing obligation at the present time is to protect our citizens in foreign countries or in portions of foreign countries where great disturbances exist. In many cases we cannot evacuate our citizens by reason of dangerous conditions and must attempt to safeguard them within our diplomatic and consular premises. In further support of the resolution a report upon the resolution urging its immediate passage by the Secretary of State is herewith set out as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 3, 1937.

The Honorable KEY PITTMAN,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR PITTMAN: I refer to Joint Resolution No. 191 to regulate the use of public streets and sidewalks within the District of Columbia adjacent to property owned or occupied by foreign governments for diplomatic purposes and to express my approval of the resolution.

As you know, diplomatic officers are clothed with certain immunities under international law to enable them to transact in countries to which they are accredited or assigned the business of their respective governments. The immunity, therefore, is for a practical purpose, i. e., to allow governments to transact official business free from interruption which might flow from molestation of or interference with their representatives. Governments also send to foreign countries representatives who are not clothed with diplomatic immunity in the strict sense of the word but who are, because of their representative status, entitled to certain special protection under the local law, as, for example, consuls, trade commissioners, etc.

The United States with its 338 diplomatic missions and consulates is, perhaps more than any other country, interested in obtaining for its representatives the protection which they must have if they are to function effectively.

If we are to obtain for our representatives in foreign countries that degree of protection to which they are entitled, we should be in a position to show a like consideration for representatives of other governments in this country. Unless we extend such reasonable protection to representatives of other governments, we cannot hope to receive protection for our representatives abroad.

It is extremely embarrassing to the Department to be reminded by representatives of foreign governments in the United States that their missions are being interfered with by individuals or groups, particularly when existing domestic law does not seem to cover the situations of which complaint is made. By the comity of nations, representatives of foreign governments in countries where law and order are supposed to prevail are entitled to freedom from any attempted intimidation or coercion.

I therefore trust that you may find no difficulty in procuring passage of the resolution.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 826. An act for the relief of the estate of H. Lee Shelton, the estate of Mrs. H. Lee Shelton, Mrs. J. R. Scruggs, and Mrs. Irvin Johnson; and

S. 1219. An act for the relief of Pauline M. Warden, nee Pauline McKinney.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PLAN FOR PREVENTION AND CONTROL OF FLOODS—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, this is an important matter which I am about to present to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the House to joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, and for other purposes, were approved by the Senate the other day.

The joint resolution originally passed the Senate and was sent to the House where certain amendments were adopted and subsequently concurred in by the Senate—though I think wrongly so. It was done in the midst of considerable confusion.

The joint resolution was signed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate and sent to the White House on August 3. When it was passed by the Senate it was a measure authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make a report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods.

The joint resolution went to the House. In the House some very peculiar language was inserted in the joint resolution. I want to invite the attention of the Senators from those States affected, where the Federal Government is now either carrying on power development on major streams or contemplates such a thing, because the joint resolution deals very intimately with that activity of the Government.

It is my judgment that if the joint resolution becomes a law it will not only impinge upon, but probably nullify the power provisions of the bill which has been introduced by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] known as the national conservation bill.

I invite the attention of Senators briefly to the language inserted in the joint resolution in the House. When the joint resolution was brought back to the Senate and we were asked to concur in the amendments of the House, I heard some one suggest on the floor of the Senate at the time something about the contents of the measure as it had been amended in the House. I asked the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] what had been done to the joint resolution in the House in the way of amendments. There was a great deal of confusion on the floor. We were preparing to enter upon consideration of the housing bill. I understood from her that the references to power in the House amendment were merely of a nature that would authorize the Secretary of War to report back to us what plans were contemplated with respect to power development.

I invite attention to the language of the House amendments, because if the joint resolution is signed by the President and becomes a law, we can expect power development to be shaped by the War Department instead of by those agencies which we have heretofore set up and which we may hereafter set up. I think this is a very serious matter, because it is, in my judgment, the beginning of a complete departure from the program we have been carrying on, and certainly from the program contemplated in the bill to which I have referred that was introduced by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I submit an inquiry to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the joint resolution which passed infringe upon the rights of the States to control the streams, including power, within their own boundaries? Is the Senator supporting a proposal that his own State or the State of Utah or any other State may not, through its own authority, have any voice in the control of the waterways within the boundaries of the State?

Mr. BONE. It does not even remotely come within striking distance of a theory of that kind. Under existing Federal legislation my State could, if it had State legislative authority, file upon a site on the Columbia River and get a permit from the Federal Power Commission to go ahead with a big State development. I am not objecting to that. The joint resolution comes back to us with this provision:

> That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to submit to Congress with reasonable expedition a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods of all of the major rivers of the United States.

It is taking in all rivers.

Then it is provided:

Such plan and report or reports shall take into consideration flood-control projects now under construction or heretofore authorized by acts of Congress, and shall include provisions for the construction of levees, spillways, diversion channels, channel rectification, reservoirs, and utilization of water resources through the building of power dams or a combination of power, reclamation, conservation, and flood-control dams, and all works necessary for an effective soil and water conservation for all such rivers and their watersheds. Any plans or reports which include or recommend projects for reclamation shall be prepared in conjunction with the Department of the Interior.

Then the title of the joint resolution was amended so that it, together with the text of the joint resolution, would clearly seem to carry the implication that from now on it is to be the policy of Congress that the War Department shall lay its plans for future power development.

In my judgment, that is a dangerous thing. It is such a complete departure that it is subject to challenge at our hands. Certainly the President of the United States cannot sign the joint resolution in the light of his own attitude toward the Norris bill, the national conservation bill, without, in my judgment, the grave danger of rendering nugatory or almost nullifying the wholesome and desirable aspects of that bill.

For the reasons stated, I am asking unanimous consent to enter the motion at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Washington to ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate concurred in the amendments of the House to the joint resolution?

Mr. BONE. That is correct. I have sent my motion to the desk and ask that it may be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate concurred in the amendments of the House to Senate Joint Resolution 57. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington exactly in what particular the amendments which were adopted in the House and concurred in by the Senate interfere with the program which has heretofore been followed by Congress? Has any program yet been established by Congress?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, this joint resolution applies to projects now in existence and to those hereafter to come into existence; and it is, in my judgment, a deliberate effort to turn over all the planning for power development to the War Department.

Mr. OVERTON. Is not the measure to which the Senator has reference a bill which relates to flood control?

Mr. BONE. No; that is the one to which I did not object when it went through.

Let me call the Senator's attention, from that standpoint, to the innocuous language of the joint resolution that we passed. Had I realized that the further language was in the joint resolution, however, I certainly should have objected when we concurred in the House amendments.

Senate Joint Resolution 57 provides:

That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to submit to Congress with reasonable expedition a full report or a series of reports embodying a comprehensive national program and plan for the control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States.

But the joint resolution goes over to the House, and there they interpolate into it language which will turn over to the War Department the planning of all power developments in this country, including the Fort Peck project, which was covered by the bill which was approved here a moment ago.

If we want deliberately to turn this planning over to the War Department, let us do it with our eyes wide open; and if the President signs this joint resolution, in my judgment, the President will thereby elect to let the War Department do the planning instead of having it done under the organization set up in the plan which he has approved, embracing the creation of eight large major subdivisions of this country, of which the development of power will be an important item.

If we want that as our policy, we can now adopt it. We can let the joint resolution stay where it is. If the President wants to sign it, I want him to do it with full knowledge of what is being done; but I do not want this power program destroyed by perhaps the rapidity with which we had to act here.

When the joint resolution came back from the House, I asked the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] what changes had been made in it. Several Senators were on their feet, and there was so much noise in the Senate Chamber that I could not hear her reply distinctly, but I understood the Senator from Arkansas to say that the joint resolution merely calls for the engineers also to show what prospective plans might be made for power development. The language of the joint resolution, however, is too clear. It is very cleverly drawn, I will say that; and there have been suggestions and intimations that it is going to take out of the hands of present agencies the development of power and put it in the hands of the War Department.

If we are going to approve this joint resolution, let us do so with full knowledge of its implications; but I think we shall be doing ourselves a simple act of justice by bringing the measure back here and having it thrashed out on the floor before we shift our policy here in midstream.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Is a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate in agreeing to the amendments of the House and in passing the joint resolution now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate Joint Resolution 57. The Senator from Washington announced that if that permission were granted it would be followed by a concurrent resolution asking for the return of the bill from the President. Has the Chair correctly stated the situation?

Mr. BONE. I think that states the parliamentary situation. If there is objection, of course I cannot enter this motion.

Mr. OVERTON. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I am not sufficiently familiar with the joint resolution to know whether or not I should object to the motion. Will the Senator from Washington be kind enough to withhold it until I may have an opportunity to look into the matter?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not understand that the Senator from Washington has to obtain unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider. If he obtains recognition, he may make such a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The Chair will state that he is advised by the Parliamentarian that under Rule XIII the time for filing a motion to reconsider has expired, the question being whether the rule refers to a calendar day or a legislative day. If construing the rule independently, the present occupant of the Chair would be of the opinion that the rule applies to calendar days. The Chair will state, however, if the point is made, that feeling bound by the ruling of the President pro tempore as to the question of the number of speeches that may be made in one day, in which the President pro tempore held that the rule meant a legislative day instead of a calendar day, the Chair would hold that the rule means a legislative day instead of a calendar day.

The Chair will state that the House amendments were agreed to on the second day of August; and, of course, the question whether the rule means a calendar day or a legislative day would be determinative of the case. The Chair would prefer to have the President pro tempore make the ruling rather than have it made by the present temporary occupant of the chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the joint resolution been transmitted to the President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the joint resolution was transmitted to the President on the third day of August.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then, has the Senate any jurisdiction except to adopt a resolution requesting the return of the joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not feel required to pass on that point at the present time, for the reason that the Senator from Washington has made a request for unanimous consent. It is within the power of the Senate either to grant the unanimous-consent request or to refuse to grant it.

Mr. CONNALLY. It seems to me the only thing the Senate can do is to adopt a resolution requesting the return of the bill. If the President has it, we cannot reconsider our action upon it.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, if the request is for unanimous consent, in the absence of the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], who advocated the adoption of the House amendments, and in view of the fact that, as I understand, the joint resolution only calls for a report from the War Department, and in view of the further fact that the President has the full right and authority to veto the joint resolution if it is obnoxious, I shall object to the unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska objects to the request of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, first, I should like at least to have read by the clerk the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the Senate the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) to authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive national plan for the prevention and control of floods of all the major rivers of the United States, development of hydroelectric power resources, water and soil conservation, and for other purposes.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, let me say for the RECORD and for the benefit of my fellows here that if this measure contained what is intimated and suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], I should have no objection to it. You have heard the Senator from Nebraska say that the joint resolution requests the War Department to make a report. I should have no objection to that. The joint resolution, however, calls upon the War Department to prepare the plans. I think the Senator from Nebraska owes it to himself to read the joint resolution before he suggests anything of that sort.

I should have had no objection to the joint resolution, and had none at the time the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] reported it, if it had only called for a report; but it calls for the preparation of plans for hydroelectric development by the War Department, and that is a hundred million miles apart from the thing the Senator from Nebraska suggests.

Let us have no misunderstanding about this matter. It is too important a thing, because it is a complete divorce and departure from the program which the President suggested, the program to which many of us are so completely committed. All I want is that if the Senate of the United States is to divorce itself from that plan it shall do so deliberately, and not in this sidewise fashion. We are doing it here in a haphazard, hit-or-miss fashion, without giving the joint resolution the deliberation and the thought that it deserves.

This is a matter of major importance. It may involve the whole public power program of the country. If it is to be wiped out, destroyed, obliterated, I want to have it done here in the full light of all the facts, and not by a little measure of this kind.

I desire to say further that I have no objection and I am perfectly agreeable to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska that the matter go over until the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is here. The boards proposed to be set up under the National Conservation Act are assumed to have the power to do this thing themselves; but now we are getting this other agency into the picture, and giving them blanket authority to prepare plans for power development on every major stream in America. If we are to do that, let us do it all out in the open. Then we shall know just where we are.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, there is no one in the country who has established a greater reputation than has the President for being sincerely interested in the development of the power resources of the country; and I think we can safely leave this matter in his hands.

If it is obnoxious and contrary to the policies heretofore announced, I am very sure that he will send the measure back with his veto. Therefore I stand on my objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair) laid before the Senate message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Agnes Van Driel, of Illinois, to be Chief, Division of Technical Training, Social Security Board.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of the following-named citizens to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 1st day of July, 1937:

Keith B. McCutcheon, of Pennsylvania; Donald N. Otis, of Massachusetts; William F. Pickett, of Oklahoma; and David W. Silvey, of Indiana.

Mr. WALSH also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Marine Gunner Kennard F. Bubier to be a chief marine gunner in the Marine Corps, to rank with but after second lieutenant, from the 26th day of June 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George Edmund Bigge, of Rhode Island, to be a member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. GREEN. I ask that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James C. Archer to be passed assistant surgeon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTER—NOMINATION REJECTED

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Oscar Ross Lang to be postmaster at Montgomery, La., which had been adversely reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the other nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

INCOME TAXATION TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND CANADA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive B, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, a convention between the United States of America and Canada on the subject of income taxation, signed at Washington, on December 30, 1936, which was read the second time, as follows:

The Government of the United States of America and the Government of Canada, being desirous of concluding a reciprocal convention concerning rates of income tax imposed upon nonresident individuals and corporations have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

The High Contracting Parties mutually agree that the income taxation imposed in the two States shall be subject to the following reciprocal provisions:

(a) The rate of income tax imposed by one of the Contracting States, in respect of income derived from sources therein, upon individuals residing in the other State, who are not engaged in trade or business in the taxing State and have no office or place of business therein, shall not exceed five per centum for each taxable year, so long as an equivalent or lower rate of income taxation is imposed by the other State upon individuals residing in the former State who are not engaged in trade or business in such other State and do not have an office or place of business therein.

(b) The rate of income tax imposed by one of the Contracting States, in respect of dividends derived from sources therein, upon nonresident foreign corporations organized under the laws of the other State, which are not engaged in trade or business in the taxing State and have no office or place of business therein, shall not exceed five per centum for each taxable year, so long as an equivalent or lower rate of income taxation on dividends is imposed by the other State upon corporations organized under the laws of the former State which are not engaged in trade or business in such other State and do not have an office or place of business therein.

(c) Either State shall be at liberty to increase the rate of taxation prescribed by paragraphs (a) and (b) of this article, and in such case the other State shall be released from the requirements of the said paragraphs (a) and (b).

(d) Effect shall be given to the foregoing provisions by both States as and from the 1st day of January, nineteen hundred and thirty-six.

ARTICLE II

The provisions of this Convention shall not apply to citizens of the United States of America domiciled or resident in Canada.

ARTICLE III

This Convention shall be ratified and shall take effect immediately upon the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Washington as soon as possible.

Signed, in duplicate, at Washington by the duly authorized representatives of the United States of America and Canada, this thirtieth day of December, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-six.

For the United States of America:

R. WALTON MOORE,
Acting Secretary of State.

For Canada:

HERBERT MARLER,
Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the State Department and the Treasury Department have been very insistent on early consideration of this treaty. There were certain provisions in the Revenue Act of 1936 which, in a practical way, invited treaties to be negotiated with the governments of contiguous countries which would permit of a reduction in the standard rate of income tax on nonresident alien individuals from 10 percent to 5 percent, and in the case of nonresident foreign corporations would permit of a reduction in the standard rate of income tax on dividends from 10 percent to 5 percent. In referring to nonresident alien individuals and to nonresident foreign corporations, it is intended to include only those not engaged in trade or business in the United States and not having an office or place of business therein.

Canada is aiding our country in the matter of ferreting out people who are attempting to evade the payment of taxes, and I hope very much the treaty may be ratified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether the committee which considered the treaty was unanimous, or whether there was opposition.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand there was no opposition in the committee. I will ask the chairman of the committee whether or not I am correct in that statement.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Mississippi, I may state that this matter was investigated a month or 6 weeks ago, and we received reports at that time from both the Treasury Department and the State Department. A subcommittee was appointed, with the Senator from Mississippi as chairman, and that subcommittee went into the matter very carefully and reported back unanimously in favor of the treaty.

About that time a joint committee was appointed, as the Senate will recall, to investigate and devise means of plugging up holes by which some were attempting to escape the payment of income taxes, and for that reason it was suggested that the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations make further investigation and have conversations with both the Treasury Department and the State Department, and see whether this treaty would in any way conflict with the investigations then going forward. The chairman of the subcommittee was authorized to make a report, and the subcommittee came to the conclusion that the treaty was in no way obstructive of the action of the committee investigating possible loopholes by which people were seeking to escape taxation.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Vermont that I took this matter up with the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion, and it was believed by all the members of that committee who were present, and I believe all were present, that this treaty should be ratified.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] not being present, I felt bound to make these inquiries. I personally have no objection, and in view of what has been said, I will not make any objection on behalf of anyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive B, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, a convention between the United States of America and Canada on the subject of income taxation, signed at Washington, on December 30, 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDER TOMORROW

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate meets tomorrow the call of the calendar for the consideration of unobjected bills be continued where it was left off today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, August 7, 1937, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, AUGUST 6, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Again, O Lord, Thou hast remembered Thy tender mercies and loving kindnesses; open Thou unto us the gates of Thy righteousness and may we go into them. We thank Thee for Thy promise: if any man lack wisdom, let him ask Thee; no true seeker shall miss this saving truth. We pray Thee that we may deaden self and thirst for the right and stand forth with the first-born sons of light. Open our minds to the truth and help us to understand Thy gracious will. O Immanuel, Son of God, be a light within us this day; give us strength, courage, and grace for its duties. We pray Thee to bring us all into harmony with Thee and make us worthy of that universe of light of which Thou art the center. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7051. An act authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 826. An act for the relief of the estate of H. Lee Shelton, the estate of Mrs. H. Lee Shelton, Mrs. J. R. Scruggs, and Mrs. Irvin Johnson; and

S. 1219. An act for the relief of Pauline M. Warden, nee Pauline McKinney.

VIRGINIA DARE AND SIR WALTER RALEIGH'S COLONY AT ROANOKE ISLAND

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 17, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the joint committee on the celebration of the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Virginia Dare and the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the disappearance of Sir Walter Raleigh's colony, to be held at Roanoke Island, N. C., on August 18, 1937, the following Members of the House: Mr. WARREN, Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. BLAND, Mr. BOLAND, and Mr. SNELL.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point, by including therein a statement made this morning and released by the Secretary of State, having to do with a trade agreement with Russia.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman request to put that in at this point in the RECORD?

Mr. ANDREWS. At this point; yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not feel that he can entertain a unanimous-consent request of that sort unless remarks are made by a Member on the floor. The Chair is of the opinion it is bad legislative practice to extend extraneous matters in the body of the RECORD.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request and ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks, as indicated, in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 136]

Bacon	Doxey	Johnson, Minn.	Shanley
Biermann	Drewry, Va.	Kelly, N. Y.	Simpson
Binderup	Driver	Kerr	Sirovich
Boyer	Eaton	Kirwan	Smith, Conn.

Culkin	Gregory	Plumley	Voorhis
Dempsey	Gwynne	Quinn	Wood
Dickstein	Harter	Sadowski
Dingell	Hartley	Scrugham
Douglas	Hill, Ala.	Seger

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. JONES, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the morning press informs us 41 Members of the Senate have signed a petition for a special session on October 15. It is stated this suggestion was inspired by the President.

I realize, of course, the spirit to treat Congress rather roughly and tell us nothing. I believe, in all fairness to the Members who have been here 7½ months, we ought to know what the program is. There is a lot of legislation pending that it is intended to push through in a hurried way, legislation which affects every nook and corner and every phase of American life. If we are going to come back for a special session on October 15, surely there is no reason for the present session to continue longer than tomorrow night. Personally, I do not favor a special session, because I believe one is unnecessary and expensive. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do say if we are going to have a special session there is no justification for the present one to be continued longer, and that legislation be hurried through without mature consideration. I hope the leadership of the House will see that the rank and file have more knowledge of their plans in the future than they have had in the past. [Applause.]

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7051) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MANSFIELD, DEROUEN, GAVAGAN, SEGER, and CARTER.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I thought after making a statement in the House last week in reply to a question propounded by the minority leader [Mr. SNELL] that the program for the remainder of this session was well understood. It was put in the RECORD exactly as I stated it.

There is no disposition, certainly, on the part of the Speaker of the House or myself, to hold this Congress any longer than is absolutely necessary [applause], and it is our hope that by the 21st or the 25th of the present month a program will be finished, and that it will be such a program there will be no necessity for a recess of Congress or an extra session of Congress this fall, and in order to obviate any necessity for a recess until fall and, we hope, any necessity for an extra session being called by the President, we think that if everybody will be patient for 2 more weeks, we will know the definite date upon which we are going to adjourn. [Applause.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, few Members on either side of the aisle have supported labor and this administration through this great national emergency more consistently than I have. But I want to serve notice now, as one who is not breaking his neck to adjourn and go home, that there is going to be no consideration of a wage and hour bill, so far as I am concerned, unless there is some action for the relief of the farmer who is now facing a tragic falling market for his cotton and other products. A wage and hour law, greatly increasing the cost of everything the farmer must use, with a falling market on his products, would be fatal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, rather than ask unanimous consent to address the House for a minimum period, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the question of an early report on the housing bill by the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we can carry on a discussion here all day long, but we have important legislation to consider, and we asked the House to meet at 11 o'clock this morning in order to finish it this evening. I must object to any further discussion at this time. When we have finished the legislation, I shall have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to object to any request of my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], but already this morning it was made impossible for a Member on this side to insert his remarks at this point. I object.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I renew my request and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts modifies his request in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUGAR BILL OF 1937

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7667, with Mr. BLAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the agreement yesterday, the reading of the bill is dispensed with, and the first matter to be considered will be the first committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, between lines 2 and 3, strike out "30,000 to 50,000 and insert "more than 30,000."
Strike out "More than 50,000------ .450."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. JONES: Page 7, before line 8, insert "in no case shall the quota for the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands be less than the duty-free quota now established by the provisions of the Philippine Independence Act."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, that is simply a provision that should have been in this bill, to make it so that we will not violate the Philippine Independence Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. JONES: Page 33, line 17, strike out "December 31, 1940" and insert "June 30, 1941."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is a correction, so that the tax will apply uniformly on the whole year's crop.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. JONES: Page 37, line 12, strike out "December 31, 1940" and insert "June 30, 1941."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 14, strike out "such date" and insert "December 31, 1940."

Mr. JONES. That makes it conform to the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: Page 14, strike out lines 1 to 8, both inclusive.
Page 14, line 9, strike out "(c)" and insert "Sec. 207. (a)."
Page 14, line 11, strike out "(d)" and insert "(b)."
Page 14, line 8, strike out "(f)" and insert "(d)."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is not a committee amendment, but is one which I am offering to the bill. This is the important, controversial amendment that will be offered to the bill, and I propose to allow, with the consent of the committee, rather full discussion, which it should have.

This is an amendment to strike out subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 207 on page 14, and is the amendment which has been discussed somewhat during the general debate. I am going to talk frankly to the members of the committee and to those who are interested in legislation. I believe that the true friends of legislation, if they are wise, will agree to these amendments. I hope that those who want to secure legislation—and I am speaking from a disinterested viewpoint—will not permit their pride or feeling to control their judgment. As a great President once said, we are face to face with a condition and not a theory; and if you want legislation I believe these amendments should be adopted.

The administration, including the President, is very much opposed to these two paragraphs remaining in the bill. There is some criticism of that position being made known, but I think there is pretty good reason for it when a number of groups went to see him, both from among Members of Congress and elsewhere. At any rate, I want to say to the friends of this legislation that this is not the important provision in the bill, and I hope you will not permit a relatively unimportant amendment to jeopardize or imperil the major objectives of this legislation.

I am not going to discuss, in the main, the particular merits of the question. It is a debatable question. It is not a one-sided question; but just as a practical proposition, the bill as it is now written places control within the quota of the amount of direct-consumption sugar that can be brought in from Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

If those provisions were stricken out, there would be no limitation on the amount of refined sugar that could be brought in from those islands within their quota. It would not affect the quota but simply the amount of refined sugar that could be brought in within their quotas.

Now, listen for just a moment. These provisions in the bill would permit the largest amount of direct-consumption sugar or refined sugar to come in from those islands which they ever sent in in any one year prior to the enactment of the original act. The life of this bill is only a little more than 2 years. You Members who are interested—and some of you are vitally so, although it happens I am not interested except in the interest of good legislation—it probably will not make much difference in the amount of sugar that will be brought in in refined form from those islands within that 2 years. Is that not correct?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. If that is so, why does the gentleman insist on his amendment?

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman understands that. He is a pretty smart man. [Laughter.] I have a high regard for my friend from Massachusetts, and I do not think he is seeking information altogether, because I think he has it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that while it may not materially affect the quantity of sugar coming in, it might affect the laborers who are in the employ of the domestic refiners?

Mr. JONES. If it does not affect the amount of sugar that comes in in refined form, how could it affect labor? Now, if a little more sugar were brought in, it might affect it, and it possibly would affect it. I will state to the gentleman that there is some argument on that basis, but it is not probable, in view of the historical basis of the entry of refined sugar prior to the enactment of the original act, that there is much involved.

Let me say that the position of the administration is this, that it is a matter of principle; that it will not affect much, during the life of this contract, two or two and a half years, the amount of sugar that will be brought in, but they are opposed to the discrimination against any group of American citizens living under the American flag. That is their position, and I want to state that the President has made it clear he is all for the beet growers and the cane growers, and wants them to have legislation. I think that most of you will realize that the great major objectives of this bill will remain the same, insofar as the American producers are concerned, whether these amendments are adopted or not. Then, too, even if my amendment is adopted, industry and labor will have the advantage of the other provision of the bill.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield for a question.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman stated that this question is relatively unimportant and that the administration is against it.

Mr. JONES. Now, let us get it correct. I said it is relatively unimportant as far as the mechanical amount of sugar that is brought in is concerned. The administration regards it important as a matter of principle.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is what I am coming to, as affecting the amount of the finished product that comes into the United States.

Mr. JONES. No; as to the question of writing into a law a discriminatory feature, not that it will have much effect. It is just as though we tried to pass a law saying that the gentleman should not be permitted to go back to Kentucky this month. He might not want to go back, but if we were to pass a resolution that he could not go back, he would not like it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to put my question?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If I understood the gentleman——

Mr. JONES. Do not argue; ask the question; my time is limited.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. As I understood the gentleman's statement, it was that the amount of sugar which would come in would be relatively unimportant but that the important thing involved is the question of principle.

Mr. JONES. I am stating the administration's position; this is correct.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Is it not a fact that if the amendment the gentleman offers is adopted the entire production of raw sugar, or the entire quota of raw sugar, could be turned into refined sugar and then brought into continental United States?

Mr. JONES. Theoretically, that would be possible; but considered in the light of the historical background, when we had no limit at all, they did not bring in any more than they would be permitted to under this bill. They probably would not build any great refineries for a 2-year program. That is my frank answer.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentleman says it will not affect imports.

Mr. JONES. I say, in my judgment, it will not to any great degree within the time limits of the operation of this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. One further question, if the gentleman will permit. Should the quota be increased, it would permit investment in refineries in the island. Would not this provide an additional reason for extending the provision for 2 more years?

Mr. JONES. Perhaps; but, as a matter of fact, they can build all the refineries they want to in the islands now.

Mr. O'MALLEY. With this quota taken off, which the gentleman's amendment purports to do, would not the domestic refineries be in the middle of a squeeze play where the island refiners can say to refiners in the continental United States, "You pay our price for raw sugar or we will take advantage of this unlimited quota and refine the sugar and send it into your market"?

Mr. JONES. I do not think they could do that to any great degree within a 2-year period.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Such things have been done before.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Even sitting here in the front row I could not hear the amendment when it was read. I would like to have the amendment read again, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JONES. I will state it to the gentleman. It strikes out subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 207.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. Does the gentleman believe that these sections with reference to Hawaii and Puerto Rico are constitutional?

Mr. JONES. I think they are constitutional if quota provisions generally are constitutional. I do not think the legal question is materially involved. If we can adopt as a legal proposition quotas in reference to raw sugar, I cannot see why we cannot adopt them in reference to refined sugar.

Mr. MAVERICK. I understand, but that is a specific quota as against Hawaii and Puerto Rico, parts of the United States of America, the only geographical difference between them and the other components of the Union being that water separates them instead of land.

Mr. JONES. I do not think that question is much more serious in view of all the circumstances than the legal question involved in quotas generally. They are not States. Perhaps we could do as we please. But that is all the more reason why they should not be discriminated against.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. If we are to strike out sections (a) and (b), why do we not also strike out section (c)?

Mr. JONES. Section (c) is not important for the reason that they are given a quota of all they ever produced. They produce only about 7,000 or 8,000 tons, and that is not important.

Mr. KELLER. Then why should it be in the bill?

Mr. JONES. I do not care. The gentleman may add that to my amendment if he wants to; that is not a controversial matter.

Mr. KELLER. I am going to try to strike it out.

Mr. JONES. I do not have any objection to that. It would not alter the matter one way or the other.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. How do sections (a) and (b) of this bill compare with the Jones-Costigan Act?

Mr. JONES. They are practically the same the way the bill is reported as reported in the original act.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will understand that I am presenting the position as best I can in the light of all the circumstances. I think it is but fair for me to read to the House a very brief statement prepared at my request by some of those who have had the responsibility of administering the various features of the Jones-Costigan Act, setting forth their position in the matter.

I believe the House would want to have the courtesy extended to have this read.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is only a three-page statement and I think that courtesy, in view of the interest manifested, should be extended to these people:

The first three paragraphs of section 207 of H. R. 7667 discriminate against Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Virgin Islands by limiting refining operations in these areas without corresponding restrictons on the other domestic areas of the United States. These provisions are demanded by the seaboard refiners of the mainland in order to limit the amount of competition in the sale of refined sugar. The seaboard refiners are given extraordinary benefits and protection under other provisions of the pending bill, as follows:

(1) Under the quota provisions total supplies are adjusted to consumers' needs which stabilizes the sugar market in the United States, as operations under the Jones-Costigan Act have indicated. Refiners thus obtain at public expense, in legal form and under public safeguards the general market stabilization which they sought unsuccessfully to achieve at their own expense through control of sugar marketing practices under the Sugar Institute regime of 1928–30, which control was held by the United States Supreme Court in its decision of March 30, 1936, to be in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States.

(2) For many years refiners have sought to limit importations of liquid sugar into the United States, which, they maintain, replaces their refined product among certain types of consumers (confectionery, baking, etc.). Section 208 of the bill prohibits the importation of liquid sugar from any foreign country except Cuba and the Dominican Republic, which two countries are permitted quotas based on previous years' marketings in the United States, thereby limiting competition of foreign liquid sugar with refiners' products. Section 210 (b) provides in effect that any liquid sugar marketed by the domestic areas shall be included in the sugar quotas, thereby limiting possible competition with seaboard refiners' products of liquid sugar which may be produced in domestic areas.

(3) Under section 207 (e) refiners receive the unusual protection of an outright embargo on any importations of direct-consumption sugar from the principal competing country (Cuba) in excess of 375,000 short tons, raw value, which represents a decrease, as compared with the 1936 quota, of 87,000 short tons of sugar, although the United States Tariff Commission, after official investigation of costs of refining in the United States and Cuba, reported to the President on January 22, 1934, that no change was warranted in the tariff differential between raw and refined sugar.

It should be clearly understood that the foregoing reference to the figure of 375,000 tons of direct-consumption sugar is not to be taken as implying acceptance of that figure. The Department of State maintains that the Cuban direct-consumption quota should not be reduced below a quantity equal to 22 percent of the total Cuban quota.

(4) Under the provisions of the Philippine Independence Act the refiners are protected against importations of refined sugar, duty-free, from the Philippine Islands, where great expansion of refined sugar production would be possible if no restrictions were imposed. To the limitation of 50,000 long tons of duty-free refined sugar provided for in the Philippine Independence Act, there is added the provision in the pending bill in section 207 (d) that no more than 80,214 short tons, raw value, of direct-consumption sugar may be brought in from the Philippines in any calendar year, even with payment of full duty.

Under the quota system the seaboard refiners increased their meltings from 4,129,000 tons in 1933, the year prior to the Jones-Costigan Act, to 4,514,000 tons in 1936. The excess of the American refiners' margin above the world refiners' margin per pound of sugar amounted to over $20,000,000 in 1936 on the refiners' aggregate deliveries of sugar, an indirect subsidy under quota legislation to the 14 refining companies of $1,600 for each person employed by them, as against an average wage of $1,005.

The question at issue is not whether the 14 mainland cane-refining companies, employing approximately 14,000 people, should be protected but whether, after having been granted the foregoing unusual forms of protection against competition in the bill, they should be given this additional protection, which is an outright discrimination against American citizens residing in the Territories and possessions of the United States.

The provisions discriminating against Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands in the matter of refined sugar are in complete violation of traditional American policy and of basic American principles.

First. These discriminatory provisions establish trade barriers within the United States. These provisions establish that a certain part of the Union may not manufacture, may not process, the products of its soil. This discrimination against one part of the Union is established not merely in favor of another part of the Union—in itself an unjustifiable performance. It establishes discriminations against parts of America, inhabited by American citizens, in favor of a few mainland companies already highly privileged by this legislation. As a precedent this kind of discrimination is unthinkable—and because it was introduced without the administration's approval 3 years ago in the Jones-Costigan bill, in an emergency, is no reason for making it continuing national policy.

May I say to the House that I am not talking about this position of the Department. I may not be able to finish this statement, but I feel it is fair to state it in the interest of the people who are concerned about this matter. I know some of you represent certain areas, and you, as a matter of policy, may have to vote against these amendments; but those who do not represent such districts, I believe, as man to man, you will be doing the great beet and cane producers of America a favor, not on the merits of the proposition, but in the interest of securing major legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman should be permitted to finish reading this statement. It is very important and is a very vital part of this bill. He should have additional time to answer three or four questions, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, continuing this statement:

Second, these discriminations are contrary to the spirit of American institutions. They are contrary to contemporary American policy by establishing an Old World colonialism in America. The essence of Old World colonialism, the colonialism against which the Thirteen Colonies rebelled when they declared their independence from Great Britain, and against which the Spanish colonies rebelled when they broke away from Spain, was the right of the mother country to exploit those colonies, to consider their citizens as occupying a secondary and inferior status and to place economic obstacles in their path, in favor of commercial interests in the mother country. This is still the practice among Old World empires, though to a more limited extent than it was a century and a half ago—because colonies cannot be exploited as ruthlessly now as then. However, it is self-evident that sound statesmanship in the United States cannot recognize, cannot permit, the establishment of such a continuing policy with us. It has been part of our historic process that territories represented an earlier stage of political development, and that during that period of development their lack of voting strength in the Congress was not to be taken advantage of to penalize them, but on the contrary should entitle them to the fullest protection from the entire Congress. Because Hawaii and Puerto Rico have no vote in the Congress is not only not a reason for discriminating against their products and imposing restrictions upon them against which they cannot retaliate, but it is a valid reason for insuring them protection at the hands of the entire Congress. The Congress itself is looked to by American citizens in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands to insure them equal treatment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In view of the announcement made by the floor leader a few moments ago, and the gentleman's statement, as I understood it, to the effect he is directly informed the President will veto this bill if these amendments are not agreed to, may I ask the gentleman, if the bill is vetoed and the Congress adjourns in the meantime, will there be any sugar legislation during this term of Congress?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman has asked two or three questions in one. I have not quoted the President. I do not undertake to quote Presidents. I do know from conversations that the President has taken a very firm stand on this matter, and I believe in all fairness if sugar legislation is desired this is about the only way to get it. Furthermore, if this bill should be passed in its present form and vetoed, I would like to call the attention of the friends of this legislation to the fact that the Congress has been very generous to the people who produce beets and sugarcane. There are a great many more consumers in this country than there are producers of sugar beets and sugarcane, and the Congress has been fair enough to go along on a great program that has done much, I believe you will all agree, for the sugar industry of America. There is much that may be done by the major provisions of this bill. Just as an open proposition, I do not think the people who are vitally interested could very well expect, in the event there should be passage of the bill in its present form and it should not be approved, the people who are not interested to still go along and undertake to pass it, notwithstanding that you are not willing to be reasonable enough to recognize the realities of the situation and, in order to accomplish a great purpose, be willing to make a little sacrifice. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. If these amendments are voted down, then the islands would have the right to send to continental United States something like 600,000 short tons of refined sugar?

Mr. JONES. They would have the right, but probably under the physical conditions existing would not exercise the privilege.

Mr. KENNEY. But they would have that right?

Mr. JONES. They could not exercise the privilege, I may say.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have found myself so directly opposed to my long-time and distinguished friend, the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, as to be moved to take the floor in opposition to the very fine statement he made, but a statement which, in my opinion, carried only one side of the picture. I do not blame him for his oversight. No man as busy as he has been in the last several months could be charged with such a little thing as probably overlooking a very significant and important bet. It is a very peculiar thing to find him, after having gone through the hearings along with other members of the committee, overlooking the significant fact that the House Committee on Agriculture has as its members a group of gentlemen whom I believe, like the distinguished chairman, desire to preserve every principle of fairness and justice that is due to him or to any other American citizen.

Mr. Chairman, when the statement is made that there is discrimination and that we are treating citizens under the American flag unfairly by this particular provision of the bill that is sought to be stricken out, I invite the attention of the members of the committee to the provisions of the entire bill. The State of Texas, the State of New York, and the State of Massachusetts at one time produced sugar beets and Texas produced sugarcane.

Under this bill and under the quota applied, States which at one time were able to indulge in that particular line of industrial endeavor are completely shut out from the so-called business of producing. The point I am trying to make is that the committee heard every single reason advanced today in the gentleman's argument and heard extensions of these reasons in the testimony before the committee, yet notwithstanding that, the entire committee, composed of men who, I repeat, are as fair and desire to be just as patriotic and law abiding as any group anywhere else, came to a decision, with the exception of one man who did not vote on the bill, that the provisions of this bill were O. K., including the two paragraphs which are the subject of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if these provisions are discriminatory as between citizens under the same flag, I challenge any man to stand up before this group in this great emergency and say the quota bill as written, from beginning to end, with these provisions knocked out, is not equally discriminatory. No man can apply the argument to one particular section because of administrative desire to have anything accomplished without being willing to look the facts and the figures in the face and recognize that the committee applied the quota system to the industry as it was at that time, limited it with proper adjustments, after due, careful, and deliberate consideration, and brought out the bill which this body is now considering. No committee working as we had to work would be able to bring out a perfect bill. I doubt if such an instrument has ever been passed. But when we come down to the issue involved today, whether to strike out provisions which do nothing more than freeze the refined sugar importations from Hawaii and Puerto Rico to the amount represented by their absolute peak of exportations of refined sugar to the United States, and then look at the other provisions and their effect on certain other States of the Union under the same flag, it does not seem to me we can be practical or consistent and still claim we are treating Puerto Rico and Hawaii with discrimination.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman. will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes; I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCK. Is it not a fact that owing to the quota limitations we have put on the imports of raw sugar, the continental refiners are limited much more than the refiners in Hawaii and Puerto Rico?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KLEBERG. I shall repeat the question so the gentleman will hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. My distinguished friend the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] has just asked me whether or not in my opinion it is not true that the provisions of the quota restrict American refiners to a greater degree than the restrictive provisions complained of affect the refiners of Puerto Rico and Hawaii. I may say without any hesitation that that is perfectly patent on the face of the statement I have just made. The refiners on the continent are restricted, by reason of restrictions on the continental sugar producers of both cane and beet sugar, including not only the cane-sugar refiners but the processors of beets, to the limitation in this bill, which provides an opportunity for the law of supply and demand to function for the benefit of not only the producers but the consumers and the market to which the producers of raw materials must go.

Mr. Chairman, I hold that my distinguished friend overlooked this proposition when he made the statement that if we adopt this apparently innocuous amendment no damage will be done. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that whenever a great deliberative body like the Congress of the United States adopts an amendment such as the one now presented, and accepts without going more into detail the statement that there is no injury caused to a great industry thereby, a great offense is committed. I hold that no man who will take his pencil and paper and figure out the facts and go back to the historical record of this industry can say that the producers of cane sugar in the United States are not injured when their market has its throat cut. Whenever you destroy the market to which producers must go, you have done them an injury.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that quotas were established with respect to areas which were then producing beet and cane sugar?

Mr. KLEBERG. And refining, too.

Mr. LANZETTA. With respect to the raw sugar, the burden was placed equally on the shoulders of every American citizen in the producing areas where sugar was then under production.

Mr. KLEBERG. Except in the case of Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that in the case of Puerto Rico and Hawaii quotas were fixed on the basis of the amount of sugar produced for a number of years past?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that the quotas of the continental beet and sugarcane growers were fixed in a similar way?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Then, where is the discrimination?

Mr. KLEBERG. There is no discrimination because we find the industry processing sugar and the industry producing sugar are essential one to the other. The same principle applies to the production of the industrial product as applies to the case of reduction and curtailment in the production of the agricultural product.

Mr. LANZETTA. Then, there is no discrimination insofar as the beet or raw cane sugar is concerned.

Mr. KLEBERG. No; that is is not correct.

Mr. LANZETTA. The gentleman agrees with me that the quotas were fixed for all areas which were then producing raw sugar.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is correct.

Mr. LANZETTA. And if the burden is placed equally upon all of these areas, then there is no discrimination.

Mr. KLEBERG. There is equal discrimination, none the less, to everybody under this bill, but the discrimination is indulged in in order to arrive at a solution of a practical, economic problem, and until the Congress and this Committee understand that the purpose or objective of this bill is to accomplish such a solution of a problem which threatens the successful economic continuance of the sugar industry in continental United States, as well as in the islands, we will never properly join issue on the question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes; if I can get just a little extra time, because I have not finished the point I want to make.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to say, as a member of the committee, that this bill will not permit the building of a sugar plant in Texas so they may refine beet sugar in Texas?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. I will answer the gentleman in this way.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I ask the gentleman the question is because of his remarks appearing at page 8320 of the RECORD, which the gentleman has repeated here. I want to find out whether, in the gentleman's opinion, this bill prohibits the building of a new beet-sugar mill in the State of Texas for the purpose of refining sugar.

Mr. KLEBERG. The question answers itself, because the State of Texas cannot go into the production of sugar beets under this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How are the other Western States building mills and bringing them into production under such legislation?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I know the gentleman wants to be thoroughly accurate on that statement, and I think if he will read section 205 (a) of the proposed act he will find that there is provision for expansion of other new areas where it can be shown there is reason for such expansion.

Mr. KLEBERG. And that provision would apply equally to Puerto Rico and the Hawaiian Islands. They and Texas would have to show causes before they can expand.

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Mr. KLEBERG. The point I am making is that there is no discrimination in the bill between the continental area divided into States and the insular areas described as offshore possessions or territories.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Permit me to conclude this statement.

The fact is that the issue hinges on two questions which the House must decide. First of all, whether we are going to continue the emergency provision set up under the Jones-Costigan Act, based on the same principle as the underlying principle of this proposed legislation, and pass this bill as written, or are we going to say that because of certain readjustments made necessary by application of these principles to the processing end of sugar, in some instances, we cannot be fair to the principles establishing quota-restricted production in continental United States when we do not recognize the importance of protecting the market for the producers of those States.

The other question we are going to have to decide is one that comes right straight home to us. As a member of the legislative committee I did my dead-level best to be impartial, to be fair, to be attentive, and to do the very best thinking of which I am capable in deciding upon the final vote on this measure. The legislative committee of which I am a member has decided upon the bill you now have before you, and they have backed it. We now come before the Committee of the Whole House and we find three departments of the administrative branch of the Government, backed by the President, have come to a different opinion with reference to a function which is essentially a part of the duties of this great body. If, because of the pressure that comes from that source, there is a failure to consider that the provisions of this bill represent the dead-level best of the committee to be fair, based on the historical data of the industry from its beginning, and if we decide, against our best judgment and duty, that because we are told that despite our best judgment this bill will be vetoed, with full knowledge of the fact that such veto power exists, I hold, Mr. Chairman, that we have come to a sad day.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. We had a similar situation with respect to the veterans' bonus and the House proceeded and acted.

Mr. KLEBERG. Of course, I did not want to refer to historical matters, but I do want to call attention to the pertinency of that issue here.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I repeat that never have I faced a more solemn or difficult task when I find myself opposed to my loved, distinguished, and trusted friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], who has presented this amendment here—and I make this statement, and if it is challenged, it is all right—because of the fact that he is a Democrat and because of the fact he felt prompted to do this out of courtesy for the departments that have objected to the provisions contained in the bill, and I repeat that as members of the committee and of the House, the question we must decide is whether or not the work done by the committee is going to be disregarded to sustain this amendment, which strikes down the deliberate judgment of your legislative committee and substitutes therefor the desire of Government departments.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to express my views on this sugar question.

The average per-capita consumption of sugar in 1900 in the United States was about 70 pounds. It is now estimated that the per-capita consumption is more than 103 pounds a year.

As I gather from statistical sources, about 20 percent of the sugar required by the consumers of the United States is grown in our own country; 40 percent of our domestic needs is obtained from Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands; the other 40 percent is imported from foreign countries, chiefly from Cuba.

The area in the United States that can be successfully utilized for cane-sugar production is limited by rainfall, soil, and temperature. The portion of the United States that meets these requirements is the Gulf Coast Plain. There are factors, however, that place this region under a competitive handicap with Puerto Rico, Cuba, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands. The handicaps are annual frosts and the higher cost of labor.

It is quite different with beet-sugar production. This crop can be grown under a wide variety of climatic and soil conditions. If the problem of beet-sugar production were to be approached from a statesmanlike point of view, vast areas could be opened up to the production of sugar beets. Instead of importing 80 percent of our sugar, the farmers of the United States might profit tremendously by supplying the ever-increasing per-capita demand for sugar.

Now as to the refining process. The cane sugar comes from the mill as raw sugar, and has to be refined. This business is so vast that the refinery must be located near the great commercial gateways of the consuming regions. The magnitude of this industry is shown by the daily capacity of one of the largest refineries which produces daily more than 4,000,000 pounds of sugar. I believe the reports show that the American Sugar Refining Co. produces in excess of 50,000 carloads annually. These great refineries are located principally near Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, New Orleans, and San Francisco.

Now, with sugar-beet refining the facts are different. The average acre of beet land yields 9 to 11 tons of roots, from which 13 to 18 percent, by weight, is recovered in the form of sugar. The bulk of water and cellulose does not warrant shipment long distances to refineries; therefore, beet-sugar factories are located close to the point of production. This very fact tends to furnish pay rolls to the communities near the sugar-beet farms. The farmer benefits from the price he receives for the beets, and from the pay rolls of the factories located in close proximity to the farms.

I can see no sound reason why millions of acres should be taken out of production of paying crops to furnish a market for foreign sugar producers. As we displace our acres by the importation of farm crops we force the American farmer to engage in the production of crops of which there is already a surplus. This ruins his domestic market price, which results in poverty, distress, and unrest among our farmers.

The domestic market for farm products belongs to the American farmer, and until it is fully restored to him there can be no sustained prosperity for him.

I call attention to another fact, Mr. Chairman. Something has been said about the consumer and what it means to him to buy in the cheapest market. Just so long as we are dependent on foreign countries for the major part of a necessity such as sugar, when a crisis comes, and we need that product, then we will pay the price, as we did during the war. Every country in the world is trying by bonuses and subvention to produce sugar. We have the area here, the farmers can produce it, and there is no reason why we should take from the American farmer this opportunity to prosper in the raising of beet sugar. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment, and ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I stated yesterday, and I repeat today, that I represent a district in which there are no farms. I represent a district similar to districts that many Members of this House represent coming from large urban areas. As my friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] was talking about this amendment, he impressed me that his heart is not in the amendment that he has offered. He admitted that there were two sides to the question. We all know that. When my friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] was talking I know that he had in mind the fact that when he had his hard fights in the past putting through agricultural legislation it was Members like myself who rallied to his support. When my friend from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the majority leader, was also having his hard fights, and I know if he speaks on this amendment he will be conscious of the fact, he will remember that it was Members like myself from the industrial districts who were going down the line with him, helping his people, upon the theory that when we were passing legislation to improve the lot of an economically adversely affected group of our citizens we were doing something that inured to the general welfare. I am going to ask Members from other sections of the country to remember that we from the industrial East have helped them in many a close fought battle in this House. Only the other day the Gila Dam was up, and if you will look over the roll call you will find that the Members from the industrial East helped the West in that fight. A few days ago another dam was under consideration, and look over the roll call and you will find that the Members from the New York, New England, Pennsylvania, and other industrial sections were going down the line for our western friends.

Now, an attempt is being made to divide the farmer and the worker of the industrial area in their common interests in this bill. That will be the result of this amendment if it is adopted. My friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] knows that. The effort is being made to divide the common interest that exists between the farmers of the country and the consumer and refinery workers of the country; the Representatives in this body of the producers of the country and the Representatives in this body of the refiners and the employees of the refiners of the country. My friend from Texas [Mr. JONES]—and I say this impersonally—made a very ingenious argument. Oh, how vulnerable it would be to criticism if we did not know in our own minds that the gentleman is a soldier, and we respect and admire him for being the soldier that he is, and the soldier that the majority leader, if he speaks on this amendment, will be. It is not the heart that is behind their position; but they are soldiers, and on this occasion they are only doing the work of a soldier. The gentleman from Texas said that "the friend of this legislation, if wise, will agree to the amendments." I wonder what he means by that. Have I not been a friend of agriculture? I voted for the last farm bill. I took the floor for the cotton-control bill when it was in peril, and it passed by only six or seven votes. I voted for the potato-control bill of my friend from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. As I say, I took the floor on the cotton-control bill. I assumed then that it would do good for that form of agriculture. They asked me if I would take the floor, and I did. The bill, as I remember, passed by six or seven votes.

The gentleman says that certain Members, if they are wise will agree to the amendment. That argument falls to the ground, because the Representatives of the industrial districts have indisputably shown by their votes and voice that they are also the friends of agriculture. But in this bill today it is not only agriculture that is interested; it is the workers of the refineries, 16,000, approximately, throughout the country, on a 60 percent working basis, and if conditions improve, and if the demands are greater than under present conditions, opportunities of employment will increase. Indirectly many thousands of others are dependent upon this industry. In the city of Boston alone the industry spends $37,000,000 in wages and for supplies, materials, taxes, and other activities, and that all inures to the purchasing power of that section. New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Louisiana, California, and other States have refineries, and their problems are the same as my problem.

The argument of discrimination is raised. After the passage of the Jones-Costigan bill Hawaii contested the act and brought proceedings in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Mr. Justice Bailey said:

> Complainants have failed to show any discrimination against them. Hawaii was, in fact, required to curtail its production less than any other area.

Again, the Justice said:

> Congress has the right to limit the importation of sugar from Hawaii, and that limitation in no way deprives plaintiff of property without due process of law.

My friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] says that if this bill is passed refined sugar imports from Hawaii and Puerto Rico will not increase; that it will not disturb the present situation during the life of the bill. If that is so, why should we adopt the amendment? What is the necessity for adopting the amendment?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Was not the admission made before the Rules Committee by the friends of those who would eliminate these two subsections, that if they were eliminated the industry in Hawaii would expand?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my recollection.

If refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico will not increase, what is the necessity to have this amendment adopted? The present bill proposes to simply continue with reference to refining that which exists under the Jones-Costigan Act. We are dealing with a practical situation. We are not dealing with a theoretical matter. It must be viewed in a practical way.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. KING. It does not say, however, how much sugar we refined at the Atlantic seaboard. Does the gentleman know how much Hawaiian sugar is refined at Boston, in the district that the gentleman represents?

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman wants to put it in the RECORD it is all right.

Mr. KING. I have the figures. In the port of Boston it is an average of 29,000 each year, which should not displace 10 men.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Does not the gentleman suspect that the real reason for the proposed adoption of this amendment is to give Hawaiian producers another angle from which they can obtain a greater price for their raw sugar, by threatening to send in more refined sugar if they do not get a sufficient price for the raw sugar?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already received 5 additional minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman's question answers itself. It is entitled to that inference.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Even if they do not use it, they have a blackjack in their hands against the American refineries.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In view of the interest which the gentleman has taken in this bill and the people whom the gentleman represents and for whom he speaks so ably, I want to ask the gentleman this very vital question: Is the gentleman in position to say, officially for the refining industry——

Mr. McCORMACK. I am talking for the workers of the refiners. Please get that correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thought this was a refiners' proposition.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am talking for the workers of the refiners. I am fighting to protect their best interests.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the gentleman in a position to say for the people he represents and in whose interest he is now speaking——

Mr. McCORMACK. The workers of the refiners.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That hereafter they will insist and stand by protection for the domestic beet-sugar and cane-sugar industry, which they have eternally fought heretofore? You are speaking of the seacoast refiners, as stated in your message yesterday.

Mr. McCORMACK. Now the gentleman is going pretty far afield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to know where you stand on this.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, where I stand? Let me tell you where I stand on this. I would vote for an amendment that would bring about the maximum productive abilities of continental America and its possessions, after the termination of the reciprocal trade agreement with Cuba.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But will the refiners for whom the gentleman speaks——

Mr. McCORMACK. I am speaking for myself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is not representing the refiners?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have told the gentleman several times that I am speaking for the workers employed in the refineries.

As far as I am concerned, I think that the producers of America should be permitted to produce to their maximum capacity. [Applause.] I do not believe we should have crop control of beets and sugarcane for the benefit of some other country—and I refer to Cuba. I realize the practical situation that confronts us in the matter of the reciprocal trade agreement, but there should be no crop control in agriculture unless we have a surplus, and in the case of sugar we have an underproduction, a production incapable of meeting the consumptive demands of our people. Under those circumstances we should utilize to the maximum extent the productive capacity of the growers of the United States.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman think that will ever be brought about as long as the reciprocal trade agreement is in force?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I said after the termination of the reciprocal trade agreement. I think that is the practical situation that confronts us.

Mr. MOTT. Is the gentleman in favor of the repeal of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; and I am consistent in my position.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I have but a minute remaining.

Mr. KING. The gentleman mentioned my name two or three times in the course of his remarks.

Mr. McCORMACK. I dislike not to yield to anyone, even where it is at my own expense; even though I have never knowingly asked any gentleman to yield when he had only a minute remaining, yet I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman realize that the refinery in Boston, Mass., in his district, gets 90 percent of its raw sugar from a plantation in Cuba producing sugar under un-American conditions? We in Hawaii produce sugar on the American basis and pay American wages. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. What the gentleman says if true does not change my position, and it is not inconsistent with the position that I take today. If what has been stated on the floor is true, that there will be no increase of refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico, why does my friend want to have the increase? We are considering a practical bill. Those islands want to bring in all their quota in refined sugar when it has been stated, and not denied, that they do not intend to exercise the power.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman want an answer to his question?

Mr. McCORMACK. In view of the few remaining moments that I have I suggest that the gentleman answer that in his own time. We are considering a practical matter today; not a theoretical one. We are, as we should, considering the whole matter from a practical angle. We have got to apply the rules of practical justice to all interested parties and at the same time have a regard for the consumer.

They talk about discrimination. Who is going to suffer if this bill goes through? Certainly not those employed in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, for under the present law they are now receiving approximately $100,000,000 a year more on the sale of their sugar to us than they would if they sold it in the world markets. Their present invested capital and their workers will not suffer. The only ones who will suffer if this amendment is adopted will be the refineries, through the destruction of their capital investment, and through the throwing out of work of thousands of citizens of the continental United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, let us keep clearly in mind the real issue that is involved in this discussion. The issue is not protection, because the findings of the Tariff Commission under two administrations have been to the effect that there is no difference in the cost of production for refining in the Tropics and in the continental United States. The issue is not labor because in all these refineries in the United States less than 14,000 people are employed and they receive an annual wage averaging about $1,005. If all the refined sugar which might be permitted to come into this country under this amendment came in—and it will not nearly all come in—I can assure the members of this committee of that—it could not possibly displace more than one-third of these workers, because it would be less than one-third of what these refineries are refining at this time. This is the extent of the labor issue.

The issue involved, is not the issue of protection for the domestic producer of cane and beets, because, as I pointed out yesterday, the refiners who are opposing this amendment have for 40 years done everything they could to destroy the domestic beet-producing industry in this country. [Applause.] I cannot understand why those who are speaking for the domestic beet-sugar industry should allow themselves to be made the tools of the refiners as is the case today.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Very briefly, for a question.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman asked a question, I wish to answer it. We are supporting it because they have repented and want to come into the fold. They should be allowed to do so.

Mr. HOPE. I am suspicious of death-bed repentances. All these refiners are doing is hitch-hiking on a bill for the relief of the domestic producing industry.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Briefly, yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As a matter of fact, would these refiners be willing to stand for the protection of the continental beet- and cane-sugar industry?

Mr. HOPE. No; their record for 40 years indicates they will not stand for that. They fought it continuously during all that time.

The issue today is simply whether you are going to permit this Congress to record itself as saying we should set up restrictions against one area in this country which do not apply to another area. If we can do that, as far as refined sugar in Hawaii is concerned, we can do it as far as processing cotton in Georgia or Alabama is concerned. We can do it as far as the manufacture of shoes in Kansas is concerned. We can do it as far as any area in the United States is concerned which has not developed its industrial capacity. That is the big, vital issue that is before the House today. It is a question as to whether we are going to treat our citizens in Hawaii and Puerto Rico just the same as we treat the citizens of Massachusetts and Kansas.

In the year 1887, 18 of the 21 sugar refiners of this country got together and organized what has since been known as the Sugar Trust. The Sugar Trust has been in continuous conflict with the laws of this country ever since. It has been a persistent violator of the antitrust laws. It has been during all its history, and still is, a monopoly today at heart. That is the reason the companies comprising the Sugar Trust are opposing competition from any other area.

Only a little over a year ago the Supreme Court of the United States rendered a decision affirming the action of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York in restraining the Sugar Institute, which is the modern version of the Sugar Trust, from 45 separate practices in violation of the antitrust laws of this country. The Supreme Court modified the decision to the extent that it held 3 of the stated practices were not in violation of the antitrust laws, but as to 42 of them the decision was affirmed.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is a rather healthy thing in this country to have a little competition in the cane-sugar refining business. All the competition we have in that industry today comes from the small amount of sugar that is refined in Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and what we permit to come in under this bill from Cuba and the Philippines. Is it not about time that these 13 great sugar companies which comprise the Sugar Institute, and which refine approximately 66 percent of all the sugar refined in this country, have a little competition? That is the reason these refiners are fighting this amendment today. They are monopolists at heart. They always have been, and they want to continue to be a monopoly.

The issue has been raised here as to what will happen to this bill if we pass it. I do not care to discuss that question particularly, but everybody knows if we pass the bill in its present form it is going to be vetoed. I wonder how many Representatives of the beet-producing sections want to go back to their beet farmers and tell them they voted for a bill that they knew was going to be vetoed because the Sugar Trust refiners wanted them to do so. That is the only answer you can make.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman know of any greater blessing that could come to the seacoast refiners than to have this bill killed completely, so that they could buy their sugar for 60 cents, 70 cents, or $1.25 a hundred and have a small cost with a high refining margin?

Mr. HOPE. I think that would be in line with their previous practices.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does it seem fair to the gentleman to punish the workers because he does not like the activities of the manufacturers? We in New England and of the New England delegation feel very strongly that our workers should be protected. We have lost many industries. I wonder if the gentleman realizes how much we have suffered in the State of Massachusetts?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman spoke of a deathbed repentance. Does the gentleman admit, in making that statement, that it is the death of the refining industry, as the workers seem to feel?

Mr. HOPE. No. I have already stated that labor in this matter is not a consequential issue. It is not an issue in this proposition at all, because sugar refining is perhaps the most highly mechanized industry in the country.

I understand that some of my Democratic friends feel some resentment because the administration has rather emphatically stated its viewpoint and position in this matter, but it seems to me the issue is clear. It is either vote with the administration or the Sugar Trust. Certainly any Member of the majority party would rather have the administration tell him how to vote than to have the Sugar Trust do so. If the vote on this question today discloses that the Sugar Trust is a more potent factor in the Democratic Party than the administration, then these are indeed strange times. May I say to my Republican friends, while they may take some pleasure in voting against the administration, I hope when they do so they will do it in a more worthy cause.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman know that the Beet Growers' Association and the representatives of the beet growers of our country are here today urging the Members from those sections to vote for this bill without amendment? That is the beet growers themselves.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is it not a fact they are dominated by the Sugar Trust itself?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is not true.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. HOPE. In answer to the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Texas, let me cite another instance of the activities of the companies comprising this notorious Sugar Trust. They have gone out in the beet-producing areas and have bought large interests in the beet refineries. They own 26 percent of the stock in the Michigan Sugar Co. The American Sugar Refining Co. has a large stock interest in the Great Western Sugar Co. I am told it is a stockholder in a number of other sugar-beet refineries. This is a further effort they are making to dominate the industry. I think you will find that is where the influence comes from which the gentleman from Michigan states is urging Members from sugar-beet sections to support this legislation. These refiners are simply too smart for both the representatives of beet producers and representatives of labor. They are using both as cat's-paws. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time in the five sessions of Congress in which I have served that I have ever opposed an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. May I say with reference both to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman who has just spoken, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], that if there is any change in administration at the next election I hope one or the other of these gentlemen will be the Secretary of Agriculture, and I mean it? [Applause.]

The gentleman from Kansas is very weak in his mathematics. May I read some figures from the Government report regarding wages paid in Hawaii. It is shown that the wage paid on the sugar plantations in Hawaii is $10.92 a week. The gentleman stated that the annual wage paid by the refiners is $1,090, and I am accepting the challenge.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is talking about me.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman talked three times yesterday.

Mr. KING. The gentleman is referring to field labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The wage paid is $10.92 a week. Multiply that by 50 and you get $546 in Hawaii and $1,090 in the United States, accepting the gentleman's figures as true. What wages are paid in other institutions in Hawaii? On the pineapple plantations, $13.50. In the canneries, $13.44. In building enterprises, $25.10 a week. Railroads, $24.95 a week. Longshore labor, $25.27 a week. Tin-can manufacturing, $22.38 a week. You have a very decent wage in all the industries until you hit sugar.

What is the truth about the cost of sugar? Somebody has said that the people have been very kind to the beet growers so far as the price of sugar is concerned. I have here a table prepared by the United States Department of Labor as of June 8, and it shows the index numbers of retail costs of food by commodity groups from 1929 to 1937, and shows all of the foods running, with 100 as a base, at 102, 122, 102, 102, and 110, but sugar has varied only from 66 to 72, and the last 2 years it has been 66, 66, and 65 on the base of 100; in other words, the cheapest food you eat.

People do not realize just how cheap sugar is. I have a table here prepared by the Secretary of Labor covering April 1937, and it shows the average price paid for food in 51 of the largest cities.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; I decline to yield now. I want to call attention to the value of sugar as compared with other commodities, and then I shall yield if I have time.

Sugar was worth 5 cents a pound then; butter was worth 8⅓ cents a pound, and you were paying 39.7 cents a pound for it. Bacon was worth 6⅔ cents per pound, and you were paying 39.9 cents per pound. You pay 45 cents here. When sugar was worth 5 cents a pound, lamb was worth 3⅔ cents, and you were paying 30½ cents. When sugar was worth 5 cents, sirloin beef was worth 2½ cents, and you were paying 41½ cents per pound. When sugar was worth 5 cents a pound, a can of peas was worth thirteen-twentieths of a cent, and you were paying 16.3 cents per can. A can of tomatoes was worth one-fourth of a cent, and you were paying 9.4 cents per can.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I want to know what the wages of the workers in the beet fields of Colorado are as compared with the wages of the workers in Hawaii. I should also like to know what relation there is between the two, so far as this bill is concerned. Why should we bring up the matter of wages paid in one place or another? What effect does it have on this bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I contend that they are simply asking the privilege of refining the sugar in Hawaii because they can refine it with cheap labor and make more money and beat people who live on the continent out of a job.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman believe it is just to deny to the people we took under our flag the same privilege the gentleman and I have?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, certain remarks have been made here to the effect that those who oppose this amendment are representing the refiners of this Nation. May I say right now that I have not a single refinery in my district and I have not a single solitary beet in my district. I am looking at this from the standpoint of a neutral party. I came to this Congress as a champion of labor and I intend to stay as a champion of labor. I do not like the insinuations of any man who does not know what he is talking about when he states that all those who are opposing this are representatives of the refineries. Does the gentleman know that the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen has endorsed the bill as it came from the committee? Does the gentleman know that the president of the American Federation of Labor endorsed this bill as it came from the committee? Does the gentleman know that there are 94,000 cars used to haul refined sugar on the railroads of the United States because of the refineries? Does he know they have spent $10,000,000 with the railroads and that $4,300,000 of that amount goes to pay labor? Does he know that at one time there were 25,000 men working in the refinery business and because of the importation of refined sugar that number has been cut down to 16,000 and they are attempting to wipe it out?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does not the gentleman think it would take just as many cars to haul that sugar in the United States whether it was refined in Puerto Rico or at Edgewater, N. J.?

Mr. HOOK. No.

Mr. HOPE. Why not?

Mr. HOOK. For the simple reason that these cars are brought to your refineries and the sugar, if brought in, would probably be brought into New Orleans and shipped up the river by boat, and if it was in a refined state it would then be shipped by water most of the way; but when they have to bring it over here and put it in a factory, it has to be refined and then shipped out of the factory again.

Mr. HOPE. Is there any difference? Is there not just as much likelihood of refined sugar going by rail as raw sugar, or vice versa?

Mr. HOOK. They could bring it in direct by water and then stop.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman does not believe that every community in the United States has water transportation?

Mr. HOOK. In other words, they could land it at the ports where there would be no rail hauls.

Mr. HOPE. Are not all the refineries located along the seacoast?

Mr. HOOK. No; not all of them.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman tell me where there is a cane refinery that is not located along the seaboard?

Mr. HOOK. They are not all located at harbors.

Mr. HOPE. I would like the gentleman to inform me of one that is not located along the seaboard.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. Regardless of the situation with respect to our seacoast, if, as we anticipate, the beet-sugar refineries were put out of business by the importation of refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, would it not destroy the transportation by rail of the raw beets?

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman has referred to the great loss in a number of men engaged in refining sugar during the last 25 years. Is that as great a loss as the loss that has occurred in all other mechanized lines in America?

Mr. HOOK. I do not know, but it was because of these importations of refined sugar that this loss came about.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman stated that the loss to the refining industry resulted in a loss to the railroad men and to the railroads and the gentleman from Kansas questioned that statement. Is it not a fact that at least a part of the work given to the railroad men was directly responsible to the refining industry itself or to refining operations, and by the elimination of the domestic refineries, at least, a part of that loss will affect American labor and American industry?

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman is correct.

Now, let us see just what we have before us. They say there will possibly be a Presidential veto. I do not believe this.

Let me read what the President of the United States said in his first message to Congress:

> The Jones-Costigan Act has been useful and effective, and it is my belief that its principles should again be made effective, and I therefore recommend to the Congress the enactment of a sugar-quota system and its necessary complements which will restore the operation of the principles on which the Jones-Costigan Act was passed.

Then he also asked for such legislation in 1934, and Secretary Wallace at that time gave out a statement to this effect:

> The Administration recognizes that the domestic beet and cane producers will suffer the disastrous effect of further price declines unless the impact of insular production on domestic markets is modified through definite restriction of shipments.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I would like to yield if I could get a little more time.

Mr. BUCK. Before the gentleman proceeds to his next point I would like to ask him this question. The gentleman read a portion of the President's message. In the whole message did the gentleman find any recommendation that the existing arrangement as to Hawaii or Puerto Rico should be changed?

Mr. HOOK. No; I did not.

The Democratic platform at one point states:

> We will continue, as in the past, to give adequate protection to our farmers and manufacturers against unfair competition or dumping on our shores of commodities.

With this in mind, I say to you that I do not believe the President of the United States is going to veto this bill. There is not a man authorized to stand on the floor of this House and say that the President will veto this bill. These are the same tactics that were used when they tried to browbeat us, and as you know they did through the departments when we were working on this matter in the subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture.

Representatives from the departments came down and told us of a threatened veto, without any authority for their statements, and then after we unanimously passed the bill in its present form out of the Agricultural Committee what happened? Let us talk straight from the shoulder. The departments said, "If you will amend this bill that has been reported out unanimously by striking out section 207 we will see that you get a rule." What would we have come to, if that was done?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman does not mean to infer that the Committee on Agriculture unanimously agreed to support this bill as it is?

Mr. HOOK. They unanimously reported it out, as it is.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman does not infer that we all agreed to support it as it is.

Mr. HOOK. No; not as it is, but the great majority did. It was a unanimous report.

Mr. BIERMANN. I think the gentleman is accurate to that extent, but I do not want him to leave the inference that we all agreed to support it.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman quoted from the Democratic platform a moment ago. I ask him whether he interprets that to mean commodities from an integral part of the United States, or does it apply only to imports from foreign countries?

Mr. HOOK. It will apply to anything that will protect the labor of this Nation.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman mean continental United States, or all of the United States?

Mr. HOOK. Let me answer it in this way. If you will take Bulletin 534, you will find the source of labor supply in Hawaii. First, the coolie from China, then from Japan, then from Portugal, then from Spain, then from Korea, and now principally from the Philippine Islands. What happened? Are conditions such over there that even the low-paid coolie must quit, and they have to jump from one country to another for their labor supply?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Let us see whether or not this section 207 is a discrimination.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. LORD. The gentleman stated that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Agriculture. I am a member of that committee. There was no roll call. I stated at that time that I reserved the right to oppose the bill on the floor of the House.

Mr. HOOK. That is correct. The gentleman is the only one that I heard say that. There was no minority report. They say this would be a discrimination. Let us follow that to a logical conclusion. We have our quotas on raw sugar, and we limit raw sugar, and we also have quotas on the direct consumption of refined sugar. If this would be a discrimination with regard to the refined sugar, then does not the same principle apply to the raw sugar? If we have the right to limit the quotas on raw sugar does the principle change when it comes to refined sugar?

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does the gentleman seriously contend——

Mr. HOOK. I always seriously contend in anything that I take up.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does the gentleman seriously contend that insofar as direct-consumption sugar is concerned that there is no discrimination in the bill as it now stands with respect to Hawaii and Puerto Rico?

Mr. HOOK. Oh, I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I do not believe there is discrimination because in Puerto Rico you pay no income tax, because in Puerto Rico you are not subject to the Social Security Act, and because in Puerto Rico I am informed the wage and hour law does not apply.

Mr. LANZETTA. The gentleman is begging the question. Will the gentleman please answer my question? Does he seriously contend that there is no discrimination insofar as direct-consumption sugar is concerned with respect to Hawaii and Puerto Rico?

Mr. HOOK. There is no discrimination.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman please explain?

Mr. HOOK. The discrimination is against continental America and I do not yield any further, but I will say this, as long as the gentleman asked the question about being serious. Is the gentleman serious in his protection of Puerto Rico?

Mr. LANZETTA. Yes, I am.

I subscribe to the theory that there is but one kind of American citizenship, and that if a person is an American citizen, irrespective of where he resides, he should be given the same treatment and consideration as any citizen in continental United States.

Mr. HOOK. That is true, and we are treating him better than we are treating the citizens of the continental United States.

Mr. LANZETTA. So the gentleman thinks.

Mr. HOOK. I know we are and we have been according them very good treatment ever since the time we picked them up. If Puerto Rico and Hawaii are serious in their stand, if they think they are being discriminated against, then I intend to introduce a bill and offer them independence and see whether they will take it.

Mr. LANZETTA. I do not think Hawaii or Puerto Rico seek independence.

Mr. HOOK. They do not want it because Puerto Rico could not pick up $20,000,000 relief from any other country.

Mr. LANZETTA. Does the gentleman's State want independence from the Union?

Mr. HOOK. My State does not happen to be a Territory.

Mr. HEALEY. What has been the source of labor supply in Hawaii?

Mr. HOOK. I have explained that it came from different countries, Japan, China, Portugal, Spain, Korea, and the Philippine Islands, and that they changed their source of supply periodically.

Mr. HEALEY. Many of them not American citizens.

Mr. HOOK. That is right. I was just wondering while the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is on his feet, may I state when we were in committee on the hearings, did not the gentleman tell me about the Filipino labor and about all those who are not citizens in Hawaii, and was it not he who lit the spark in me first to search out about that labor situation? Now, why the change?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is not any argument about that. The gentleman has a right to study the labor structure in Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines the same as I have. Did you know that in past years, down through the decades, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and continental beet and cane have stood side by side, shoulder to shoulder, financially and otherwise, organized tight as the Domestic Sugar Producers' Association, always giving each other strength and asking for protection under the tariff laws?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, may I have 2 additional minutes to answer that question?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. The answer is this: The beet-sugar people have stood shoulder to shoulder, but being a champion of labor the only time that labor has come to the side of the beet-sugar industry is this time. Why? Because of the fact that we placed in this bill the duty upon the Secretary of Agriculture to protect the laborer and the right to force the payment of fair wages, and set up a living wage; because of the fact that we put a child-labor provision in here; and now labor is ready and willing to stand shoulder to shoulder with them. We will stand shoulder to shoulder with them as long as they treat American labor as we expect them to be treated.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOOK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do you mean to say as a member of the Committee on Agriculture that the farmers and sugar-beet factory workers have not stood before this Congress for 40 years in succession asking for protection, and is not this the first time that the American sugar refiners ever came here asking for protection?

Mr. HOOK. They got protection under the Jones-Costigan Act?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They got it under the joint work of Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and United States beet and cane.

Mr. HOOK. They got it under the Democratic administration and a benevolent President. They would never have received it under your administration.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Democratic administration made sugar free of duty, and you know it. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield for a moment, not to be taken out of his time?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that hereafter Members will confine their requests to 5 minutes. I would like to give everyone a chance to be heard, and I hope that other Members, if possible, will confine their requests to 5 minutes, because there are a great many who want to speak, and there are some other amendments. It is not my intention to ask to close debate, but I hope that after this Members will confine their requests to 5 minutes, so that all may have a chance to express themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The Delegate from Hawaii.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable argument pro and con and some attacks on Hawaii and many arguments in defense of the bill as not discriminating against Hawaii. I want to say that in the short time I have been here I have found very little, if any, desire on the part of the membership of this House to discriminate against Hawaii at all. Most of you who will vote against this amendment and in favor of the retention of the restrictions will do so in the firm conviction that there is no discrimination against Hawaii. I am going to do my best to convince you that there is such a discrimination, and if I fail I shall respect your convictions, and not take it to heart, as a personal matter, that you have not supported me.

As to the attacks on Hawaii, almost every person who has attacked my country and my people has done so in ignorance or on misinformation and without ever having been there. Everybody who has ever been to Hawaii comes back telling you that it is a splendid country, a modern, progressive community. Several such have spoken in support of my contention. There are no such labor conditions existing in Hawaii as have been pictured here by several uninformed Members. Sometimes fragments of some report are read as something against us, and the rest of the report suppressed.

I want to read you what the President of the United States himself said when he visited Hawaii. He fished off the Kona coast, and he visited the town of Hilo. He went to Honolulu and drove around the island of Oahu, making us a visit of about 10 days. The President of the United States, a man who has been in public life as long as he has been, can gage a community and its standards and the way it lives and what it believes in just as quickly as anybody can. This is what he says.

Upon his departure this was his message to the people of Hawaii:

I leave, also, with pride in Hawaii—pride in your patriotism and in your accomplishments. The problems that you are solving are the problems of the whole Nation, and your administration in Washington will not forget that you are in very truth an integral part of the Nation.

In a fine old prayer for our country I found these words: "Fashion into one happy people those brought hither out of many kindreds and tongues." That prayer is being answered in the Territory of Hawaii.

You have a fine historic tradition in the ancient people of the islands, and I am glad that this tradition is so well maintained.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] would find in this "fine historic tradition" a discrimination against a portion of the American people. He referred to the special privileges proposed to be extended to the native people of Hawaii as a discrimination against American citizens, although these people are themselves American citizens. The other residents of this neighborhood are willing and desirous of extending to these native Hawaiians an exclusive and prior right to engage in fishing off the rock-bound coast of Puna in the area proposed to be added to the Hawaii National Park. Those to whom these special privileges were to be extended are fishermen and the descendants of fishermen who have been engaged in that calling from time immemorial, and it is a privilege which all the other people living in Hawaii are willing and glad to concede and extend to them.

I continue to quote from the President's parting message:

You have built on it, built on it wisely, and today men and women and children from many lands are united in loyalty to and understanding of the high purposes of America.

And I have seen with my own eyes that you are doing much to improve the standards of living of the average of your citizenship. That is as it should be, and I know that you will put forth every effort to make further progress. There are indeed many parts of the mainland of the United States where economic and educational levels do not come up to those which I find here.

And I challenge the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] to compare labor conditions on the Hawaiian plantations with labor conditions in the Colorado beet fields. I have read several documentary records issued by governmental agencies, reports that state that labor conditions in Colorado—not necessarily in the gentleman's district—were terrible.

Mr. CUMMINGS rose.

Mr. KING. I am not going to yield for either a statement or a question at this time, Mr. Chairman.

I wish to read from a letter put into the RECORD of yesterday by the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, Mr. IGLESIAS, written by the president of the American Federation of Labor. The president of the American Federation of Labor has been referred to as considering Puerto Rico and Hawaii not integral parts of the United States when it comes to the sugar question.

Mr. Green said:

DEAR MR. IGLESIAS: I will be pleased to speak to MARVIN JONES and put in a good word for Puerto Rico relating to the importation of refined sugar into the United States from Puerto Rico, as you suggested in your letter dated June 25.

It has ever been our purpose and desire to help and assist Puerto Rico and the Puerto Rican people. I can clearly distinguish the difference between the treatment which should be accorded the people of Puerto Rico and favor of them, and against Cuba and other countries not a part of the United States Government.

Be assured that I will do all I can to be helpful.

Sincerely yours,

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

In the other letter introduced into the RECORD the president of the American Federation of Labor asked for restrictions on Cuba's quota of refined sugar and in another portion of this letter referred to "such reasonable limitations against the importation of refined sugar from our insular possessions as circumstances may require." Of course, Hawaii is not an insular possession.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Not now; I did not interrupt the gentleman when he was addressing the House.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I am glad to yield to the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

Mr. IGLESIAS. I would like to add to the sentiment expressed in the letter of the President of the American Federation of Labor, that the ideals and principles of the American Federation of Labor, as the champion of labor, are not to allow anyone to crucify any class of people that lives under the American flag. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. The gentleman is quite right. The insular possession of Puerto Rico is in a different status from Hawaii. We are an incorporated Territory; they are not at the present time. But they have 1,800,000 people living in Puerto Rico who are striving to earn their living as best they can under great difficulty. They are exempted from the payment of Federal income taxes and have the customs duties collected in Puerto Rico returned to the insular treasury as a matter of necessity. We in Hawaii are not exempted from any levy or tax or customs duty. One of the Members advised me that he had been told we were exempt. I had the pleasure of telling him that we have paid every tax levied by the Federal Government on the people of the United States since we came under the American flag; and since the income-tax law was passed in 1913 we have paid into the United States Treasury every year more money in income taxes than that collected from 12 to 17 States, providing a greater revenue than almost all of the Rocky Mountain States except Colorado. I say this in no desire to pick on those States but as a simple statement of fact. In addition, we pay also the tariffs and customs duties that every other part of the United States pays.

Reference was made to a suit by the Ewa Plantation Co. and others against the Secretary of Agriculture. It was brought in a court of first instance in Washington, D. C., in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia. The plaintiff got an adverse decision, but I have here a photostatic copy of an agreement between the Hawaiian sugar industry and the Secretary of Agriculture on that suit. This agreement states:

It is hereby agreed between the parties to the above-entitled cause, that the adjudication in the court below in said cause is not to be asserted by either party in any other proceedings in this matter as the law of the case, insofar as it relates to the right of Congress to discriminate against Hawaii as distinguished from continental United States.

The Secretary of Agriculture, and his legal advisers, had so little confidence in this decision, even though he won the suit in this lower court, this court of first instance, that he entered into this agreement. Furthermore, he followed up this agreement with a production-adjustment contract with the Hawaiian producers that conceded nearly all the points for which our producers had been contending. From that time to this, we have cooperated fully with the Department of Agriculture in the labor provisions of the bill, the protection of the interests of our 3,500 adherent planters, and in the reduction of our production of sugar. May I say further we may have sued and lost a case; but we have yet to be indicted, tried, and found guilty in a United States court for many offenses against the law of the land like the sugar trust of the eastern refineries. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there is really only one issue before us. Are Hawaii and Puerto Rico being discriminated against or not so far as the phraseology of these two sections concerning Hawaii and Puerto Rico are concerned? I say we are for the simple reason that we come under two bans. We all share together the ban on production quotas. Hawaii was reduced 75,000 tons in its production of sugar in the original act and according to the testimony of the Secretary of Agriculture lost 500,000 tons of sugar from our production of sugar during the life of the Jones-Costigan Act, at an expense to us of whatever that may have amounted to in dollars at $50 to $60 per ton. We cooperated to the fullest extent in all the labor and other provisions of the A. A. A., which was an emergency matter. That is now water over the dam. We have a quota today of 976,000 tons. The new bill cuts that figure to 938,000, Hawaii sharing with the beets and Puerto Rico in a proportioned reduction in order to give the Louisiana-Florida area an additional quota. I personally had an idea the increase was going to be divided in some proportion between Louisiana and Florida. Puerto Rico and Hawaii were nicked a few thousand tons and the increase given to them. Hawaii lost about 38,000 tons in order to help that situation down there. That is fair and legitimate. I am anxious and glad to do it.

I may say frankly that I am not a sugar man, and I would not personally care if the Committee cut our quotas further in an equitable proportion and gave this additional cut all to Florida. It would be O. K. with me as far as I am personally concerned. I can agree to this perhaps because I have not any money in the sugar business. But, as a matter of principle, it would be equitable and fair if other areas joined in such an arrangement.

However, to return to the amendment, on top of all this production quota you come in with another quota restriction that applies only to Hawaii and Puerto Rico. If we were located on the mainland as a part of the continental United States, this would not be tolerated for a minute.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make that one point a little more emphatic. Florida, as it happens, produces some 40,000 to 50,000 tons of sugar and does not refine any of it. It sends it all up to Savannah for refining. There is nothing in this law to prevent Florida erecting a refinery down there tomorrow in the sugar-producing area and refining all of that sugar. But there is something in this law that places, first, a quota on us, and then places us further under a restriction with reference to refining our own sugar by a refining quota. That is the discrimination against which I am protesting. No mainland area suffers this double restriction.

Another argument used against Hawaii is that we have received large sums in the form of benefit payments during the life of the excise tax and payments to producers under the Triple A. As a matter of fact we have received less per ton of sugar produced and less in proportion to our share of the total domestic production of sugar than any other producing area. I have here a table covering the period referred to, which I shall ask permission in the House to insert at this point, that shows clearly the truth of this statement.

Sugar production and benefit payments under the Agricultural Adjustment Act

	Production (tons)[1]	Percentage of total domestic production	Benefit payments [2]	Percentage of total benefit payments	Average payment per ton of sugar produced
Sugar beets	2,330,000	35.8	$27,215,335	41.5	$11.68
Louisiana-Florida	525,000	8.1	10,324,429	15.8	19.67
Hawaii	1,982,000	30.5	13,322,114	20.3	6.72
Puerto Rico	1,669,021	25.6	14,690,000	22.4	8.80
Total	6,506,021	100.0	65,551,878	100.0	10.08

[1] Production of sugar for crop years 1934-35 and 1935-36.

[2] Payments at time table was made were not complete for sugar beets but includes the 1935 advance payments totaling $7,572,000 as shown in U. S. Department of Agriculture Statistics of Agricultural Adjustment 1933-38. This does not include the 1933 refund payment of $2,640,000 paid to sugar-beet producers.

Source: U. S. Department of Agriculture (Agricultural Statistics, 1936, tables 124, 470, and 471).

Obviously Hawaii as the producer of about one-fourth of the domestic production of sugar should receive approximately the same proportion of the total benefit payments made to the domestic producers. But Hawaii has not received this in the past, nor will it receive payments in this ratio under the new bill. The measure under consideration makes a differential in benefit payments in favor of small producers that will further decrease Hawaii's share of such payments.

The Secretary of Agriculture has pointed out in one of his official statements on this subject that the processing taxes will not increase the price of sugar to the public, but will be borne by the industry; that the benefit payments are designed to return to the agricultural producer a greater share of the proceeds of the crop, and, by being made conditional, are designed not only to secure cooperation in the general sugar program, but are also intended specifically to permit (a) compliance with marketing restrictions, (b) the payment of fair and reasonable wages to agricultural labor as fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, (c) the payment of a reasonable price for sugar cane or sugar beets, and (d) compliance with the soil-conservation programs.

To grant preferential benefits to the smaller producers may be justified; but it must be realized that the expense of the program is carried by large producers and their cooperation is necessary for the program's success. The differential, therefore, should be fair and equitable; and not become a punitive penalty.

I thank you for your patience and hope you will agree with me that the double restriction on Hawaii, imposing both a production quota and a 3-percent refining quota, does indeed constitute a discrimination which should be stricken out of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, my State is tremendously interested in this bill. I did not speak on it yesterday. I therefore ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are quite a few who desire to speak on this bill. I am one of them. I would like to have some time.

Mr. GREEN. We have had 2 hours' discussion, lacking 15 minutes, and we have not heard from any one except members of the committee practically.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture said he would object to any Member asking for over 5 minutes from now on and I think we ought to stick to that.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Chair a question: Is there a limit on the time that is available for debating this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no limit on the time. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, my State is tremendously interested in this bill, particularly in the quota provisions. It happens that our State has been expanding in the production of sugar. It also happens that my State consumes about 90,000 or 100,000 tons of sugar per year. Under the provisions of this bill we will get probably less than 70,000 tons. It seems to me that where we only produce, in America, 25 to 28 percent of what is consumed in America it is a shortsighted policy for the Congress to restrict the American people in the production of this necessary commodity. There should be no limitation placed upon sugar production in America. I fully realize the entanglements and the obligations that our Government has assumed to certain other governments in this connection. I refer particularly to the quotas which have been allowed to foreign countries. I notice that under the provisions of this bill the following quotas are set up in the bill:

Domestic sugar beets, 1,550,000 tons. That is not too much.

Mainland cane sugar, 420,000 tons. This is not enough.

Hawaii, 938,000 tons, which is not too much.

Puerto Rico, 798,000 tons.

The Virgin Islands, 9,000 tons.

The Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, not now an American possession, 1,029,781 tons. I am still not fighting so far as that is concerned.

Cuba, 1,911,476 tons.

Foreign countries other than Cuba, 26,000 tons.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in protecting American industry and expanding an essential industry for our American people in time of war and in time of peace. In line with that thought, the Florida delegation will offer an amendment and I hope you gentlemen who favor protection of our American people will vote for this amendment. The amendment we will offer provides for quota substitution as follows:

Domestic sugar for the first year, 1,550,000 tons. Louisiana, 360,000; Florida, 90,000, only 30,000 increase; Hawaii, 938,000; Puerto Rico, 798,000; Virgin Islands, 9,000; Philippine Islands, 970,000; Cuba, 1,917,000; this indeed is adequate. Foreign countries, 50,000.

May I ask each Member this question: As a consumer of America do you believe it is right, and as a Member of Congress, do you believe it is a sound policy to vote to restrict mainland production of sugar when we are producing only 23 to 28 percent of what we eat in America? Suppose you have war. Then, would not the Government have to subsidize production of sugar in America? Is it a sound policy to restrict the production of sugar in the Florida Everglades, the richest sugar lands in the world, to less than what we actually consume in the State of Florida? Soil, climate, and every sugar-producing requirement are ideal in Florida. I say it is unwise and I say it is un-American to give to Cuba, a foreign country, with foreign labor, paid probably 30 cents a day, a quota which should go to Florida, where we pay $2.70 a day for our own American labor? In addition to $2.70 minimum daily wage, employees are given housing, medical care, and other benefits. Is it right? Is it just? I have nothing to say against production of sugar in Puerto Rico or in Hawaii. These are our own territories. I have heard of no inclination on their part toward independence.

On the contrary, pending in the Committee on the Territories are requests that they be given statehood. Hearings have been held and this committee, of which I am chairman, will, I am sure, give their causes care and mature consideration. Their citizens are loyal American citizens, and I ask not for restriction of their quotas. Let them produce sugar. You have not restricted their quotas. On the contrary, you have restricted the quotas of your beet growers. You restrict the quota of Louisiana. You absolutely stop any expansion of production in the State of Florida. My colleagues, this is time for serious thought. I have due and high regard for administrative officials of the Government but I owe a responsibility first to the people in my State who sent me here and next to the American people, who are requesting expansion of our American industry to take care of our American people. I owe far greater allegiance and far greater support to the cane growers in the Everglades, to the cane growers in Louisiana, and to the beet-sugar growers in Colorado, than I do to foreigners who do not even purchase their pro rata of manufactured commodities from our American manufacturers. It is time for us to take the bit in our teeth and vote for our own people for one time, rather than continue to vote here to let American dollars and American production go to foreign countries and to foreign labor. I stand for the American laborer and the American standard of wages. I stand for assisting as far as we may foreign countries which give us our share of trade by buying from us. Cuba does not give us our share of trade through the purchase of our manufactured articles. On the other hand, out of the 6,682,670 tons of sugar consumed in our country annually we give her almost one-third. Why? I will let each answer for himself. Are you going to do it? You gentleman from Louisiana are paying a good wage and trying to expand your industry. You gentlemen from Colorado and the other beet States have worked for months on this legislation to try to bring your areas back in production. We in Florida are earnestly trying to expand in production of sugar. These three areas in the United States with a reasonable expansion can produce 50 to 75 percent of the sugar used in our country. Would that not be a far better position than we occupy today?

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DEROUEN. Does the gentleman from Florida believe we can rewrite this bill on the floor?

Mr. GREEN. I absolutely know we should adopt on this floor an amendment to take off a part of Cuba's quota and give it to Louisiana and Florida, and I hope the gentleman will stand with us.

Mr. DEROUEN. The gentleman from Louisiana will vote for the bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture. We cannot write a bill on the floor.

Mr. GREEN. In the increase allowed under the bill, Louisiana gets the lion's share. This is possible under the historic base, but Florida will contend for an increase in quota.

Many years ago the Federal Government ceded to Florida between five and six million acres of swamp and overflowed lands in Florida, principally in the Everglades area. The condition of this transaction was that Florida should drain and reclaim this vast area. The State of Florida and her citizens diligently went about carrying out their part of this compact. Almost $100,000,000 was expended in the Florida Everglades in drainage, flood control, and navigation. Some 4,000,000 acres of this land is now arable and represents probably the richest and most fertile land in the world. It is peculiarly adapted to the growth of sugarcane. It produces, I believe, more tons of sugar per acre than any land in the world.

Our Everglades people did not turn to the production of sugarcane until adversities in vegetable production overtook them. First, they saw their pineapple industry move over to Cuba. Later, and at present, they are now seeing their winter vegetable industry absorbed by Cuba and other foreign islands on account of pernicious reciprocal-trade agreements entered into in the past by the Federal Government. Existing reciprocal-trade agreements with Cuba have made it unprofitable in many instances to undertake to grow winter vegetables in south Florida. Without these reciprocal-trade agreements and with adequate protection for our winter vegetables and fruits in the south Florida area, we would never have been forced to turn to the production of cane sugar.

As a last resort for American production capital turned to the Everglades and there established our present thriving sugar industry. We are cultivating probably less than 20,000 acres of sugarcane in the Everglades now. This low production was caused by the Jones-Costigan Act. If we could be permitted to expand production of sugarcane in the Everglades from three to four million acres could be taken up and would probably produce half as much, or possibly as much, sugar as is consumed in the United States.

Just as we are beginning to profitably produce sugar in the Everglades the Federal Government halts us and forbids expansion. This is an unwise policy and one which no businessman would permit in his own financial transactions. Florida is not interested in subsidies given for acreage reduced. It is true that some 5,000 acres of cane was, during the past season, plowed under in the Everglades and the Government paid more than one and one-quarter million dollars subsidy for this act. These same acres would have produced the growers far greater income if they had been permitted to harvest the cane crop.

The fact of the matter is we do not believe in restriction of production of sugar in continental United States and in our territories as long as we produce only a small percentage of the amount consumed in the United States. In Florida is consumed possibly 100,000 tons a year. In Florida we are permitted to market, under the provisions of this bill, a far less amount; therefore, under the provisions of this bill, Florida takes the role of consumer rather than that of producer. It is an unfair and an unjust discrimination against my State to restrict it from producing less sugar than is actually consumed in it. It is a costly adventure for the Government to pay Florida growers funds to keep acres out of production and at the same time to import from foreign countries sugar which is needed by the American people. Undoubtedly this process of our Government will not long continue.

Even if this bill is passed and applied, it will be of temporary duration, because the sound judgment of a strong American Government will not long permit a process of this nature which on one side is governmental extravagance and on the other side is penalty on American labor and on American producers. If we were permitted to expand production of sugarcane in the Everglades, we would have no relief problem there among some 50,000 population. All in this south Florida area who desired to work could and would find gainful employment in an honorable and necessary industry for the future development and progress of our Nation. When production of sugar is restricted there it has the effect of adding thousands to the relief roll or at least failing to take from the relief rolls thousands that could be absorbed in gainful occupation. Therefore, our Government, through the workings of this bill, will deny employment to our persons, will keep them on the relief rolls, and at the same time will turn around and pay bounties to our people who desire to produce at a profit but who are not permitted to do so.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I cannot believe that a policy so unbusinesslike can long endure in our splendid Government. It is hoped that the House will accept the amendment which I have referred to. If this amendment should be declined, then other amendments will be offered. It is my intention to offer one which would take directly from foreign quotas some 25,000 tons of sugar and add it to our limited Florida quota. This would give us a reasonable expansion and would permit us to grow probably as much sugar as could now be processed in existing plants in the Florida Everglades.

This is a matter of transcendent importance, particularly to my State, and also indirectly to the American consuming public. In offering these amendments and making an effort to expand production of sugar in the Everglades of Florida, the Florida delegation is conscientiously working for what we believe will redound eventually for the best welfare of every consumer in America.

I urge my colleagues to stand with us and to adopt our amendments to this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to appear before the Committee under false colors. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] because I believe that if adopted it will take out of the bill its two worst features. Its adoption, however, does not leave the remainder of the bill satisfactory, to my humble and very often inadequate judgment.

We have heard a great deal about the discrimination implied or effected by paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 207. As the discussion has gone along, it has occurred to me, and it may have occurred to others who have listened, that as we take our steady steps toward a totalitarian state in which government is to tell the people how they shall earn their living, inevitably there arises in this body, as there would arise in any legislative body convened in such a state, a strenuous pulling and hauling as between sections. I think you will not deny that sectionalism has reared its head here in this debate. It is my confirmed opinion that sectionalism is bound to arise when government takes charge of business. If one section of the country or one industry happening to thrive in a certain section of the country is to be put upon a quota basis in the matter of production, whether it be sugar or cotton or potatoes, or whatever, and another section of the country engaged largely in the same business is put under another or a different quota, there is bound to arise an acute rivalry between the two sections, and the representatives of each section will hurry to Washington and try to get a Government decree advantageous to it and disadvantageous to the other.

This element appears in this bill as it is presented to the House. There is no restriction placed upon the refining of sugar by a continental refiner. He may purchase all the raw sugar he can purchase under the maximum quotas, and may refine 100 percent of it. In the same breath we propose to say to the refiner in Hawaii, "No; you cannot refine more than 3 percent of the raw sugar permitted to be produced in Hawaii." There is your discrimination.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KLEBERG. I know the gentleman wants to be accurate, and, so far as his statement goes with respect to the restriction of 3 percent, the gentleman is accurate, but there is no restriction on what they can refine for home consumption or for the world market.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Surely the gentleman from Texas would not advance that suggestion as a defense of the pending provision. We know that the home consumption of Hawaii, of necessity, must be infinitesimal compared with its total production of raw sugar, and it would hardly satisfy the Hawaiian to say to him, "You can eat all the sugar you raise."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me, not to be taken out of his time, in order that I may try to reach some agreement as to closing debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto?

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 15 minutes, at the expiration of the additional time granted to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a very brief question.

Mr. MAVERICK. Would not this be just the same as if they would put a total quota on the State of Texas for the refinement of oil and say that Texas could not refine its own oil?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no difference in principle whatsoever. If the Congress can do this, if it is wise, if it is constitutional, if it is statesmanlike, then it can do it with any other crop or any other product in any State or in any group of States or in any colony or Territory or possession.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think that such a discrimination is constitutional?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am but a layman and my judgment on constitutional questions is not worth listening to. My personal opinion is it could not stand in the courts; but, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas has just called attention to an analogy. I do not know how the members of this committee regard this kind of legislation. Mind you, I have no interest in the sugar business whatsoever, neither have any in my district, but look at the sentence on page 14, commencing at line 9. It is a little bit of a thing, but this is the kind of legislation the Congress of the United States has come to:

None of the quota for the Virgin Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is no refinery in the Virgin Islands.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know that. The gentleman from Texas reminds me that at present there is no refinery in the Virgin Islands. This bill proposes to say to the people inhabiting that possession of ours, "You shall never have one." This is the kind of legislation we are coming to in this desperate endeavor to regiment the businesses and occupations of the people living under the American flag. No; there is no refinery in the Virgin Islands. There is a Government distillery there making "Government House Rum", financed by the United States Treasury. I have tasted it—never again! [laughter]—but that is beside the point.

The tendency and trend which this legislation portrays is inevitable so long as we live under that philosophy of government which assumes that government is all-wise and therefore should be all-powerful. From day to day, for 2 or 3 years, we have been saying "Thou shalt not" to you and "Thou shalt not" to you. "You shall run your business as I say you shall run it and in no other way. Government must be, and shall be supreme."

This is that kind of legislation. You say it is brought here to meet an emergency. What created the emergency and how long ago did it take place? At least 5 years ago, and day after day we find these bills brought in on the assumption that the emergency is not over, and never will be. We are extending these powers year after year without cessation. It is the settled policy of government today in America to have the American peple live under this kind of legislation. Why not admit it? Many people believe we should live that way. I do not. It is a difference of opinion, and an honest one, but, inevitably, as you proceed with it you will find the ugly head of sectionalism appearing in our legislation.

A bill is to follow this one next week known as the Black-Connery bill. I know that sectionalism is already involved in the consideration of that bill. There are men on this floor who will be influenced—they may not be decisively influenced, but who will be influenced, by the plea that if the Government by decree can fix minimum wages, one section of the country may suffer to the advantage of another. You know it just as well as I do. Sectionalism, again, because you are trying to center in one spot, here at the seat of the Federal Government, all power to control the methods of earning a living pursued by one hundred and twenty-odd millions of people, a task impossible of performance and fraught with the gravest danger to our civilization. [Applause.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] when he said that this is not a tariff bill. It is not. It is far worse, far more iniquitous, far more vicious than any tariff bill that we have ever had in this country. When we enact a tariff bill, we say to the foreign countries, "We are excluding your commodities', and we know when we do that, that those foreign countries can retaliate, that they can exclude ours. Economic processes would do it, anyway, but they can accelerate it and make it faster. Here we undertake to impose a quota, more effectively injurious than a tariff, against an insular possession, which we know cannot retaliate, which cannot defend itself. We are treating our possessions far worse than we are treating any foreign country. I can in my imagination, as I sit here and listen to this debate, take myself back 175 years to the British Parliament, when they were saying under the same argument what we are having here today, "Don't let those Americans Colonies manufacture guns, don't let them distill rum, don't let them build ships, don't let them do anything, make them bring all of that to England", and that is what we went to war about.

If we are so terribly afraid of suffering from the reduced labor costs of our possessions, then let us do the honest thing, the courageous thing, and either turn these possessions loose or transfer them to the sovereignty of a nation that is not suffering so much from the jitters.

Without the Virgin Islands, of course, we would be depriving ourselves of a most valuable naval base in the Caribbean Sea. Without the Hawaiian Islands, we could prepare ourselves to treble the cost of our defense of the Pacific coast. We could prepare to junk our trans-Pacific air-mail and transport business; then having paid that cost, we could erect a tariff wall against these foreign possessions and be consistent with history and at least honorable in our dealings.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] a moment ago questioned the sincerity of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] in supporting the abolition of these quotas. I am not going to question the sincerity of purpose of anyone in this debate; but all that I will do is to ask this House to look at the districts from which those Members come, who are the most outspoken advocates of placing a quota on our insular possessions.

There we find the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], my very good friend and a man for whom I have the very highest regard. He represents a district that probably has more native Mexican and people of Mexican extraction than any other district in the United States. His constituents come up to Ohio and work in the sugar-refining business and take jobs away from native American laborers. Other districts which have loud spokesmen in favor of the insular refining quota, raise sugar beets. A very high percentage of the sugar-beet acreage in this country is under the direct ownership and control of the American Sugar Refining Co. Then we have the districts along the coast, where the coastal refining business prospers. Those districts are not without congressional advocates. In addition to that, we have a lot of sincere Members of this House who believe in the principle of protection and think that this is a proper method of achieving their purposes.

I do not question the good faith, nor the sincerity of any man who has debated on either side of this subject, but I ask the Members of this House to look over the speakers who have denounced this unfair, un-American insular quota system and see if there is a single one of them who can be accused of having a selfish interest in their advocacy. Look and see if you can find a single man advocating the repeal of this quota who is going to gain one vote or any other favors by his attitude.

What a farce is this plea "to defend American labor." The sugar industry pays less for labor out of its gross expenditures than almost any other industry in this country. So far as I know, it is absolutely the lowest. Three percent of its expenditures go for pay rolls, and, of course, it is because of that 3 percent that the sugar interests have flooded our hallways and the dining room downstairs with lobbyists. But last week, when one walked into the congressional dining room, he did not know whether he was in a Congress of lobbyists or in a meeting place for lawmakers. Oh, yes; they are interested in the 3 percent; they are not all interested in the other 97 percent of their expenditures. They are not at all hoggish in this matter, either. Under the Jones-Costigan Act, the coastal refineries increased their annual refined-sugar output by 386,000 tons. They are not satisfied with that. Like the dog with the bone crossing the bridge, who sees the reflection of another dog in the river, they want it all. They do not want Hawaii or any of our possessions to cut in on their 97 percent at all.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] said that the number of employees in the refining business had dropped from 24,000 to 14,000 in the last few years. I do not know where he gets his figures; he did not specify; but if the employment did drop that much, it dropped in the face of a tremendous increase in output in the last 5 years. Of course, the refining industry has reduced their employees. Improved machinery has done the same thing for practically every other industry. It is because of this improved machinery that these refineries have reduced their labor outlay to 3 percent of their total expenditures as against the railroads that pay out 50 percent of their expenditures for labor.

To show the absolute hypocrisy and absurdity of this claim about defending labor, let us assume the impossible; that is, that within the next 2 years Hawaii and Puerto Rico double their present production and that the Virgin Islands accomplish the inconceivable task of refining as much as the whole Hawaiian Archipelago. The total production of all our possessions under this impossible dream would be 242,000 tons. What effect will that have on an industry that in 1936 refined more than 4,500,000 tons? It would not be a drop in the bucket. There is not a man in this House, so far as labor is concerned, that would even know that the sugar was coming in, even those in the direct refining districts, such as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

It is not the labor, it is the dividends that are footing the bill for this lobby; and, Mr. Chairman, with this iniquitous, abortive legislative bill as it now stands before this House, with these indefensible quotas included, I, for one, would rather see no sugar legislation, and from conversations I have had with Members of this House I feel that that sentiment is very prevalent throughout the Members of this body who do not represent either refining districts or sugar-growing sections.

Some gentleman said, a moment ago, that this is fair, that we are treating Hawaii and Puerto Rico the same, or better than continental United States. Mr. Chairman, let me tell you when we will be fair. When this Congress says to Ohio, when it says to Georgia, when it says to Texas, that the manufactures they have in those States shall stay as they are today now, and henceforth forevermore, that they shall not expand, then such a bill as this will be fair. If in this same bill we should say to New York, or Ohio, or Michigan, where there are refineries, "You cannot expand your refineries, you have to take the same as Hawaii, take what you get", then it will be fair. But this proposed exclusively insular quota is so obviously iniquitous, so obviously against our policy of a free people and a free Government, that I say I do not care whether the President of the American Federation of Labor, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] asserted, or the C. I. O.—I would not care even if the President of the United States, if we can imagine such a thing—should approve this quota, it is not right. It does not make any difference who approves it, because their approval will not change the facts in the case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

DOES LORD NORTH WALK THROUGH THE CHAMBER TODAY?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] said, this is parallel to what happened some 175 years ago in the British House of Lords. Is the spirit of Lord North walking through our Chamber today? In the House of Lords they were discussing then, and up to the time of our Revolution, the matter of commercial restrictions on the Colonies. They placed those restrictions on the Colonies; and England got the Revolution and lost the greatest lands on the face of the earth.

What was the point at issue then?

The point at issue was that the Colonies could grow all the raw products they wanted, but could not manufacture anything, that they had to buy their manufactured goods from England, and could not manufacture anything themselves. When Burke made his speech for conciliation of the American Colonies, everybody booed in the good English fashion of the time and laughed at him.

SITUATION EXACTLY SAME AS 175 YEARS AGO

What is the situation today? Why, it is exactly the same. Of course, we have the force to make Hawaii comply with such a law if we want to do so, but I say from the viewpoint of justice, and from the viewpoint of the Constitution of the United States, we should not do it. It is not fair.

Let us compare raw sugar with crude oil. It is just the same as if we let California produce all the crude oil she wants, but that the Texas people could by influence force through a law that California cannot refine its own oil in California and ship it to other parts of the country. That is exactly the same principle.

Yes, Mr. Chairman; it is the same situation as if the cotton-growing State of Texas had enough power to force through a Federal law saying North Carolina cannot have textile mills in the State of North Carolina, because Texas might want to build up textile mills in the State of Texas.

That is exactly what the proposition is. It makes no difference whether the commodity is raw sugar, crude oil, cotton, or pigs—if you can produce them anywhere in the United States, you can process them into refined sugar, refined oil, textiles, and bacon. To deny Hawaii and Puerto Rico the right to process its sugar and sell the sugar in their own country is not only unconstitutional but illogical—or, it is fantastic, bizarre.

SUGAR LOBBY MOST PERNICIOUS IN UNITED STATES

The most pernicious lobby we have ever had in the United States is the sugar lobby. It has a long trail of indictments, corruption, and evil practices. The only benefit that this bill as it stands is to the refiners, and I say that if we want to do the thing that is just and fair and constitutional, we ought to adopt the Jones amendment, striking out the restrictions against Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

But suppose Hawaii does refine sugar, how are you going to stop it? It would be the same thing as Texas shipping refined oil or North Carolina shipping textiles, both in their own country. In other words, if we adopt the special restrictions we are adopting a policy of making colonies out of a part of our own country.

Certainly, it would be an evil precedent.

Oh, they talk about refineries, and that it means lower wages for 14,000 workers; but let us think about legislating for 127,000,000 Americans instead. So I say to you, for the sake of honestly following our Constitution and doing what is plain right, let us adopt the Jones amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture, and without any amendments. Hearings have been held; different theories advanced; all interests involved have been heard, and this bill comes before us as the best judgment of the committee. It is also endorsed by the sugar growers, producers, and refiners as the most practical method of meeting a necessitous situation.

The Jones-Costigan Sugar Control Act became a law in 1934. That law with its quota provisions expires December 31, 1937. I do not believe that the fundamental principle of the Jones-Costigan Act is the best method of approach to the United States sugar problem if genuine consideration is to be given to the American producing industry. That is not the question before us today, however. The Jones-Costigan Act with its quota and benefit provisions has been of value not only to our beet- and cane-sugar growers but also to our refiners. The real trouble with the principle of the law is that it is based on the premise—and the hope on the part of the administration—that the industry in the United States may be frozen at a given point and that by this method expansion in the continental United States may be stopped. It is needless to say that I am particularly opposed to any such theory.

About 20 percent of the sugar required by the consumers of continental United States is grown in continental United States; 40 percent of the sugar consumed in this country is obtained from Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands; the other 40 percent is imported from foreign countries and, as we all know, comes largely from Cuba. Now, it is clear to me that if the farmers of the United States can produce more of the sugar consumed in the United States, then they should be given that privilege. The domestic market for our farm products belongs to our own farmers and all legislation should be aimed toward the end of restoring to the American farmer that market to which he is entitled. We can produce cane sugar and beet sugar in large quantities on our own soil.

The area of the country that can be most profitably utilized for cane-sugar production is limited by moisture, temperature, and soil. This territory exists largely in the southeastern part of the United States. Beet sugar, however, can be produced throughout a large part of our country. It therefore follows that instead of producing 20 percent of the sugar we actually consume, legislation should be enacted not only to make possible but to encourage the development of the beet-sugar and the cane-sugar industries in this country. We already have a vast surplus of cotton in the South. Every acre of cane sugar may mean just one acre less of cotton in our great southland. Every acre of sugar beets in the other sections of the country will mean just one acre less of wheat, corn, and other crops of which we already have domestic surpluses. I condemn the inconsistent policy of removing from production fertile acres and at the same time importing foodstuffs that might be produced on these American acres by American labor living according to American standards. Last year millions of acres were taken out of production in this country and benefits paid by the consumers of the country as a reward to farmers for not producing the things that the American people not only desire but need as the necessities of life. There is no better place to stop this foolishness than to stimulate the American sugar producing industry. While the purpose of this bill is not to accomplish this result, yet as an expedient it will prevent the total destruction of the industry for the time being. That seems to be the most that our home sugar producers can hope for from this administration.

When beet sugar is produced on our own acres, it not only furnishes an income to the owner of the land but it furnishes an income to the farmer who tills the land, and it goes further and furnishes seasonal employment to farmers and others living in the community where the beets are produced. Beet-sugar factories are not large institutions and are located in the communities where the beets are grown, so that the farmer receives benefits from the price he receives for the beets, also from the factory pay rolls in the community, and the local community benefits from the employment in the factories during the few months in the winter when there is no other employment on the farm or for the laborer in the villages or small towns where the beet-sugar factories are always located. Another element which is of prime importance to the local beet-sugar factory community is the fact that the factory is placed on the local tax roll and, therefore, contributes to the upkeep of the schools and the community in general. All of these are home benefits. They inure to our own citizens rather than foreigners.

Now sugar can be produced more cheaply in Cuba, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii than it can in continental United States, but that is no reason why it should not be produced in this country. Corn and meat products can be produced cheaper in South America, yet that is no reason why they should not be produced in this country. Wheat and dairy products can be produced cheaper in Canada and other countries than they can in this country, yet that is no reason why these products should not be produced by the American farmers. It costs more to live in the United States than it does in many of these other countries, but it is worth more. Our standards are higher and can only be maintained by some differential, preferably in the form of a protective tariff.

The traditional way of protecting the United States sugar producer was changed when the Jones-Costigan law was enacted. That bill relied upon the quota rather than the tariff. The important difference is that quota restrictions apply to local production as well as offshore importation. There is no question but that the underlying purpose of the Jones-Costigan law was not only to discourage, but to prevent development of the sugar industry in this country. Without sacrifice by each group or element in the sugar industry of the right to expand at will, there could be no quota system. Under that system the refiners are limited as to the offshore sugar they may refine, while the farmers are limited as to the amount of cane and beets they may harvest.

The administration is opposed to this bill, because it seeks to limit offshore importations into this country. Secretary Hull, of the Department of State, is particularly opposed to this bill on the ground that—

> The trade concessions granted to the United States by Cuba in the reciprocal-trade agreement signed August 24, 1934, were based in part on the assumption that the sugar-control plan, if continued in effect, would not be changed to Cuba's disadvantage.

In short, in the reciprocal-trade agreement with Cuba, Secretary Hull traded off the United States beet producer and has agreed with Cuba that our production will not be increased, and that Cuba may continue to furnish to our consumers the sugar that our farmers can and should be permitted to produce.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], who is thoroughly conversant with our sugar problem, tells us that, without sugar legislation at this time, the sugar industry of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the United States is absolutely ruined because we go on the world market with a 90-percent tariff protection, while we had $2 against Cuba and $2.50 against the world before the quota system became effective. Now, there is no question but that the gentleman is correct; and it follows as the night follows the day that after December 31, 1937, unless legislation is enacted, Secretary Hull's agreement with Cuba rings the death knell to the sugar industry in our own land. It is not only advisable, but it is imperative, that we have sugar legislation at this time, even though we must enter into some compromises to bring it about.

Here the refiners and producers are united and fighting for a common cause; that is, the life of each industry. This is strange, because the seaboard refiners and the growers of beet sugar have been economic enemies from the beginning. The refinery is nothing more or less than a processing factory. The prosperity of the refiner depends entirely upon the quantity of raw sugar available to be refined. He, therefore, has always opposed any protective tariff or limitation on importation of raw sugar into this country. The cheaper he can buy the raw sugar in Cuba and refine it in this country the more money he makes. He has no trouble about his market and, if given a free hand, the American refiner absolutely controls the price of sugar to the consumer in this country. That raw sugar is produced by peon labor under conditions unthinkable in this country.

The beet-sugar grower in my section of the country must compete with this raw sugar from Cuba. In a beet-sugar factory the raw product is the beet, and the finished product is the sugar in the bags ready for the market, so that we do not have sugar refineries in the beet industry akin to the cane-sugar refineries. These refiners have always fought the beet-sugar farmers. They would have none of us. In the past they have conducted most unwarranted propaganda against beet sugar, and as a result of the propaganda, beet sugar today sells 15 to 20 cents per hundred less than cane sugar, although its qualities and composition are identical. In view of these facts, I hold no brief for the refiners. Greeks bearing gifts are always subject to distrust, we are told. These people are momentarily with us because it best serves their purpose, but we must take stock of the morrow.

It is true that about 14,000 persons are employed in the seaboard refineries. All of these are in the larger cities. I thoroughly believe in protecting this United States labor. At the same time, it is not consistent to furnish these workers with free raw sugar at the expense of the farmers who want to produce cane and beet sugar in this country. The difference is, that in the case of the refiner, the workers in the refinery are protected against cheap foreign competition, while in the case of the beet-sugar producer not only the workers in the factories, but the owners of the farms and the workers on the farms are given like protection.

The House is practically unanimous for this legislation. However, we are advised that the President will veto the bill unless we comply with his demands and the demands of Secretary Hull above referred to. We are told that we cannot legislate for the benefit of the continental refiner and grower without taking into consideration Cuba's interests and the interests of Puerto Rico and Hawaii in the world sugar market. That is where the fight is today. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] will offer amendments complying with the administration demands. The temper of this House is such that its independence will be asserted and the bill that leaves the House will represent the mature judgment of the Members. Some changes will undoubtedly be made in the Senate, and the emergency is such that it may be necessary for the House to again yield to the Executive or lose all immediate protection for the beet-sugar industry. When, oh when, will this Executive domination cease?

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] who preceded me stated that the persons chiefly concerned with the passage of this bill without the amendment are the so-called pernicious sugar lobby. I hope I shall have the time to read into the RECORD at this time the petition of 1,200 employees of the sugar refineries at Boston, Mass. This petition was brought here by a committee of four representing the sugar workers' union of that city, not lobbyists, not paid by any sugar refiners to come here—oh, no, they come here as the representatives of their fellow workers to appeal to this Congress to save their jobs. The expense of their trip is defrayed by their union. The petition which they have delivered to me is far more eloquent and appealing than any remarks I am capable of making on this legislation.

Let me read this petition:

We, being sugar workers in the various cane-sugar refineries in continental United States, hereby petition you as an American official to do all in your power to have taken out of pending sugar bill any provision that permits entry into the United States of sugar in refined form from Cuba or any other offshore area.

The entry of such sugar, refined by low-wage tropical labor, has wrought havoc among our workers. A great number of our fellow workers are now on relief, and if the sugar bill passes in its present form a great number of our present employed workers will continue to work only a fraction of the time. We are more than anxious to earn an honorable livelihood and do not want Government bounty.

Cuban workers, who perform the same type of work as we, get, in Cuba, a minimum wage approximating a dollar a day, and in Puerto Rico 85 cents a day, whereas we have been receiving during depression times several times these amounts per day.

We want this petition to be understood as an emphatic protest against what we term "a discrimination against American labor."

This is signed by 1,200 men who now have jobs, who are now being paid American wages, and who are now working under American labor standards. This is their petition to the Congress of the United States, not at the instance of the sugar lobby, but emanating from the workers themselves in an attempt to save their livelihood and support and protect their families. Mr. Chairman, I represent many of the sugar workers who have signed this petition. I believe it to be my bounden duty to exert my best efforts to protect their opportunity to earn a living.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may place this petition with the signatures on it in the RECORD at this point.

I am sorry that the time allotted to me does not permit me to further extend my remarks on a subject so vital to these workers. However, I urge the membership to vote down the Jones amendment, in order that these men and other sugar workers throughout the United States may have their means of livelihood safeguarded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that consent must be obtained in the House as to the matter of the petition.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, we have just heard portions of a petition signed by some 1,200 employees of the sugar refineries in the State of Massachusettes, who object to the imports of cane sugar when refined. The petition gives no information as to the American exports which will cease with the cessation of such imports or the connected reduction of employment here. The utter incompleteness of a single fact like that for constructive purposes brings to mind, perhaps, the most impressive statement I have ever read upon the subject of the tariff, and it has happened in my life that I have had to read a very great deal on that subject. The statement came from Sir Henry Sedgwick, one of the leading intellects of the nineteenth century, an economist and philosopher well known to a former generation. Sedgwick said he did not quite agree with the classical economists; that he thought he could imagine instances where a little protection placed here and a little protection placed there might work an advantage for the national economy; but what he could not imagine was a parliament of men with sufficient knowledge and wisdom to pick out only such instances for the privilege of tariff protection, and with sufficient strength of character, when the necessity for that protection might have disappeared, to withdraw the unrighteous privilege inexorably. [Applause.]

One of the great facts, though but lowly visible, impossible to evaluate in a discussion like this, is the effect on our exports. How many laborers in the United States, with such imports cut off, are going to lose their jobs because their products cannot be exported? There is a law of imports. There is a law of exports. Permit me to say it is not less valid, it is not less self-enforcing than the laws of Nature. Indeed, it is like Newton's third great law. You will all recall it; it is the simple law that action and reaction in the physical world are equal and opposite. The outgoing tide will equal the incoming tide. The incoming tide determines the extent of the outgoing tide. And we can no more repeal that great law of economics, whether we can now recognize its effects through the labyrinthian circumstances of commerce and industry or not, we can no more repeal that law than we can repeal the well-known laws of the great natural philosopher, Sir Isaac Newton.

But a highly visible and tremendously important element is involved. Certain moral values are concerned here. This Nation, like human beings, does not live by bread alone. It lives and it survives because its foundations rest on certain deep, strong, abiding moral principles. When you violate the principle of equal right and equality before the law with reference to your own citizenship, then you do it at a moral cost, the debt which will have to be paid some day. Paid by immediate revolt? Perhaps not. There may be no Washington in Hawaii. There may be no Adams in the island of Puerto Rico, but the great laws of God are there and ultimately will assert their consequences however much we may wish, for paltry, temporary, commercial, geographical, and indeed political, considerations, to violate them today. [Applause.]

I would invite your attention to an editorial found in the Baltimore Sun of yesterday. My fellow Democrats, you may accept the apostleship of the Baltimore Sun on this subject of the right of trade, of freedom of commerce, and of democratic principle in the matter of tariffs. It has fought desperate battles for the democratic principle at great cost to itself. On one occasion, the elders among you will recall, it even fought Arthur Pue Gorman, then a national leader and quite the political dictator in our dear old Commonwealth of Maryland; and it ultimately triumphed. The point to which the Sun particularly directs attention is the circumstance that in these restrictions we—and who are we? We are the democratic revolt of the United States, two-thirds of its people speaking—we Democrats are introducing a new kind of Grundyism. The old kind was directed against foreigners. It, at least, carried one element of fairness, a foreigner could retaliate with laws of his own, and did retaliate. This Grundyism proceeding from this side and producing its inevitable retaliations from other countries was a large factor in bringing about our terrible depression.

But the new Grundyism is directed against our own fellow citizens. Can they retaliate? We are striking down men we have disarmed. We have deprived them of the ballot. We have taken their lands and their homes and compelled them to accept allegiance to the United States, and then here on this day we would reward their ready acquiescence by a repudiation of the great principles upon which our Republic is founded. That is the new Grundyism as compared with the old. Do you think that our rebuke from the people will be less drastic, less certain than the rebuke which filled this House with Democrats and emptied the House of its Republican membership? I think you are tempting political death if you follow and aggravate the occasion which the old Grundyism gave to a people to enter into a great revolt.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be given the time that was allotted to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from Maryland will be recognized for 3 additional minutes, the time which was to have been allotted to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I need not say that to do this thing is to violate the great law of our birth as Americans, a principle which caused the United States of America to dissever itself from the greatest state authority at that time in the world. All our traditions teach us that no such violation should be committed, at all in modern times, by a country having colonies—that no such violation at any rate could be committed by the hands of a statesmanship with a background such as we of America boast.

When that occurred in Great Britain a Lord North, Prime Minister, occupied Whitehall and a crazy George gave him kingly support; but it is a happy thing to know today that we have a prime minister occupying our White House, a prime minister, Franklin Roosevelt, who rises in all the majesty of his might and office to protest against the doing of this thing. [Applause.]

[From the Baltimore Sun of Aug. 5, 1937]

THE NEW GRUNDYISM

In the old days when the high protectionists of the Grundy school were in the saddle at Washington, they always professed to be fighting for the welfare of the American producer against the subversive competition of the dastardly foreigners. They asked for prohibitive tariff rates on the ground that such rates were nothing more than patriotic devices to preserve the home market for American producers. No such argument is possible on behalf of the new school of high protectionists who are supporting the sugar bill, to which the Rules Committee yesterday granted a preferred status on the House calendars.

The advocates of this bill are not seeking to defend the American producer against the foreigner. They are seeking to exalt one group of American producers at the expense of another group. They propose to do this not by the use of higher tariff rates but by quota restrictions, and they insist on applying the quotas not against foreign nations but against sugar producers in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, which are under the American flag, and in Cuba, which is within the American economic system. Hawaii and Puerto Rico have been American possessions for 40 years. Cuba has enjoyed preferential tariff relations with us for an equal period. We have encouraged capital to invest in these areas in the expectation that Hawaiian, Puerto Rican, and Cuban products would have easy access to our markets. Industry has been conditioned in those islands to this expectation. Neither Cuba nor Hawaii nor Puerto Rico can look to any country except our own as a market.

We have not done this solely out of an altruistic regard for the welfare of those peoples, although some of us would like to think that altruism had a part in it. We have done it mainly because of the belief that if we allowed the people of Puerto Rico and Hawaii and Cuba access to our markets they would allow us access to theirs. This expectation has been justified. We have bought liberally from the people of these islands and they have bought liberally from us. Now the domestic beet- and cane-sugar producers and the domestic sugar refiners seek to throw a monkey wrench into the trade relationships which we have invited these people to build up. It is proposed in the new sugar bill to restrict imports of raw and refined sugar from our own dependencies of Puerto Rico and Hawaii and from a republic, which we have encouraged to take up a position within our orbit. To act in this manner would be a breach of faith, objectionable on moral grounds. It would be even more objectionable on the grounds of expediency.

For it would not only exalt American sugar producers at the expense of sugar producers in Cuba, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, who have a right to expect better treatment from America. It would also exalt American sugar producers at the expense of American manufacturers now enjoying the benefits of profitable trade with those islands. The House and the country in general ought to be mindful of these facts in listening to the pleas of the spokesmen of the sugar interests who are demanding this sacrifice of our national advantage on the altar of the new Grundyism.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland yields back 2 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN OF Colorado. I understood that the request for the additional 3 minutes was outside the allotted time.

The CHAIRMAN. It was taken out of the time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BIERMANN. I understood the gentleman from Texas to ask when he sought to limit debate that those Members who were then seeking recognition were to get 5 minutes apiece.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is my understanding also.

The CHAIRMAN. At that time certain Members had already indicated to the Chair that they wanted 5 minutes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent that all Members whose names the Chair has noted as having requested time on this amendment be recognized for 5 minutes each?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman submits that as a request the Chair will put the request.

Mr. BIERMANN. I make that request, if it is in order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how many names the Chair has on his list?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 18 names on this list.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES. Do those Members all want to speak on this amendment? The only reason I want to close debate on this amendment is because there are two or three other amendments on which other Members want to be heard. I hope all the time will not be taken on this amendment.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIES. Is it intended to finish the bill today?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. DIES. There is no necessity for our staying here until 7 or 8 o'clock tonight to finish the bill. Let us work on the bill until about 5 and come back tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. There are now 19 names on the list, including that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my name. That will leave 18.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, can we not have all the amendments offered now that are ready to be offered and agree that all debate on the bill and all amendments close at 4:30, and then after the amendments are read let the gentlemen have their time and permit the other gentlemen to discuss their amendments?

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman mean on subsequent sections of the bill?

Mr. JONES. All sections of the bill. The reading of the bill has been waived.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his request?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close at 4:30.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is the same old story. We start out by being very liberal and permit Members to speak for 15 or 20 minutes. There are other Members here who are just as much interested and who have just as much at stake and who have just as decided opinions on this legislation as the gentlemen who have previously spoken. It is the duty of these Members to speak on this legislation whether they want to or not, and they will probably get shut out.

Mr. JONES. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. We ought to have 3 minutes apiece.

Mr. JONES. If it may be agreed that the 18 whose names are at the desk may take 3 minutes, that will be satisfactory. I am trying to give everyone a chance to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, may I change my request and ask unanimous consent that all of the gentlemen whose names are on the list up there have 3 minutes, except the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], who may have 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JONES. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. KENNEY. I withdraw my objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOUTON. Mr. Chairman, several months ago I introduced a bill which would have permitted the continental United States to produce sugar in unlimited quantities, and I am still of the opinion that there should be no restriction on the production of sugarcane and sugar beets in the United States.

However, I have yielded temporarily to the leadership of the administration in the House and to the Committee on Agriculture, not because I agree with the quota that has been assigned to the State of Louisiana, but because, in a practical sense, this entire sugar bill has been the subject of several various compromises. I have yielded, also, with the knowledge that this bill is only for a limited term of 3 years, and it is not, therefore, to be considered as the permanent policy of our Federal Government.

To present my credentials to this august body, I might momentarily digress to say that I represent the largest sugar-producing district in the United States, the Third Congressional District of Louisiana. I have spent my entire life in and around the sugarcane fields down there and I feel that I am particularly qualified to speak on this subject as only one who has spent many long hours on the grounds studying the different phases of the situation can speak. Sugar is the "yellow gold" from where I come. We live, sleep, and, with no intention of being ludicrous, eat sugar. Sugar is our lifeblood—and we will call on every resource at our command, stop at nothing—to make our fellow American citizens realize that they must not stop our lifeblood without immediate annihilation to us and ultimate disaster to themselves.

The history of our sugarcane industry is studded with color and interest. To trace it to its origin takes us back over the years, to be specific, to the year 1751, during the time Louis XV graced the throne of France and numbered Louisiana among his colonies. Sugarcane was introduced to our soil in that year, the records disclose, by the Jesuit missionaries, who brought some stalks of this heretofore unknown plant from Hispaniola to the beautiful land of the new colony as an experiment. From that time henceforth, throughout the years, cane has flourished in Louisiana. One hundred and eighty-six years of experience lie behind the cultivation of that plant. While it is not a native plant, the study and attention it has received has resulted in its becoming our largest agricultural crop. Yes; we have been beset with calamities in the form of devastating crop diseases, floods, and other set-backs, but that has only resulted in our eradicating the evil and surging forward with a never-say-die spirit. New and scientific varieties of cane have been developed over the years, where today we have the largest yield of sugar per acre ever produced.

We have also kept step with the times in paying livable wages. Of course, by its very nature, the industry is a seasonal operation, but, during the time of harvesting and processing, it affords employment to countless thousands, and all are paid a livable scale of wages. This scale has been rising and rising over a period of years, and that brings us to the crux of our problem, namely:

We need protection against competition from offshore areas where peon wages are the order of the day, and, naturally, ruinously low prices prevail.

Mr. Chairman, the quota system of protection instituted by the present administration when first assuming office is perfectly adapted to our problem. It was first placed in effect in the Agricultural Adjustment Act and subsequently carried on in the Jones-Costigan Act of the Seventy-fourth Congress after the invalidation of the A. A. A. by the Supreme Court. It is well recognized by all who are familiar with the sugar situation that it has proven more efficacious and efficient than the tariff system used by past administrations.

Under this bill in its present form the States of Louisiana and Florida, the only two continental sugarcane-producing areas, are allotted a combined quota of 420,000 tons. Louisiana alone, and I quote from the record, produced 386,000 tons of sugar last season and is on the way, from all indications of the crop now in the ground, to producing 425,000 to 450,000 tons during the next season. Obviously, anyone can see that a quota of 420,000 tons combined with Florida is an inadequate figure, but we have presented our case in committee and after much discussion have come to the conclusion that such a quota for the life of this legislation, which, as I have pointed out, is 3 years, is acceptable. We have by no means altered from our contention that the figure is inadequate—which will be borne out by future events—but, realizing that the entire problem is alive with complexities and throbbing with divergent interests working at cross-purposes, we have agreed to the reduced figure and will support this bill.

In connection with the quota allotted to our State it should be pointed out that the Resettlement Administration, which is now a branch of the Department of Agriculture, has financed and encouraged hundreds of farmers in the State of Louisiana to plant sugarcane on an estimated acreage of 15,110 acres in 21 different parishes. Furthermore, definite information is at hand indicating the doubling of this rehabilitation program. This alone will mean an increase of from 50,000 to 60,000 tons of sugar, since the plantings are all of the new seed variety. Therefore it must be evident to all of you that while Louisiana appreciates the improvement in its quota, it cannot by any stretch of the imagination be considered as adequate or satisfactory.

Nevertheless, everything being considered, and recognizing the difficulties that have faced the fair-minded and very efficient chairman of the Agriculture Committee, my colleague the Honorable MARVIN JONES, and in further view of the fact that this is a bill for only a limited period, which will give us the opportunity to have our industry considered on the basis of its full production when the time comes for continuing the sugar program, it is my intention and that of the entire House delegation from my State to support the committee in the passage of this bill.

Coming from the cane-growing area of my State, I might point out that my interest and duty alone is to see that my people are protected. I bear not one iota of animosity against any particular area, or group, or offshore interest—only when they jeopardize my people's livelihood. The other various quotas written in this legislation appear to me to be in harmony with the scheme of the quota system, as do the other features, of which there are many, pertaining to the operation of this program.

Mr. Chairman, I do sincerely appeal to the membership of the House to give serious thought to this proposal which has been finally worked out by your Committee on Agriculture after many, many months of minute attention under the leadership of their very able and considerate chairman. They have probed and dug into the very meat of this issue and have finally emerged with this bill as representing their true conception of the solution to the enigma. It will preserve the continental sugar industry for the present, although, as I have already shown, will not permit us to reculitivate and gain back the acreage which has fallen into discard over the depression years. Nevertheless, it will prevent us from being destroyed, with a resultant throwing open of the doors to foreigners and the creation of a Frankenstein condition with sugar ranging anywhere from 10 to 30 cents per pound during times of stress, when we are at the mercy of such interests; a situation which is no doubt indelibly impressed upon the minds of those who are familiar with prices during the World War.

I hope and trust that you will not falter in lending your support to this measure. It is a fair-minded piece of legislation designed to redound to the best interests of our entire country and is well deserving of your approval.

Before concluding, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask unanimous consent that I be granted the privilege of revising and extending my remarks on this subject.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, following my query to the gentleman from Michigan, I do not think that any Member of this House can in all seriousness contend that there is no discrimination against Puerto Rico in this bill as it now stands, with respect to direct consumption sugar. The argument which some of the Members have interposed, who are opposed to the Jones amendment, that the continental refiners are also restricted in the manufacture of direct consumption sugar does not hold water.

In this connection I wish to read part of a statement made by the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, wherein he says :

> The fact is that the supply of raw material for the seaboard refiners has increased under the quota provisions aggregating 4,514,000 tons in 1936 as compared against 4,129,000 tons in 1933, the year prior to enactment of the Jones-Costigan Act. The quota system does not "shut off" but adjusts the supply of sugar available for the United States market in accordance with consumers' requirements. This stabilization is in the interest of the refiners. The quota system also protects the seaboard refiners in the extraordinary form of an embargo upon shipments of refined sugar to the United States in excess of a stated quantity, from the principal competing foreign country which is limited under present legislation to a quota for direct-consumption sugars of 22 percent of the sugar quota. And the refiners also have protection from importations of direct-consumption sugars from the Philippines under the provisions of the Philippine Independence Act. They have been given protection by quotas against increased importation of liquid sugars which in some areas and in some industries has tended to replace ordinary commercial refiners' sugar.
> The subsidy of the 14 American seaboard refiners on their deliveries of sugar for domestic consumption under the quota system aggregated $22,738,000 in 1936, the margin which the refiners exacted from the American consumer exceeding the margin on sales of refined sugar abroad by this amount. This is equal to a subsidy of about $1,600 for each person employed by the refiners, as against an average annual wage per employee of only $1,005, according to the last census figures.
> Never satisfied, the refiners are seeking to obtain further protection in the form of a trade barrier against Hawaii and Puerto Rico, a form of protection that was not even suggested under former high-tariff administrations in the days of Smoot and Grundy. And they are seeking to slip it over in an agricultural bill rather than introduce it as a piece of manufacturers' legislation and permit it to be considered and judged on its own merits.
> Why does this monopoly demand this special privilege and unneeded protection? Simply because they want to dominate, to control, and to get richer and richer at the expense of all of the people. Their disregard for the consumers' interests has been demonstrated repeatedly, culminating in a decision last year by the United States Supreme Court in which the refiners were found guilty on 40 different counts of conspiring to restrain commerce in sugar.

In view of this statement and what has already been said on the floor of this House, I repeat that no Member can seriously contend that Puerto Rico and Hawaii are not discriminated against when they are limited as to the amount of direct-consumption sugar which they can send into the continental United States.

I shall vote for the Jones amendment and trust that the membership of this Committee will also support the chairman of the Agriculture Committee. By agreeing to this amendment the Congress of the United States will assure the American citizens who reside in Puerto Rico that in the future they will receive at the hands of the Federal Government the same treatment as the American citizens who reside in continental United States.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, it is entirely clear to me that President Roosevelt is right in this matter. The parts of the bill sought to be stricken out by the Jones amendment, which I shall support, attempt by statute to deny to an American citizen access to the American market. This is a violation of sound constitutional principle. It puts in reverse the historical development of this country for 150 years. It creates a precedent which will be seized upon in later years by those interested in commodities other than sugar. Those supporting the bill in its present form in behalf of sugar today will in the future be the victims of the precedent which they are creating.

This carries us back to the conditions that preceded the American Revolution and attempts to impose upon Americans of today the same species of legislative discrimination which our ancestors fought a war to free themselves from. When that war was over, the representatives of those who had suffered from these conditions met to write the Constitution of the United States and to form the more perfect Union which came into being with the adoption of the Constitution. It is probable that there was no single influence which had greater weight in 1787 toward causing our fathers to scrap the Articles of Confederation and form the Constitution of the United States than the tariff walls between the Colonies. The Court's opinion in Gibbons against Ogden was written by men who in their own lifetimes had experience with those conditions. In that case one may find this language:

> If there was any one object riding over every other in the adoption of the Constitution, it was to keep the commercial intercourse among the States free from all invidious and partial restraints.

Under the confederation the restraints on the free flow of commerce between the Thirteen Original States were many and vexatious. Nearly every State erected tariff walls against its sisters. Each tried to build up its own economy at the expense of the others. And it may be doubted whether any factor has contributed as much toward building this Nation as the fact that "commercial intercourse among the States" has been kept "free from restraints imposed by each State upon the others." As a result each State has not only had a free national market for its own goods but in turn has been able to buy what it cannot itself produce wherever it could buy cheapest. In other words, each State has had the benefit of the cheap producing costs of the other States. This has constantly lowered the cost of goods to every American citizen and thus given a greater measure of general prosperity than any other nation ever achieved. All this is commonplace. One State grows cotton and buys wheat. Another makes automobiles and buys gasoline.

Now, when the States surrendered to the new Government under the Constitution the power which they previously held to regulate commerce, is it to be supposed that they intended the grantee of that power—Congress—to use it or permit it to be used to build up the industry of a State—whether petroleum, coal, wheat, automobiles, or cotton—at the expense of the others? When a State gave up its power to exclude the goods of other States in exchange for a surrender by a sister State of a like power to exclude the goods of the first, can it be assumed that Congress was to prohibit what the States gave up the right to prohibit?

But now we are reversing all this. We propose after 150 years to again erect statutory dams against the flow of commerce among our citizens. This is the beginning of a new competition. Heretofore we have had competition between members of the same industry; we have had competition between different industries for the consumer's dollar; the automobile competing with the radio; but now, under a revival of medieval mercantilism, we are entering into a new competition between American citizens as to which group can command the greatest number of votes in the National Legislature for its advantage and to the disadvantage of other groups.

There are not less than 10 provisions in the Federal Constitution designed to give to each American citizen a free national market among all other American citizens. Many of these provisions are prohibitions against acts by the States; but, as I have said, can it be supposed that the States, when they give up the right to discriminate against American citizens living in other States, intended the Congress of the United States to impose such discriminations?

The Republican Party, during a long period of years, built up a protective-tariff system, but they did it against aliens and not against American citizens; and, whatever may be said in criticism of the protective system, it was at least fair in the sense that the foreign nation could enter upon counterbalancing reprisals against us.

Today, however, we propose to adopt a new Grundyism, as referred to in the Baltimore Sun of yesterday, which makes the old Grundys and Penroses look like amateurs.

One may give whatever consideration he desires to special interests in this bill, but it is unsound in principle, and I do not believe that a principle which has been demonstrated to be sound and beneficent in the building up of this Nation for 150 years can be violated without in the long run producing disastrous results. If you are going to deny to American refiners located under the flag equal access with all other refiners to the American sugar market, then by the same token any similar discrimination is equally valid, and it will all depend upon who has the most votes in the National Congress. If this is right, then the cane- and beet-sugar industry of America, if they have the more votes in Congress, can deny access to the American market of the maple-sugar industry of this country. If this is right, then the apple growers of Virginia and New York and New England, if they have the superior voting strength here in Washington, can deny the national market to the apple growers of the Northwest. The same thing would apply to petroleum, coal, wheat, cotton, automobiles, farm machinery, anything else.

It should be recognized that we are introducing a new principle in our commercial life—the principle of industrial quotas; the principle of denying to certain producers access to the American market which is granted to other producers. It is a denial of equal privilege and the equal protection of our laws. It is sectionalism, pure and simple, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], and others have stated.

It may be a debatable question whether Hawaii or Puerto Rico should ever have come under the American flag. Nevertheless, they are here and they are here by our invitation. We expected to gain certain advantages by reason of bringing them under the American flag and we must take the responsibilities that go with the advantages.

It is probable, however, that in the long run no real disadvantage will accrue to this country by permitting our island possessions from developing and prospering through the marketing and processing of their goods. To the extent that they become prosperous they become the purchasers of our automobiles, plows, machinery, shoes, clothing, and so forth. If they do not sell they cannot buy and it cannot be forgotten that the loss of export trade puts out of employment a worker on the American mainland who would otherwise have made the goods for export just as surely as imports may tend to compete with American labor.

But however true this may be with reference to business with foreign nations, surely we cannot by statute discriminate against some of our own citizens in favor of others.

I am going to support President Roosevelt in this matter. I think he is absolutely right. We will rue the day we start a precedent in this country of denying any part of the American market to any American producer, wherever he lives under the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I think we have lost sight of what we are actually debating here. Some of the remarks gentlemen have recently made are addressed to the principle of the quota, rather than the amendment before us. I served on the Committee on Agriculture in 1934 when the Jones-Costigan bill was written, and I know just how hard a time we had in trying to arrive at some suitable method of taking care of the sugar industry of this country, which was not only depressed, but on the road to ruin. Now, when it is on the upgrade, our friends forget what the situation was then and object to an extension of the principle of the original Jones-Costigan bill. The quota system put the sugar industry on the upgrade.

There has been talk this afternoon about discrimination. If you now abandon the principle of the Jones-Costigan bill, which provided for these same quota restrictions with regard to Hawaii and Puerto Rico, you are discriminating against your beet and cane-sugar producers and refineries of continental United States.

The essential feature of the quota system is restriction of the entire industry. It is based on annual consumption of sugar in continental America. It prescribes as a part only of the system the total volume of sugar which may be refined in Hawaii for shipment to the continent. The amount fixed is more than ever heretofore made by Hawaii. Shipments of refined sugar from Hawaii elsewhere are uncontrolled. As I endeavored to develop this morning by a question to the Member from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], the total quantity of raw sugar available for refining in the continent in effect limits the amount of refined sugar that may be produced to approximately 60 percent of the capacity of continental plants. Certainly under these circumstances, the refining sugar features of the system are more liberal to Hawaii than to the continent.

The pending bill is based on the continuation of the quota system which is now in existence. Any effort to change it, such as by the adoption of the Jones amendments, would disturb the entire continental beet and cane-sugar industry.

Moreover, it must be remembered that this bill proposes the payment of benefits to sugar producers which are financed by subsidies provided by the grower, refiner, and consumer of continental United States. The raw-sugar producers of Hawaii and Puerto Rico are today maintained by these subsidies, and it certainly would be discrimination not only against the beet and cane grower, but the American consumer, to give the Hawaiian refiners an opportunity to expand their refining from an incidental to a major pursuit.

Possibly I should not have taken time today to discuss this question, since my position on this matter has been well known ever since I served on the Committee on Agriculture, if it had not been that one of my colleagues from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER] yesterday afternoon gave the House the impression, perhaps, that California was not for this bill. Whatever his personal views may be, the fact is that a meeting of the California delegation was held not long ago at which, a majority of the delegation being present, it went on record as favoring the principle of the bill as written with the refined sugar quota restrictions on Hawaii and Puerto Rico.

There is no State in the country which is more interested in the preservation of the present sugar situation than the State of California. In 1936 we harvested 1,939,000 tons of sugar beets. The average price for the crop was $5.81 a ton, making a total payment to the farmers of $11,265,590. Add to this the items for fuel, bags, freight, other supplies, equipment and installations, taxes, brokerage, insurance, and so forth, which amount usually to about 150 percent of the bare cost of beets, amounting to approximately $17,000,000. Thus, the total cash turnover in the industry of sugar-beet growing and processing for California alone in the 1936 crop would amount to more than $28,000,000. Our beet producers need the protection of the quota system to keep their industry alive and effective. The quota system, plus a reasonable conditional payment raised, as provided in this bill, from the industry itself and not from the Federal Treasury, can place us on a parity with other industries which are protected by high tariffs, on a parity with labor which is protected by immigration restrictions, and so on. Unless this quota system is continued, together with the payments and continued on approximately the basis of the Jones-Costigan Act, the sugar-beet industry faces disaster. The amendments proposed by Chairman JONES go to the heart of the situation, and in effect, if adopted, will destroy that which he and I and the other members of the Committee on Agriculture labored so hard and earnestly to bring about in 1934. For that reason, much to my regret, I must oppose my former chairman and ask that these amendments be rejected.

Let me say one more word: The beet-producing farmers, when added to the men who are employed in the sugar refineries, from not the insignificant number, if it be such, of 12,000 or 16,000, which you heard ridiculed this afternoon, but a very, very large and important portion of the population of the United States. But it is not so much a question of how many workers or farmers are involved, or what acreage they farm, or of capital invested, as it is a question of preserving the buying power of both laborer and farmer; of continuing the right of our continental Americans to work and farm in an industry that does not deserve to be outlawed or wrecked; of maintaining undisturbed an arrangement that has brought prosperity even to those who now want to scrap the quota system. No one can deny our sugar industry, including that of Hawaii, is in a favorable condition. The only question is, Shall we take a chance and change it. As one who helped frame the original Jones-Costigan law, as a Representative of a great farming district and the great farming State of California, I refuse to take that chance and propose to stand by the bill as it is written in respect to these refined sugar quota provisions. I not only hope that all the other Members of the California delegation will do so, but that an overwhelming majority of the House will defeat the proposed change.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about the great need for this legislation.

This bill is virtually a continuance of the Jones-Costigan Act, with no substantial changes. The quotas are substantially the same and the tax the same. The Jones-Costigan Act was based on the principles of the A. A. A., with such adaptations in technique as fitted the particular industry. It was based upon the A. A. A., just as was the cotton bill, the tobacco bill, and the corn-hog and other measures which pulled agriculture out of the hole in this country.

In my State the beet-sugar industry was not merely stabilized, it was saved from destruction, and what is true of my State is true of other States. Before the passage of the Jones-Costigan Act the factories were operating at a loss. Farmers were getting less than the cost of production for their beets. Laborers were getting less than a decent day's wage. The payment of dividends had been suspended. Since the passage of the Jones-Costigan Act the companies are again out of the red, again making profits, again paying dividends. Farmers who were getting $4.50 a ton for their beets, less than the cost of production, have been getting $6.50 to $6.75. Labor, which was getting only $12 to $13 an acre for the cultivation of beets, has been getting $18 to $19 an acre, which is a record price for labor in the beet fields. Children have been taken out of the beet fields.

This legislation has been so successful it is not questioned here. We have fussed here all day about a little drib of quotas to a couple of small islands. The highest testimonial to the success of the sugar legislation is that it is not questioned that the legislation has been a success, insofar as the industry is concerned. It was prostrate, now it is prosperous.

Mr. Chairman, all this has been accomplished at an extra cost to the consumer so small as to be negligible. I am going to undertake to prove this statement by figures taken from the mouth of an enemy of domestic sugar. I have in my hand a clipping from the Washington Post, in which one of its special writers on economic matters, criticizing the message of the President to Congress recommending substantially the reenactment of the Jones-Costigan bill, condemned the legislation as having robbed the consumer, and then sets out the figures to show how much the consumer has been robbed.

It will be interesting to first read three or four sentences from these statements before giving the figures.

Says the correspondent:

Like all price-fixing schemes, the Jones-Costigan system has militated against consumers.

Again—

There is less justification for the sugar quota system than there is for many other price-fixing schemes. In this case the American consumer is overcharged for sugar for the benefit of a very small segment of the country's population engaged in a concededly uneconomic undertaking.

He also says:

President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress, indicates that he realizes that the American consumer has been rooked out of millions of dollars in sugar prices.

Now let me give the writer's own figures to substantiate the foregoing and similar statements, which bestrew a two-column article.

The average price for 1933 was 5.4 cents a pound.
For 1934 it was 5.6 cents.
For 1935 it was 5.7 cents.
And for last year (1936) it was 5.6 cents.

Then he immediately follows these figures with the astonishing statement:

Instead of the price to the consumer going down, it actually went up.

He shows that the average price of sugar in 1933 was 5.4 cents a pound. This was before the Jones-Costigan Act and at a time when the consumer did not have the 5.4 to pay.

He then shows that in 1936 the average price was 5.6 cents a pound. In other words, he shows that under 3 years' operation of the Jones-Costigan Act—1934, 1935, and 1936—the average market price of sugar had gone up one-fifth of a cent a pound.

When you consider how everything else had gone up during the same period, including ability to pay, it strikes me that the price of sugar had actually gone down. I doubt whether any major product, either of agriculture or industry, can show such a slight increase in price during that period of time. If the price increase in sugar were taken as an index of recovery, it would be a conceded failure.

It seems to me that the industry is worth preserving even at a greater increase than one-fifth of a cent a pound. On the basis of our annual sugar consumption, which is about 100 pounds per head, this would be 20 cents per head a year. For this trifling increase a domestic industry has been pulled off the rocks and stabilized and made profitable for the processor, the grower, and the worker.

These results would appear to justify fully the statement in the President's message that—

The Jones-Costigan Act has been useful and effective, and it is my belief that its principles should again be made effective.

The principles of the Jones-Costigan Act are made effective in the bill before the House. My only regret is that other farm legislation, to restore the principles in other farm legislation which went out under the decision of the Supreme Court on the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and particularly the cotton and tobacco legislation, is not before the House. When such legislation comes before the House again, and I am ready to stay here until it does come before it, it shall have my cordial support, as it had before.

Mr. Chairman, I am no new recruit to the cause and need of crop control. On the floor in the debate on February 26, 1935, on the bill to make rice a basic commodity and place it under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, I said:

The farmers must regulate the output and marketing of their products and stabilize prices if they expect to preserve the agricultural industry in this country and get anything out of it.

On the occasion of the repeal of the cotton, tobacco, and potato acts, February 7, 1936, following the invalidation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, I expressed my views about not only the benefits but the necessity of those acts to the great agricultural commodities involved in the strongest possible language.

From my remarks on the floor on May 26, 1933, I quote the following statement:

The displacement of labor, both skilled and common, by the machine, is so obvious that it is known by the man in the street. It is less obvious, but none the less true, that the machine is putting the farmer out on the highway as rapidly as the laborer.

The following paragraph is from remarks on the floor, August 5, 1935:

Production in both industry and agriculture must be regulated, and they can be regulated only through the exercise of national powers.

And on January 23, 1936, the following:

Permanent large-scale unemployment in industry and surpluses in agriculture are fixed conditions in our economic life. The sooner the American people face and admit these facts, the sooner we may work out an answer to these problems.

A final quotation is from remarks made on the floor in support of the Bankhead cotton bill when it passed the House on March 17, 1934, although I might quote many other statements:

The Agricultural Adjustment Act is based on recognition of the fact that the mass production made possible by the machine must be controlled and regulated so that supply may be kept somewhere in the bounds of demand, while at the same time the producer gets at least the cost of production plus a reasonable profit out of his production and his labor.

Now the acts passed by Congress to regulate production and stabilize prices have been swept from the statute books, while Congress and the country are confronted on a major scale with the problems which that legislation undertook to solve. There is virtually a farm-bill panic on in Congress. Corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, rice, and potatoes are in the surplus class for 1937. Bumper crops are coming and the market is breaking down even before they get here. What the President said in his opening message to Congress regarding N. R. A. is equally applicable to agriculture:

The statute has been outlawed. The problems have not. They are still with us.

A Washington paper advises Congress to let nature take its course. It would be a valuable, if expensive, lesson. My views being long since fixed, I do not feel that I need the lesson, and I am in favor of crop control legislation now.

That is exactly what this sugar bill is, and everybody knows that unless this legislation is enacted the 1938 sugar situation will be what the 1933 situation was. You had just as well say that shoe factories cannot produce more shoes than the people can wear, or that any branch of industry in this country today cannot turn out a surplus product, as to say, given a normal season, that agriculture cannot turn out surpluses which will break down the market and send crop prices down to where they are not worth the cost of planting, harvesting, and marketing.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members of the House will not be confounded by the charges of discrimination that have been raised here with respect to Puerto Rico and Hawaii. There will not be any difference of opinion among the membership if they will bear in mind that the sole purpose of the bill is to preserve the existing status of all the parties concerned. This is what the bill does, and it does not discriminate in any way. There is no discrimination in favor of the domestic refineries in the United States. They take what is left after the refined sugar has been parceled out to the islands. Puerto Rico and Hawaii have become opportunists. They have raised the technical question of Americanism. What do they want to do? They want the opportunity of taking away from the States the refining industry and in time the whole sugar industry. If we vote down this amendment, the amount of refined sugar that will come in will not affect our American labor and we will at the same time protect our present standard of living. If you vote this amendment up, you will take away 2,100,000 tons of refined sugar, which will be refined in the islands, while we will only refine 3,000,000 tons here.

We have been told that it might be wise to allow this to be done, but if you allow this to be done, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] has said, the market will go down to the islands and not only the cane growers and cane refiners will lose but the beet growers and the beet refineries will suffer irreparably and eventually we will have no sugar industry in the States of the country.

We must, first of all, protect our labor and, secondly, have thought of the matter of national defense. Do you want sugar, a necessity of our lives, to be cut off altogether from continental United States and do you want to have us at the mercy of an island sugar market?

O Mr. Chairman, we are going to be told again that it is wise to vote to let this come to pass, but it is the most unwise policy, in my opinion, that the Congress could adopt. Let us be sane, let us be sensible, let us preserve the status of these people and let no opportunist arise to destroy our markets. Let us be real Americans. It was not on account of any issue like this that the American colonies fought against the mother country. The mother country did not want to preserve an existing satisfactory status. She oppressed and exploited us. It was not at all a similar case, and I am surprised that some of the gentlemen here stand up and undertake to draw such a comparison.

Vote this amendment down.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have quite a number of beet growers in my district and also a number of refineries. I do not want to injure them and I am certainly in favor of farm legislation. I have also always been in favor of labor legislation, but I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], has proven that the adoption of this amendment will not injure either the farmer or the laborer very materially.

I also listened to our friend, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], and I believe the moral side of this question is very important, living on the coast we are interested in the matter of exports, because we export a great deal to Hawaii.

However, I am supporting the amendment for another reason, which has been touched on by only three or four Members, and that is the constitutional issue involved. Who is Mr. KING? He is the Delegate from Hawaii representing here citizens of the United States. Who is Mr. IGLESIAS? Is he not the Commissioner representing the citizens of Puerto Rico, and I challenge any Member of the House to produce any proof that there is any constitutional ground for these provisions which the Jones amendment would eliminate being in the bill. We should treat the citizens of Puerto Rico and Hawaii the same as we treat the citizens of the States of New Mexico, Texas, or Washington. It is true that these men are only Delegates without a vote. But the same was true regarding the Delegate from the Territory of Washington before it became a State or any other Territory before statehood. It seems to me that from the constitutional angle we must recognize the fact that the men and women in the islands of Puerto Rico and Hawaii are citizens of the United States and, as such entitled to the same privileges and rights as we are.

I was against the policy of imperialism when we took over Hawaii and when we went into the Spanish-American War, resulting in the acquisition of Puerto Rico. I believe, however, when we take the flag into foreign lands and take charge of such islands or countries, we should not only receive the benefits that accrue to the monopolies of this country, but also assume the responsibilities that we, as American citizens, owe the citizens of Puerto Rico and Hawaii, and any other possessions where citizens of the United States live. We have no moral nor constitutional right to exploit these islands and then discriminate against them.

So I shall support the amendment from this angle and I believe it will do away with any constitutional issue involved.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], whom we all respect, said he did not know whether this is constitutional or not. He stated that as a layman he did not want to pass on the constitutionality of any proposed legislation. I think he is seriously in error in this matter. He is a Member of this legislative body the same as the rest of us. This is not a technical question of law. The Constitution is plain as to the rights of States and Territories and the prohibition on Congress to levy a tariff or quotas or restrictions against States or Territories. Even a layman can read the plain language of the Constitution in this regard. It is time that we, as Members of Congress, determine whether or not the measures we are considering for enactment are within the Constitution and not pass it up to the courts. If we did our duty in this matter, there would be no necessity for the Federal courts to usurp this prerogation of the legislative branch of our Government. But when we supinely pass legislation to favor certain groups or certain sections without any regard for the Constitution, or the "general welfare" of all the citizens of the United States, we invite a veto, and deserve to be retired by the voters who sent us here. [Applause.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, we have heard some able arguments against this bill on the question of quotas, and all those arguments apply with equal force against the bill, whether it has this provision in it or not in regard to refined sugar. The bill has quotas, and those quotas have been put in there for the protection of Hawaii and Puerto Rico, as well as for the protection of the beet growers, the cane growers, the refiners, and the consumers of continental United States. We are told that there is discrimination in the bill against Hawaii and Puerto Rico. The truth is they will ship just as many pounds of sugar into the United States if these paragraphs are left in the bill as they will if they are taken out of the bill. The bill does not discriminate against them. They will ship the same quantities of sugar here as they do now. The only difference will be whether or not a larger proportion of it will be refined in Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

If my information is correct, the major portion of the refineries in Hawaii and Puerto Rico are owned by men in the United States. They have recently been established there, only for a few years. A few years ago they were not there, and they were established in order to take advantage of cheap labor, and they have displaced that much labor here in continental United States. A few years ago I was in Puerto Rico, and the distinguished Chairman of this Committee of the Whole House was there with me at the time. He and I are the only Members of this Congress who were together on that occasion. I visited every central or sugar factory in Puerto Rico at that time, and there was not then a single refinery in Puerto Rico. They shipped all of their raw sugar to the United States. The elimination of the provision covered by the amendment will affect no one but the refiners in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and it is for their benefit alone. It will not change in any degree the amount of sugar that will come into the United States. It is not, therefore, in the interests of the grower or the consumer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, when this measure was before the Committee on Agriculture we had testimony from all of the interested groups that might be affected by the legislation, and we also had testimony from the governmental departments concerned; and out of it came the bill that is before us. During the course of discussion and argument back and forth on the bill, the attitude of the departments—the Interior, Agriculture, and State—was talked of, and members of the committee went down and talked to representatives of those departments, and the upshot of the whole thing is this: We can say, I think certainly, that if paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 207 are left in the bill the President will veto the bill, and that means that we will have no sugar legislation, and that means in turn that the only beneficiaries of what we do here will be the sugar refineries along the eastern coast. They benefit if we get no bill, and, of course, they benefit if we leave these two subsections in the bill. But if we leave them in, we will get a veto by the President of the United States, and that will wreck the beet-sugar industry. There is not a beet-sugar man in this House who does not know that if we fail to get legislation out of this bill it will wreck the beet-sugar business in the United States. As the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] said, sugar beets were selling for $4.50 a ton in 1933, and now they are selling at a reasonable price. They will go back to $4.50 a ton unless we get some legislation out of this bill, and the only way that we can do it is to support the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. How will it destroy the beet-sugar business of the country if this bill is vetoed?

Mr. BIERMANN. It will throw the business back to the position it was in before we had the Jones-Costigan Act.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the foreign possessions bring in any more sugar than they are bringing in now?

Mr. BIERMANN. If we do not get this legislation by December 31, we will be in the same shape we were in before the original Jones-Costigan Act, when $4.50 a ton was the price for sugar beets. The beet-sugar business is dependent on the quota system. Without quota legislation, the beet-sugar business is doomed. The only way to get the legislation at this session is to support the amendment that we have before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, those who have invested money in seacoast refineries and the management of those refineries necessarily want free trade in sugar. That is a fundamental fact that no refinery spokesman has dared to deny. With free trade, more sugar will be refined at the seacoast refineries than on any other basis. That means more work for American workers in the big refineries on the seacoast. It would also mean less work for American workers on the farms, in the beet-sugar-growing districts, and the beet-sugar plants which are not refineries by any means. Free trade does not mean work for people in the American transportation system and other related activities in the domestic-sugar industry. The greatest calamity for the beet-sugar industry would be to have this bill fail because of a veto and be asked to go back to a free-trade basis.

No refiner's representative dare refute that statement. When we vote down the amendment, we cast the die. But it is not at the cost of the refinery or of the refinery laborer. It is at the cost of the laborer in the interior of the country. When you kill the domestic-sugar industry in Hawaii and kill it in Puerto Rico, you automatically and simultaneously kill it within the United States, but you do not hurt the refiner on the seacoast and you do not hurt the laborer who is in that refinery. The position of the two groups is dissimilar. One thrives on free sugar; the other group dies.

The question is this: If the President vetoes this bill and we have adjourned in the meantime, or fail to pass it over his veto, there is no legislation. That helps the refinery. That helps the labor in the refineries. That brings about virtually free trade—only $1.50 against Cuba. That is the situation we face. The fellow from the beet territory has to go along with the beet grower who says "I want the amendment killed." That is the fact. Getting legislation passed is not a science. It is a practical horse-trading proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

WE SHOULD NOT DISCRIMINATE AGAINST HAWAII, AN INTEGRAL PART OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we realize the importance of this sugar bill to the Pacific Coast States. I do not mean to our beet farmers, but to other farmers and to our industries and factories.

Hawaii lies 2,000 miles off the Pacific coast. If it were part of the mainland, no one would ever urge that it be treated any differently than any other part of our country. But simply because it is separated by blue water from the rest of our territory, some of us seem to think it is all right to discriminate against its citizens, in favor of some other part of our country. No one would ever have thought of doing that to Oklahoma or Arizona when they were Territories.

Hawaii is not so far away as one would think. Five days by steamer from San Francisco; 16 hours by regular airplane service. One can travel from Honolulu to New York by air in less than 36 hours. And when our Constitution was adopted it took a week to travel from Boston to Philadelphia.

What do we on the Pacific coast owe to Hawaii? In the first place we must look to it for protection from oriental aggression. It is our military outpost in the Pacific, and upon its defense rests the safety of San Francisco and Seattle, and all of our great seaboard cities. The Panama Canal would fall easy prey to an enemy in the Pacific, were it not for Hawaii, from a military standpoint.

Then also, it is the crossroads of the Pacific, and its harbor is our greatest asset in gaining and holding Pacific trade. It also furnishes a landing field for trans-Pacific airplanes. Without it, airplane service from California to the Orient would be impossible. No other country can use it without our permission and the United States will be able to control trans-Pacific airplane service—a matter of incalculable value to our country.

But in addition to its incalculable value for military purposes, and as a crossroads for Pacific commerce, Hawaii is of major value as a purchaser of goods from other parts of our country. It buys two-thirds of the California rice crop. It buys millions of feet of lumber from Washington and Oregon. It buys cotton goods from New England and the South, and flour and meat products from the Middle West. There is not a part of our country which does not receive some benefit from trade with Hawaii, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. Chairman, we devote much attention to our foreign trade and rightly so. But our foreign trade is but a pigmy compared with our internal trade. How many of you know that Hawaii each year buys more than $80,000,000 of products from other parts of our country. And how many know that Hawaii each year buys more of our products than does any foreign country save five; that it buys more than Mexico, or Cuba, or Italy, or Brazil, or China. The figures are as follows:

1. United Kingdom	$440,000,000
2. Canada	384,000,000
3. Japan	204,300,000
4. France	129,500,000
5. Germany	109,600,000
Territory of Hawaii	85,700,000
6. Mexico	76,000,000
7. British South Africa	71,200,000
8. Cuba	67,400,000
9. Belgium	58,800,000
10. Italy	58,800,000
11. Australia	58,500,000
12. Argentina	56,900,000
13. Netherlands	52,800,000
14. Brazil	49,000,000
15. China	46,800,000
16. Sweden	43,100,000
17. Colombia	27,900,000
18. British India	26,800,000

Of course, it follows that if we restrict Hawaii's production or her manufacture of her products, we reduce her trade by just that amount and her ability to purchase the goods of other parts of our country. If she cannot refine her sugar but must pay the eastern refiner to do so, there will be less lumber, less rice, and less flour purchased by her from the rest of the country, and the Pacific coast will be the principal loser.

Mr. Chairman, to suggest that it is public policy to discriminate against one part of our country in order to favor another is shocking. It has never been our policy. One of the causes of the Revolutionary War was England's traditional policy of preventing manufacturing in the Colonies in order that industry in the mother country might thrive.

Some parts of our country have natural advantages over other parts, and because of this fact industries rise and prosper in some areas and languish in others. It has never been our policy to deprive any part of our country of its natural advantages by law or to legislate natural advantages out of existence.

The coal in Pennsylvania and the oil in Texas give them natural advantages over areas not possessing these natural advantages. So, also, the water power in the Western States and the minerals of Colorado. It is the same with soil and climate. New England had a monopoly of cotton spinning for many years because of her cheap water power. But electricity and climate and plentiful labor in the South has resulted in a rapid growth of spinning there, where the cotton is grown. No one would think of preventing the South by law from spinning her own cotton simply that New England might continue her monopoly.

We now have pending before us wage and hour legislation. Many of the southern Representatives strenuously oppose its enactment, because they contend it will deprive the South of her advantage of a plentiful supply of labor. We must recognize that local conditions make it proper that there should be wage differentials between different parts of our country, influenced in part by its availability, but greater still by the cost of living, climate, and other such factors.

Mr. Chairman, if our Territories have cheaper labor than the Atlantic coast, that is no reason why they should be deprived of their right to manufacture their agricultural products. The wage and hour law will apply to sugar refining in Hawaii, and, if there is any reason why wages should be raised or hours lessened in Hawaii, the Federal Government will be able to do it. The labor question is a false issue and has no place in the consideration of this legislation.

It is interesting to speculate as to the amount that Japan, for instance, would pay if it could own the Hawaiian Islands. And yet those islands, after a century as an independent sovereignty, voluntarily elected to become part of our country under our solemn assurance that it would become an integral part of our Nation, and as such is entitled to fair and equal treatment.

Under this assurance the Republic of Hawaii turned over to the United States all its properties, the money in its treasury, its forts and public buildings, and more than a million acres of public lands. We not only did not have to pay for the Territory, but we got the money in the treasury and all public properties. In addition Hawaii has paid into the United States Treasury in taxes $150,000,000 more than Congress has expended upon it. We received the islands as a voluntary gift and have made a profit of $150,000,000 out of them.

Mr. Chairman, not only would it be a disastrous national policy for us to discriminate against Hawaii, but I earnestly say that it would be a gross breach of faith with her children—a violation of the trust under which she became part of our Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill in general, largely for the same reasons so admirably expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. But, unlike Mr. WADSWORTH, I am opposed to the Jones amendment. I am opposed to the Jones amendment because I believe it will take jobs away from organized American workmen and give those jobs to native, unorganized workmen in our possessions or in our islands.

I confess I cannot see any discrimination in this bill against Hawaii and Puerto Rico in the refined-sugar quotas. The provisions of this bill limit the output of refineries in continental United States to about 60 percent of their capacity by limiting the raw product which goes to them. But the provisions of this bill as they are now do not limit the production of any refinery in Puerto Rico or Hawaii, because this bill permits them to at least produce to capacity. I see no discrimination there. If there is any discrimination it is against our own refineries here and against our own workmen here if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. Chairman, congressional leaders who are urging us to lift the import quota upon refined sugar are really asking us to give American workingmen's jobs to natives of far-away islands.

Last month these same congressional leaders urged upon us the one and one-half billion relief appropriation "to keep American workingmen and their families from starving."

Next week these same congressional leaders will be urging us to raise the standard of living for the submerged one-third of our American population that we have heard so much about by passing the so-called wage and hour bill, a bill that seeks to establish minimum pay and maximum hours—and other things far less desirable.

I defy anyone to find anywhere a more outstanding example of loose thinking, inconsistent reasoning, or contradictory action than is to be found right here in Congress when we compare the aims, the purposes, and the objectives of this sugar bill, the wage and hour bill, and the Wallace farm bill. Any reasonable man must know we cannot raise the standard of living and wages for the American workman and at the same time invite importation of foreign goods made with cheap labor; we cannot raise the standard of living and prices for our American farmers and at the same time invite importation of agricultural products produced upon foreign soil by peasant toilers. It just does not make sense. High prices for farm products, high wages and shorter hours for labor, must of necessity mean protective tariffs. This principle was recognized by the late Congressman Connery in drafting his bill. It was recognized by the men who drafted the 1937 A. A. A. bill. It underlies the question at issue on this sugar bill. So let us quit kidding ourselves; let us act like logical beings; let us face the facts.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, we have given over 2 days to debate on this important sugar bill. I have frequently stated here that more wars have been fought over sugar than any other commodity. Today we are surrounded by sugar people from all parts of the world watching carefully what we will do with this bill. The objections of the administration to the bill brought to us by the Agriculture Committee are regarding two of the paragraphs in section 207 which would limit the amount of refined sugar coming to the United States from the Hawaiian Islands and Puerto Rico. It has nothing to do with the amount of the raw sugar in the quotas contained in this bill. The seaboard refineries want the refined limits left in the bill on the ground that unless that is done hundreds of American workers would be thrown out of jobs. The sugar-beet interests in my State want the sections left intact on the grounds that unless that is done it may work a hardship against the sugar-beet farmers of Nebraska.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has worked many months over this sugar bill. I have attended many of those meetings in order to determine just how this important legislation would affect the consumers of America and also our farmers.

I am opposed to any quota being put on sugar farming in the continental United States, Mr. Chairman. I say that because we raise only about 20 percent of the sugar we consume here. We find ourselves faced with orders to take out of production many thousand acres of land because we are told we raise too much corn and wheat and cotton and other farm crops. At the same time we appropriate many hundreds of millions of dollars for irrigation to put new farm lands into production to raise the same things. Yet here we are telling our farmers that notwithstanding the fact that we only raise 20 percent of the sugar we eat we must raise so much and no more, thus leaving an American market wide open to the sugar barons of the world to exploit. Why should we tell our sugar-beet farmers that notwithstanding the fact that they have the land they can only grow a limited amount of sugar beets even though there is never a surplus of sugar beets in our country? American consumers should know that last year they paid a subsidy of about $350,000,000 to the sugar people of the world. That gigantic annual amount represents the amount more than the sugar people got for their sugar on the world market. That is because in the United States we pay 1 cent and more a pound for sugar than is paid on the world market. There is a world market and a United States market. American consumers pay the bill. That is, they pay a subsidy or a higher price than other people in other countries of the world pay.

Mr. Chairman, while I am in sympathy with the President, on principle, in his stand against parts of this bill, I feel that as long as we are putting a quota on our sugar production in this country and carrying out this quota program through which our offshore possessions will profit, there is nothing inconsistent and there is no discrimination against offshore possessions to put a certain quota on how much refined sugar they can ship into our continental United States. We are told that these offshore possessions will be allowed to ship as much refined sugar as their present capacity. We are told that they will not be stopped from refining sugar and that they can sell all they want on the world market. So we merely say for the sake of protecting American labor, American industry, and American farming, that they can ship their present capacity to us so that American industry will be protected against the possibility that eventually all the sugar raised in these offshore possessions will not be refined there and shipped directly to us with the possible danger of closing down all of our refineries and make America the dumping ground for all the world sugar and sugar substitutes that are now rapidly wiping out the market which heretofore was enjoyed by American farmers who raise corn and grain.

Mr. Chairman, if there was no quota on sugar in the United States and we were allowed to raise whatever sugarcane and sugar beets we cared to raise, I would feel that I would follow the principle in the arguments advanced by the apponents to this bill. I want to go on record with other Members that industry in Hawaii and Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands should be treated as all other Americans because the islands are American and the people who live there under our flag are also Americans. But as long as these quotas are forced upon us; as long as we are told in the United States that "we must not raise more than so many acres of sugar beets" and so long as these quota regulations are forced upon us I feet that the quotas can be placed on refined as well as raw sugar.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to dwell much longer on this particular phase of this very important bill. There is one paragraph in section 207 to which I am opposed. In it we say that in the Virgin Islands we must not refine any sugar. That is in these islands which belong to us and where the people live under the Stars and Stripes and where the principal crop is sugarcane from which fine sugar can be made—we say to these people that they cannot make and refine sugar. I feel that is rank discrimination and a blot on legislative procedure here. In those islands we force these people to grind their sugarcane into juice from which our Government, at Government expense and under our Government supervision, makes rum which we distribute throughout these United States in competition with the distillers of our own land who are endeavoring to abide by their promises to our farmers that they will distill their spirits from our corn and our grain.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention of Members of this House to another amendment which is going to be offered very soon. This will have to do with an excise tax of about 8 cents a gallon on liquid sugar or blackstrap molasses. This liquid sugar is coming to us as refined sugar and carries no duty. I hope every Member who is anxious to protect the American market for the American farmer and every Member who is anxious to protect American jobs for the American workingman will join us in keeping this amendment in the bill.

Sometime ago, Mr. Chairman, I became the author of H. R. 2268, a bill making it unlawful to sell certain spirits containing alcohol produced from materials other than cereal grains. It has the support of the Farm Bureau and other farm organizations. Extensive hearings were held on this bill. It was fought, in my opinion, by the great Sugar Trust and even some of the refiners. Up to this time this bill has been waylaid in committee.

This amendment to this bill to put an excise tax on this molasses coming to us from foreign countries and even our offshore possessions may help my bill and may help our farmers who may this year have an overabundance of corn. In the absence of a price stabilization bill for our corn crop this year, I beg Members of this House to help us pass this amendment, which will protect a market for about thirty or more million bushels of corn annually and a very large amount of other cereal grains. The amendment will in no way stop the importation of blackstrap molasses where it comes for the purpose of mixing with alfalfa and which is an adjunct for livestock feed. It will, however, give corn and grains an equal chance with blackstrap molasses in the manufacture of distilled spirits, alcohol, and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard many statements on the floor of this House during the past few weeks to the effect that farmers are so much better off now. Members who do not know the truth and merely get their information from the newspapers and reports about high prices of farm products really should know that in my State there is no prosperity yet among the farmers. Thank God we are going to get a corn crop according to present indications. But up to this time our farmers had to pay high prices for corn and grain to feed their starving livestock. They have paid $1.25 a bushel for corn which today has already dropped 30 cents on the market. They have paid 65 cents a bushel for oats for which they now are getting 30 cents at the elevators.

So you see, Mr. Chairman, these debt-burdened farmers who are forced to give all their small grain to pay for feed and seed loans are depending upon what little money they are going to get from the sale of their corn, if they get a crop of corn. They must be protected.

You will remember that during the fight for the repeal of the prohibition law the farmers of our country were told that if they voted for repeal they would be given a real market for their corn and grain. But what really happened? Immediately after repeal the Molasses Trust began using substitutes for corn and grain. They built gigantic distilleries where they are manufacturing all kinds of distilled spirits and alcohol from this cheap blackstrap molasses and flooding our country with it. The great chemists continually show that they can make alcohol much cheaper from this substitute than from the real products of the farm. Thirty million bushels of corn is substituted each year by this blackstrap molasses, which is a byproduct of sugarcane which comes to us from the fields of foreign countries.

The beet-sugar and cane-sugar farmers of our country know that none of their byproducts go into alcohol. It is used up mostly by the yeast people. Therefore, every Member from a beet-sugar district and a cane-sugar district of our country and who is in this House this afternoon should know that all of the blackstrap molasses which is replacing corn and grain in the manufacture of alcohol comes to us from foreign countries and very little from our island possessions. By voting for this amendment, and also the Dirksen amendment, which has practically the same objectives, you will be helping to protect the American market for the American farmer.

I wish, Mr. Chairman, that every Member of this House, especially those Members from our industrial East and South, would know the true picture of many of the farmers in my district. These farmers have hung on through drought, grasshoppers, and dust storms. They have seen their fields eaten up by hoppers, burned up by the sun and hot winds, and they have seen their livestock starving. A majority of them have gone broke financially and have been forced to sell down their livestock until many of them do not have enough livestock on hand to work their farms effectively. Up to the present time practically all of the corn and grain have been shipped into the district and fed on arrival. Today they have completed harvesting a small grain crop. But most of that crop will go to settle some of the heavy debts which they were forced to acquire during the drought days. But bountiful rains have fallen, and the prediction is that the corn crop will be a good one. In some of my counties there will be no grain and no corn and not even a garden of vegetables. But generally I am reliably informed there will be corn. It is the corn crop on which our farmers depend to keep them going until the next crop. I beseech Members of this House now to do something in this bill to give these corn farmers the market to which they are entitled, and not keep surrendering it to the foreigners, who are rapidly taking it away with these substitutes.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, may I take a few moments of the time of the Members of the House to summarize my views on the proposed legislation? I was privileged yesterday to listen to many mighty fine presentations of the subject from the lips of men who are undoubtedly students of the subject of sugar legislation, and I could not help but draw my own conclusions as to the problem confronting this House. As Representatives in Congress we should be primarily concerned in enacting into legislation a law that would be beneficial first to the American consumer; secondly, to the American producer; and, finally, to the American refiner.

Briefly, the recent history of sugar legislation will call to mind the Fordney-McCumber Act, which in effect was the Tariff Act of 1922 and, subsequently, the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930, both of which proposed to maintain and increase the domestic market for domestic producers. The tariff acts of these years did not accomplish this purpose but shifted the American market from Cuba to the insular possessions, with resulting economic distress to the sugar industry generally and a loss of markets to Cuban producers. When the present administration assumed office, the failure of the tariff system as a method of aid was apparent to all interests. The price of sugar for March 1933, I am informed, was close to its extreme low for all time and, as a result, the Tariff Commission, which had studied the sugar problem from all angles, acknowledged the failure of former sugar legislation and outlined in a letter from Robert L. O'Brien to the President in 1933 possible substitutes for the traditional method of assistance. Among the plans suggested by the Tariff Commission was a limitation in the form of a quota system, which feature, together with direct benefits to domestic and insular producers which were to be made from the funds arising through the processing tax on sugar, was embodied in the Sugar Act of 1934. Following this legislation, the Department of Agriculture attempted to reach a stabilization agreement with the industry but failed, and subsequently the President, faced with the failure to reach the agreement, sent a message to Congress, which turned to the principles of the Agricultural Adjustment Act for partial solution, at least, of the sugar problem. The principles of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, now invalidated, could not be applied precisely in the case of sugar as in other commodities such as wheat because sugar was an import and not an export commodity and we did not have a surplus but rather a deficit in the commodity at that time. The President's message raised the principal issue as to whether or not the sugar industry should be afforded any measure of public protection and concluded, "I do not at this time recommend placing sugar on the free list." In brief, the President asked Congress to protect what he described as an expensive industry but not to enlarge it. The consequent result of the message was the enactment of the Jones-Costigan Act of 1934.

Leaving the legislative background of sugar for a moment, let us proceed to a consideration of the effects that the present bill under consideration would have, first, upon the consumer; secondly, upon the producer; and lastly, upon the refiner. Statements made here on the floor yesterday by the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture set forth the fact that the average price on sugar to the consumer under the provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act, which incidentally embraces the quota system, was less and is less today than it has been for many years. This fact—that the present price on sugar is lower than it has been for a great number of years—was supported by the statements of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], who is probably as well informed on this subject as any man in the House. Finally the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] submitted statistical data which proved to the satisfaction of those of us who were present that the statements made by the chairman and the gentleman from Colorado were correct. These statements are obviously true because they remain unchallenged. The second consideration that Members of the House should have should be toward American sugar producers; that is, toward the farmer, who actually tills the soil which produces this very controversial commodity. Our interest in that class of men should be satisfied by the statements of none other than the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS], representing as he does a great beet-sugar area, and who is recognized as a great authority on sugar legislation, when he said that as far as the sugar producers are concerned, the elimination of subdivisions A and B of section 207, which wipes out the quota provisions from the present bill, would make no difference to the producer, for he would get the same price for his product whether the quota provisions were in the bill or eliminated from it. I think we can all take that statement as a fact in view of the authority from which it comes.

The main purpose, as far as I am concerned, of this bill is to enact into law legislation that will first and foremost protect the consuming public, and incidentally protect the farmer-producer of sugar, and finally American industry, which employs thousands of our citizens in refining enterprises throughout America. This bill continues the quota, which system, in effect, for the past 2 years of its life, at least, has accorded the American consumer the lowest average price for sugar that the consumer has enjoyed for many years.

Secondly, the bill provides, as similar provisions have during the life of the Jones-Costigan Act for the last 2 years, protection for the farmer-producer of the Middle West and the South. If the provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act work so well, then is it not a practical thing for us to embrace the main provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act in framing present legislation.

This brings us to the consideration of the most controversial features of the bill—subdivisions A and B of section 207—which, in effect, establish a similar quota system in the present bill as is present in the Jones-Costigan Act. The present administration, under advice, I assume, from Secretaries Ickes, Wallace, and Hull, wants the quota on refined sugar from the insular possessions, described in the section above, abolished. This brings us to the consideration of the last group aforementioned, namely, the status of the American refiners under the bill now under consideration. The quota system, affecting as it does American refineries, has worked well during the life of the Jones-Costigan Act, and, in my opinion, should be perpetuated in the present legislation for the reason that the plan of Ickes, Wallace, and Hull, if it were enacted into law, would mean less raw sugar shipped here, thus less refining here in America, and, more important still, what would be refined in America would have to be sold against ruinous competition of producers of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines, whose finished product would be produced at a minimum labor cost. The abandonment of the quota system would undoubtedly throw American workmen out of employment in order that natives in far-away insular possessions might gain employment and refineries on those islands, which, as a matter of interest, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] said are controlled by six corporations, would gain greater profit.

It must be obvious to thinking persons what would happen if the quota support were withdrawn from the present bill. It is safe to say that such a withdrawal would bring about a new alinement of supply and demand, and hence new but indeterminate prices when Cuba and the insular possessions would be permitted to expand their exports of sugar to the United States. The history of sugar legislation teaches us that the American consumer paid 25 to 30 cents a pound for sugar in the years 1920 and 1921, and it is my humble opinion that if the quota provisions of this bill are withdrawn and the American refiners are compelled to close their refineries because of ruinous competition, then insular refineries will be in a fine position to dictate the price of sugar in continental United States. This reasoning appears to me to be logical, since there will be no American competition and literally a monopoly will be set up among refiners on the insular possessions, supported, maintained, and perpetuated upon a cornerstone of cheap labor.

Should the advocates of the amendment that is to be offered to eliminate the quota provisions of section 207 prevail, then eventually the beet-sugar farmer of the West, the cane-sugar producer of Florida and Louisiana will be in trouble. I hold no brief for the American refiners and I recognize that the industry has had an unfavorable record in the public mind and that its long-drawn-out controversies with the Government and its subsequent conviction of engaging in combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade in commerce have not left any too favorable a taste in the minds of many people, yet I do hope that legislation enacted into law should be so designed as to stabilize all features of the industry and extend no preference to insular labor over American labor.

If the provisions of the Jones-Costigan Act of 1934, which are in effect embodied in this legislation, have worked so well and have afforded the consumer the lowest price in many years for sugar and have protected the farmer-producer, then why is it not consistent to permit the American refineries, which employ about 14,000 of our citizens, to continue to enjoy the benefits they have had during the life of the Jones-Costigan Act.

If the opinion of the present administration is written into the law, American refiners could not maintain the industry, paying the American standard of wages to its workmen as against the competition of the lower labor standard of wages paid to workmen in the insular possessions. As far as Boston and New England are concerned, we might well anticipate the closing down of a century-old industry with a pay roll to New England workmen of over $2,000,000 per year, not to mention the millions which are added to New England purchasing power in the nature of wages, supplies, freight, advertising, and the like. What is true of New England is true of other sections of the country where the refining industry is located and where that industry has played an equally important part in the industrial advancement of such States as New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, and California. Thousands of men throughout America will be deprived of an opportunity to work, and, in most instances, will be returned to local relief rolls. Personally, it does not seem to me to be good business nor to be consistent with the governmental policy in recent years in these times of unemployment to further reduce and eventually wipe out the pay roll of approximately 14,000 men employed in this industry and paid $25,000,000 yearly, in favor of cheap tropical labor in Puerto Rico, Cuba, and Hawaii.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, may I say that it is rather ironical for the present administration to ask industry to absorb the unemployed and, at the same time, attempt to enact into law sugar legislation, without quota provisions, which would admittedly discharge thousands of Americans engaged in the sugar-refining industry in Boston and other cities of the country.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGGINS. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. If section 207 does not go out we will not have any bill and the farmer will be just as bad off as he was in 1933.

Mr. HIGGINS. The gentleman holds an opinion contrary to that of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] who on yesterday stated that it did not make any difference one way or the other.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does he think we can override a veto? We are going to get a veto if that section stays in the bill.

Mr. HIGGINS. The gentleman does not know that we are going to get a veto.

Mr. BIERMANN. I assure the gentleman there will be a veto.

Mr. HIGGINS. The gentleman has no guarantee of that any more than I have.

This brings us down to the most controversial feature of the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, this may be a sweet bill for the Government of Cuba and several large banks in New York City and some large banking concerns in Canada, which control much of the Cuban sugar land, but I think it is a rather sour subject to the United States Treasury and the American farmer, because, under the reciprocal treaty we made with Cuba, already in 32 months we have remitted $78,000,000 in duties on Cuban sugar that otherwise would have been paid into the Treasury of the United States. These figures are authentic and official. What have we received in return? Slightly increased exports of our products, but we have not one-tenth of the amount that we have given to the Cuban Government in an agreement carrying the word "reciprocity."

How does this concern us? We are paying benefits to the farmers so they will not raise sugarcane or sugar beets; paying them to keep their land out of cultivation so that we may import more sugar from Cuba. Do you believe that a similar example could be found in the whole world? No. When we add the cost of these benefits paid the farmer it means that our Government has already lost more than $100,000,000 because of this unfortunate agreement the Roosevelt administration made with Cuba. Furthermore, the loss in revenue is increased at the rate of $2,000,000 per month.

This so-called sugar mess can mostly be traced to the reciprocity agreement with Cuba. Just another hundred million dollars to support the good-neighbor policy of Hull and Roosevelt.

To you Members who have refineries in your district, or in whose district sugarcane or sugar beets can be grown—and I have neither—I suggest that the root of your trouble is these abominable treaties which are taking away the use of our land and the employment of our people. So if you want relief or if you want to make a satisfactory approach to the solution of the sugar problem, you will have to reach farther back than this bill; you will be forced to bring about a termination of the reciprocal-trade agreements with Cuba. If we could be encouraged to increase domestic production of cane and beets it would put vacant land into sugar crops, stop benefit payments, and take some of the pressure off of corn and wheat and thereby help the other farmers of the country. But we are faced with this illogical, unsound condition, brought about by dreamers and visionaries, and whether you have quotas or not, you are never going to bring about a real solution of this question until you terminate this sugar agreement.

I assert that this foreign sugar fiasco has already cost the United States Treasury more than $100,000,000. Probably the low-tariff, free-trade sponsors of this program would say that the amount mentioned only increased the public debt that sum. Just a good-will move.

But we must not forget that it will take sweat and taxes to pay for this unfortunate trade experiment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] for 3 minutes.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in closing the debate in opposition to this amendment I wish to call to the attention of the Members of the House a few pertinent facts.

The restrictions in this bill, limiting the importation of refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, are the same as the restrictions in the Jones-Costigan Act and the resolution continuing the quota provisions, passed last year, both of which were signed by the President. This bill simply limits the refined sugar to the maximum amount that Hawaii and Puerto Rico are able to refine at the present time.

I am primarily interested in the passage of this bill in the interest of the growers. The domestic sugar industry is a very important industry in this country and should be preserved.

The committee gave a great deal of consideration to the controversial question at issue. We felt there was no justification in encouraging the building of new refineries in Hawaii and Puerto Rico at this time that would jeopardize the investments in continental refineries and the jobs of the men now employed in them.

From the consumers' viewpoint, if we encouraged the dismantling of our continental plants and the building up of refineries in our offshore areas and in foreign countries controlling the chief sources of supply, might we not sooner or later become the victims of a monopoly that could force the people in the United States to pay a price of 18 or 20 cents per pound for sugar, as happened in 1920? Let us preserve this American industry.

I urge the passage of this bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture, with the suggestion that, in the light of recent political developments, if it is found necessary that some further compromise be made, it can be done in the Senate. This is not permanent legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. There is one other speech, that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and then debate under the agreement will close.

The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor today for one reason, and one reason only, that I am a friend to the sugar industry and I want sugar legislation.

Mr. Chairman, my very dear friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] this morning, anticipating that I would make a few remarks later in the day, called attention to the fact that the city Members had upon every occasion supported farm legislation. I join him in that statement, but say further that my observation has been that the Members from the great cities have with as much unanimity supported all farm legislation as have those of us from the so-called country districts.

To me there is a principle involved in the Jones amendment. This may not be exactly on all fours with the proposition that we are considering, but I say the same principle is involved.

If there is a strong industry in the country I represent, it is the Cottonseed Crushers' Association. That organization is without doubt the strongest single organization in northeastern Texas. They came to me some years ago and stated that the cottonseed-oil industry was in a bad way, and that it was being hounded to death by Philippine oil. I told these gentlemen then, as I say to you today with reference to this matter and with reference to other American citizens, just as the Filipino was a full American citizen at that time:

I realize your situation, but as long as the Philippine Islands are a part of the United States I will not by my vote levy a tax against them any more than I would against any State of the Union.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we are up against a certain proposition here and we might as well be frank about it. I stated at the beginning of my remarks that I rose for one purpose and one purpose only. That is, I want the sugar question settled for at least 2 years. I think it is in the interest of American refiners, I think it is in the interest of American producers, and I think it is in the interest of those extra Americans in what we call our possessions. I think this is more sentiment than anything else, or an understanding, as some people might say. Do you not think it would be better to adopt the Jones amendment, which I do not believe will hurt the American refiners, because I believe there will be no extra refineries built in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands if the Jones amendment is adopted, and get real sugar legislation and be sure of it than to hazard getting nothing and throwing this great industry into what you yourselves call chaos? Some of you gentlemen have been telling me for 3 long weeks that we must pass some sugar legislation or the sugar industry is going to be in very bad shape.

I want to assure you that the President and all departments concerned are wholly opposed to these two paragraphs.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say. I trust the amendment will be adopted because, as I stated at the beginning, I am a friend of the beet man, I am a friend of the cane man, I am a friend of the industry, and I want this great industry to have the support in years to come that this legislation will give it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired under the agreement.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLER offers an amendment to the amendment: Page 14, lines 9 and 10, strike out subsection (c).

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be agreed to so that the vote may come on my amendment as amended. I ask unanimous consent that the lettering may be changed in my amendment so as to completely fit the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES and Mr. LANZETTA) there were—ayes 73, noes 125.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment and I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. JONES and Mr. CUMMINGS to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 92 and noes 135.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, in order to give all the Members who have substantial amendments a chance to present them and have them read and then to have discussion on all amendments, I am going to ask that the amendments may be read and that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close at 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Texas that there are certain committee amendments that were passed over temporarily.

Mr. JONES. I would like to have them disposed of first, of course. I am perfectly willing for the amendments to be offered and pending, so that they may all be read in the meantime and then anyone who has an amendment will have the opportunity to speak, but the debate will close at 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we have a series of amendments relating to the Florida situation. Of course, the action on some of the first ones might possibly influence the others.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman may offer his amendments and have them considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to have all amendments offered now, debate to be closed at 5 o'clock and that the Member offering an amendment shall have the opportunity to be heard.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would not want to foreclose the right to offer amendments. I am seeking to give the privilege to those who have substantial amendments to have them read now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I inquire from the gentleman from Texas if it is his idea that all amendments shall be read at one time and then there will be block arguments on all amendments?

Mr. JONES. No; it is my thought that a Member may offer an amendment and discuss the amendment. I had hoped we might agree as we went along as to the time on each amendment and perhaps confine it to two or three speeches and dispose of it. I want to close debate at 5 o'clock and in order that all amendments may be pending I sought to have them read at this time.

Mr. WILCOX. I am perfectly willing to limit debate on any amendment. I have no desire to obstruct the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I will change the unanimous consent request and ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close at 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments now to be taken up will be the committee amendments.

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think those should be taken up now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 26, after line 8, insert "notwithstanding the foregoing exceptions, sugar in liquid form (regardless of its nonsugar solid content) which is to be used in the distillation of alcohol shall be considered manufactured sugar."

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up much of the time of the Committee, but I do want to submit that blackstrap molasses is used very largely in the manufacture of industrial alcohol. It takes about 2½ gallons of blackstrap molasses to make 1 gallon of industrial alcohol. To impose a tax of about 3 cents on a gallon of blackstrap molasses would increase the cost of industrial alcohol from 7 to 8 cents a gallon. I believe the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, for a great number of years the farmers of the Nation have attempted to interest the American Congress in legislation which would place the corn producer of the United States upon a near parity basis with the producer of blackstrap molasses in tropical countries. That goal will be accomplished if the amendment which I have introduced and which is now a part of the bill becomes the law of the land. The amendment appears under the definition of sugar and is found on page 26 of the bill. It reads as follows:

Notwithstanding the foregoing exceptions, sugar in liquid form (regardless of its nonsugar solid content) which is to be used in the distillation of alcohol shall be considered manufactured sugar.

In addition, two other amendments which are corollary to the one just quoted have been placed in the bill. On page 30 I have caused to be struck out the words in the title, "Livestock food and distillation" and have had inserted in lieu thereof "and livestock feed." Also, on page 30, in line 21, I have caused to be struck out the words "or for the distillation of alcohol." My colleagues, these amendments do not tax blackstrap molasses which may be imported for livestock food.

Mr. Chairman, various chemical companies and interested industries throughout the Nation have flooded the offices of Members of Congress with letters opposing this amendment. It is the same old story when legislation is proposed which for the first time, seeks to interfere with a bonanza which has been heretofore unmolested by tax legislation. I do not blame them for attempting to keep a closed corporation on one of the most profitable businesses in America.

I have no quarrel with them for attempting to defeat this amendment, as it is an immutable law that every man in this world must look after himself. I approach this problem from the standpoint of the farmer who has for years visioned purchasing power dwindle into the evening shades of bankruptcy. Through this amendment I am only attempting to deal out a bit of single-handed justice for the basic industry of America, heretofore long neglected.

Mr. Chairman, I am one who believes in reciprocal-trade agreements. I am convinced that it is the only method that can bring back to this country a demand for our surpluses, which is so necessary in our general scheme of permanent prosperity. But I submit that the disparity existing between the producer of blackstrap molasses in foreign countries and the producer of corn in America for the distillation of alcohol is shameful and appalling. Reciprocity upon this question is a mere platitude.

Let it be understood at this point of my argument that the farmers of this country do not want a complete embargo upon blackstrap. This is where I am forced to disagree with the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who admits that if his amendment were adopted the tax would prohibit blackstrap molasses from entering this country. I believe that I understand the feeling and temper of the American farmer. No class of individuals in this country is more fair and equitable in their relationships with the other industries of the world. I say with candor that the farmers of America do not want an embargo upon blackstrap molasses. The farmers of America do not want such high and preferential treatment. However, they do ask that every reasonable opportunity for the disposition of the surplus of the basic commodities of America be made available. They want to open every possible avenue to increase production consistent with a fair and decent price. And my amendment, which is now a part of the bill, seeking to place an importation and manufacturers' tax upon sugar, regardless of its nonsugar content, will, in my opinion, go a long way toward helping the corn producers of America. No opportunity to develop more markets for these commodities should ever be overlooked. No one will disagree with my statement when I say that such a program is socially desirable and economically sound, and the more I study the contents of my proposals and their possibilities the more I am puzzled as why this legislation has been so long delayed.

Mr. Chairman, I now submit further supporting facts which should convince the Congress that these amendments are meritorious and justifiable.

First. Do you know that outside of a small excise tax under the tariff act there is not a single dime of tax upon the importation or manufacture of blackstrap molasses? Is there any legitimate or economic reason why this liquid commodity, which comes to this country in millions upon millions of gallons, should be exempt? Under this bill sugar pays an importation and manufacturers' tax. Sugar is one of the necessities of life, while most of the alcohol distilled from blackstrap molasses goes into beverages and radiator caps, rather luxurious business at least. All I seek in this amendment is to place the actual sugar content of blackstrap molasses upon the same taxable basis as edible sugar. What is unfair about that? Is there a single individual interested in this bill who, if he uses American equality as a premise, dare challenge this position?

Second. Do you know that last year 179,123,000 gallons of molasses came into this country from the tropical countries? Now, under my amendment the importation and manufacturers' tax would be approximately 7.72 cents per gallon, resulting in the raw material cost of a gallon of alcohol of approximately 25 cents. Chemists tell me that a bushel of corn will yield 2½ gallons of alcohol. Therefore, if corn is selling at 75 cents per bushel and the same were being used in the distillation of industrial alcohol, the raw material cost of 1 gallon would be 30 cents; if corn were selling for 70 cents per bushel, the raw-material cost of a gallon of industrial alcohol would be 28 cents; if corn were selling for 65 cents per bushel, the cost would be 26 cents per gallon; if corn were selling for 50 cents per bushel, the cost would be 20 cents per gallon; and if corn were selling for 40 cents per bushel, the raw material cost of a gallon of industrial alcohol would be 16 cents. At 65 cents per bushel corn would be an attractive influence to the distillers of alcohol for industrial purposes, and this basic commodity in America would meet the competition of blackstrap molasses. If corn sold below that price, we then would be aiding the American farmer by giving to him an opportunity to sell to the manufacturer of alcohol at a cost lower than that for which blackstrap molasses could be bought in the tropical countries. Here would be a chance to expand our market when it is most needed.

And here, my colleagues, are some startling figures: Using the same figure of 179,123,000 gallons of molasses, the amount shipped in this country last year and used in making alcohol, we find that is equivalent to 28,660,000 corn-bushels. It takes 1,189,000 corn-acres to produce that number of bushels.

Mr. Chairman, I emphatically deny that this bill will be of no benefit to farmers, as is claimed by some of my colleagues upon the floor of the House. But assuming, for the sake of argument, that such is true, and that corn cannot compete with other commodities in the making of industrial alcohol and ethyl and methyl alcohol, I return you to my first observation and ask, Why should blackstrap molasses come into America tax free? There is seldom a day passes that some statesman does not rise on the floor of this House and discuss seriously the question of balancing the Budget. If my amendment will not turn the eyes of the industrial crowd to the cornfields of America, it will turn their pocketbooks toward the United States Treasury, which is sorely in need of money. It is estimated that the annual revenue to be produced by blackstrap molasses, if this amendment goes into effect, will be around $7,000,000; and even in these days $7,000,000 is a goodly sum.

I sincerely hope that the proposition to eliminate this language from the bill in the amendment will be decisively defeated; and I call upon those in this Hall who are interested in the farmers of America to help write into law a bill which will, for the first time, give the corn farmer an opportunity to compete on an equal basis with the fellow who produces the blackstrap in the Tropics.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am from a district where the principal field crop is corn. If I believed this amendment would help the corn growers and was anywhere near fair to the rest of the country, I certainly would be for it. I am against it.

This amendment was adopted without any hearings in committee, and without any statement except the very able one by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. I do not believe a radical step like this ought to be taken by the Committee of the Whole when the matter has not been given mature consideration by any committee of the House. Obviously, the amendment is designed to help the corn growers. I would like to help them. This amendment, if written into law, will not help them. The manufacture of alcohol from corn would not begin until the price of corn got down to about 40 cents a bushel.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I do not have time to yield.

One bushel of corn makes 2½ gallons of alcohol. The net cost of the manufacturing process in making a gallon of alcohol from corn is 6 cents. Therefore, if corn is selling at 40 cents a bushel, alcohol can be produced at about 22 cents a gallon. It is now produced from blackstrap molasses at approximately 20 cents a gallon and can be produced from petroleum products for just a little more.

May I read from a statement by the Department of State:

This measure—

That is, the pending amendment—would apparently not achieve its objective of causing more corn to be used in the distillation of alcohol; instead, it would tend to increase the price of industrial alcohol, disrupt our established molasses trade, and decrease the purchasing power for American goods in molasses-supplying countries. * * *

According to the informal advices of the Federal Alcohol Administration, 90 percent or more of alcohol obtained from molasses is used for industrial purposes, 5 percent for laboratory, pharmaceutical and medicinal purposes, and only about 5 percent for beverages. * * *

The commodity which would stand to benefit most by the resultant interruption in the country's trade in molasses would be ethyl sulphate, a petroleum byproduct, an economical raw material for producing synthetic alcohol. The American corn producer would not be a beneficiary, but more probably the payer of a higher price for his industrial alcohol, and a loser to the extent that American exports of farm products to molasses-supplying countries—particularly to Cuba and the Dominican Republic—would suffer curtailment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Not now. If I can get more time, I will yield.

Synthetic alcohol has occupied an increasing portion of the alcohol market of this country. In 1935, 9 percent of the alcohol was made from petroleum product; and in 1936, 16 percent; and in 1936 only 7 percent of the alcohol was made from corn.

There are fundamental reasons why it would be unsound to adopt this amendment. The alcohol-producing factories are along the Atlantic coast, where they get a cheap water haul for this molasses from the West Indian Islands. The factories for making alcohol from corn are also on the east coast, and they would have a long rail haul, and they cannot use corn unless the price is down to about 40 cents a bushel at the factory.

So we are supposed to be doing something for the farmer here, which is simply not going to be accomplished by the amendment. So I hope that this amendment, which was not considered in the committee, will not be adopted.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How would this amendment affect Tugwell's molasses company or the Virgin Islands industry?

Mr. BIERMANN. Oh, that has no bearing on this matter.

Mr. HOFFMAN. None at all?

Mr. BIERMANN. A gentleman as smart as the gentleman from Michigan ought to ask a more pertinent question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 6 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I only regret there was not a larger membership on the floor yesterday when I thought I had rather exhaustively discussed this whole subject of blackstrap; and I am a little surprised, of course, at the refreshing and delightful lack of information of my friend from Iowa, who does not know a great deal about the subject, because it does constitute a menace to the American farmer.

Without going into the matter too completely, let me say that 78 percent of all the blackstrap that is used in the country today comes from Cuba. It is being protected down there, and they are the ones who are seeking to perpetuate the use of blackstrap in American industry.

One hundred and forty-nine million gallons of alcohol was manufactured in this country in 1936 from blackstrap. This is the equivalent of 30,000,000 bushels of corn.

The gentleman from Iowa states that the benefits will go to the sulphate industry if we put a quietus on blackstrap. There is only one manufacturer of alcohol from sulphate in the country today.

What do you want to do in the face of the situation of a corn production of 2,600,000,000 bushels? Do you want to have the corn farmers come here and ask us to resort to some contrivance like regimentation and to subsidize our corn farmers the difference between the parity price and the price that obtains, or are we going to help to recreate this market which has been taken away by these importations of blackstrap?

I cite you this afternoon the prophetic drop in the price of corn in the last 30 days, a drop from a price of 94 cents for December, to a price of 64 cents quoted in the Washington papers of yesterday. This is an average drop of 1 cent a day.

Oh, the corn farmers have been here virtually tearing the hearts out of the Members for some kind of general legislation because they know that when the impact of this surplus comes on the market, down will go the corn price. Do you want to penalize the American consumer by reaching into the Federal Treasury in the form of benefits or are you going to give back to the corn farmer the 30,000,000 bushels of corn that is being usurped by this stuff that comes in from the islands and which, today, pays a tax of one-fifth of a cent a gallon, while under this bill it will pay two and a quarter cents for the equivalent of a bushel of corn. Is it not nonsensical that under the Tariff Act of 1930 a bushel of Argentine corn pays 25 cents before it can jump over the tariff hurdle, while if we vote down this amendment, we will say that it will be all right for 72 pounds of blackstrap which is the equivalent of a bushel of corn for distillation purposes, to pay two and a quarter cents, or one-eleventh of the corn price?

You ought to support the amendment of my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have been a consistent friend of the farmers of the United States. I have voted for all farm legislation which has been presented here practically during my term of office, away back to the $500,000,000 revolving fund in the McNary-Haugen bill, and for every other bill that was here to help the farmer. Prior to that in my own State of New York I was consistently a friend of the farmers. So I do not stand before you today as one who would do anything to hurt the American farmer. I do say that the passage of this amendment will not help the American farmer in the slightest degree. Let us read the language:

Notwithstanding the foregoing exceptions, sugar in liquid form (regardless of its nonsugar solid content) which is to be used in the distillation of alcohol shall be considered manufactured sugar.

First it refers to sugar in its liquid form, and then says "regardless of its nonsugar solid content." Remember, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with a nonedible product. I would not come before you if we were talking about the use of corn in producing edible alcohol because I know that many of you like a good nip of corn whisky, which has plenty of power in it, but here we have something in which there is no sugar and yet you want to tax it. Mr. Chairman, this alcohol made from blackstrap is used for one purpose only, and that is by the industrial manufacturers of the United States. There is hardly a man in the House who has not some manufacturer in his district that uses some of this blackstrap industrial alcohol. It should be remembered that if this amendment is agreed to, it will add to the price, and the result of that would be that alcohol used for industrial purposes will be made in a synthetic manner, and corn will not get a chance.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Much of this blackstrap would go to waste. It is good for no other purpose than industrial alcohol.

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOCKWEILER and Mr. DONDERO and others) there were—ayes 83, noes 67.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BIERMANN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 65.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, the other two amendments are clarifying, to make the bill conform to this amendment. I ask that they be considered now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the other committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 1, strike out the comma and the words "livestock food, and distillation" and insert "and livestock feed."

Page 30, line 21, strike out "or for the distillation of alcohol."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WILCOX: Page 10, at the end of line 19, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no proration or allotment shall be made which shall have the effect of preventing the sugar producers in any State from producing and marketing an amount of sugar equal to the consumption requirements of that State."

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment as offered explains itself. It simply provides that every sugar-producing State shall have a minimum quota for that State equal to its own consumption requirements. I discussed the bill at some length yesterday, as did my colleague [Mr. PETERSON]. We undertook to point out to the House the fact that under the bill as drawn some of the States of the Union will be prevented from producing the amount of sugar which they themselves consume. This is particularly true of Florida, which will be restricted to approximately 50 percent of its own consumption. I believe that this amendment is essential to the validity of this measure, as well as to the economic question that is involved. I very seriously doubt the right of the Federal Government to go into a sovereign State of the Union and say to the people of that State that they shall not have the power of producing their own requirements of food, particularly when the entire United States produces less than one-third of its consumption requirements. This bill as drawn and reported seems to prohibit the shipment of any sugar in interstate commerce which had been produced in any area in excess of the quota allowed under the proposed bill. This regulation is, of course, placed in the bill to give Federal jurisdiction over the subject matter. The bill proposes to set aside a definite and specific quota for Florida and Louisiana; it then proposes that the Secretary of Agriculture shall divide this quota as between these two States. In order that neither State shall produce more sugar than is allotted to it as its quota by the Secretary of Agriculture, the bill prohibits the shipment of any excess quota in interstate commerce. Now it is rumored that the allotment to be assigned to Florida will be approximately 60,000 tons if this bill is passed. Therefore, if Florida should undertake to ship more than 60,000 tons in interstate commerce, it would be penalized under the bill. This would not be quite so bad if the measure stopped at that point. The bill, however, goes further than this. It prohibits the local sale of sugar in competition with sugar which has been shipped in interstate commerce.

It may be possible, it may be constitutional for the Federal Government to say to me in Florida that I cannot produce sugar and ship it across the State line into Georgia because that would be a matter of interstate commerce, but I do not believe that the Federal Government has any constitutional, legal, or moral right to say to me that I cannot produce food on my own farm by my own efforts, with my own labor and my own money and sell it to my neighbor on the adjoining farm. You might as logically and as constitutionally say to a farmer that he shall not raise enough potatoes to feed his family.

Now, I know that we have gone a long way toward abolishing States' rights. I know that the tendency is toward centralizing all power in the Federal Government and toward having the bureaucrats regulate, control, and direct the daily lives of all the people of the country. But I do not believe that we have yet reached the point where a Federal official in Washington can tell a man in my State that he cannot produce food on his own land with his own labor and sell it to his neighbors in the same State.

If Congress can prohibit the production of sugar in my State it can prohibit the production of corn or wheat or apples or dairy products in other States, and not only can Congress prevent their shipment in interstate commerce but it can prevent their sale to a neighbor on an adjoining farm.

I believe that when a bill goes to that extent it violates not only the spirit but the letter of the Constitution. I think that when this measure undertakes to limit production within a State it is treading on very dangerous ground and that this amendment is necessary to the validity and constitutionality of the statute. I believe it is also economically sound to put this requirement in the statute, and that without the amendment the measure is unfair and economically unsound. I cannot understand the economic philosophy which says that in a country which produces less than one-third of its requirements of a necessary element of food, a sovereign State shall not be permitted to produce the amount of food which it itself consumes. Such a scheme just does not make sense. All in the world this amendment will do will be to say to the beet States and to the cane States and to all of the States of this Union that they shall have a minimum quota of the amount of their own consumption requirements. That does not give to Colorado, to California, to Florida, and to Louisiana even the same consideration that is given to Puerto Rico and Hawaii, because Puerto Rico and Hawaii are permitted to produce their own requirements and are then given an allotment of the amount that they can ship into the balance of the United States. But this amendment says to my State, "You shall not be limited to 40 percent of your consumption requirements", as the present bill would probably do, "but you will be given a minimum quota, a minimum allotment of the amount of sugar which the people of Florida consume."

I cannot see that there is anything wrong about it. It seems to me the economics are sound. It seems to me that it improves a bill whose constitutionality is at least questionable, and it appears to me to be a good amendment, and I think it ought to be adopted. I request the committee to adopt the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, what is the request?

Mr. JONES. That all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is this the only amendment to be offered on this Florida proposition?

Mr. JONES. There will be other amendments. I want 3 minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is the gentleman going to oppose this amendment?

Mr. JONES. I am.

Mr. BOILEAU. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I trust the House will vote down this amendment as utterly unworkable and impractical, for two good and sufficient reasons. In the first place, it would require going across the border and counting just how much sugar is used in some of these States, to determine the quota of the States. It is a difficult job to handle this quota even by regions and areas, but it would mean that a man might be living on the border with part of his land in one State and part in another. It might be desirable and it might sound good, but this thing is based on an historical background. You might as well follow it down and say that each county should be permitted to have a quota of all it consumes. Then you could go down to precincts and probably divide on plantations between tenants.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman would not object to even carrying it further and saying a man ought to be permitted to produce all he can eat?

Mr. JONES. It would take a constabulary to do that job, and that is not what we are engaged in.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. If each State were to produce all they could consume, they would have to take the quota away from some of these islands, would they not, so that we would not have an oversupply of sugar in the country?

Mr. JONES. They would probably have to adjust the situation all along the line. It is impractical.

Mr. BOILEAU. It would wreck the bill, would it not?

Mr. JONES. Yes, of course it would.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. WILCOX].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILCOX) there were ayes 33 and noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCK: On page 24, in the table between lines 2 and 3, strike out the figures "500 to 1,500" and insert the figures "1,000 to 1,500."

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, section 304 provides the amount of the base rate of payment for benefits to growers.

Section 304 (c) provides that those payments shall be reduced in accordance with a scale of reduction on that portion of the quantity of sugar or liquid sugar included in the table of intervals of short tons set out on page 24 between lines 2 and 3. The reductions provided in the table start at 500 tons. Evidence was presented to the Committee on Agriculture by the western beet growers that the proper breakdown should start, not at 500 tons but at 1,000 tons, and that should be the starting point as provided in my amendment. The system of reduction in base payments—this is a somewhat technical matter—is based on the fact that under the original Jones-Costigan law payments were made without regard to the amount of tonnage that any individual grower or any corporation grower might produce.

As was stated earlier this afternoon, one corporation received a check for over $1,000,000 from the Government as benefit payment. This aroused a considerable outcry, though the payment was made in strict accordance with the law. I do not believe there is anything logical at all in the system of reduction on account of gross tonnage. However, it may be that for a psychological reason some such scale as has been inserted in this bill is proper and should be adopted. I yield to the judgment of the committee in this. At the hearings, I introduced evidence covering California territory—and I cannot speak for the rest of the United States, but I believe the conditions are the same elsewhere—to show that reductions should not start at as low an amount as 500 tons per grower. We desire all individual growers to receive their full benefit. The table I introduced, at page 82 of the hearings, shows that some 95 percent of the growers—growers, understand, farmers, come under 1,000 tons. If you start at 500 tons only 83 percent will receive full payment. You are leaving out 11.3 percent of those who individually farm their lands. Why penalize them? Owing to the fact that in the West a large amount of sugar beets are raised under irrigation, owing to the amount of capital necessary to invest in irrigation plants, pipes, and other things that go with it, and owing to the acreage involved it is about impossible for an individual farmer to farm a small acreage. He will be more apt to raise between 500 and 1,000 tons. Our farmers work a larger number of acres in the West than perhaps they do in the East and the South. It is therefore somewhat reasonable to take the point where the individual farmer disappears from the picture and the corporate farmer comes into it. According to the table referred to, that point is exactly 1,000 tons.

If my amendment is adopted, 95 percent of the farmers, which means practically every individual farmer, will receive the full benefit. Those who farm larger acreage will have their benefit payments scaled down. At the same time, if my amendment is adopted, some 68 percent of the acreage of the country will receive full benefit payment, whereas if the bill remains as it is some 24 percent of the acreage will not receive the full benefit payment. This is merely a matter of fairness to the individual farmer. I hope I have made this clear to the committee and they will accept the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to disagree with my friend the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK], but 500 tons of sugar means between 280 and 290 acres of beets. There has been trouble over benefit legislation for farmers, it is true, but I think we ought to get this right somewhere along the line.

The average beet farm in the United States is from 16 to 20 acres. In Utah it is 6. In Colorado it is something like 20. In California it is much larger. Five hundred tons of sugar means 10,000 sacks. I think, if the Government takes care of a man to that extent, that they have done pretty well by him.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment is defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment submitted by Mr. VOORHIS. Page 37, line 10, after title V, add a new title, as follows:

"TITLE VI—CONSUMER-PRODUCER ADJUSTMENT PROVISIONS

"SECTION 601. For the protection of consumers and to permit the gradual substitution of sugar produced at low cost for sugar produced uneconomically or at high cost in areas making deliveries to the United States, and to promote increased exports of farm and factory products produced in the United States, the Secretary shall determine at the close of each calendar year the excess amount which consumers have paid during the year for sugar in the United States, and shall determine the amount of sugar which on the average is produced in the United States in 1 year on a total investment in land and production equipment equal to 20 percent of such excess amount paid by consumers. For the succeeding calendar year the Secretary shall add the amount of sugar so determined to the quotas of areas which most economically can supply such additional amount, and shall deduct such amount from the quotas of other areas: Provided, That the amount so added to and subtracted from quotas in any year shall not exceed 200,000 tons: And provided further, That the amount deducted from the quota of any area in 1 year shall not exceed 10 percent of its quota for the preceding year.

"SEC. 602. For the protection of producers and to permit the gradual adjustment of sugar production to areas economically most suited to that purpose, there shall be levied, collected, and paid additional taxes subject to the same conditions and refunds and in the amount of 50 percent of taxes authorized to be levied under title IV. The Secretary is authorized, in any calendar year and in the aggregate amount of 50 percent of total payments made under title III, to make additional payments to growers of sugar beets and sugar cane in those areas for which quotas for that year have been reduced, and such additional payments shall be distributed among the several areas in the same proportion as the distribution of total quota deductions in that year pursuant to the provisions of section 601. Such additional payments in any calendar year shall be offered to growers in each area as final payment under this act with respect to that proportion of sugar beet or sugar cane acreage which corresponds to the percentage reduction in quota of the respective area in that year, and thereafter the Secretary shall deduct from quotas determined for each such area under title II the cumulative total of its quota deductions for which final payments have been made. Within each area the additional payments in any calendar year shall be added pro rata to payments made under title III to growers in such area in that year.

"SEC. 603. For the purpose of the determinations made as provided by section 601, the excess amount paid for sugar by consumers shall be the difference between the value (raw basis), including excise tax, of sugar produced in the United States during the calendar year and the value of such sugar at the world price (New York basis) as determined by the Secretary from statistics available in the Department of Agriculture, and the total amount of sugar to be added to and subtracted from quotas shall be the result obtained by dividing 20 percent of the excess amount paid by consumers by the weighted average investment per ton of sugar produced in the United States in 1 year. Average investments per ton of sugar produced in any area of the United States which have been, or shall be, determined by the United States Tariff Commission may be employed by the Secretary in making this determination. Determination by the Secretary of areas which most economically can supply additional amounts of sugar as provided in section 601 shall be based upon relative costs of production which have been, or shall be, found by the United States Tariff Commission, with due allowance for alternative land use, conservation of soil resources, and relative returns to tenants, sharecroppers, adherent planters, and wage labor, as determined by the Secretary from statistics available in the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on the new bill for I have not had a chance to read it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is this a substitute for the bill under consideration or an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. This is offered as an amendment to the bill. All points of order have been reserved by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, for the comfort of the gentleman from Texas and of the gentleman from Minnesota, permit me to say that I entertain no illusion about the possibility of this amendment being adopted, but I believe it sets forth, if you will take the trouble to read it, a sound policy based upon the principle that the size of the quotas for different areas should have some direct relationship to the cost of production and to the capacity of those areas to produce sugar at a reasonable cost to the 130,000,000 consumers of the Nation. And may I say, also, that I sent copies of the amendment to every Member of the House some days ago.

In this short time, obviously I shall have no opportunity to explain in full the significance of this amendment, but I may briefly say that the amendmemnt provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall first compute the difference between what American consumers have paid and what they would have paid on a world market price basis. That excess payment by consumers has amounted to about $300,000,000 per year in the last few years. I do not mean to say that I think there should be no protection for the American sugar producer who has to have a margin above the world price, but I do say that where the margin is too high and we set up quotas that we are thereby setting up a virtual monopoly.

We restrict output and then erect a tariff barrier, to boot. I think that today we have established a monopoly for the refiners. I think that the people are paying a pretty big bill in this respect, and to gradually remedy this condition is the real purpose of this amendment.

According to the amendment the Secretary would compute 20 percent of the overcharge paid by American consumers over and above the world price.

He would then determine the total investment in the production and processing of sugar. He would figure up the amount of sugar which would, on the average, be produced on an investment in land and equipment equal to 20 percent of the excess cost paid by consumers. Whatever this tonnage was, the Secretary would be instructed by this amendment to shift that much of the total of quotas of high-cost production to areas of low-cost production. A tax of 50 percent of the tax levied in title IV of this bill would be levied to make possible additional benefit payments to the growers in areas from which the quota was removed. These benefit payments would be considerably larger than the regular benefit payments, and they would be in the nature of final payments. The consumers would, in effect, have bought out that much investment in high-cost sugar.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is this: We have set up here a great industry, largely on the basis of political protection. It is not fair to knock the props out from under the industry all at once, even in the areas where the cost of production is high, nor would I suggest such a course, but I believe the consumers of America should get something in return for what they pay in additional costs, and that is all this seeks to do. It is an attempt to make a fair adjustment to all concerned and to point in a direction which will lead to a sounder policy.

I am in accord with the protection of American industries which are able to produce in abundance a crop or type of goods that America needs and consumes, and which can furnish this crop or goods within reasonable distance of world prices. Sugar is a special case and as long as we are legislating for the purpose of a particular industry and the protection of that particular industry, we have to use our best judgment and consider the question on the basis of merit in order to compare the gain from one course of action and the losses from that same course, the gains and losses from an alternative course, and so on.

I do not believe you can make a great sweeping principle apply when you are attempting to legislate, as we are trying to do, on the tariff, tariff protection, production control, and such things as we are attempting to do here. It is a question whether unlimited protection to a given industry really increases employment in this country. I think there are many instances where it does not do so. There are cases where the industries are of such scope and economically so sound that perhaps it does. I believe, as I said before, that each one of these industries has to be considered on its own merits. There is much merit, in my opinion, in the contention of the gentleman from Florida as indicated in this debate. They have a viewpoint that is about as sound as any we have heard.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman said there is an agreement on the part of the refiners. Does not the gentleman think it would be well, if he desires to break up that combination, to ask the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation of the secret agreements by which the American people are mulcted out of $300,000,000 or more every year?

Mr. VOORHIS. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I was thinking about that, but it occurred to me that the Supreme Court of the United States has recently rendered a decision which perhaps makes that unnecessary. It found the Sugar Institute guilty, I believe, on about 40 separate counts of engaging in a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in sugar.

As I said, I know my amendment will not be adopted. But sooner or later we must get this whole sugar business on a much sounder and fairer basis than it is now.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order I previously made and ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Page 8, line 14, after the word "effect" strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof the following: A comma and the words, "Provided, however, That any deficit of Louisiana shall be first allotted to Florida, and any deficit of Florida shall be first allotted to Louisiana to the extent of their respective abilities to supply such deficit."

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the amendment speaks for itself. In the event the Louisiana cane-producing area fails to produce its part, then my amendment provides that Florida may have that quota, and, in turn, if Florida fails to produce its part, that quota may go to the other continental cane-producing area in the United States, namely, Louisiana.

I trust the amendment may be agreed to by the Committee. I will not take all of the time allotted to me, because I have other amendments to offer. This is very vital to the State of Florida and I sincerely trust the amendment will be agreed to. It is fair to both States and does not disturb the beet quota. I want to urge the members of the Committee to vote for it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is practical, in view of the vast reaches of this industry, to have all of these allotments and deficits as between the various States. I therefore ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. WILCOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. This is not a matter of disrupting the allotment as between beet and cane. This simply provides that as between two cane-producing States—and there are only two—if one of the cane States fails to produce, then the other one shall have the benefit of that deficit. That cannot upset the quotas.

Mr. JONES. I think they will take care of the deficit situation. There is a formula in the bill for that.

Mr. WILCOX. Cuba might get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PETERSON) there were—ayes 14, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments to be offered?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PETERSON of Florida: Page 6, strike out lines 23 and 24, and on page 7, strike out lines 1 to 7, inclusive, and the table which follows and insert:

Area	Quotas (short tons)
	1937–38	1938–39	1939–40
(a) For domestic sugar-producing areas:
Domestic beet sugar	1,550,000	1,550,000	1,550,000
Louisiana	360,000	375,000	400,000
Florida	90,000	150,000	175,000
Hawaii	938,000	938,000	938,000
Puerto Rico	798,000	798,000	798,000
Virgin Islands	9,000	9,000	9,000
(b) For the commonwealth of the Philippine Islands	999,782	970,000	970,000
(c) For foreign countries:
Cuba	1,911,476	1,866,258	1,816,258
Foreign countries other than Cuba	26,412	26,412	26,412

(d) In the event that the Secretary determines that the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers is less than 6,682,670 short tons, then the Secretary shall first establish the quotas for the areas and in the respective amounts set forth in subsections (a) and (b) and, after deducting the total thereof from the determined consumption requirements, shall prorate the difference on the basis of the quota established for Cuba and foreign countries other than Cuba in subsection (c); if the Secretary determines that the amount of sugar needed to meet the requirements of consumers exceeds 6,682,670 short tons, then the Secretary shall deduct the total of the quotas set forth in subsections (a) to (c), inclusive, from the determined consumption requirements and shall prorate the balance among the domestic sugar-producing areas set forth in (a) and Cuba and foreign countries other than Cuba on the basis of the quotas set forth in subsections (a) and (c).

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to subtract from the quotas of the Philippine Islands during the years 1937 and 1938, and the Philippines and Cuba during 1939 and 1940, in order to add to the quotas of the cane areas in continental United States, and especially in order to add to the Florida quota.

As I explained the existing situation in Florida yesterday, we cannot proceed upon a historical basis for this reason: The Everglades at one time were subject to flood. We finally drained the area by the combined effort of the Federal Government and local enterprise, and turned the Everglades into one of the greatest cane-producing areas in the world. However, just about the time the plantations were getting in good shape the quota system went into effect, and 5,000 acres were taken out of cultivation. The largest single check issued for production restriction in continental United States went to the cane-producing people of this section. I understand the argument made today by those who do not want to disturb Hawaii and Puerto Rico, so I have taken amounts from the Philippines and from Cuba in order that we may have a chance to produce in our own State. An infant industry is begging for the opportunity to expand, to expand economically, and to employ American labor with the payment of decent wages. The minimum wage is $2.70, plus housing, lights, and so forth. I am pleading today that this vast area, developed in part through Federal funds, may be able to take care of Florida's unemployment. This amendment does not take from Hawaii or Puerto Rico, nor does it take from continental United States.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman's amendment does not disturb the quotas allotted to the beet people, but leaves them exactly as in the bill?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes; exactly as in the bill.

Mr. WILCOX. The gentleman's amendment does not reduce the quota allotted the Philippine Islands under the Independence Act?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. No.

Mr. WILCOX. The amendment leaves the quota at the exact amount fixed by the Independence Act?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. WILCOX. However, beginning with next year, this amendment would reduce the Cuban allotment by a few tons and add this amount to the quotas of Louisiana and Florida?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. This amendment by subtracting from the Cuban quota does not violate the reciprocal-trade agreement in any way?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. No.

I am pleading for the opportunity to expand for American capital, American labor, and American producers. We begin at a quota less than the consumption of our own State. I hope the committee will back me up on this amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the allotment for Florida and Louisiana under the original act was 220,000 tons, which was later increased to about 360,000 tons. This allotment gives them practically 100,000 tons above the previous amount. It is a difficult matter to figure out quotas. When you get to figuring on them you can just reach up in the air and pull down another one and get all confused. These quotas have been carefully worked out. I hope the Committee will not adopt this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment do now close.

Mr. WILCOX. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Are there any other amendments?

Mr. GREEN. I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that hereafter all remarks on all amendments be limited to 2 minutes, with the understanding that if there is time not occupied after the offering of all amendments, any Member who is recognized may use the remaining time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Texas have in mind that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS] desires to be recognized for 2 minutes?

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman should be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Chairman, may I call the attention of the membership to the fact that when I offered an amendment a few moments ago to guarantee to each sugar-producing State a minimum quota equal to its own requirements of sugar, the amendment was objected to by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture upon the ground that it was too indefinite. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON] has now offered an amendment which is very specific. The gentleman's amendment does not take away from the beet producer a single ounce of the sugar provided for in this bill. It guarantees the beet producers the same amount guaranteed in the bill. It does not disturb Hawaii or Puerto Rico but leaves them exactly as they are under the terms of the bill. It does not reduce the quota of the Philippine Islands below the amount specified in the Independence Act but simply takes from the Philippines any excess above the amount specified in that act. However, the amendment does gradually take from the Republic of Cuba, an independent nation, a small amount, a few tons a year, and permits the development of a profitable and efficient industry financed by American capital and carried on by American workmen in American territory. It will open the way for the employment of a few thousand American citizens who otherwise must continue on relief.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. This amendment does not reduce the quota of Louisiana?

Mr. WILCOX. It does not reduce the quota of Louisiana but increases it to a small degree, the same as it does the quota of Florida. This amendment does not disturb a single thing in this bill, except that it does permit the gradual reduction by a few tons a year of the amount which has been gratuitously given the Republic of Cuba.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, first of all I must respectfully decline to yield because of the shortness of the time available.

I am sure there must be other Members of the House beside myself who have listened to the debate here for the last few hours, hearing that one group of our citizens will be helped by certain legislation and hearing that other groups will be helped, a section here and a section there, but how many people have come down to the Well of this House and raised their voices telling of the moral responsibility we have to Puerto Rico and Hawaii because we took them, in effect, by force of arms and we keep them, in effect, by force of arms, and have a moral responsibility therefore to treat them just the same as the people of continental United States.

Mr. Chairman, if I make an agreement with you and you make an agreement with me, and suddenly the agreement pinches, none the less we are morally bound, and should be bound, to go on with that agreement, and therefore much as some other people, I am sure beside myself, but certainly myself feel that we might like to vote for legislation of this kind, we feel we are sitting here and in effect acting like footpads haggling over the personal effects of somebody whom we have waylaid. So until we recognize Hawaii and Puerto Rico like other people in the community of the United States I, for one, feel that we should vote against this whole bill, lock, stock, and barrel. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state in connection with this amendment that I hope the House will not disturb the arrangements made here with reference to quotas, because it has been worked out and there are many conflicting interests involved.

I want to make one statement in answer to an argument made the other day about permitting America to produce all that her farmers can of any commodity not produced in surplus quantities. I thoroughly agree with that philosophy for any industry that does not require special protection. If we had no stimulus to production and without protection, on their own, they could expand, that would be one thing, but when we are making a special provision that would grant benefit payments and grant certain special concessions, as well as protection, then if these are to continue, it seems to me it is but fair that we should prevent artificial stimulation of enlarged production.

I felt this should be stated in connection with the statements that have been made.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word just for the purpose of taking about 30 seconds.

I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS], but I would like to make one correction. Hawaii came under the American flag voluntarily and was not captured or purchased. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PETERSON of Florida) there were—ayes 23, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN: On page 10, line 19, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall allot to Florida not less than 90,000 tons annually, 25,000 of which shall be charged against quotas of foreign countries as provided in this act."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I think this brings the question right down to its final analysis. Will this Congress give Florida 25,000 tons that now go to Cuba and foreign countries? Do you want us to expand or do you want Cuba to expand? Do you want us to pay $2.70 for labor as we do in Florida, or do you want the American people to eat 17-cents-a-day-labor sugar made in Cuba and in other foreign countries? Are we to be treated as well as the Territories, are we to be treated as Americans, or are we to be treated worse than those in foreign countries?

Mr. Chairman, we are in dead earnest about this matter. If the chairman tells you this amendment does not conform with other sections of the bill, let it go to the other end of this Capitol and there be whipped into certain form, and allow this amount of 25,000 tons to be taken from foreign countries and given to a State which I still say is one of the 48 States of this Union. Mr. Chairman, it is wrong, it is bad legislation, if you penalize a State of this Union and place it further down in the category of privilege—if you want to put it that way—than you place foreign countries. I urge you to vote for the amendment. It is fair and just.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down. The formulas are set out in the bill. It is a technical matter and if we undertake to make these little changes, we will have a bill all out of kilter. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GREEN) there were—ayes 32, noes 45.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no other amendment, under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7667, and pursuant to House Resolution 297, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question has been ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LANZETTA) there were—ayes 165, noes 55.

So the bill was passed; and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DEMPSEY, for today, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 7948, which passed the House last Monday, explaining the provisions of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the remarks I made this afternoon a certain petition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein correspondence between myself and the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration dealing with the policy of the Farm Credit Administration, and with deficiency judgments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO FILE REPORT

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor may have until midnight tomorrow night to file a report upon the wage and hour bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks made this afternoon by inserting a table referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] was to be recognized for 1 hour. The Chair understands, however, that the gentleman from Texas does not desire to avail himself of that privilege today.

The gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER], under the special order of the House, is entitled to be recognized for 5 minutes.

CARE OF TRANSIENTS IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, what will happen this winter to the thousands of destitute who fled to California from other States seeking relief from the dust, drought, and depression? Federal relief aid has been curtailed; California's relief burden is fast becoming unbearable, and impoverished thousands, living in squalor, facing hunger and disease, threaten national health and add to the possibility of a bitter and possibly violent agricultural and industrial labor conflict.

Assistant W. P. A. Administrator Aubrey Williams, while on a recent tour of western relief agencies, is quoted by a Los Angeles newspaper as saying:

Care of transients—and of homeless Americans from the Dust Bowl—is strictly a State problem.

With that assertion, Mr. Speaker, apparently we cannot hope for substantial aid from Mr. Hopkins, W. P. A. Administrator. Apparently the responsibility for thousands of drought and depression refugees from all parts of the United States has been tossed directly into the laps of California taxpayers, who are already staggering under a terrific and ever-increasing relief burden. What are we in California doing to help out this situation, speaking for Los Angeles County?

In 1936 the cost of all classes of relief amounted to $87.51 per taxpayer, or $44.52 for each of the 2,366,904 persons residing in the county. In 1925 relief cost per capita was only 92 cents, with a gradual increase up to 1934 when it was $22.51 per person. In 1935 the cost of relief climbed to $30.24, and last year, in Los Angeles County, it was $44.52 per capita. Other California counties have experienced the same startling upward trend in relief costs which are fast becoming unbearable to local taxpayers.

California tax rates have grown with the increasing cost of relief. The tax rate in Los Angeles County has increased from 80 cents per $100 of assessed valuation in 1920 to $1.27 for the fiscal year 1936–37 and preliminary estimates for the current year indicate a tax rate of $1.65 per $100, a 34 percent increase over the previous year. Rates in other California counties have increased accordingly. So you see we Californians are not welching from our share of the responsibility.

Despite the overwhelming increases in the cost of relief in California brought about by the influx into the State of refugees from all parts of the United States, the Assistant W. P. A. Administrator insists that responsibility for the welfare of these people is California's own problem.

Since the depression and the drought hundreds of thousands of refugees have been flooding into California from other States seeking relief from debt-burdened homes, dust covered farms, and other hopeless conditions. Most of the migrants entered southern California declaring it their destination and a large proportion of these said they were seeking employment. More than 75 percent of the jobseekers were from the drought States. Adding these people to other types of relief cases, today there are 275,362 men, women, and children dependent in one form or another on relief from the several government agencies in Los Angeles County alone.

Clearly, California agriculture and industry cannot absorb the dwelling tide of destitute migrants within a short time. Most of the migratory workers are seeking agricultural employment and the field is greatly overcrowded. State agricultural production grew only 20.1 percent from 1920 to 1930, but the number of available farm workers grew by 57.1 percent. While large-labor requiring crops played a more important role in State agriculture in 1930 than in 1920, the difference is not great enough to justify the growth in the number of agricultural workers. Furthermore, the peak of California's farm labor demand is about four times as great as the low point and the off-season falls in the winter months. What will happen this winter to the thousands thrown out of employment as well as to the scores of refugees who flock into California every day in search of work?

Each month of last year 23,000 people were placed in jobs by the State reemployment service, but it is impossible to fill the ever-increasing demand for employment. Estimates made by farm employers indicate that in 1935 there were 128 farm workers for every 100 jobs, and this excess of 28 percent applied to agricultural workers as a whole and not merely to migratory workers. Since 1935 the number of excess workers has undoubtedly increased tremendously. "All the settlers need", Assistant W. P. A. Administrator Aubrey Williams is quoted as saying, "are jobs, sanitation, and good food." I agree with Mr. Williams. But where are these destitute people to find these necessities in a State where the labor market is flooded, the State overburdened with the relief load, and the W. P. A. program curtailed.

A California relief administration study of applicants for relief in 1935 reports average annual earnings of 775 migrant families, most of which received between $300 and $400 in 1930, and between $100 and $200 in 1935. The great influx of additional labor will cause further decrease in wage rates and a spread of labor unrest. How far, Mr. Speaker, will wages drop? How far will standards of living fall?

The ragged camps of migrants squatting in filth by the roadside, in open fields, along irrigation ditches, or on garbage dumps fairly beggar description. These people are not stumble bums. Disease is rife, and National as well as State health is seriously threatened. Large growers sometimes provide good housing for workers, but smaller groups with short peak seasons are often unable to do this. Many camps similar to the present three Resettlement camps are needed to provide adequate housing for migrants not only in California but also in other States, where Dust Bowl refugees and other homeless tend to concentrate. The resettlement camps in California house 500 families, less than 1 percent of the State's estimated migratory workers.

Two years ago California threatened, in self-defense, to close its borders to the destitute people who were creating such an economic problem within the State. The resulting howls from Washington, accompanied by threats of cutting off Federal relief aid, were heard across the country. Instead of closing her borders, the California relief laws were liberalized and migrants from all parts of the United States continued to pour into the State. But there is an economic limit to the number of destitute which the State can support. Taxpayers threaten to strike; and unless the Federal Government will make an effort to understand California's unique relief problem and cooperate with the State in solving the situation, the State borders may yet be closed in self-defense.

The drought refugees from the Great Plains who have been pouring into California by the scores of thousands to the west coast are leaving areas where depopulation is desirable for the national economy. They are not drifting but are seeking resettlement. They are helpless victims of a short-sighted national policy which threw open the Great Plains to a type of settlement unsuitable to natural conditions.

Why should not the Federal Government help us financially in this plight? The creation of the Midwestern Dust Bowl and the attendant problems have their roots in economic conditions, prevailing attitudes, and public policies reaching back into the 1860's. The lure of free land on the frontier under the Homestead Acts was the major influence in the settlement of the Great Plains. The movement gained force and direction from such factors as favorable market conditions, the development of railroad transportation, and the lure of free or cheap land. But throughout the settlement period free land greatly stimulated immigration and materially affected the pattern of settlement. Public-land policy proved unfortunate in at least two respects. Speculation in land, with attendant abuses in its development, was facilitated, and the holdings permitted under the Homestead Acts were so small as to stimulate overcultivation. Both factors tended to induce a more intensive use of land in the Great Plains than was justified by natural conditions. Millions of acres of natural grass cover which should never have been touched by a plow were turned under and the soil exposed to the scorching sun and the winds, which later turned parts of the Great Plains into a barren desert.

Let me repeat again that today the Federal Government, speaking through Mr. Williams, of the W. P. A., disclaims any responsibility for the drought refugees from the Great Plains.

Mr. Edward J. Rowell, regional labor adviser of the United States Resettlement Administration, in a report, Drought Refugee and Labor Migration to California in 1936, writes:

> Those States characterized as drought States continued to be the heaviest sources of migrants. Of the total of 71,047 migrants entering the State during the year (ending June 15, 1936), 56,225, or 79.1 percent came from the drought States. During the first 6 months of 1936 the proportion of Dust Bowl refugees was even greater than in the last half of 1935. Of all out-of-State migrants 85.5 percent fled from the drought area during 1936 as compared with 74.8 percent in 1935. Oklahoma alone contributed 24.6 percent of all out-of-State migrants and the States of Oklahoma, Texas, Arizona, Arkansas, and Missouri, combined, contributed 64.8 percent. It is apparent, therefore, that the tragic disruption of the rural economy of this area is by far the most important factor in the movements under consideration.

Last year 12.3 percent of the Nation's total transient population received State and county aid in California which in 1930 had only 4.7 percent of the Nation's population. In a 24-hour census of the transient and homeless conducted in 1935 by local public agencies in Los Angeles 95 percent of 4,033 cases were interstate wanderers, and among the total of 1,656 persons arrested and convicted for vagrancy in Los Angeles in January 1936, 75 percent had been in the State less than 1 year.

Although California taxpayers are bearing more than a just share of the relief burden, the State has received the lowest per-capita apportionment of Federal funds in comparison with other major industrial States. In fact, the average per capita of Federal relief for California has been less than the average per capita for the United States. This low average has been maintained despite the facts that California is the fifth ranking State in population, stands third in provisions for State and county relief funds, and is staggering under an ever-increasing relief burden.

Mr. Speaker, the burden of localities which receive disproportionately large numbers of persons in need of relief and rehabilitation, whether drought refugees or migrants following hoped-for agricultural work, is a heavy one. The problem of transient relief is a national problem and, as such, should be dealt with by the Federal Government. State and Nation should share the financial burdens imposed on county and State by relief, rehabilitation, or resettlement of nonresidents. It is the only efficient, economical, and equitable solution.

Federal aid in the form of W. P. A. funds apportioned to the State in accordance with the net total of transients and drought refugees entering California from other States would be a just and equitable method in solving California's relief problem. The Resettlement Administration should authorize loans to migrant agricultural families which will enable them, where land values are not too high, to set up farms of their own in suitable locations on the Pacific coast. Many more resettlement camps for migrants should be built not only in California but in every area where migratory workers need better housing and sanitation.

It is only fair to ask that the Federal Government take immediate steps to provide aid for the thousands of destitute in California and other communities where transients from all parts of the United States tend to concentrate. The health, education, and morale of these people who travel across State lines in search of better living conditions is more than a State problem; it is national in scope. The localities need the assistance of the National Government, and need it quickly so these unfortunates will not starve or fall victim to disease this winter.

Mr. Speaker, what is going to happen this winter to the impoverished thousands who have been driven to California from other States by dust, drought, and depression? Is the administration going to allow them to be the forgotten men, women, and children of 1937? If this great human influx continues for long, then the California taxpayer will be leveled down to impoverishment, and he might just as well resign now and take up his household effects and, bag and baggage, settle with the unemployed migratory band of his fellows.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER] has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to add to my remarks made this afternoon an editorial from the Baltimore Sun on yesterday, to which reference was made in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.
